Traditions before A.D. 70 have largely been lost, other than the school disputes of Hillelites and Shammaites and also a serendipitous collection of traditions that have survived often by being cited by later rabbis. The rabbinic collections record legal discussions, and they are not lists of legal traditions, so we have only those traditions that happen to be cited by a later rabbi. Therefore, subjects that were not debated much are preserved more scantily. Rabbis debated opinions expressed in earlier debates and rulings that conclude earlier debates, and in the course of doing so, they quoted that opinion or ruling. When they quoted a legal opinion, it was normal to name the rabbi who first stated it, and these names help to date the debates. However, when they quoted a legal ruling that concluded a debate, they did not associate it with a named individual; rather, they left it anonymous or attributed it to “the Sages” in general because these were the decisions of a community. Later, if they dispute the conclusion, they may attribute it to a named rabbi in retrospect, so that it is no longer regarded as a decision fixed by the community.

The names of individuals occurring in a debate often make it possible to reconstruct some of the chronology of a debate. Named individuals may be those who are taking part in the debate, or they may be authors of opinions from the past that are quoted as part of the debate, or they may be later individuals who refer to the debate. These different roles have to be unraveled in order to decide the relative values of named individuals for dating the tradition.

Clearly, this process assumes a high degree of accuracy and honesty by the contributors to the debates, and also by the editors who recorded them. In precritical days, when the Talmud was regarded as inerrant, this accuracy was simply assumed, and it was sufficient to assume that a tradition that was attributed to a particular rabbi originated during his career. J. Neusner was largely responsible for spreading the warning that it was unsafe to simply assume that later editors knew whom to attribute traditions to. His seminal article in the first volume of the Brown Judaic Studies (Neusner 1978) said that the only safe way to date rabbinic material was by the date of the last editor of a collection. Thus, material in Mishnah should not be used to illustrate anything before it was edited in about A.D. 200, and similarly for Tosefta in A.D. 300, Jerusalem Talmud in A.D. 400, and Babylonian Talmud in A.D. 500.

Now, after decades of painstaking work by Neusner and many other scholars, it is becoming clear that the halakic rabbinic collections are indeed accurate with regard to the named attributions. By the end of only the third of twenty-two volumes in which Neusner analysed the order Purities, he concluded, “The temporal order of attributions is generally sound.... In every instance [in the tractate Kelim], except that just cited [m. Kel. 17:5], in which we are able to establish the expectation that the substance of a given law is prior to that of another closely related rule, the ear-

Table 4. Supplementary Tractates (Later Tractates Found Only in the Babylonian Talmud)

ARN.A	Avot de Rabbi Nathan A & B	“The Fathers by R. Nathan” (a commentary on Avot)	b
ARN.B
Sof.	Soferim	“Scribes”	b
Sem.	Evel Rabbati or Semahot	“Mourning” or (ironically) “Joy”	b
Kall.	Kallah	“Bride” and chastity	b
Der. Er. Rab.	Derekh Eretz Rabbah	“Conduct – Major” treatise	b
Der. Er. Zut.	Derekh Eretz Zuta	“Conduct – Minor” treatise	b
PS	Pereq Hashalom	“Chapter on Peace”	b
Ger.	Gerim	“Non-Jews”	b
Kut.	Kutim	“Kuthim” i.e. Samaritans	b
Avad.	Avadim	“Slaves”	b
Sef. Torah	Sefer Torah	“Section on Torah”	b
Tef.	Tefillin	“Phylacteries” or “Tephillin”	b
Tzitz.	Tzitzit	“Fringes”	b
Mez.	Mezuzah	“Doorposts”	b

Table 5. Chronological Periods

Approx. Dates	Generations	Period and Center	Titles and Works
200 B.C.- A.D. 10	To	Second Temple Period	The Great Assembly
A.D. 10–80	T1	Temple Destroyed	Tannaim: Mishnah Tosefta Halakic Midrashim
A.D. 80–120	T2	Yavnean Period (in Yavneh)
A.D. 120–140	T3	Bar Kokhba Revolt
A.D. 140–165	T4	Ushan Period (mainly in Usha)
A.D. 165–200	T5
A.D. 200–220	T6
A.D. 220–250	BA1 and PA1	Palestine: Sepphoris Tiberias, Caesarea Babylon: Nehardea Pumbeditha, Sura	Amoraim: Palestinian Talmud, Babylonian Talmud, Haggadic Midrashim
A.D. 250–290	BA2 and PA2
A.D. 290–320	BA3 and PA3
A.D. 320–350	BA4 and PA4
A.D. 350–375	BA5 and PA5
A.D. 375–425	BA6
A.D. 425–460	BA7
A.D. 460–500	BA8

lier rule also will be assigned to an earlier authority, the later rule to a later authority” (Neusner 1974-1977, 3:239). G. Stemmerger agreed: “The study of extensive text units (e.g. by J. Neusner) has shown that at least in Tannaitic collections these attributions are largely reliable. Even if the accuracy of the tradent’s name cannot be positively proven, the historical period connected with that name generally can” (Strack and Stemmerger, 63).

There are sometimes mistakes, such as the same saying attributed to two people, but these are rare, and the later rabbis often discussed such errors and carefully preserved both versions. Most of these mistakes involve attributing a ruling to someone else within the same generation, so the attributions are still a fairly safe guide to dating traditions.

This conclusion does not apply to haggadic collections or even to haggadic material within halakic collections. Some of the midrashim were edited relatively early (ca. A.D. 250), but not with the same strictness as legal texts. Even exegetical traditions that support someone’s ruling are suspect, because when a ruling lacked sufficient support in Scripture, later rabbis were liable to construct retrospectively some kind of exegesis to support it. This is evident from the fact that almost all the scriptural justifications for rulings are found in the later Talmuds and not in the earlier Mishnah and Tosefta, though this may be due as much to the fact that the Talmuds recorded debates in much more detail than did these earlier works.

The named attributions in rabbinic literature are therefore a useful guide for dating halakic material in halakic collections (i.e. Mishnah, Tosefta, Talmuds) but not so reliable for haggadic material.

3.1. Chronological Periods. Rabbinic authors are divided by major chronological periods that represent different organizational structure as well as different types of traditions in the major collections. They are traditionally divided into “generations” that represent the rough time period in which they lived. The Tannaim (“reciters”) have six generations (T1-T6), though an extra generation (To) can be used for pretannaitic authorities. The authors of the Talmuds are known as Amoraim (“speakers”), and there are more generations of Babylonian Amoraim (BA1-BA8) than Palestinian Amoraim (PA1-PA5), who were the first to make a final edition of their debates. Usually the only way that an individual can be assigned to a generation is by analyzing the recorded debates to discover who spoke to whom and who cited whom.

3.2. Dating Anonymous Traditions. Anonymous traditions are very important because they are much more numerous than attributed traditions and because they usually represent the ruling that later rabbis accepted as the “correct” one and on which they based later developments of the law. Anonymous traditions have been traditionally attributed to an editor such as Rabbi Judah or to earlier rabbis such as Rabbi Akiba (see b. Sanh. 86a; y. Yevam. 4:11, 6b). It is much more likely that the anonymous traditions represent the decision of the majority at the time when that ruling was made (see y. Yevam. 4:11, 6b) or sometimes the opinion of the editor when he was drawing together and summarizing the state of the law.

The minute analyses of rabbinic traditions in the multitudinous volumes of Neusner and others have shown conclusively that there is a logic and a clear chronological structure behind rabbinic literature, especially the legal corpuses. This structure was “obvious” to medieval scholars who felt no need to verify it, but this chronological development has now been verified. This structure tells us two things: (1) later laws were based on older laws; (2) new material was added mostly on to the end of earlier material while the older material was left intact as much as possible.

This means that often it is possible to date anonymous material by finding a datable ruling that is logically dependent on it, and it is possible to find the early core of a ruling by stripping off newer layers. A large number of anonymous traditions can be dated by one means or another. Neusner even claimed, in an enthusiastic moment while he was analyzing Mishnah Kelim, that he could date virtually all anonymous sayings in that tractate: “Unattributed sayings are not a great problem. In mKel they account for 1/10 of the rulings, and most can be assigned to a time period. Of the 49 in mKel, 26 can be located to the Yavnean or Ushan period, and often to a particular circle of Rabbis within that period. They can be dated if they are closely tied to an attributed law, or are diametrically opposed to a tradition assigned to a specific person and so may with confidence be located in the same division as the contrary law” (Neusner 1974-1977, 4:244).

3.3. Early Rabbinic Authors. Rabbinic literature followed the normal practice of naming persons with their fathers—for example, Johanan the son of Zakkai is referred to as “Johanan ben Zakkai” (or “bar” in Aramaic), abbreviated as “Johanan b. Zakkai.” People who appear with extreme frequency occur without their patronym (e.g., “Akiva” or “Judah”) and may have an even more contracted label (e.g., “Rabbi”). Those who have an extremely common name such as “Simon/Simeon” may be named merely by their patronym—for example, “Ben Azzai” or “Ben He He.”

Not everyone has the title “Rabbi” (meaning “my master,” and contracted as “R.”). Others, such as “Rab,” “Abba” or “Mar,” occur frequently and are applied consistently. Before A.D. 70 only six “rabbis” actually used “Rabbi” as a title, and the fact that these were priests may indicate that the term became a title first among the priesthood. Perhaps it was originally an honorific title (e.g., Mt 23:7; Mk 9:5) before it was adopted as a widespread official title, much like the modern title “Reverend,” which originally was a term of respect that could be given to anyone.

Rabbinic writings are remarkably consistent with their naming policy, but different collections sometimes use different contractions. Therefore, “R. Judah” always refers to Judah b. Illai (except in Jerusalem Talmud), and “Rabbi” by itself is always a contraction of “Rabbi Judah HaNasi.” Several names are shared by more than one individual. They normally are distinguished in modern studies as “I” or “II” (e.g., “R. Gamaliel II”), and sometimes rabbinic literature will call the first one “the Elder” or “the Great,” though often the ambiguity is left unresolved. Usually, the only way to resolve such ambiguity is to check the generations of the individuals debating with them or quoted by them. For a comprehensive list of rabbis and dates, see www.RabbinicTraditions.com/Generations.htm.

4. Insights from Rabbinic Traditions.

The systematic search for rabbinic background to the NT that started in earnest with J. Lightfoot in the seventeenth century came to a peak with H. Strack and P. Billerbeck in the early 1900s. Since then, countless individual studies have augmented and refined these works. These background insights sometimes have solved difficult details, sometimes changed the emphasis, and occasionally uncovered lost teaching.

For example, one of the difficulties faced by commentators focused on the concern that the Pharisees expressed about what the *children were doing during Jesus’ *triumphal entry, when the actions of the adults were much more worrying (Mt 21:15-16). Everyone was joining in with chants that were common at the Feast of Tabernacles and Hanukkah. The rule concerning these specific chants was that if anyone (including a child) started a chant, then everyone was obliged to join in and complete it (y. Sukkah 3:10, 54a; b. Sukkah 38b). It appears that on this occasion (as, no doubt, on many others) the children had gotten excited and kept up the chanting long after the adults might otherwise have stopped.

Several matters of emphasis can now be regarded differently in the teaching of Jesus—for example, with regard to the Lord's Prayer. The wording of Jesus' *prayer is similar to short versions of the daily Amidah prayer, the earliest example of which is "May your will be done in the heavens above, and grant ease of spirit to those who fear you on earth below; and do what is good in your eyes. Blessed are you, O Lord, who listens to prayer" (t. Ber. 3:7; b. Ber. 29b). Here, words in italics indicate differences between versions, which are similar to differences between Matthew and Luke and to some manuscripts that add a final blessing. Such differences were common in early Jewish prayers because fixed wording in prayers was a mark of insincerity (m. Ber. 4:4).

In addition, the Lord's Prayer has some elements not found in Jewish prayers. The rabbis looked down on and even forbade any "forceful" prayer, such as relying on God's promise or an aspect of God's nature—for example, "you care for a nesting bird, therefore . . ." (cf. Deut 22:6-7; m. Ma'as. Sh. 5:13; Exod. Rab. 41:1), or using an intimate name such as "Abba," or acting in a childlike, importunate way (m. Ta'an. 3:8). Jesus used "Abba" for "Father" (Mk 14:36), and his words may seem "forceful" when he teaches that his disciples should say, in effect, "We have forgiven, so now you forgive." Jesus himself appealed to nesting birds (Mt 6:26; 10:29-31) and approved of childlike importuning (Mt 18:3; 19:14 // Mk 10:14 // Lk 18:16).

Lost meanings have occasionally been recovered, such as Jesus' rejection of the specific "for any cause" *divorce (Mt 19:3). Also, the so-called unforgivable sin mirrors the normal first-century A.D. teaching that cursing God is not forgiven immediately when one repents, or even on the Day of Atonement, but one must wait until one's death (t. Yoma 4:6-8, based on Ex 20:7). This means that Jesus' point is not that such cursing is unforgivable, but that cursing the Holy Spirit is the same as cursing God; hence, we might say that Jesus is introducing the concept that would later be formalized as the inclusion of the *Holy Spirit as part of the Trinity.

Such insights are multiplied in commentaries, though many others have been discredited because they are based on late evidence.

See also DEAD SEA SCROLLS; JUDAISM, COMMON; LAW; MIDRASH; PHARISEES; SCRIBES; TARGUMS; TEACHER.

BIBLIOGRAPHY. D. Bivin, New Light on the Difficult Words of Jesus: Insights from His Jewish Context (Holland, MI: En-Gedi Resource Center, 2005); H. Danby, The Mishnah: Translated by from the Hebrew with Introduction and Brief Explanatory Notes

(London: Oxford University Press, 1933); I. Epstein, ed., The Soncino Hebrew-English Edition of The Babylonian Talmud (32 vols.; London: Soncino, 1967); D. Instone-Brewer, Traditions of the Rabbis in the Era of the New Testament (Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 2011); J. Lightfoot, A Commentary on the New Testament from the Talmud and Hebraica (4 vols.; Peabody, MA: Hendrickson, 1989); J. Neusner, A History of the Mishnaic Law of Purities (22 vols.; SJLA 6; Leiden: E. J. Brill, 1974-1977); idem, The Tosefta (6 vols.; New York: Ktav, 1977-1986); idem, "The Use of the Later Rabbinic Evidence for the Study of First-Century Pharisaism," in Approaches to Ancient Judaism: Theory and Practice, ed. W. S. Green (BJS 1; Mishoula, MT: Scholars Press, 1978) 215-25; idem, The Mishnah: A New Translation (New Haven: Yale University Press, 1988); idem, The Components of the Rabbinic Documents: From the Whole to the Parts (12 vols. in 31; SFACS 75-83, 85-90, 92-107; Atlanta: Scholars Press, 1997-1998); idem, The Talmud of the Land of Israel: An Academic Commentary to the Second, Third and Fourth Divisions (35 vols.; SFACS 108-135; Atlanta: Scholars Press, 1998); idem, "The Pre-70 Pharisees after 70 and after 140," in In Quest of the Historical Pharisees, ed. J. Neusner and B. Chilton (Waco, TX: Baylor University Press, 2007) 329-49; S. Safrai et al., eds., The Literature of the Sages (2 vols; CRINT 2; Assen: Van Gorcum; Minneapolis: Fortress, 2006); H. L. Strack, Einleitung in Talmud und Midrasch (Munich: Beck, 1887); ET, H. L. Strack and G. Stemmerger, Introduction to the Talmud and Midrash, trans. M. Bockmuehl (Edinburgh: T & T Clark, 1991 [1982]); H. Strack and P. Billerbeck, Kommentar zum Neuen Testament aus Talmud und Midrasch (6 vols. in 7; Munich: Beck, 1922-1961); B. H. Young, Meet the Rabbis: Rabbinic Thought and the Teachings of Jesus (Peabody, MA: Hendrickson, 2007).

D. Instone-Brewer

RANSOM SAYING. See DEATH OF JESUS; SERVANT OF YAHWEH.

REALIZED ESCHATOLOGY. See ESCHATOLOGY.

REDACTION CRITICISM

Redaction criticism is the study of the way in which the evangelists molded or "redacted" their source material, with a view to discovering their literary and theological agendas. It aims to discover the evangelists' profiles and to learn more about the communities from which they came. Although there are problems with the way that redaction criticism is sometimes practiced, it has an important role to play in the historical, literary and theological study of the Synoptic Gospels.

1. History
2. Redaction-Critical Tools
3. The Success of Redaction Criticism
4. The Limitations of Redaction Criticism
5. The Value of Redaction Criticism

1. History.

Redaction criticism (Ger. Redaktionsgeschichte) was pioneered in German NT scholarship of the 1950s and 1960s. The two key monographs were H. Conzelmann's Die Mitte der Zeit, published in 1954 (ET, The Theology of St. Luke, 1960), and W. Marxsen's Der Evangelist Markus, published in 1956 (ET, Mark the Evangelist, 1969). Conzelmann argued that Luke's redaction of his source material reflected a major theological shift, from the imminent *eschatology that was typical of the early years of Christianity to a salvation-historical viewpoint according to which Jesus' death and resurrection occur not in the end times but in the "middle of time." This "middle of time" was flanked by the period of Israel before it and the period of the church after it. Thus Luke, who also writes Acts of the Apostles, sees an extended present period of the church, and he does not think in terms of living in the last days, with the *kingdom coming in power and the imminent return of Jesus. Marxsen's monograph attempted to illustrate how Mark, in redacting his source material, laid great emphasis on the repeated theme of "Galilee" in the structuring of his Gospel. Other pioneering redaction critics included G. Bornkamm and N. Perrin.

Redaction criticism emerged from *form criticism, but it was also in part a reaction against it. While form critics such as R. Bultmann and M. Dibelius focused on the individual units (pericopae) that became the building blocks of each Gospel, with a view to understanding the contours and life settings of the traditions that had been passed on in the early church, redaction critics focused instead on the role played by the evangelists themselves in constructing their Gospels. The life settings that they were interested in were those of the evangelists and their communities. Since the focus was now on the evangelists rather than on the traditions, the creative role of the evangelists was stressed more clearly.

2. Redaction-Critical Tools.

2.1. Repeated Features. Redaction critics use several techniques in studying the Synoptics, including repeated features, key structuring elements and use of sources. Repeated features in a Gospel often are taken as a sign of a redactor's fingerprint. In Mark, for example, the theme of secrecy or mystery occurs repeatedly, distributed evenly throughout the Gospel and in a range of different types of material, discourses, miracle stories, exorcisms, parable settings and narrator's summaries. This feature is therefore regarded as a key element in Mark's redaction of his source material. It was already noticed before the dawn of redaction criticism. W. Wrede's seminal 1901 book, The Messianic Secret, explored the theme in the Synoptics, and although Wrede himself did not attribute the feature to the evangelist Mark, he anticipated redaction criticism by several decades in underlining its importance in Mark and in attempting to find an explanation.

In Matthew's Gospel there are repeated references to the fulfillment of Scripture using similar formulas in the narrator's voice (e.g., Mt 1:22: "All this happened so that the word spoken by the Lord through the prophet was fulfilled"). This key feature of Matthew's redaction coheres with other elements in the Gospel that underline how Jesus' identity and mission are in continuity with the story and Scriptures of Israel (see Old Testament in the Gospels). The feature is often thought to cohere with the idea that the evangelist belonged to a Christian Jewish community that wished to stress its own continuity with Judaism.

2.2. Key Structural Elements. Redaction critics also look for the key structuring elements within a Gospel, paying special attention to features that occur at important points in the narrative. The secrecy theme in Mark, for example, has its defining moment at the midpoint in his Gospel, where Peter confesses that Jesus is the Messiah and is ordered to tell no one about this (Mk 8:27-30). Thus, the structural importance given to this theme suggests that it is a major redactional interest of the evangelist. Jesus has repeatedly commanded secrecy of the *demons (Mk 1:25, 34; 3:12) and of those he heals (Mk 1:44; 5:43; 7:36), and now he also commands the *disciples to secrecy about his identity.

In Matthew, Jesus gives five big teaching discourses, each marked off with the same formula (Mt 5-7; 10; 13; 18; 24-25). It is the key structuring device in his Gospel, and it therefore appears to witness to a major theological interest of Matthew. Given the pervasive and striking presence of this structuring technique, it seems that Matthew wishes to place emphasis on Jesus as teacher. Given the content of these discourses, Jesus appears to imitate and surpass the great figures of the Hebrew Scriptures, especially *Moses (see Allison).

2.3. Analysis of Sources. Undoubtedly, the most important tool within redaction criticism is the analysis of source material. The redaction critic studies the changes that each evangelist apparently made to his source material, with a view to understanding what those changes reveal about the evangelist's interests. Redaction critics have generally assumed the two-source theory in their work (see Synoptic Problem). Thus Mark, as the prior Gospel, is analyzed without recourse to Matthew and Luke, and with reference to his possible sources in oral and written traditions. This makes redaction-critical study of Mark more speculative than redaction-critical study of Matthew and Luke.

For Matthew and Luke, redaction critics look for their changes to Mark and the hypothetical source document *Q, studying omissions, additions and the rewording of this source material. The success of redaction critics in clarifying Matthew's and Luke's redactional profiles is sometimes given as an argument in favor of the two-source theory.

The utility of studying an evangelist's use of his sources in redaction criticism is straightforwardly illustrated. Conzelmann's redaction-critical study of Luke focuses largely on the way that Luke edited Mark and Q to establish the case that the evangelist's attitude to eschatology was different from that found in his sources. Thus, whereas Mark's Jesus promises that the disciples will see the kingdom of God coming "with power" in their lifetime (Mk 9:1), Luke's Jesus promises that they will see the kingdom of God but makes no mention of it coming with power (Lk 9:27). Similarly, in material unique to Luke, Jesus answers a query about the coming kingdom with the remark "The kingdom of God is in your midst" (Lk 17:20-21). Comparing Luke with his source material therefore illustrates that the imminent dawning of the kingdom is no longer a key element in the evangelist's theology, in contrast with other early Christian texts.

Similarly, G. Bornkamm's redaction-critical study of the stilling of the storm in Matthew (Mt 8:23-26) focuses on changes that the evangelist made to his Markan source (Mk 4:35-41), such as the disciples' plea to Jesus, "Lord, save us" (Mt 8:25), and Jesus' rebuke to the disciples, "You of little faith! Why are you so afraid?" (Mt 8:26), which is different in Mark. Bornkamm saw Matthew's redactional changes as reflecting the situation of Matthew's persecuted church community. The community is represented by the disciples in the boat, in a storm at sea, praying to Jesus for *salvation from the persecution that tormented them.

3. The Success of Redaction Criticism.

Redaction criticism has helped to establish the broad contours of the Synoptic Gospels, their authors and the communities from which they came. As well as looking at the theme of secrecy and mystery, redaction-critical studies of Mark have focused on the negative portrayal of the disciples and their failure to understand Jesus' identity. Although scholars differ on the explanation for Mark's enigmatic portrayal, they are agreed that it has something to do with Jesus' suffering, crucifixion and death. The Gospel builds towards a climax in the passion of Jesus (Mk 14-16), with predictions along the way (Mk 8:31-32; 9:30-32; 10:32-34). It seems clear that Mark's Gospel's central focus is on the crucified Christ. Mark's key theme is "the way" of the cross (Mk 1:2-3; 8:27; 10:32).

Similarly, redaction criticism has had some success in clarifying the profile of Matthew's Gospel. While scholars differ on the particulars of Matthew's alleged community, they are broadly agreed that the Gospel itself has a strong focus on Jesus as the teacher of a new wisdom, the proclaimer of the kingdom of heaven who is greater than the scriptural figures whom he imitates, fulfills and surpasses: Abraham, Moses, David, Solomon, Isaiah, Jeremiah.

The redactional profile of the author of Luke's Gospel is in many ways the most difficult to characterize, and Conzelmann's forceful reading is sometimes thought problematic, not least because of implausible elements such as his claim that Luke depicts Jesus' ministry, from the *temptation (Lk 4:13) to the *Last Supper (Lk 22:3), as a Satan-free period. Nevertheless, it is broadly accepted that Luke does play down the imminent eschatology of his predecessors, and he opens up a fresh way of viewing the apostles' mission after Jesus' *ascension by narrating the continuation of the Gospel in his sequel, Acts of the Apostles. One of the key elements that comes through in the analysis of Luke's redaction is his stress on narrative, on the continuing story of the *gospel as the successful journey, from *Jerusalem all the way to Rome, of the relentless, powerful "word."

4. The Limitations of Redaction Criticism.

In spite of its utility for historical study of the Gospels, redaction criticism has some serious limitations. Although it is still a popular method in the study of the Synoptics, some caution is required. Difficulties include overemphasis on what is distinctive in each Gospel, the overly hasty correlation between features in the text and theories about the evangelists, the danger of circularity, and doubts about Gospel “communities.”

4.1. Overemphasis on “Distinctive” Elements. Redaction criticism focuses on what is distinctive in each of the Gospels, but the assumption that an evangelist’s theology is best represented by what he adds to his source material may be faulty. The material that the evangelists copy verbatim from their sources may often be material with which they strongly agreed. Thus, close copying may be a sign of enthusiastic endorsement rather than docile reproduction. As in the modern use of quotation, the authors may have adhered particularly closely to their sources when they found them especially useful.

Thus, when Matthew adds Jesus’s glowing endorsement of Peter, “Blessed are you, Simon bar Jonah . . .,” after his confession at Caesarea Philippi (Mt 16:17-19), it is easy to focus solely on what Matthew has added to Mark and to imagine that Matthew’s portrait of Peter is unambiguously positive. But what Matthew takes over from Mark, where Jesus rebukes Peter, saying “Get behind me, Satan . . .,” is as important in the narrative as what Matthew adds. It is part of a pattern of behavior in Matthew’s Gospel whereby Peter shows initial enthusiasm only to stumble when talk of suffering and persecution arises. In other words, to focus solely on distinctive elements in a given Gospel can cause the interpreter to distort the theology of its author.

4.2. Correlation Between Text and Community. A related problem is the hasty correlation between features in the text and alleged parallels in the communities of the evangelists. Thus, the changes that Matthew makes to the story of the stilling of the storm (see 2.3 above) may simply reflect the evangelist’s literary characteristics without implying anything about an underlying parallel message about the Matthean community. Matthew regularly has the disciples addressing Jesus as “Lord,” for example, and the plea “Save us” makes sense as a stylistic softening of Mark’s harsher “Do you not care that we are perishing?” In other words, the evangelists sometimes simply retell Gospel stories in their own words, without prejudice to hypothetical backgrounds and imagined contexts.

4.3. Difficulties with Source Criticism. There is a further danger in the way that redaction criticism works in concert with source criticism. Redaction critics almost always assume the correctness of the two-source theory, and redaction criticism depends heavily on this theory. But although the two-source theory is popular, there are detractors, and not everyone is able to accept redaction-critical conclusions that are based on this theory. Where redaction criticism offers the potential for scholars to test source theories, to compare and contrast different scenarios based on different Gospel relationships, this is an opportunity seldom taken. There is particular unease with the role played by Q in redaction criticism. Q is a hypothetical document that is reconstructed on the basis of redaction-critical analysis of Matthew and Luke. It is potentially circular, then, to use Q in order to shed light on Matthew and Luke. Moreover, the hypothetical nature of Q allows redaction critics too much freedom to project onto the unseen document the things that do not fit their profile of Matthew or Luke.

4.4. Orality and Literacy. Contemporary scholars are increasingly taking seriously the role played by *orality in the origins and development of the Gospels. Redaction criticism often appears to work with the assumption that the evangelists were rigidly “literary” figures, involved in a close, literary redaction of source texts, where variations are all a matter of the redactor’s particular interests. In an environment in which there was constant interaction between orality and literacy, models of analysis need to build in some understanding of that interaction, and to avoid proceeding as if the Gospels were solely literary products.

4.5. The Gospels for All Christians. The idea that the evangelists were addressing their Gospels to their own “communities,” a key assumption made by many redaction critics, has also come under fire. R. Bauckham argues that it is a mistake to view the Gospels on analogy with the NT Epistles, which were written to particular communities at particular times in particular locations. He suggests that the Gospels were written for “all Christians,” and that the evangelists were envisaging broad audiences over widespread locations. If Bauckham is right, much of the redaction-critical enterprise, with its attempts to reconstruct the location, the history and the theology of specific Gospel communities, is rendered useless.

5. The Value of Redaction Criticism.

In spite of the limitations of redaction criticism, it remains a useful method in the NT scholar’s repertoire. Although the overconfidence of the early redaction critics has given way to a more cautious application of the method, it is still able to shed light on the distinctive features in the Gospels and to help in locating the literary and theological interests of their authors.

See also FORM CRITICISM; GOSPELS: HISTORY OF INTERPRETATION; NARRATIVE CRITICISM; ORALITY AND ORAL TRANSMISSION; Q; SYNOPTIC PROBLEM.

BIBLIOGRAPHY. D. C. Allison, The New Moses: A Matthean Typology (Minneapolis: Fortress, 1993); R. Bauckham, ed., The Gospels for All Christians: Rethinking Gospel Audiences (Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1997); G. Bornkamm, "The Stilling of the Storm in Matthew," in Tradition and Interpretation in Matthew, by G. Bornkamm, G. Barth and H. J. Held, trans. P. Scott (Philadelphia: Westminster, 1963) 52-57; H. Conzelmann, The Theology of St. Luke, trans. G. Buswell (New York: Harper, 1960); M. Goodacre, "The Rock on Rocky Ground: Matthew, Mark and Peter as Skandalon," in What Is It That the Scripture Says? Essays in Biblical Interpretation, Translation, and Reception in Honour of Henry Wansbrough OSB, ed. P. McCosker (LNTS 316; London: T & T Clark, 2006) 61-73; J. Marcus, The Way of the Lord: Christological Exegesis of the Old Testament in the Gospel of Mark (Louisville: Westminster John Knox, 1992); W. Marxsen, Mark the Evangelist: Studies on the Redaction History of the Gospel, trans. J. Boyce et al. (Nashville: Abingdon, 1969); N. Perrin, What Is Redaction Criticism? (Philadelphia: Fortress, 1969); G. Stanton, A Gospel for a New People: Studies in Matthew (Edinburgh: T & T Clark, 1992); C. M. Tuckett, Reading the New Testament: Methods of Interpretation (London: SPCK, 1987); W. Wrede, The Messianic Secret, trans. J. C. G. Greig (Cambridge: James Clarke, 1971 [1901]).
M. Goodacre

REIGN OF GOD. See KINGDOM OF GOD/HEAVEN.

REPENTANCE

Repentance is a term referring to remorse or regret that can also result in a change in thinking and behavior. In the Gospels repentance points both to an inner change and to a change in behavior—mainly, a turning away from an ungodly life to one reoriented toward God.

1. Linguistic Considerations
2. Jewish Background
3. Greco-Roman Background
4. The Missions of John and Jesus
5. Repentance in the Gospels

1. Linguistic Considerations.

The concept of repentance in the Gospels appears in Greek under two main semantic domains: metanoia/metanoēō and epistrophē/epistrephō. In the Synoptic Gospels (there is no reference to it in the Gospel of John), metanoia/metanoēō is mainly the human turning toward *God and away from ungodly behavior, the appropriate response to the preaching of the *kingdom of God (Mt 3:2, 8, 11; 4:17; Mk 1:4; 1:15; 6:12; Lk 3:3, 8; 5:32; 15:7, 10; 16:30; 24:47).

Repentance is the human response to God's initiative and *forgiveness, so that the consequence of not repenting is death (Lk 13:3, 5).

Both in Mark and Matthew epistrephō lacks intrinsic religious connotation, referring to a turn toward something or somebody (e.g., "the multitude" [Mk 5:30] or "the disciples" [Mk 8:33]), or simply a return (Mt 10:13; 12:44; 24:18; Mk 13:16). Only on one occasion does it mean "turning to God" (Mt 13:15; Mk 4:12; cf. Is 6:9-10). The Gospel of John only shows one reference to epistrephō, indicating a physical turn toward someone (Jn 21:20). It is in the Gospel of Luke that we find a greater interest in the use of epistrephō. Besides a nonreligious use of the term referring to turning back or returning to something or someone (Lk 2:39; 8:55; 17:4, 31; 22:32; Acts 9:40; 15:36; 16:18), it is frequently mentioned to describe a reorientation of one's life toward God (Lk 1:16, 17; Acts 3:19; 9:35; 11:21; 14:15; 15:19; 26:18; 26:20). The nominal form, epistrophē, is used only once, corresponding to the reception of salvation by *Gentiles (Acts 15:3; cf. Acts 15:1). There are two occasions in Acts where metanoēō and epistrephō appear together, in complementary terms; metanoēō suggests the negative dimension because it implies a departure from *sin, while epistrephō points to the positive dimension referring to the turn toward God (Acts 3:19; 26:20).

2. Jewish Background.

2.1. Old Testament. There are two terms that basically describe the concept of repentance in the OT, šûb/yûb and niḥām. The main term of interest to us here is šûb/yûb, which means "turning" in all sorts of contexts, but which also conveys the idea of turning to God. It is a turning from and a turning to, thus a turning away from sin and toward God. Especially in the writings of the prophets people are called to acknowledge and turn from their wrong ways (Jer 15:7; 25:5; 35:15; Ezek 14:6; 33:11; Hos 5:15; Zech 1:4), to (re)turn to the relationship with God (Hos 5:4; 6:1; Amos 4:6; Mal 3:7), which would be demonstrated by a return to obedience to the *law and the word of the prophets (Jer 26:4; cf. 2 Kings 17:13) and by a changed attitude toward one's neighbor, especially the poor and the needy (Amos 4:1-11). The response to such a call to repentance was not always positive (Jer 35:15), and the consequences of not repenting could be fatal (Jer 35:15-17). The other term, naḥam, means "to regret something" or "to alter one's purpose out of pity," and it is used in the OT mainly referring to God, who is moved to mercy when people repent (Jer 18:8; 26:19; Jon 3:10).

In the LXX metanoēō translates the Hebrew naḥam (1 Sam 15:29; Jer 18:10), whereas šūb/yūb is translated by epistrephō. The meaning of metanoēō, true to the sense of the Hebrew naḥam (“to be sorry, to regret, to have mercy”), reflects the root of the cause of change underlying repentance. It is a particular use of metanoēō in the LXX to refer to God’s change of behavior (1 Sam 15:29) or mind (Jer 4:28). There is no use of the term metanoia in the LXX translation of the canonical OT (cf. Ode 12:8; Wis 11:23; 12:10; 12:19; Sir 44:16), except for Proverbs 14:15, where it appears without translating a corresponding Hebrew concept.

2.2. Other Jewish Writings. Various Jewish writings reflect the main understanding of repentance as turning from sin and toward God. People who have abandoned God’s law (Pr Azar 1:6) are compelled to repent (Tob 13:6; Sir 18:21), to change their hearts toward God (Sir 17:25–26). There is no reproach for those who turn to God (Sir 8:5), whose mercy makes repentance possible (Wis 11:23; 12:10; Sir 17:24). It is expected that people return to the law as a proof of their repentance (4 Ezra 7:133; Wis 16:7). There are people who do not repent (3 Macc 2:24; Sir 5:7; 48:15), and who will suffer God’s wrath (Sir 5:7).

Special mention should be made of Joseph and Aseneth, where the turning of Aseneth, the daughter of an Egyptian pagan priest, from idolatry to the worship of the Hebrew God is presented. Such a turning is staged by Aseneth, who secludes herself in her tower, throws her idols out of the window (Jos. Asen. 10:12), dresses in sackcloth and ashes (Jos. Asen. 10:14), prays to the God of Joseph and confesses her sins (Jos. Asen. 12:1–15), and fasts (Jos. Asen. 10:1, 17). Aseneth even gives up her most valuable possessions, giving them to the poor (Jos. Asen. 10:11–12). After all this, a man from heaven, a “commander of the Lord’s house and chief captain of all the Most High” (Jos. Asen. 14:8), tells Aseneth that the Lord has positively heard her confession (Jos. Asen. 15:2) and has written her name in the book of life (Jos. Asen. 15:4). Whether this romantic story can be taken as an example of Jewish proselytism or of a simply welcomed proselyte is debated.

3. Greco-Roman Background.

It has been traditionally held that repentance in Greco-Roman society entailed merely having a different opinion about one’s action without implying any attempt to mend the error. In a thorough analysis, G. Nave departs from this view and shows that there is continuity between the Christian use of repentance and Greek usage, even if the latter undergoes nuancing. Thus, Nave summarizes the common features of repentance in Greco-Roman thought: second thoughts about one’s action; change in thinking; emotional change; regret or remorse; willingness and ability to change one’s error in order to make repentance beneficial; divine and/or human chiding; a way to avoid judgment and punishment; in some cases a requirement that repentance be accompanied by proof of changed behavior; forgiveness and reconciliation as the end result of repentance.

4. The Missions of John and Jesus.

4.1. John the Baptist. Repentance first appears in the Synoptic Gospels in the preaching of *John the Baptist, who proclaims a baptism of repentance (Mt 3:2; Mk 1:4; Lk 3:3). It is a baptism that expresses repentance, bringing God’s forgiveness of sins upon the repentant, therefore a turning to a new life, preparatory for the coming of God’s Messiah. There is an eschatological urgency in the call to repentance; thus Matthew and Luke link John’s baptism to the impending eschatological *judgment, affirming that “even now the ax is lying at the root of the trees” (Mt 3:10 // Lk 3:9). However, the eschatological future will bring not only judgment but also the reality of the kingdom to those who repent (Lk 23:41–42). Thus, the summons to repentance by John the Baptist leads to the forgiveness of sin (Mk 1:4; Lk 3:3). John’s *baptism is set over against any exemption under pretext of being descendants of *Abraham (Mt 3:9; Lk 3:8). It is a once-and-for-all act demonstrated in the bearing of good fruits (Mt 3:8; Lk 3:8). Repentance has, then, an ethical dimension; it is a turning to God that has consequences for the relationship to the neighbor (Lk 3:10–14).

4.2. Jesus. The earthly ministry of Jesus is wholly described as the proclamation of the coming of the promised kingdom of God (Mt 4:17; Mk 1:14–15; Lk 4:43) inaugurated in the life and ministry of Jesus. The preaching of Jesus demands repentance, a turning toward the approaching future of God, as requirement for entering the kingdom (Mt 4:17; Mk 1:15). Thus, in the context of the NT repentance undergoes a development from its OT use, as it is correlated with the reality of the coming kingdom of God.

Highly controversial at this point has been the position of E. P. Sanders, who affirms that Jesus “offered them [his hearers] inclusion in the kingdom not only while they were sinners but also without requiring repentance as normally understood, and therefore he could have been accused of being a friend of people who indefinitely remained sinners” (Sanders, 206). Sanders argues that Jesus did not preach repentance, that on the rare occasions when he appealed to it his call was individual, not collective, and that his call was extended before any sign of repentance was mentioned, much less required. Sanders also excludes matters of behavior in the preaching of Jesus. Sanders has been criticized for tendentiously ascribing repentance language to the editorial work of the evangelists. It is also noteworthy that the verbs that Jesus uses for repentance are in the plural form. Therefore, Jesus appears in the Gospels calling not just individuals to repentance, but different social groups and the whole of Israel (Mt 11:20-24 // Lk 10:13-16; Mt 12:38-42 // Lk 11:29-32; Mt 23:37-39 // Lk 13:34-35; Lk 13:1-5).

Jesus' appeal for behavioral change is well evidenced in the radically new attitude toward possessions, illustrated in the parables of the hidden treasure (Mt 13:44) and of the pearl (Mt 13:45-46) or in the contrast between the narratives of the rich ruler (Lk 18:18-30) and of Zacchaeus (Lk 19:1-10). On the one hand, Zacchaeus evidences his repentant life through his giving half of his wealth to the poor and paying back four times the amount to anyone whom he previously cheated (cf. Lk 3:10-14). By contrast, the rich ruler is saddened by Jesus' call to sell what he has, distribute the proceeds to the poor, and follow Jesus, since he is too attached to his riches (see Rich and Poor). Thus, for Jesus, repentance is not a mere acceptance of a set of beliefs but rather a turning in behavior according to the values of the kingdom.

There are other instances in which repentance is implicit in other terms, such as "the gospel" (Lk 9:6; cf. Mk 6:12), and is the expected response to Jesus' call to *discipleship (Lk 5:32; 10:13; 11:32; 13:3, 5; 15:7, 10; 16:30; 24:47). If discipleship is to be understood as a break with the past and a turning toward God, then discipleship is possible only through repentance. On some occasions Jesus refers to repentance in a way that summarizes the whole purpose of his ministry (Lk 5:32; cf. Mt 9:13 // Mk 2:17).

5. Repentance in the Gospels.

5.1. Mark. In Mark's Gospel repentance is not a frequently used term (3x), but it is referred to in key moments of the narrative, qualifying the message and ministry of those involved in the preaching of the kingdom: John the Baptist, Jesus and the Twelve as representative of all disciples. Thus, repentance is first mentioned in connection with the ministry of John as imperative for the forgiveness of sins and evidenced through baptism (Mk 1:4). The ministry of Jesus is introduced as the preaching of the kingdom of God, with a summons to repent and believe in the gospel, since the moment of God's kingdom is near (Mk 1:14-15). The kairos of God has arrived in Jesus, and its eschatological fulfillment is at hand. Jesus expands the scope of his earthly ministry by sending the Twelve out two by two, with his authority, to preach repentance to the people (Mk 6:12).

5.2. Matthew. The Gospel of Matthew introduces the ministries of both John the Baptist (Mt 3:2) and Jesus (Mt 4:17) by using an identical description of their call to repentance, made urgent by the proximity of the kingdom. John the Baptist links repentance to a corresponding way of living (Mt 3:7-9) and places this demand in the context of eschatological judgment to be executed by Jesus (Mt 3:11-12). Jesus himself makes a similar prediction of eschatological condemnation on the cities that did not repent after his preaching (Mt 3:11). In his traditional material shared with the Gospel of Luke, Matthew also reflects Jesus' identification of his ministry with that of the prophet Jonah, whose preaching was better received by the people of his generation than was that of Jesus' by his, resulting in the repentance of the former and the condemnation of the latter (Mt 12:38-42). Repentance, for Matthew, is more than just remorse, as was likely the case of Judas (Mt 27:3), for it also entails believing (Mt 21:32) in the context of the proximity of the kingdom and eschatological judgment.

5.3. Luke. Developing his material in an intentional sequence or pattern, Luke emphasizes repentance as part of his central motif of God's salvific plan and initiative. Such a divine initiative is expressed in a language of necessity (Lk 2:49; 4:43; 9:22; 13:33; 17:25; 19:5; 22:37; 24:7, 44) and is carried out by Jesus, who proclaims the year of the Lord's favor (Lk 4:19) and has sinners' repentance as the goal of his ministry (Lk 5:32; 7:39; 15:2; 19:7). Thus, repentance, for Luke, is both universal, since no one is without sin (Lk 13:3, 5), and inclusive of those socially despised (Lk 3:12; 5:27, 30; 7:37, 39; 15:1-2; 19:2, 7; 23:40-41). The result of people turning from their sinful lives toward God's salvific plan is made evident in Luke in a different attitude toward wealth and possessions (Lk 3:11, 13, 14; 5:28; 8:1-3; 15:12-14, 29-30; 19:2, 8), in outer visible actions evidencing inner repentance (Lk 3:8). Those who repent become now members of the new community of Jesus' followers, the kingdom community, which celebrates repentance and forgiveness at the *table (Lk 5:29-30; 7:36; 8:3; 15:23; 19:5, 7). Jesus declares forgiveness and salvation on those who repent according to God's salvific initiative (Lk 5:31-32; 7:48, 50; 15:7, 10, 32; 19:9-10; 23:43).

Another pattern of repentance is found in Acts, in the so-called household narratives, where the turning to God of a complete household is depicted. According to D. Matson, there are three basic elements defining this Lukan pattern: a house as the place where the gospel is preached; an inclusive preaching to both Jews and Gentiles, thus overcoming purity standards; and an all-inclusive table fellowship. Matson builds this pattern modeled by the story of the preaching of the seventy (Lk 10:1-16), highlighting the preaching of the kingdom from house to house, where repentance is expected as the result of the kingdom proclamation and is evidenced in table fellowship. Thus, the preaching of the disciples in Acts reaches to (well-to-do) household owners: a centurion (Acts 10:1-11:18); a dealer in purple cloth (Acts 16:11-15); a jailer (Acts 16:25-34); an official of the synagogue (Acts 18:1-11, although gathered at the house of Julius Justus). According to Acts, the message preached is positively heard and received (Acts 10:22; 16:14, 32; 18:8), which is confirmed in baptism (Acts 10:48; 16:15, 33; 18:8) and celebrated around an all-inclusive table (Acts 11:3; 16:15, 34; [18:7]), for all household owners here are of Gentile origin and God-fearers, except for Crispus, a Jew. The fact that all this is presented as the turning to God not of an individual but rather of a complete household has been referred to as the “oikos formula” in Acts (Acts 11:14; 16:15, 34; 18:8). The household becomes both the forming and gathering place of the Christian community (house church), where repentance is evidenced and celebrated.

5.4. John. The language of repentance is absent in John's Gospel. This has led some to question whether repentance is, after all, as relevant as the church has lately made it. However, the concept and its implications are present in the Gospel of John in different ways. Thus, using the language of belief, John comes to express the turning to God through believing in Jesus (Jn 1:7, 12; 3:15, 18, 36; 6:47; 8:24, 30; 11:25; 12:11, 36, 39-40, 46; 14:29; 20:27-31). Likewise, the metaphoric use of light and darkness (Jn 1:4-12, 19-21; 8:12; 12:35-46) reflects the traditional Jewish dualism also present in apocalyptic literature, conveying the invitation to turn from darkness to *light, from death to *life.

See also DISCIPLES AND DISCIPLESHIP; ETHICS OF JESUS; FAITH; FORGIVENESS OF SINS; MERCY; RICH AND POOR; TABLE FELLOWSHIP.

BIBLIOGRAPHY. B. Chilton, “Jesus and the Repentance of E. P. Sanders,” TynBul 39 (1988) 1-18; Z. A. Crook, Reconceptualising Conversion: Patronage, Loyalty, and Conversion in the Religions of the Ancient Mediterranean (BZNW 130; Berlin: de Gruyter, 2004); T. M. Finn, From Death to Rebirth: Ritual and Conversion in Antiquity (New York: Paulist Press, 1997); B. R. Gaventa, From Darkness to Light: Aspects of Conversion in the New Testament (Philadelphia: Fortress, 1986); C. Lienemann-Perrin and W. Lienemann, eds., Religiöse Grenzüberschreitungen. Studien zu Bekehrung, Konfessions- und Religionswechsel (SAC 20; Wiesbaden: Harrassowitz, 2012); D. L. Matson, Household Conversion Narratives in Acts: Pattern and Interpretation (JSNTSup 123; Sheffield: Sheffield Academic Press, 1996); F. Méndez-Moratalla, The Paradigm of Conversion in Luke (JSNTSup 252; London: T & T Clark, 2004); G. D. Nave Jr., The Role and Function of Repentance in Luke-Acts (SBLAB 4; Leiden: E. J. Brill, 2002); E. P. Sanders, Jesus and Judaism (London: SCM, 1985); N. H. Taylor, “The Social Nature of Conversion in the Early Christian World,” in Modelling Early Christianity: Social-Scientific Studies of the New Testament in Its Context, ed. P. F. Esler (London: Routledge, 1995) 128-36; A. F. Walls, “Converts or Proselytes? The Crisis over Conversion in the Early Church,” IBMR 29 (2004) 2-6; R. D. Witherup, Conversion in the New Testament (ZS; Collegeville, MN: Liturgical Press, 1994); C. J. H. Wright, “Implications of Conversion in the Old Testament and the New,” IBMR 28 (2004) 14-19.

F. Méndez-Moratalla

RESTORATION OF ISRAEL. See APOSTLE; EXILE AND RESTORATION; ISRAEL.

RESURRECTION

Resurrection within the context of Israel's heritage is the concrete act of *God raising the dead from their tombs. Its theological dimensions include restoring and exalting God's covenant people, ushering in God's kingdom of *justice and *peace (or eternal life), and inaugurating God's new creation. Within this context one may understand Jesus' *miracles of raising the dead, his teaching concerning resurrection, as well as the significance of Jesus' own resurrection.

1. Resurrection in the Ancient World
2. Resurrection Miracles
3. Resurrection in Jesus' Teaching
4. The Resurrection Narratives in the Four Gospels

1. Resurrection in the Ancient World.

1.1. Resurrection in the Jewish World. Belief in resurrection belongs to the later frontiers of Israelite faith. Prior to the Second Temple period, being interred in an ancestral tomb was central to Jewish understanding of the afterlife (Gen 50:13; Josh 24:32; 1 Kings 2:10; 11:43; 2 Kings 9:28). Death and burial were therefore commonly spoken of as being gathered to one's ancestors (Gen 49:29; Judg 2:10; 2 Kings 22:20; 2 Chron 34:28).

The dead were viewed as experiencing a shadowy existence in a subterranean realm called "Sheol" (šē'ōl or šē'ōl, "underworld, netherworld"), also equated with "Abaddon" (ābaddōn, "destruction" [Job 26:6, 28:22; 31:12; Ps 88:11; Prov 15:11]) or "the Pit" (bôr [Is 14:15; 24:22; Ezek 26:20]; šāḥat [Ps 55:23; Is 38:17; Ezek 28:8; Jon 2:6]). Gloomy and desolate, it was like the Akkadian "Land of No Return," or the Greek Hades described by Homer. In sixty-one of sixty-five occurrences, "Sheol" is rendered as hadēs in the LXX.

Sheol's inhabitants were rēpa'im (lit., "weak ones"): ghosts, shades or spirits of the departed who are forever cut off from the land of the living, never to "rise" again (Ps 88:10; Is 26:14). The boundary between the living and the dead was inviolable. The dead could not return (2 Sam 12:23; Job 7:8-10), and the living were prohibited from feeding (Deut 26:14; cf. Sir 30:18) or consulting with the dead (Lev 20:27; Deut 18:11; 1 Sam 28:7; 2 Kings 23:24; Is 8:19).

The origin of the belief in resurrection among the Hebrews is impossible to trace. For over a century, a common proposal has been that Israel's resurrection faith was a postexilic addition from Persian religion, Zoroastrianism (Raphael, 73; Segal, 173-202). However, our understanding of Zoroastrian eschatology is based largely on a text dating to the ninth century A.D., and Persian belief in resurrection may reach no further back than the fourth century B.C. (Yamauchi, 47-48).

Another suggested origin is Canaanite religion. Ancient fertility cults celebrated the annual death and rebirth of deities. But evidence for a direct line of development from dying and rising gods to a doctrine of resurrection is inconclusive (Mettinger, 220-21). Moreover, it is unlikely that the Hebrew prophets, who excoriated Israel and Judah for idolatry, would, in order to create the most potent image of Yahweh's promise of national restoration, borrow the signature feature of the very nature cults that seduced God's people (Wright, 127).

Even if Canaanite, Persian or Hellenistic thought influenced Hebrew perspectives on the afterlife, belief in resurrection from the dead was "etched within the logic of OT concepts" (Martin-Achard, 683). Resurrection hope was associated with the following theological claims: Yahweh is the source of (new) creation, hence Lord over life and death; Yahweh is the covenant God of Israel, who keeps his covenant promises; and Yahweh's kingdom ultimately will triumph and will include the final exaltation/enthronement of God's covenant faithful (Anderson, 50-91).

There are only three recorded instances of the dead being raised in the OT: one in connection with Elijah (1 Kings 17:17-24) and two with Elisha (2 Kings 4:32-37; 13:21; cf. Sir 48:13-14). These miracles attest to Yahweh's power to rescue his people from death. They reveal the core truth that Yahweh "kills and brings to life" (1 Sam 2:6; cf. Deut 32:39), but they await richer theological development in the crucible of Israel's *exile, return and struggle for independence. Lacking in these OT miracles is an *apocalyptic framework that situates resurrection within the eschatological hope for Israel's national restoration and the establishment of God's righteous rule.

The *Targum on Hosea 6:1-3 interpreted the prophet's oracle as a promise of Israel's restoration at the final resurrection of the dead (Tg. Neb. Hos 6:2). Although a number of church fathers took the phrase "on the third day he will raise us up" (Hos 6:2) as a prophecy of Christ's resurrection, few modern scholars interpret Hosea's language as a reference to literal resurrection from the dead, seeing it instead as a covenant metaphor for Israel's return from exile (see Wijngaards). Likewise, Ezekiel's vision (Ezek 37:1-14) utilizes resurrection as a metaphor for the restoration of Israel. Yet the graphic depiction of the Lord's bringing his people up out of their graves (Ezek 37:12-13) inspired later Jewish and Christian conceptions of the general resurrection. Ezekiel also portrayed resurrection as a new creation by using imagery reminiscent of the creation of Adam from the dust of the earth (cf. Ezek 37:5-6, 8-10 with Gen 2:7).

Some scholars detect an early instance of resurrection belief in the "Apocalypse of Isaiah" (Is 24-27). A nonmetaphorical reading of Isaiah 26:19 is supported by the contrast between the general fate of the dead, "The dead do not live; shades do not rise" (Is 26:14), and the salvation of God's covenant people, "Your [Yahweh's] dead shall live, their corpses shall rise. . . . And the earth will give birth to those long dead [lit., 'shades']" (Is 26:19). This is corroborated by the promise in Isaiah 25:8 that Yahweh "will swallow up death forever."

The scholarly consensus holds that the belief in a final resurrection appeared first in Daniel 12:2, 13 during the time of the Maccabees. Daniel provides the fullest expression of resurrection hope in the OT.

The awakening of “those who sleep in the dust of the earth” (Dan 12:2) echoes the motif of new creation. God’s covenant faithful will be raised “to everlasting life,” the wicked “to shame and everlasting contempt.” “The wise” (Dan 12:3; cf. Dan 11:33, 35) and “those who lead many to righteousness” resemble the Suffering *Servant of Isaiah (cf. Is 52:13; 53:11) (see Nickelsburg, 38–41). Having been condemned to death in a human court, they will be vindicated in the divine court. Here we observe the accent on God’s execution of eschatological justice (cf. “your reward at the end of the days” [Dan 12:13]; the divine register, “the book” [Dan 12:1]). Daniel described the exaltation of the righteous in terms of shining stars (Dan 12:3). The image evokes the idea of heavenly enthronement (cf. Is 14:12–14; Pss. Sol. 1:5; T. Levi 18:3; T. Jud. 24:1).

The fourfold theological pattern of resurrection, covenant loyalty, exaltation/enthronement and new creation can be traced through a swath of Second Temple Jewish literature (2 Macc 7:1–42; 1 En. 22:13; 51:1–5; 61:5; 62:14–16; 91:10; 92:3–5; 4 Ezra 7:31–32; 2 Bar. 50:2–4; 51:1–12; Testament of the Twelve Patriarchs) (see Anderson, 61–85). This resurrection theology often fits into a sequence commonly described as “sin-exile-return.” Disobedient Israel will be delivered from the curse of exile through *repentance and covenant renewal with Yahweh. Perhaps most clearly in Testament of the Twelve Patriarchs resurrection is instrumental in bringing about the salvation and restoration of the twelve tribes of Israel (T. Sim. 6:7; T. Zeb. 10:2; T. Jud. 25:1, 3–5; T. Benj. 10:6–9). This background resembles Paul’s devotion to the hope of the twelve tribes (Acts 26:6–7; or “hope of Israel” [Acts 28:20]), the hope of the resurrection of the dead (Acts 23:6; 24:15).

Nevertheless, Jewish beliefs concerning the afterlife were not monolithic in the Second Temple period. There were those who sought consistency with classical Hebrew anthropology (cf. Eccles 3:19–21; 12:7), denying the Hellenistic idea that the soul of the deceased soared into the heavens, the habitation of the gods. Jesus ben Sira insisted that human beings were created from the earth, and they will return there when they die (Sir 16:30; 17:1; 40:1, 11; 41:10). He flatly denied both resurrection (Sir 38:21) and immortality (Sir 17:30), defining the latter in terms of the perpetuation of one’s good name or honor (Sir 37:26; 39:9; 44:8–15). Likewise, the Sadducees cleverly replaced both resurrection of the body and immortality of the soul with the belief that one lives on in one’s progeny (i.e., “raises up” children [Mk 12:19 par.]; on the Sadducees’ disbelief in resurrection, cf.

Acts 4:1–2; 23:8; Josephus, Ant. 18.16; J.W. 2.165).

Some embraced the Hellenistic idea of the immortality of the soul. The account of the martyrdom of the seven brothers in 4 Maccabees is based on 2 Maccabees 7, yet the author has systematically recast resurrection hope as belief in immortality (cf. 2 Macc 7:14 with 4 Macc 10:15; cf. 4 Macc 7:3; 9:22; 14:4–5; 16:13; 18:23). Philo assiduously avoided the use of resurrection language (anistēmi and its cognates; nor did he use egeirō in its resurrectional sense). Instead, he described the postmortem existence of the virtuous almost exclusively in terms of athanasia, “immortality” (Gig. 14, 45; Migr. 189; Plant. 37, 45; Praem. 110; Prob. 117; Opif. 135) (see Segal, 370).

Other voices are difficult to assess. The stress on immortality in Wisdom of Solomon has led to the conclusion that it promotes immortality of the soul as the final lot for the righteous (Wis 1:15; 3:1–4; 8:13, 17; 15:3). N. T. Wright argues that Wisdom of Solomon’s view of immortality does not necessarily exclude the idea of an embodied existence beyond death (Wright, 162–75). The view of the *Dead Sea Scrolls on resurrection has been notoriously elusive, and this has not been helped by the conflicting descriptions of *Essene belief by Josephus (J.W. 2.154–58) and Hippolytus (Haer. 9.27.1–3). Interpretation is further complicated by the fact that the sectarian scrolls focus on the community’s present participation in eternal life. However, 4Q521 explicitly affirms belief in the resurrection from the dead and relates the actions of the messiah in ways that resemble Matthew 11:2–6 // Luke 7:18–23; he will restore sight to the blind, make the dead live, and bring good news to the poor. Pseudo-Phocylides’ confusing presentation of the afterlife includes one of the most literalistic descriptions of bodily resurrection (Ps.-Phoc. 102–103) alongside expressions about the immortality of the soul (Ps.-Phoc. 105–108, 115) and the classical Hebrew idea of the afterlife in Sheol (Ps.-Phoc. 111–114).

Among Jewish texts that subscribe to belief in resurrection from the dead, many depict resurrection as concrete and bodily in nature. In 2 Maccabees the martyrs bear witness to the hope that parts of their mangled, tortured bodies will be restored to them at the resurrection (2 Macc 7:10–11; 14:46). The Sibylline Oracles provide explicit physical descriptions of how human bodies will be restored to their former wholeness (Sib. Or. 2:221–26; 4:181–82). The mature statement in 2 Baruch envisions the resurrection in two phases: first, the dead will be raised in the same bodily form as when they died (2 Bar. 50:2– 4); second, the wicked will be hideously deformed (2 Bar. 51:2, 5), while the righteous are gloriously exalted and transformed (2 Bar. 51:5, 10-12). Comparably, Paul wrote of resurrection involving the mortal putting on immortality (1 Cor 15:42-44, 50-53).

1.2. Resurrection in the Hellenistic World. The Jewish, and later Christian, doctrine of bodily resurrection was alien to Greco-Roman culture. Returning from the dead was regarded as impossible, forbidden and/or undesirable. Aeschylus declared, "But when the dust hath drained the blood of man, once he is slain, there is no return to life" (Eum. 647-48). Not even Zeus could effect it (Eum. 649-51). According to Pindar, when Asclepius once brought a man back from the dead, Zeus punished both of them with his thunderbolts (Pyth. 3:54-58). The Orphic slogan sōma sēma ("the body is a tomb") and belief in the immortality of the soul contributed to a sense of revulsion toward resurrection, particularly among the educated. The pagan critic Celsus wrote, "This is simply the hope of worms. For what sort of human soul would have any further desire for a body that has rotted?" (Origen, Cels. 5.14).

Nevertheless, the Greeks and Romans had fantastic tales about persons coming back from the dead. But their interpretations of these stories were far removed from the Judeo-Christian conceptions of resurrection. Aristophanes told a humorous tale of a corpse that sat up while being carried to the tomb. When two men asked him if he would take their luggage with him to Hades, he replied, "I'd sooner live again!" (Ran. 178). Euripides' play Alcestris was named after its heroine, who was brought back to life by Heracles. The chorus explained the resurrection as a serendipitous event allowed by the gods (Alc. 1159-63). Later, Plutarch interpreted the story as an illustration of love's superiority over death, as in the mythical stories of Protesilaus or Orpheus (Mor. 761e-762a). The ancients struggled with the social and religious implications of someone who had reputedly returned from the dead, whom they labeled deuteropotmos ("second-fated" [cf. Hesychius, "deuteropotmos"; Plutarch, Mor. 264d-265a]).

There were two principal explanations for persons who had died and come back to life: (1) a philosophical explanation of such stories as demonstrations for the immortality of the soul; (2) a scientific or medical explanation that describes the revival as a physical anomaly.

The first category applies to Plato's myth of Er, a warrior who was slain on the battlefield (Resp. 614b-621d). His body was collected ten days later and returned to his home. The corpse did not putrefy, and it revived on the funeral pyre. Er then recounted his journey in the afterlife and how the cycle of reincarnation was revealed to him. There were also stories of philosophers who faked their death and return from Hades to convince followers of the doctrine of immortality (see Herodotus, Hist. 4.94-96; Diogenes Laertius, Vit. 1.109; 8.41; Plutarch, Mor. 784a). Such stories were later utilized to demonstrate the immortality of the soul (Plutarch, Mor. 592c-d; Lucian, Musc. Laud. 7), were given naturalistic explanations (Pliny the Elder, Nat. 7.52.174), or regarded as mere myths (Origen, Cels. 2.55).

The most common naturalistic explanation was that of apparent death. The physician Aulus Cornelius Celsus believed that only an expert physician could reliably pronounce a patient dead (Med. 2.6.13-16). The motif of apparent death (Ger. Scheintod) became a major plot driver in ancient Greek novels (e.g., Chariton, Chaereas and Callirhoe [see Kany; Fullmer, 99-117]), which emerged not long after reports in Palestine concerning the resurrection of Jesus and the posting of the "Nazareth inscription," which published an official Roman ban on body snatching and tomb desecration.

2. Resurrection Miracles.

In the Synoptic Gospels Jesus raised someone from the dead before making any formal statement about resurrection. The miraculous power to raise the dead is one of the key aspects of his messianic vocation in announcing the kingdom of God. In John's Gospel the raising of *Lazarus forms a crucial part of the climax to Jesus' ministry and foreshadows his own death and resurrection. In Matthew's Gospel a mass resurrection of saints occurs in connection with Jesus' death (Mt 27:52), acting as an apocalyptic harbinger of the final resurrection.

2.1. The Widow's Son at Nain. The first resurrection miracle in Luke's narrative is of Jesus raising a widow's son at Nain (Lk 7:11-17). The account was composed with clear echoes of *Elijah's raising up the son of the widow of Zarephath. Jesus came to town and met the widow at the gate (Lk 7:12; cf. 1 Kings 17:10) and raised the dead son to life (Lk 7:14-15; cf. 1 Kings 17:22). Precisely the same words from LXX 1 Kings 17:23 appear in Luke 7:15: "and he gave him to his mother."

The crowd's twofold interpretation of the miracle fits Luke's christological portrait of Jesus: "A great prophet has risen among us" and "God has visited his people" (Lk 7:16). With regard to the first interpretation, in his inaugural appearance at Nazareth Jesus invoked the prophetic ministries of Elijah and Elisha as a pattern (Lk 4:14-30), and he specifically referenced Elijah's dealings with the Zarephath widow (Lk 4:26). Preceding Jesus' resurrection miracle in Luke 7:11-17 is an incident that also resembles the ministry of the two OT prophets: Jesus reached beyond Israel by healing the slave of a Gentile (Lk 7:1-10). The resurrection miracle also anticipates Jesus' enumeration of acts, including raising the dead, authenticating his role as the one who ushers in the *kingdom of God (Lk 7:22). With regard to the second interpretation, the motif of divine visitation recalls Zechariah's prophecy (Lk 1:68; cf. Lk 1:78). In Luke's narrative Israel will not acknowledge God's visitation (Lk 19:44). Jesus is the definitive agent of God's salvation; as such, he is the greatest in a long line of true prophets who have been destined for rejection by their own people (Lk 4:24; 6:22-23; 11:47, 49, 50; 13:33-34).

This miracle has been compared with the account of Apollonius of Tyana's raising up of a Roman maiden. However, his biographer, Philostratus, was ambivalent in his appraisal of what happened. The girl may have only appeared to be dead, or Apollonius may have resuscitated her (Philostratus, Vit. Apoll. 4.45; cf. Eusebius, Hier. 26). In contrast, for the evangelist, Jesus was God's appointed Messiah, who truly raised the dead.

2.2. Jairus's Daughter. The raising of Jairus's daughter is repeated in the triple tradition (Mt 9:18-29, 23-26 // Mk 5:21-24, 35-43 // Lk 8:40-42, 49-56). All three accounts are intercalated with the healing of the hemorrhaging woman and stress the role of faith in receiving God's saving action through Jesus. Matthew varies from Mark's sequencing, placing the account within a series of ten miracles (Mt 8:1-9:35). He abridges the story to sharpen the focus on Jesus' supernatural power. Luke conforms more closely to Mark's sequencing (Mk 4:1-6:12 // Lk 8:1-9:6). Neither Matthew nor Luke includes Jesus' Aramaic phrase talitha koura (Mk 5:41).

Luke's version clarifies the reality of the resurrection that occurred. Jesus' pronouncement "The child is not dead but sleeping" (Mk 5:39) casts a shadow of doubt about what really happened that is not dispelled by the end of Mark's account (though it is unlikely the girl's parents would have been utterly amazed that a rabbi woke their daughter from a nap [cf. Mk 5:42; Lk 8:56]). The ambiguity serves the motif of the messianic secret (cf. Jesus' order to keep silent in Mk 5:43; Lk 8:56; contrast Mt 9:26). Luke does not abide such imprecision. In Luke 8:53 the mourners contradicted Jesus' claim, for they laughed at him, "knowing that she was dead." The verbs in

"get up" (egeire [Mk 5:41; Lk 8:54]) and "she got up" (anestē [Mk 5:42; Lk 8:55]), as well as the Hebrew/Aramaic qûm (Mk 5:41), are polyvalent; in this context they could connote either getting up from sleep or rising from the dead. Luke tips the scale toward the latter connotation with the added contextual pointer "her spirit returned" (Lk 8:55).

The effect of the miracle in both Mark and Luke is that those on the outside (the mourners) were led to believe that the girl was only sleeping, while those on the inside (Jesus' inner circle of disciples and the girl's parents) were sworn to secrecy. Luke, however, leaves readers in no doubt about what happened: Jairus's daughter truly was raised from the dead.

2.3. Lazarus. The raising of Lazarus from the dead is Jesus' most remarkable resurrection miracle (Jn 11:1-44), since Lazarus was raised four days after interment, when the corpse would have already reeked from putrefaction (Jn 11:17, 39). It constitutes the culminating event in the first half of John's Gospel.

As the last of the seven authenticating miracles, or "signs," it points to the climax of divine revelation in Christ and reveals God's glory (Jn 11:4, 40; cf. Jn 1:14). It demonstrates that Christ is the one who gives eternal life (Jn 11:25; cf. Jn 5:25). The miracle also foreshadows Jesus' own death and resurrection. The description of Lazarus's tomb and grave clothes (Jn 11:38-39, 44) parallels the details concerning Jesus' burial and empty tomb (Jn 19:40; 20:7). However, Lazarus came out of the tomb still bound in wrappings; the resurrected Jesus left his wrappings in the tomb, neatly folded.

2.4. Many Saints. The account of the resurrection of many saints in Matthew 27:51-53 is of a very different character than the previous resurrection miracles. It is connected not to Jesus' public ministry, but to his crucifixion and resurrection. Its form is not that of a miracle story, but an apocalyptic narrative. The narrative contains echoes from three OT resurrection texts: "the tombs were opened" (Mt 27:52a [cf. Ezek 37:12-13]); "many . . . who had fallen asleep were raised" (Mt 27:52b [cf. Dan 12:2]); and "they came out of the tombs" (Mt. 27:53 [cf. LXX Is 26:19]).

The resurrection of saints has a twofold significance. First, the apocalyptic nature of the event signals Jesus' resurrection as the inauguration of the age to come and precursor to the final resurrection (cf. Acts 3:15; 26:23; 1 Cor 15:20, 23; Col 1:18). Second, the saints' resurrection amplifies Jesus' vindication. The self-curse of the people for shedding Jesus' innocent blood (Mt 27:4, 19, 24-25) has already gone into effect. According to Jesus' prediction, the "righteous blood" of all the prophets is testifying against the people, as the saints come out of the very tombs that their murderers built for them (cf. Mt 23:29-31) (see Heil 1991, 85-86). Whether Matthew envisions a wider "harrowing of hell" (cf. 1 Pet 4:6) is open to debate.

Questions concerning the historicity of this event are perennial in modern research. Some reject it out of hand as unhistorical (Allison, 307). M. Licona has argued that at least some of the phenomena were "special effects" or a "poetic device" (Licona, 548-53). Wright leaves open the question of historicity, suggesting that Matthew might have known a tradition about such strange occurrences (Wright, 632-36). Nevertheless, the evangelist incorporated apocalyptic imagery to convey the theological truth about the inbreaking of the new age. All of the resurrection miracles in the Gospels assume this eschatological declaration. They are signposts pointing to Jesus' resurrection, which is the beginning of the age to come and the final resurrection. Those who benefited from resurrection miracles (which many scholars prefer to identify as resuscitations) were brought back to life only "for so long as it pleased God" (Acts Pet. 28); Jesus, however, was resurrected never to die again.

3. Resurrection in Jesus' Teaching.

Jesus taught relatively little on the explicit theme of resurrection. In the Synoptic Gospels explicit predictions of Jesus' resurrection emerge only in the second half of each Gospel. In John's Gospel, although Jesus foretells his own resurrection (often cryptically) and the final resurrection, his teaching falls under the more prominent theme of eternal life.

3.1. The Double Tradition. A common opinion among *Q scholars is that the early Christian community responsible for the Matthew/Luke parallels (often called "Q") excluded eschatological beliefs concerning the death and resurrection of Jesus and a final resurrection for God's people. Q, insofar as we can reconstruct it, evidently had no death-resurrection formulae or passion narrative. However, this conclusion is born of silence. G. Nickelsburg and N. T. Wright have suggested a plausible alternative (Nickelsburg, 231; Wright, 429-34). A number of Q texts presuppose resurrection within a larger pattern of God's vindication of his persecuted servants.

Matthew 8:11-12 // Lk 13:28-30 envisions an end-time reversal of fortune. *Abraham, Isaac and Jacob will welcome people from far-flung places to the eschatological banquet, while the purportedly rightful "heirs of the kingdom" will be excluded. A cognate saying (Mt 19:28 // Lk 22:28-30) also situates Jesus' predictions within the context of Jewish (or Pharisaic) hope. Jesus promised his apostles that they will sit on twelve thrones, judging the twelve tribes of Israel. Luke includes the scenic elements of a banquet (Lk 22:30). In Matthew the restoration of Israel coincides with "the renewal of all things" (Mt 19:28). "Renewal" (palingenesia) indicates rebirth or regeneration (cf. Tit 3:5). The metaphor of giving birth was at home among Jewish expectations concerning the renewal of the world to come and resurrection from the dead (cf. Is 26:19; Josephus, Ag. Ap. 2.218; 4 Ezra 4:40-42; Acts 2:24). A third text from the double tradition issues Jesus' exhortation to martyrs to fear not those who can kill the body, but rather God, who can destroy both body and soul in Gehenna (Mt 10:28 // Lk 12:4-5). This teaching might presume the dual resurrection in Daniel 12:2: the righteous to everlasting life and vindication, the wicked to everlasting condemnation.

One double-tradition passage includes raising the dead as part of Jesus' messianic profile (Mt 11:5 // Lk 7:22). It is similar to the predictions concerning the messiah's achievements in 4Q521. In both Gospels the logion is anticipated by a resurrection miracle performed by Jesus (Jairus's daughter [Mt 9:18-29, 23-26]; widow's son at Nain [Lk 7:11-17]). Here, raising the dead is one of the essential identifiers for "the coming one" of eschatological hope (Mt 11:3 // Lk 7:20), and it fits within a pattern of vindication for outcasts (the blind, lame, deaf, poor) in the face of those who oppose them and God's prophets.

The "sign of Jonah" passage (Mt 12:39-42 // Lk 11:29-32) is controversial. Like the texts above, it sounds the theme of eschatological reversal. Both parallels use language that could connote resurrection (the men of Nineveh "will rise up," anestēsontai [Mt 12:41 // Lk 11:32]; the Queen of the South "will rise up," egerthēsetai [Mt 12:42 // Lk 11:31]). But only Matthew explains the sign of Jonah as a type of Jesus' death and resurrection (Mt 12:40). Luke too may have interpreted the sign as Jesus' resurrection (Wright, 433), but more likely he associated it with Jesus' wisdom or preaching of repentance. In favor of taking Matthew 12:40 as a bit of Matthean interpretive commentary may be the fact that it precedes Jesus' initial passion prediction by four chapters (cf. Mt 16:21) (see Hagner, 102).

3.2. Mark and Its Parallels. According to the Synoptic Gospels, Jesus rarely spoke explicitly about the future life in connection with resurrection. However, he seemed to presume the reality of the final resurrection when teaching about future judgment or entrance into the kingdom of God/(eternal) life. The references to self-mutilation in order to avoid sin are hyperbolic but striking (Mk 9:43-48 // Mt 18:8-9). It is better “to enter life” maimed, or “enter the kingdom of God” with only one eye, than to be thrown into Gehenna whole. Jesus encountered a rich man who asked him how “to inherit eternal life” (Mk 10:17-25 // Mt 19:16-24 // Lk 18:18-25). Their exchange may underline the impediment of wealth to entering the kingdom now as a present reality. However, in a follow-up pericope (Mk 10:29-30 // Mt 19:29 // Lk 18:29-30) Jesus explained to his disciples how privation “in this age” will be rewarded with great bounty “and in the age to come eternal life.” Jesus’ teaching on “life” or “eternal life” could refer only to immortality (Vermes, 72). But the theme of judgment, the two-age apocalyptic framework, and the concrete, earthy images fit well with Jewish expectations of resurrection.

Jesus taught explicitly about the nature of resurrection life on only one occasion in the triple tradition (Mk 12:18-27 // Mt 22:23-33 // Luke 20:27-40). In his only recorded head-to-head debate with the Sadducees Jesus refuted their reductio ad absurdum argument against the resurrection. Here Jesus declared that in the resurrection people will be “like angels in heaven” (Mk 12:25 // Mt 22:30) or “equal to angels” (isangeloi [Lk 20:36]). Some scholars conclude that Jesus was referring to the resurrected as disembodied spirits. This may comport with traditions about the resurrected being like *angels or stars (2 Bar. 51:3, 5, 10, 12; cf. Dan 12:3). However, Jesus never spoke of becoming angels or spirits, but rather of being like or equal to them. The point of the comparison is that, like angels, the resurrected “neither marry nor are given in marriage.” Luke sharpened the comparison by pointing to the reason: “they cannot die anymore” (Lk 20:36). Jesus negated the Sadducean view of immortality via procreation, since the true immortality of resurrection life renders marriage and child bearing unnecessary.

Additionally, Jesus provided scriptural support for the reality of the resurrection. The covenant formula, “I am the God of Abraham, and the God of Isaac, and the God of Jacob” demonstrates that he is “God not of the dead, but of the living.” The precise logic of the argument is difficult to follow. It is complicated by Luke’s addition “for all live to him [i.e., God]” (Lk 20:38)—a possible allusion to 4 Maccabees 7:19; 16:25. Perhaps, by knocking down the Sadducees’ disbelief in any sort of afterlife, Jesus has opened the way to believing the entire eschatological program: life even now in the presence of God for the faithful departed, and eternal *life in the age to come at the resurrection.

The Synoptic Gospels record a number of Jesus’ predictions concerning his death and resurrection. There are three direct *predictions (Mk 8:31; 9:31; 10:32-34). While the Markan predictions state that Jesus will rise “after three days,” Matthew (Mt 16:21; 17:23; 20:19) and Luke (Lk 9:22; 18:33) have “on the third day,” probably in conformity to a common formulation in early Christian proclamation and liturgy (cf. Acts 10:40; 1 Cor 15:4). Maybe they also wanted to convey a more precise reckoning of time (using inclusive counting of days), but the use of both “after three days” and “until the third day” in Matthew 27:63, 64 may suggest that varying expressions simply denote a brief time period (cf. “three days and three nights” [Mt 12:40]).

There are two indirect predictions of Jesus’ resurrection (both lacking in Luke). First, Jesus ordered his closest disciples not to divulge what they had seen at the transfiguration “until after the Son of Man had risen from the dead” (Mk 9:9 // Mt 17:9). Second, along with predicting Peter’s denial, Jesus anticipated a later meeting with his disciples “after I am raised up” (Mk 14:28 // Mt 26:32). The former points up an important theme accompanying Jesus’ predictions: the disciples’ misunderstanding. Jesus’ command of silence after the *transfiguration left his disciples “questioning what this rising from the dead could mean” (Mk 9:10). After the three direct predictions the disciples’ perplexity focused on Jesus’ death. But in Luke (though resurrection is lacking from the second prediction [Lk 9:44]) death and resurrection have been clearly integrated in the disciples’ misunderstanding. Luke attributes the misunderstanding to divine concealment (Lk 9:45; 18:34), which is not lifted until after Jesus’ resurrection (Lk 24:5-8, 16, 31, 45). Otherwise, the evangelists do not account for the disciples’ inability to grasp Jesus’ predictions of his resurrection. Rumors that Jesus was *John the Baptist or one of the prophets raised from the dead (Mk 6:14-15 // Mt 14:1 // Lk 9:7-8; cf. Lk 9:19) might have contributed to the disciples’ confusion (cf. Mk 9:11-13 // Mt 17:10-13). Perhaps triumphalist messianic expectations made it impossible for them to “hear” predictions about an executed and resurrected messiah. Another common suggestion is that the disciples reflexively misunderstood Jesus to be referring to the final, corporate resurrection, not his own singular resurrection, and found his words “on the third day” puzzling.

3.3. Matthew. A few references to resurrection are unique to Matthew. Only in Matthew's *mission discourse are Jesus' *disciples granted the authority to "raise the dead" (Mt 10:8). Though unparalleled, this comports with the messianic profile in the double tradition (Mt 11:5 // Lk 7:22) and thus is fitting for the Messiah's agents. In Jesus' interpretation of his parable of the weeds the apocalyptic imagery of the harvesting of wheat and destruction of weeds "at the end of the age" is topped off by a possible allusion to Daniel 12:3: "Then the righteous will shine like the sun in the kingdom of their Father" (Mt 13:43). Later, Jesus' face "shone like the sun" (Mt 17:2) at his transfiguration, itself a prefiguration of his resurrected glory. At the judgment of the sheep and the goats, the accursed "will go away into eternal punishment, but the righteous into eternal life" (Mt 25:46)—an echo of the dual fate for the resurrected in Daniel 12:2. These references are consonant with Matthew's theological interest in apocalyptic themes.

3.4. Luke. Unique Lukan references consistently tie resurrection to the theme of reversal, particularly with regard to *rich and poor. In back-to-back passages (Lk 14:7-14, 15-24) Jesus challenged reigning standards of social stratification and reciprocity by urging wealthy hosts to invite not the similarly well-heeled, but rather the poor, crippled, *blind and lame (Lk 14:13, 21). The passages are hinged together by the saying in Luke 14:14: "And you will be blessed, because they cannot repay you, for you will be repaid at the resurrection of the righteous." This parallels a common belief in Second Temple Judaism: at the resurrection the righteous poor, oppressed and exiled will be exalted or rewarded in the presence of their wealthy, powerful oppressors, who will be cast down (e.g., Dan 11:12; 1 En. 62:14-16; T. Jud. 25:3-5; 4 Ezra 4:35; 7:35). These ideas are so tightly aligned that Jesus can use the concrete notion of resurrection metaphorically for role reversal itself. In the parable of the prodigal son, the father twice exults in his lost son's return: he "was dead and is alive again; he was lost and is found" (Lk 15:24, 32).

The reversal of fortunes for rich and poor is no more dramatically portrayed than in the story of the rich man and Lazarus (Lk 16:19-31), the conclusion of which is suggestive for a Lukan emphasis regarding Jesus' resurrection. The rich man insisted that if someone were sent "from the dead" to his brothers, they would repent and avoid the torment of Hades. Abraham replied, "If they do not listen to Moses and the prophets, neither will they be convinced even if someone rises from the dead." This almost certainly is an oblique reference to Jesus' resurrection from the dead, which one cannot comprehend apart from the divine plan of salvation foretold in the Scriptures (Lk 24:25-27, 32, 44-46).

3.5. John. Two emphases in John's Gospel seem to mute the significance of the resurrection. The first is John's well-known realized eschatology, which stresses Jesus' authority to grant eternal life in the present. The second is the Gospel's focus on the cross of Christ as the goal of his being "lifted up" (Jn 3:14; 8:28; 12:32, 34) or "glorified" (Jn 7:39; 12:23, 28).

In truth, realized eschatology has not swallowed up future eschatology in John. Jesus' present authority to raise the dead and execute judgment (Jn 5:25-27) is counterbalanced by his same authority at work in the final resurrection (Jn 5:28-29). Clear echoes of OT resurrection passages occur in this passage (Is 26:19; Ezek 37:12; Dan 12:2). Similarly, in the discourse on the bread of life Jesus repeatedly promised a present grant of eternal life to believers, but also that he will "raise up" the believer "on the last day" (Jn 6:39, 40, 44, 54; cf. Jn 11:24).

Jesus' cross-centered predictions of his exaltation do not stand alone in John. Jesus' glorification on the cross takes its shape and meaning from his resurrection. Both cross and resurrection are crucial phases of Jesus' return/ascent to the Father. The cleansing of the *temple (see Temple Act) is presented as a foreshadowing of Jesus' resurrection (Jn 2:13-22; cf. the same saying in the mouths of Jesus' accusers in Mt 26:61; 27:40 // Mk 14:58; 15:29; cf. Acts 6:14). The evangelist explains that Jesus was talking about the temple of his body (Jn 2:21) and records how the disciples could understand the scriptural meaning of the saying only after Jesus' resurrection (Jn 2:22). In the discourse on the good shepherd death and resurrection are Jesus' sovereign twofold action in order to give eternal life. Jesus declared his authority to lay his life down and to take it up again (Jn 10:17-18; cf. Jn 10:11). Finally, in the farewell discourse Jesus cryptically spoke of his disappearance, then reappearance "in a little while" (Jn 14:18-19; 16:16-24). Jesus was referring to his death and resurrection, but as important steps in his return/ascension to the Father (cf. Jn 13:3; 14:12, 28; 16:10, 17, 28; 20:17).

4. The Resurrection Narratives in the Four Gospels.

4.1. Mark's Resurrection Narrative. A fundamental issue in interpreting the pericope about the empty tomb in Mark 16:1-8 concerns the ending of Mark's Gospel. The consensus view is that the evangelist intended to end the Gospel at Mark 16:8. The minority view is that the original ending was lost due to the mutilation of an early manuscript (either accidentally or deliberately). The consensus view interprets the abrupt ending as a fitting conclusion to the Gospel. Narrative closure occurs through highlighting two themes: the revelation of Jesus “the crucified” as the Messiah and the Son of God, and the failure of the disciples. The weakness of this view involves its exclusive focus on narrative-critical analysis of the text, which brackets out historical factors. The additional endings to Mark seem to have been motivated primarily not by a felt need for narrative closure, but rather by a perceived lack of kerygmatic and historical fullness. The longer ending in particular (Mk 16:9-20) sought to fill out the story with a pastiche of postresurrection appearances, a commissioning of the disciples and a report of the ascension, ostensibly drawn from other Gospel traditions.

Mark 16:1-8 points not to discipleship failure, but rather to the role of the *women and the other disciples as witnesses to Jesus’ resurrection. The passage proceeds in three movements: the women’s journey to the tomb (Mk 16:1-4); their entrance into the tomb and commissioning by the young man to inform the disciples of Jesus’ rendezvous with them in *Galilee (Mk 16:5-7); and the women’s reverent, single-minded obedience to the young man’s command (Mk 16:8).

The listing of three women in Mark 16:1 points to their function as witnesses. All three were listed as present at Jesus’ death on the cross (Mk 15:40), and two out of the three at his burial (Mk 15:47). These women followers showed up for the first time in Mark’s passion narrative, though the narrator states that they had been of service to Jesus since his time in Galilee (Mk 15:41). The differences between the three lists are not due to stylistic variation, but make better sense as Mark’s attempt to ensure that the “witness lists” are accurate. This is supported by the repetition of the women’s act of “seeing” (theoreō) in Mark 15:40, 47; 16:4. The continuity between the lists militates against the suggestion that the women haplessly stumbled upon the wrong tomb. Often noted is the remarkable fact that women were mentioned at all as the first witnesses to the empty tomb. It points to the primitive character of the tradition behind Mark’s account, since an early Christian would hardly manufacture such a story. Women’s legal testimony was often regarded as less credible than that of men.

Mark’s straightforward, laconic recounting of the women’s experience contains touches of an eyewitness perspective. Though there is evidence of Markan redaction (e.g., the redundant timestamp in Mk 16:2; cf. Mk 1:32), the account stands in stark relief to the *passion narrative in that it lacks allusions to scriptural fulfillments (e.g., the quotation from Ps 22:1 in Mk 15:34). The women’s last-minute concern about not being able to roll away the stone bears the marks of verisimilitude (Mk 16:3-4). Likewise, the description of the divine messenger inside the tomb as a “young man” (Mk 16:5) may indicate a phenomenological or experiential perspective, although ancient Jewish readers could have understood him to be an angel (cf. Dan 8:15-16; 9:21; Josephus, Ant. 5.277).

The heart of the pericope is the young man’s address to the women. Their alarm and his exhortation not to be alarmed (Mk 16:5b-6a) are typical of angelic epiphanies. There are three principal elements in the young man’s words (Mk 16:6-7): the announcement that Jesus has been raised, with minimal christological elaboration (“Jesus of Nazareth, who was crucified”); an invitation to witness the fact that the tomb is now empty; and a command to tell Peter and the disciples to meet Jesus in Galilee in accordance with Jesus’ earlier directive. This culminates the women’s witness to the key events, heralded in the kerygma (1 Cor 15:3-8): Jesus died (Mk 15:40), was buried (Mk 15:47), was raised on the third day (Mk 16:6), and appeared to Peter and other disciples (Mk 16:7).

Contrary to the common interpretation of this passage, the women’s response in Mark 16:8 should be interpreted positively in light of the young man’s words in Mark 16:7. Three factors figure into our interpretation. First, the young man’s order in Mark 16:7 reasserts Jesus’ promise in Mark 14:28. Imperative (“go, tell”) and predictive elements (“there you will see him”) occur alongside the promissory (“he is going ahead of you . . . just as he told you”). We should hold as suspect an interpretation of Mark 16:8 that views the women as not only disobeying the young man’s command, but also thwarting the prediction and promise of Jesus. In Mark, Jesus’ predictions—for example, the “must” (dei) of the passion predictions (Mk 8:31; 9:31; 10:33) and the prediction of Peter’s denials (Mk 14:30)—never fail. Note also, in passing, that the singling out of Peter in Mark 16:7 may hint at his projected restoration.

Second, in Mark the women’s emotions of fear and amazement are typical responses to divine manifestations. While it is true that Mark has developed the theme of discipleship failure in scenes marked by fear, silence and misunderstanding among Jesus’ male disciples (Mk 6:52; 8:14-21; 9:6, 32; 10:32), the women have not shared in this characterization.

They have been consistently portrayed as faithful witnesses to Jesus, even after all the other disciples abandoned him (cf. Mk 14:40). Their earlier emotion of “alarm” is consonant with the natural human response to angelic appearances (Mk 16:5b-6a). “Trembling” (tromos) occurs in Mark only at Mark 16:8, but elsewhere in the NT it is always coupled with “fear” (phobos) to denote due respect or religious awe accompanying actions deemed appropriate or obedient (1 Cor 2:3; 2 Cor 7:15; Eph 6:5; Phil 2:12). “Amazement” (ekstasis) is the same emotional response experienced by those who witnessed the raising of Jairus’s daughter (Mk 5:42). Mark’s repetition of the women’s response of fear is designed to put a spotlight not on their emotions, but rather on the reason for their awe: the manifestation of divine power in the crucified Jesus, who has been raised from the dead.

Third, the double negative “they said nothing to no one” indicates exclusive, not absolute, silence on the part of the women. Recently scholars have pointed to the parallel in Mark 1:44 (Allison, 304; Bryan, 79). There Jesus told the cured leper to “say nothing to no one,” but to go directly to the *priest to certify his cleansing. It is reasonable to conclude that, unlike the leper, the women did not go about blabbering in public, but fulfilled their commission to tell only the disciples, “because they were filled with awe” (ephobounto gar).

4.2. Matthew’s Resurrection Narrative. Matthew has followed Mark’s narrative scheme for Jesus’ passion and resurrection, but with important additions (e.g., Mt 27:3-10, 51-53) and variations (cf. Mt 27:54 with Mk 15:39). The opening scene in Matthew’s resurrection narrative (Mt 28:1-10) substantially parallels the extant conclusion to Mark (Mk 16:1-8). However, it is flanked by two related scenes unique to Matthew: the posting of the guard at the tomb (Mt 27:62-66), following Jesus’ burial (Mt 27:57-61); and the bribing of the guards (Mt 28:11-15), following the scene at the empty tomb (Mt 28:1-10). The concluding scene (Mt 28:16-20) narrates Jesus’ projected meeting with his disciples (absent from extant Mark). It has general affinities with other postresurrection commissioning accounts (cf. Mk 16:15-16; Lk 24:44-49; Jn 20:21-23) but is crafted as the dénouement for the entire Gospel.

Matthew resolves three major plot lines in his resurrection account: conflict, *Christology, discipleship. In the other Gospels Jesus’ conflict with authorities terminates in his crucifixion; in Matthew the conflict extends beyond his resurrection. Jesus’ opponents prove to be impotent frauds in their attempts to thwart Jesus’ resurrection (Mt 27:62-66; 28:11-15). The apocalyptic manifestation of the angel at the empty tomb revealed the vindication of Jesus and the triumph of divine power over those who executed Jesus (Mt 28:2-6). Although Jesus’ disciples contend with deception “to this day” (Mt 28:15), at the end of Matthew they are commissioned as emissaries under Jesus’ all-encompassing kingdom authority and faithful presence “to the end of the age” (Mt 28:20).

Matthew’s initial resurrection pericope (Mt 28:1-10) consists of two parts: the women’s visit to the tomb (Mt 28:1-7) and their meeting with the risen Jesus (Mt 28:8-10). Matthew streamlines Mark’s account and adds his own thematic and stylistic touches, such as apocalyptic descriptions and the Semitic expression kai idou (Mt 28:2, 7, 9). Matthew’s telling displays the women’s role as witnesses to Jesus’ resurrection. He mentions only two of the women listed in Mark (Mt 28:1 // Mk 16:1). Perhaps Matthew has made Mark’s lists more consistent (see 4.1 above), listing three women at the cross (Mt 27:56) but “Mary Magdalene and the other Mary” at both Jesus’ burial and the empty tomb (Mt 27:61; 28:1). The same two women saw “the great stone” rolled against the tomb (Mt 27:60) and sat as passive observers “opposite the tomb” (Mt 27:61). In Matthew 28:1 their errand was “to see the tomb,” not to anoint Jesus’ body as in Mark. Matthew sharply brings into focus the women’s role as witnesses to the empty tomb.

Matthew’s most radical departure from Mark involves the apocalyptic events that occurred upon the women’s arrival. An earthquake (Mt 28:2) forms a link with the climactic seismic shaking at Jesus’ crucifixion, associated with the rending of the temple veil, the resurrection of many saints and the confession of Jesus as God’s Son (Mt 27:51-54). Mark’s “young man” is in Matthew clearly “an angel of the Lord” clothed gloriously (Mt 28:2-3). There is irony and contrast in the way the angel interacted with the women and the guards. The angel directly counteracted the measures taken to secure the tomb. When Jesus was buried a “stone” had been “rolled” (proskylisas) across the entrance of the tomb (Mt 27:60). Then a guard was posted and the stone sealed in order to prevent the disciples from stealing Jesus’ body and declaring, “He has been raised from the dead [nekrōn]” (Mt 27:62-66). After Jesus’ resurrection, the angel “rolled back” (apekylisen) the “stone” (Mt 28:2). He sat upon the stone, showing divine triumph over the opponents’ futile challenges to God’s purpose in Jesus. In a wordplay, the earthquake (seismos [Mt 28:2]) and awesome presence of the angel made the guards “shake” (eseisthēsan [Mt 28:4]) with fear. Those who were tasked with preventing Jesus’ resurrection from the dead “became like dead men [nekroi]” (Mt 28:4). In contrast, the angel emphatically encouraged the women, “You, do not be afraid” (mē phobeisthe hymeis [Mt 28:5]).

The angel’s address to the women is essentially the same as that in Mark (Mt 28:5-7 // Mk 16:6-7). However, Matthew lacks the description of Jesus as “the Nazarene” and does not single out Peter as a special recipient of the women’s report. Matthew emphasizes the urgency of the women’s mission (note the repetition of “quickly” [Mt 28:7, 8]), as well as the gravity of the angelic command (“See, I have told you” [Mt 28:7]). The indirect discourse in Mark could include the women among those who will see Jesus in Galilee (Mk 16:7). But in Matthew the direct order, to be conveyed through the women, applies only to the male disciples (Mt 28:7). This makes sense because the women encountered Jesus shortly thereafter in Jerusalem, and Jesus’ reiteration of the angel’s command states concerning the meeting in Galilee, “there they will see me” (Mt 28:10). Nevertheless, the women who “went” to “see” the tomb (Mt 28:1) and were invited to “come” and “see” where Jesus had lain (Mt 28:6) were commissioned to do the very thing that the authorities sought to halt: “tell” the message of Jesus’ resurrection (Mt 27:64; 28:6-7).

The women’s departure from the tomb was accompanied by a mixture of fear and great *joy, but also with resolve to complete their mission (Mt 28:8). As they rushed to obey the angel’s command, the women were greeted by the risen Jesus himself. The women’s act of grasping Jesus’ feet may simply be a tangible expression of *love and attachment along with their *worship (Mt 28:9). It may also point to the physical reality of Jesus’ risen body, since ghosts or apparitions either do not have feet or their feet do not touch the ground (Allison, 278). Jesus echoed the final order of the angel (Mt 28:10) but called the disciples “my brothers,” alluding to their rehabilitation as true disciples and anticipating his final commission in Matthew 28:16-20. The women’s witness to the empty tomb and to the risen Jesus fully prepared them to be “apostles to the apostles.”

In Matthew 28:11-15, while the women went off to fulfill their charge, the guards returned to tell the authorities what had happened at the tomb. Ironically, having failed in their effort to stop the proclamation of Jesus’ resurrection, the authorities have stooped to the same kind of deception that they suspected of Jesus’ disciples (cf. Mt 27:62-66). Their treachery included bribery, falsehood and political cover for the guards. It is impossible to prove the historicity of Matthew’s account regarding the guards. But the note that this story was being perpetuated by Matthew’s Jewish contemporaries (Mt 28:15) suggests that the evangelist felt duty-bound to respond to an existing tale. Strange and improbable apologetic it would have been for an early Christian to construct stories suggesting the earliest alternative explanation for Jesus’ resurrection: the disciples stole the body.

The concluding pericope in Matthew is suitably known as the Great Commission (Mt 28:16-20). The scene is a mountain in Galilee that Jesus appointed beforehand (Mt 28:16). This detail was not mentioned earlier (cf. Mt 28:7, 10), but it is appropriate in a Gospel where mountains play a prominent role in divine revelation through Jesus (Mt 5:1; 17:1; cf. Mt 4:8-10). The eleven disciples’ response of worship is also natural (cf. Mt 2:2, 8, 11; 8:2; 9:18; 14:33; 15:25; 18:26; 20:20; 28:9), here all the more in light of Jesus’ declaration of his universal authority (Mt 28:18) and order to baptize in the trinitarian formula (Mt 28:19). The risen Jesus received worship reserved exclusively for Israel’s God (Mt 4:10; cf. Deut 10:20; Is 45:21-24). A crux interpretum is the additional response “but some doubted” (Mt 28:17) (see Bryan, 296nn47-48). The best interpretation takes this as a candid record of the disciples’ reaction. Other Gospels do not hide the reasonable response of disciples who can hardly believe their own senses (Lk 24:36-43; Jn 20:24-29) or have the impression of experiencing something surreal (cf. Jn 21:4, 12). The disciples’ tendency toward “little faith” in Matthew ultimately was dispelled not by Jesus’ physical presence, but rather by his authoritative word.

Jesus’ final appearance and commission of his disciples masterfully concludes the Gospel through an encapsulation of Matthean themes: revelation in Galilee, the *mountain, worship, authority, discipleship, universal mission, teaching, “the end of the age” and divine presence (cf. Mt 1:23; 18:20; 28:20). Matthew’s Gospel closes with the assurance that God’s kingdom has been inaugurated by the risen Jesus, will be extended through the worldwide mission of his disciples, and is enabled by his continuing presence.

4.3. Luke’s Resurrection Narrative. Luke’s resurrection narrative begins with distinct parallels to Mark 16:1-8 but departs from it more quickly and radically than Matthew. Three variations stand out: (1) “two men” (andres duo [Lk 24:4]; cf. “a vision of angels" in Lk 24:23]) appear to the women (cf. Mk 16:5), forming a link between the heavenly personages at Jesus' transfiguration, resurrection and ascension (Lk 9:30, 32; 24:4; Acts 1:10); (2) the order to tell the disciples to meet Jesus in Galilee is instead a call to remember what Jesus said while he was in Galilee (Lk 24:6-7); (3) the list of women (Lk 24:10) more closely matches the list of Jesus' women supporters in Luke 8:2-3. Unique to Luke is the fact that all of Jesus' postresurrection appearances occur in Jerusalem and its environs.

Luke 24 is carefully crafted as three scenes: the empty tomb in the morning (Lk 24:1-12); the Emmaus road in the afternoon (Lk 24:13-35); and Jerusalem in the evening (Lk 24:36-53). The last scene itself forms a triptych: Jesus' demonstration of his bodily resurrection (Lk 24:36-43); the commissioning of the apostles (Lk 24:44-49); and the ascension (Lk 24:50-53). The three scenes are structurally bound together with time markers, spatial movements and intercommunication. The Easter events occur within the time frame of a single day (Lk 24:1, 13, 33, 36), emphasizing that it is "on the third day" after Jesus' death (Lk 24:7, 21, 29, 46). Each scene closes with someone returning somewhere (Lk 24:9, 12, 33, 52). Links of intercommunication occur between the women and the apostles (Lk 24:10); "some who were with us" and the Emmaus pair (Lk 24:24); and the Emmaus pair and the eleven disciples (Lk 24:34-35). The narrative moves progressively toward the third scene. This progression is aided by notes about Peter's visit to the empty tomb (Lk 24:12) and an unnarrated appearance of the Lord to "Simon" (Lk 24:34), climaxing in Jesus' physical demonstrations and scriptural disclosures that qualify the apostles as the original "eyewitnesses and servants of the word" (Lk 1:2). Four major emphases appear throughout the three scenes, which we will examine here.

4.3.1. Physical Reality of Jesus' Resurrection. The first scene in Luke's resurrection narrative points to the reality of Jesus' resurrection by establishing a chain of evidence in the women's witness to the empty tomb. The women who were present at Jesus' burial "saw the tomb and how his body was laid" (Lk 23:55). These same women arrived at the tomb on Easter morning to find it empty (Lk 24:3). The two men informed the women that Jesus is absent from the tomb because he is alive and risen (Lk 24:5). Significantly, the "aliveness" of the resurrected Jesus in Luke-Acts is unparalleled among the Gospels (Lk 24:5, 23; Acts 1:3; 25:19; possible exceptions in Jn 6:57; 14:19). This aspect of Jesus' resurrection is underscored in Acts through repeated references to his body not being subject to decomposition (Acts 2:27, 31; 13:34, 35, 36, 37).

The empty tomb did not, by itself, demonstrate that Jesus had been raised from the dead. The apostles responded with incredulity to the women's announcement of Jesus' resurrection (Lk 24:11). Peter verified that the tomb was empty, except for the presence of burial cloths, which probably ruled out the possibility of tomb robbery. But he was struck only with amazement (Lk 24:12). Despite the women's report of the angelic message that Jesus is alive and the confirmation that the tomb was empty, the Emmaus pair was despondent (Lk 24:23-24). Their comment "but they did not see him" (Lk 24:24) anticipates Jesus' climactic appearance in the third scene. Even the appearance to the Emmaus pair is complicated by the fact that, once recognized, Jesus vanished from their sight (Lk 24:31). Readers attuned to Israel's Scriptures will recall stories of divine revelation and departure (Gen 17:22; 35:13; Judg 6:21; 13:20; cf. Tob 12:20-21; 2 Macc 3:34). Jesus' sudden disappearance indicates that he is already entering into his glory (Lk 24:26) and is no longer confined by usual limitations of earthly life.

In the third scene Jesus offered a threefold demonstration of his physical resurrection. He did so in response to the disciples' impression that they were seeing a ghost (Lk 24:37). First, Jesus appealed to sight: "Look at my hands and feet; see that it is I myself" (Lk 24:39a). Second, Jesus invited his disciples to touch him, "For a ghost does not have flesh and bones as you see that I have" (Lk 24:39b-40). Third, in order to remove any further doubt, Jesus ate in their presence (Lk 24:41-43; cf. Acts 10:41). The act of eating foreclosed any supposition that he appeared as an angel, since angels do not eat (Tob 12:19; Philo, Abr. 115-18; T. Ab. 4:9). The book of Acts reports that Jesus "presented himself alive" to his disciples "with many convincing proofs" (Acts 1:3), and the double recounting of Jesus' ascension (Lk 24:51; Acts 1:9-11) requires his physical body being borne up visibly into heaven.

4.3.2. Recognition. For Luke, it is insufficient for witnesses to recognize the bare fact that Jesus was physically raised from the dead. What is required is a total recognition of God's saving plan in the Messiah. Belief in Jesus' resurrection occurred not only on the basis of witnessing the empty tomb and appearances of the risen Jesus, but also in recalling the predictions of his passion and resurrection. Many particulars of Jesus' earlier predictions reverberate in the three scenes: "Son of Man" (Lk 9:22, 44; 17:24-25; 18:31 // Lk 24:7); "must" (Lk 9:22; 17:25; 22:37 // Lk 24:7, 26, 44); “be handed over” (Lk 9:44; 18:32; 22:22 // Lk 24:7); “into the hands of men” (Lk 9:44 // Lk 24:7); “on the third day” (Lk 9:22; 13:32; 18:32 // Lk 24:7, 46); “rise” (Lk 9:22; 18:33 // Lk 24:7, 46). Remarkably, the women believed nothing less than that Jesus was raised from the dead in response to a reminder of Jesus’ predictions. This is confirmed, first, by the fact that the two men commanded them to “remember” Jesus’ words, and the narrator reports that they “remembered” them (Lk 24:6, 8). Second, the act of remembering involves not just recollection of words, but a recognition of their fulfillment (cf. Lk 22:61; Acts 11:16). Third, their report to the eleven disciples and their associates was dismissed as “an idle tale” (Lk 24:11).

The second and third scenes resolve a related theme: the disciples could not comprehend Jesus’ predictions of the passion and resurrection because their meaning was concealed from them (Lk 9:45; 18:34). Thus, the eyes of the Emmaus pair “were kept from recognizing” Jesus (Lk 24:16), and they were “slow of heart” to believe (Lk 24:25). Jesus’ scriptural exposition was involved in “opening the Scriptures” to them (Lk 24:32). Jesus’ actions at table, recalling earlier meal scenes (Lk 24:30; cf. Lk 9:16; 22:19), triggered their eyes to be “opened” and their recognition of the risen Jesus (Lk 24:31). After Jesus’ tangible demonstration of his resurrection to his disciples, “he opened their minds to understand” the scriptural plan that Jesus had predicted (Lk 24:45-47).

4.3.3. Scriptural Fulfillment. An understanding of the Scriptures is the interpretive key to recognizing Jesus as the risen Messiah, who fulfills God’s saving plan. The Scriptures attest to the divine “must” (dei) regarding Jesus’ passion and resurrection (Lk 24:7, 26, 44). Luke underscores the totality of scriptural testimony (“all that the prophets declared” [Lk 24:25]; “beginning with Moses and all the prophets . . . all the Scriptures” [Lk 24:27]; “all the things” written about Jesus in “the law of Moses, the prophets, and the psalms” [Lk 24:44]). Readers must await the speeches in Acts for expositions of a range of texts dealing with Jesus’ resurrection (cf. esp. Acts 2:25-36; 13:33-41). Jesus’ messianic identity and mission are crucial to the scriptural fulfillment of the divine plan.

4.3.4. Christology. Two principal ideas dominate the *Christology in Luke’s resurrection narrative: the Messiah as the one who brings restoration to the people of God and *salvation to the nations.

The Emmaus pair believed that the crucifixion of Jesus signaled the death of Israel’s hope of salvation: “But we had hoped that he was the one to redeem Israel” (Lk 24:21). This recalls earlier expectations concerning God’s promises of salvation (Lk 1:46-55, 67-79; 2:28-32) and the preparation of God’s people for worship (Lk 1:16-17, 74-75). Major characters in the prologue proclaimed the divine “redemption” (Zechariah [Lk 1:68]; Anna [Lk 2:38]) or “consolation” of Israel (Simeon [Lk 2:25]) accompanying the coming of the Messiah. The resurrection of Jesus assures that such hope has not been dashed. Jesus is indeed “a prophet mighty in deed and word” who brings redemption from *slavery and restoration from exile (Lk 24:19). The allusion to Jesus as the prophet like *Moses (cf. Acts 3:22-23) builds upon earlier scenes. The transfiguration foreshadowed Jesus’ death and resurrection as an entrance into “his glory” (Lk 9:32; 24:26) and as an exodos liberation for God’s people (Lk 9:32). Jesus also repeated the same actions he did at the feeding of the five thousand (Lk 9:16; 24:30; cf. Lk 22:19), revealing himself to the Emmaus pair (Lk 24:31) as the exalted leader of Israel and the definitive interpreter of God’s purposes in Scripture (Lk 24:27, 32; cf. Lk 9:35) (see Anderson, 169-80).

In Luke 24:46-47 Jesus delineated the divine plan for the Messiah’s accomplishment of salvation in three steps: suffering, resurrection and universal proclamation of *repentance and *forgiveness of sins. The third item, though not mentioned in the earlier passion predictions, was previewed in Simeon’s oracle regarding the Messiah as “a light for revelation to the Gentiles” (Lk 2:29-32). In turn, the prophecy of Isaiah 49:6 stands behind Simeon’s words, as well as key texts in Acts that relate the universal reach of the God’s salvation (Acts 1:8; 13:47; 26:23). The “messianic triad” of Luke 24:46-47 will be accomplished by the risen Jesus, but through his Spirit-empowered witnesses, the apostles (Lk 24:48-49): they will consistently testify to Jesus’ death and resurrection and will proclaim the message of repentance and/or forgiveness of sins (Acts 2:22-39; 3:18-19; 5:30-31; 10:39-43; 13:27-39; 26:17-18).

4.4. John’s Resurrection Narrative. John’s Gospel features more appearances of the risen Jesus than any other Gospel. The stories occur in a double ending. Scholars commonly view John 20 as the end of an earlier edition of the Gospel, with the purpose statement in John 20:30-31 serving as the “original” conclusion. John 21 was appended later (though not necessarily by a different hand, since it is stylistically consistent), with a conclusion in John 21:25 that nicely complements John 20:30-31. Regardless of compositional history, the scenes in John 20—21 tie up many theological threads in the Gospel related to Christology, soteriology, pneumatology, discipleship and mission.

4.4.1. John 20. The narrative in John 20 divides into two parts: (1) a series of three scenes early on the first day of the week centered around the empty tomb (Jn 20:1-18); (2) scenes behind locked doors on the evening of the first day and eight days later when Jesus appeared to his disciples (Jn 20:19-29). The scenes move progressively to ever more explicit evidences of Jesus' resurrection: from Mary Magdalene's observance of the empty tomb, to the Beloved Disciple's viewing the burial cloths in the tomb, to Jesus' appearances to Mary Magdalene and then to the disciples, and finally to the appearance to Thomas, in which Jesus invited him to touch his wounds. There is also a contrast between the model faith of the Beloved Disciple, who believed before seeing the resurrected Jesus himself, and Thomas, who refused to believe without visual and tactile proof.

In the first scene (Jn 20:1-2) Mary Magdalene came to the tomb while it was still dark. The scenic element of darkness advances the Johannine metaphors of light and darkness, which are correlated with belief and unbelief. The darkness before the dawn matches Mary's merely natural explanation for the empty tomb prior to her encounter with the resurrected Jesus. She opined to Simon Peter and the Beloved Disciple that somebody had removed Jesus to a different burial site. That this is what she assumed, rather than tomb robbery, is indicated by her repeated references to not knowing "where they have laid him" (Jn 20:2, 13, 15). The verb "laid" (tithēmi) refers to interment (Jn 11:34; 19:41, 42).

In the second scene (Jn 20:3-10) Peter and the *Beloved Disciple raced to the tomb. The Beloved Disciple is characterized as the ideal disciple. Not only did he beat Peter to the tomb, but also he was the first to see the burial cloths, and the first to believe. The description of the burial cloths is reminiscent of the resurrection of Lazarus. But whereas Lazarus emerged from the tomb with his hands and feet bound in linen cloths and his head wrapped in a head cloth (soudarion [Jn 11:44]), Jesus was liberated from the linen wrappings and the head cloth (soudarion), which were lying in separate places in the tomb (Jn 20:7). The careful description of the grave clothes indicates that Jesus had triumphed over death. That the Beloved Disciple "saw and believed" cannot mean that he merely acknowledged Mary Magdalene's explanation (an interpretation as old as Augustine). The rationale in John 20:9 is confusing, but one of two interpretations seems most likely. "For they did not yet understand the Scripture, that he must rise from the dead" might imply that the Beloved Disciple believed in Jesus' resurrection despite not yet understanding its scriptural significance. Alternatively, it could mean that the Beloved Disciple had already come to a scripturally informed belief in the necessity of the resurrection (Jn 20:8), as opposed to the others ("they" [Jn 20:9])—that is, Peter, Mary and those for whom she speaks ("we" [Jn 20:2])—who had not yet come to this understanding (Heil 1995, 125).

The third scene (Jn 20:11-18) begins with Mary Magdalene standing alone outside the tomb, Peter and the Beloved Disciple having returned to their homes (Jn 20:10; cf. Jn 16:32). The text accents her state of grieving, stating her action of "weeping" three times (Jn 20:11, 13, 15), and her rationale twice (Jn 20:13, 15; cf. Jn 20:2). Mary encountered two angels in the tomb and then the risen Jesus himself. John describes the two angels as "sitting where the body of Jesus had been lying, one at the head and the other at the feet" (Jn 20:12). This description, like that of the burial clothes in the previous scene, points to the absence of Jesus' body from the tomb.

After turning around, Mary encountered Jesus, though she mistook him for the gardener. Her recognition of Jesus was sparked by Jesus' address to her as "Mary." She responded with the Aramaic title "rabbouni" (i.e., "teacher"). She heard the voice of the good *shepherd, who laid his life down for the sheep, and who knows and calls his sheep by name (Jn 10:3-4, 11, 14-15). However, she acknowledged him only as rabbi (cf. Jn 1:38), not as the exalted Son of Man (Jn 1:49-51). Hence, Jesus commanded her to stop clinging to him, "For I have not yet ascended to the Father" (Jn 20:17a). She did not understand that she would from now on have to relate to Jesus on a higher plane. Jesus' going "to the Father" (Jn 13:1; 14:6, 12, 28; 16:10, 17, 28) makes it possible for him to send the Paraclete (Jn 14:16, 26; 15:26, 16:7) and bring his disciples into unity with himself and his Father (Jn 17:11, 21-23). Thus, Jesus commissioned Mary to tell "my brothers," "I am ascending to my Father and your Father, to my God and your God" (Jn 20:17b).

The final two scenes in John 20 occurred a week apart. The first happened on the eve of resurrection day (Jn 20:19). Evidently, Jesus' ascent was imminent (futuristic present: "I am going to ascend to the Father" [Jn 20:17b]) or had already occurred in the prior scene (progressive present: "I am ascending to the Father"), for in John 20:19-23 several promises from the farewell discourse related to his "going to the Father" are fulfilled. Twice Jesus bid them "Peace" (Jn 20:19, 21; cf. Jn 14:27; 16:33). After he showed them his hands and feet, their grief was turned to joy (Jn 20:20; cf. Jn 16:20-22). Finally, he breathed on them, and they received the Holy Spirit (Jn 20:22)—that is, the Paraclete (Jn 14:16, 26; 15:26; 16:7)—a consequence of Jesus having been glorified (Jn 7:39). Jesus' commission of his disciples (Jn 20:21) entailed the authority to confer or withhold forgiveness of sins (Jn 20:23; cf. Lk 24:47).

The second scene occurred because Thomas had not been present at Jesus' first appearance to his disciples. Both Mary and the other disciples had "seen the Lord" (Jn 20:18, 20, 25), but Thomas would not believe until he too had personally seen Jesus' nail wounds and placed his hand in his side (Jn 20:25). Eight days later, when Jesus appeared again, he afforded Thomas the empirical proof that he demanded in order to secure his belief (Jn 20:27). There is no record of Thomas actually scrutinizing Jesus' wounds. Nevertheless, in response Thomas exclaimed the highest christological confession in John's Gospel: "My Lord and my God!" (Jn 20:28). Thomas fully recognized the risen and ascended Jesus as the way to the Father (Jn 14:5-7) and one with the Father (Jn 14:8-14; cf. Jn 10:30; 17:21).

4.4.2. Appendix: John 21. John 21, like Matthew 28:16-20; Luke 24:44-49, focuses less on Jesus' resurrection itself than on the restoration of his disciples and their commission as apostles who will engage in world mission. The chapter consists of four scenes that occurred alongside the Sea of Tiberias (Jn 21:1-8, 9-14, 15-19, 20-23) followed by a conclusion (Jn 21:24-25). The narrator states that this was the third instance the risen Jesus appeared to his disciples (Jn 21:14) (not counting the original appearance to Mary Magdalene). Four themes predominate in John 21, which we will examine here.

4.4.2.1. Recognition of Jesus. After the large catch of fish, the Beloved Disciple was the first to recognize the risen Lord (Jn 21:7). This is reminiscent of his primacy in believing in the resurrection on the basis of seeing the grave clothes left behind in the tomb (Jn 20:8). Once ashore, the disciples evidenced a certain ambivalence regarding their encounter with Jesus. None of them dared to ask, "Who are you?" because they knew it was the Lord (Jn 21:12). Perhaps they saw Jesus as the same recognizable person who even performed the mundane task of preparing breakfast, yet they also realized that he manifested (phaneroō [Jn 21:1, 14]) the divine glory (cf. Jn 2:11). Jesus had already defied the normal limitations of the human body by appearing to his disciples, though they were behind locked doors (Jn 20:19, 26) (see the helpful discussion of the risen Jesus' "transphysicality" in Wright, 477-78, 678-79).

4.4.2.2. Commissioning. The miraculous catch and Peter's hauling in the net full of fish symbolize the universal mission of the disciples (Jn 21:6, 8). The scene of the action, the Sea of Tiberias (Jn 21:1; cf. Jn 6:1, 23), as well as Jesus' actions of taking and giving the bread and fish (Jn 21:13; cf. Jn 6:11) are reminiscent of Jesus' feeding of the five thousand. Jesus has included his disciples in the mission of giving the bread of life to the world (Jn 6:33, 51) and drawing all people to him (cf. Jn 21:8 with Jn 12:32). In the following scene Jesus also commissioned Peter to act as an undershepherd who feeds the sheep who belong to the good shepherd (Jn 21:15, 16, 17; cf. Jn 10:1-18).

4.4.2.3. Rehabilitation of Peter. The charcoal fire upon which Jesus grilled the fish already hinted at Peter's restoration (Jn 21:9), for he had denied Jesus while standing by a charcoal fire (Jn 18:18). Jesus inquired three times concerning Peter's love for him (Jn 21:15-17), deliberately corresponding to Peter's threefold denial (Jn 18:15-18, 25-27). But then Jesus also predicted that Peter eventually would die in a way that would glorify God (Jn 21:18-19). This is significant because Peter had vowed to follow Jesus even to the extent of laying down his life for him, but Jesus prophesied his denials (Jn 13:36-38). Jesus told him that he could not "follow" him prior to the crucifixion, but he would do so afterward (Jn 13:36). Therefore, in his final appearance Jesus commanded Peter, "Follow me" (Jn 21:19, 22).

4.4.2.4. Authorization of the Beloved Disciple. The closing scene probably addressed a crisis among early readers of John's Gospel precipitated by the death of the Beloved Disciple. Peter's curiosity about the Beloved Disciple's fate had prompted Jesus' retort, "If it is my will that he remain until I come, what is that to you?" (Jn 21:22). The story generated a rumor that Jesus had predicted that the Beloved Disciple would not die (Jn 21:23a) (presumably until Christ's second coming [cf. Mk 9:1]). The narrator was keen to explain that Jesus' statement about the Beloved Disciple was not a prophecy, but a hypothetical (Jn 21:23b). The Gospel closes with an affidavit concerning the Beloved Disciple's truthful testimony (Jn 21:24) and a statement of how voluminous the full record of Jesus' deeds could be (Jn 21:25).

See also APOCALYPTICISM AND APOCALYPTIC TEACHING; ASCENSION OF JESUS; BURIAL OF JESUS; DEATH OF JESUS; ESCHATOLOGY; EXILE AND RESTORATION; LAZARUS; LIFE, ETERNAL LIFE; PREDICTIONS OF JESUS' PASSION AND RESURRECTION; SIGN OF JONAH.

BIBLIOGRAPHY. D. C. Allison Jr., Resurrecting Jesus: The Earliest Christian Tradition and Its Interpreters (London: T & T Clark, 2005); K. L. Ander- son, "But God Raised Him from the Dead": The Theology of Jesus' Resurrection in Luke-Acts (PBM; Bletchley: Paternoster, 2006); C. Bryan, The Resurrection of the Messiah (Oxford: Oxford University Press, 2011); D. Catchpole, Resurrection People: Studies in the Resurrection Narratives of the Gospels (Macon, GA: Smyth & Helwys, 2002); P. M. Fullmer, Resurrection in Mark's Literary-Historical Perspective (LNTS 360; London: T & T Clark, 2007); R. H. Gundry, "The Essential Physicality of Jesus' Resurrection According to the New Testament," in Jesus of Nazareth: Lord and Christ, ed. J. B. Green and M. Turner (Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1994) 204-19; D. A. Hagner, "Gospel, Kingdom, and Resurrection in the Synoptic Gospels," in Life in the Face of Death: The Resurrection Message of the New Testament, ed. R. N. Longenecker (MNTS; Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1998) 99-121; J. P. Heil, The Death and Resurrection of Jesus: A Narrative-Critical Reading of Matthew 26-28 (Minneapolis: Fortress, 1991); idem, Blood and Water: The Death and Resurrection of Jesus in John 18-21 (CBQMS 27; Washington, DC: Catholic Biblical Association of America, 1995); R. Kany, "Der lukanische Bericht von Tod und Auferstehung Jesu aus der Sicht eines hellenistischen Romanlesers," NovT 28 (1986) 75-90; C. R. Koester and R. Bieringer, eds., The Resurrection of Jesus in the Gospel of John (WUNT 222; Tübingen: Mohr Siebeck, 2008); M. R. Licona, The Resurrection of Jesus: A New Historiographical Approach (Downers Grove, IL: IVP Academic, 2010); O. Mainville and D. Marguerat, eds., Résurrection: L'après-mort dans le monde ancien et le Nouveau Testament (MBib 45; Montreal: Médiaspaul; Geneva: Labor et Fides, 2001); R. Martin-Achard, "Resurrection (Old Testament)," ABD 5:680-84; T. N. D. Mettinger, The Riddle of Resurrection: "Dying and Rising Gods" in the Ancient Near East (ConBOT 50; Stockholm: Almqvist & Wiksell, 2001); G. W. E. Nickelsburg, Resurrection, Immortality, and Eternal Life in Intertestamental Judaism and Early Christianity (rev. ed.; HTS 56; Cambridge: Harvard University Press, 2006); S. P. Raphael, Jewish Views of the Afterlife (2nd ed.; Lanham, MD: Rowman & Littlefield, 2009); G. J. Riley, Resurrection Reconsidered: Thomas and John in Controversy (Minneapolis: Fortress, 1995); A. F. Segal, Life after Death: A History of the Afterlife in Western Religion (New York: Doubleday, 2004); C. Setzer, Resurrection of the Body in Early Judaism and Early Christianity: Doctrine, Community, and Self-Definition (Boston: E. J. Brill, 2004); D. A. Smith, Revisiting the Empty Tomb: The Early History of Easter (Minneapolis: Fortress, 2010);

G. Vermes, The Resurrection: History and Myth (New York: Doubleday, 2008); A. J. M. Wedderburn, Beyond Resurrection (London: SCM; Peabody, MA: Hendrickson, 1999); J. Wijngaards, "Death and Resurrection in Covenantal Context (Hos. VI 2)," VT 17 (1967) 226-39; N. T. Wright, The Resurrection of the Son of God (COQG 3; Minneapolis: Fortress, 2003); E. Yamauchi, "Life, Death, and the Afterlife in the Ancient Near East," in Life in the Face of Death: The Resurrection Message of the New Testament, ed. R. N. Longenecker (MNTS; Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1998) 21-50. K. L. Anderson

REVOLUTIONARY MOVEMENTS

Revolutionary movements were a Jewish response to the injustice of *Israel's oppressors. Although the Maccabean Revolt (168/7–164 B.C.) can be seen as an important precursor for the later revolutionary movements by the Jews, this article concentrates on the Jewish resistance movements against the Roman Empire (see Rome).

The first century A.D. was one of the most violent epochs of Jewish history, with the cauldron of unrest reaching its apex in the destruction of *Jerusalem by the Romans in A.D. 70. This in turn was punctuated by the mass suicide of Jewish rebel forces at Masada in A.D. 74. Sixty years later the smoldering embers from this war were fanned into flame by the Jewish leader Simon bar Kokhba (or Kosiba), who led the second revolt against the Romans in A.D. 132-35.

1. Up to the First Revolt
2. The Second (Bar Kokhba) Revolt
3. Jesus, Christians and the Revolutionaries
4. Conclusion

1. Up to the First Revolt.

The causes of this unrest were many and varied, but the following factors contributed to a milieu ripe for revolution: foreign military occupation, class conflicts, misconduct of Jewish and Roman officials, Hellenization (see Hellenism), burdensome taxation (see Economics) and the *Samaritan situation. When the Roman army occupied a land, it was accompanied by thousands of civilians (wives, children, doctors, merchants, etc.). The army lived off the occupied country, pilfering its natural resources, enslaving members of its population, raping women and generally terrorizing the populace. The gentry of Palestine collaborated with the occupying forces and, in exchange for personal safety and affluence, aided Israel's oppressors. This collusion led to class conflict between the *rich and the poor, the loyal and the disloyal, the rulers and the people (see Horsley and Hanson).

With conditions so difficult for the average Palestinian Jew, it is not surprising that there was a good deal of revolutionary activity among them. This took a variety of forms.

1.1. Social Bandits. Generally speaking, social banditry arises in agrarian societies where peasants are exploited by the government or ruling class. Social bandits are the “Robin Hoods” of the land and usually increase during times of economic crisis, famine, high taxation and social disruption. The people of the land typically side with the bandits because they are champions of justice for the common people. These brigands function as symbols of the country’s fundamental sense of justice and its basic religious loyalties.

In 57 B.C. Gabinius, proconsul in Syria, gave increased power to the nobility, thereby putting extreme pressure on the peasantry. In response, the peasantry rebelled, and not until a decade later was Palestine able to effectively govern itself again. It is therefore not surprising to find social banditry on the rise during and after this period of civil war and economic hardship. In fact, *Josephus reports that a certain Hezekiah led a band of social bandits who raided the Syrian border (J.W. 1.204-211; Ant. 14.159-174). Herod (see Herodian Dynasty), when he was governing *Galilee, caught and killed Hezekiah and many of his cohorts. These deaths, however, did not mark the end of social banditry. Years later Herod was still trying to exterminate the brigands (J.W. 1.304). In 39-38 B.C. Herod assembled an army to track down these social bandits in order to consolidate his power as Rome’s client king. Josephus notes that there was a “large force of brigands” (J.W. 1.303-304). Undoubtedly, these social bandits were attacking the gentry who were in league with Herod. The brigands retreated to the caves near Arbela but were strong enough to continue to harass the gentry and challenge Herod’s complete control of the land until he finally managed to exterminate them (J.W. 1.309-314).

Since sources from Herod’s later reign contain no references to social bandits, this attack may have extinguished them, but this is an argument from silence. Indeed, until the end of the reign of Agrippa I (A.D. 44) there is very little evidence for active resistance through social banditry. In Mark 15:27, however, two “bandits” (lēstai) are mentioned. Also, Barabbas in the Gospel passion narrative is said to have been “in prison with the rebels who had committed murder during the insurrection” (Mk 15:7), and he is called a “bandit” (lēstēs) in John 18:40. Josephus also mentions a certain Tholomy as a bandit leader during the procuratorship of Fadus (A.D. 44-

46) (Ant. 20.5), but he was likely not the only one. It seems that around the middle of the first century A.D., probably as a result of a severe famine, social banditry sharply increased. Eleazar was one of these brigands, and he enjoyed a twenty-year career (J.W. 2.253). Actions taken by the authorities seem to have only proliferated Palestinian banditry. Cumanus (A.D. 48-52) took aggressive military action against the brigands, but they merely retreated into their strongholds, and “after this time all Judea was overrun with robberies” (Ant. 20.6.1 §124).

Just before the Jewish Revolt the rich and the poor were sharply polarized, taxation was very high, Roman oppression was grievous, justice was perverted, and poverty was widespread. Consequently, Jewish banditry swelled to epidemic proportions, so that a sizable number of the population were outlaws. This situation obviously took its toll on the gentry and contributed to the spiraling social unrest. Without doubt, social banditry is a major factor to be considered in any study of the First Jewish Revolt.

As the revolt broke out, the bandits played an important role in resisting the Roman army’s forays into Judea and Galilee, with brigand groups dominating the region of Galilee. The effectiveness of the brigands against Rome was due not only to their impressive military strength, but also to their favorable relationship with the peasants and their ability to build alliances with other rebel forces. The most important contribution made by these social bandits was their highly effective use of guerrilla warfare, which they demonstrated in routing the army of Cestius Gallus in A.D. 66. Ultimately, however, the brigands failed in their attempt to free Palestine from Roman rule.

1.2. Messianic Pretenders. In Judaism prior to the first century A.D. there was no single messianic expectation held by Jews (see Christ). Furthermore, “messiah,” as a title, does not appear frequently in pre-Christian literature. Only after the destruction of Jerusalem in A.D. 70, when rabbinic theological reflection standardized and popularized the term, does “messiah” appear frequently with essentially the same meaning in each usage. The scarcity of the term, however, does not suggest that there were no expectations of an anointed royal Jewish leader. The OT had begun to shape an expectation with its promises of a “branch” that God would raise for David (see Son of David). This notion can be seen in Jeremiah 23:5-6 and also in Isaiah 11:1-9, where the “shoot . . . from the stump of Jesse” will judge the poor with righteousness. Micah also prophesied about a ruler of Israel coming from Bethlehem (Mic

5:2). But it is inaccurate to speak of a widespread OT expectation of a messiah.

During the period of Persian and Hellenistic domination there is also little evidence of a messianic hope. The promises to David and the prophecies of a future Davidic king were known during these periods (Sir 47:11, 22; 1 Macc 2:57), but their fulfillment was postponed to the distant future. This is also probably the case during the persecution by Antiochus Epiphanes, although a few references may be interpreted otherwise (1 En. 90:9, 37-38; 1 Macc 3:4). During the Hasmonean period, however, the hope of an anointed royal figure who would deliver Israel became more prominent. At Qumran (see Dead Sea Scrolls) there were apparently two anointed figures: a high priestly messiah and the prince of the congregation, a lay head of the eschatological community. The Psalms of Solomon was written in the wake of the 63 B.C. Roman conquest of Jerusalem by Pompey, who is referred to as "the dragon" (Pss. Sol. 2:25), and a Davidic king who is called "the Lord Messiah" (Pss. Sol. 17:32) is said to purge Jerusalem from Gentile domination. But among extant writings only those coming from the period following the death of Herod (4 B.C.) refer unambiguously to a promised anointed figure.

Around the turn of the era there existed four broad types of messianic expectation: king, priest, prophet and heavenly messiah. Although sometimes some of these categories merged into a single figure, the general tendency was to distinguish between different offices (see Collins 2010). One popular manifestation of the messianic expectation in first-century A.D. Judaism was Davidic royal claimants.

After the death of Herod in 4 B.C. the Jews pressed Herod's son and heir apparent, Archelaus, for a number of reforms. During the Passover, when the demands reached a feverish pitch, Archelaus sent his armies into Jerusalem and massacred thousands of worshiping pilgrims. This action catalyzed revolt in every major area of Herod's kingdom, and some of these revolts took the form of messianic movements. Josephus identifies several leaders of these movements: Judas, the son of Ezekias (Ant. 17.271-272; J.W. 2.56); Simon, servant of King Herod (Ant. 17.273-276); and Athronges (Ant. 17.278-285). Josephus clearly indicates that these men aspired to be Israel's king (Ant. 17.285; J.W. 2.55). All of these messianic figures were of humble origins, and their followers were primarily peasants (see Barnett).

The principal goal of these revolutionaries was to overthrow the Herodian and Roman domination of Palestine. In addition to fighting the Romans, these revolutionaries attacked the mansions of the aristocracy and the royal residences. This undoubtedly revealed the frustration of years of social inequality. In response, Varus, legate of Syria, dispatched two legions (six thousand troops each) and four regiments of cavalry (five hundred troops each). This was in addition to the troops already in Judea and the auxiliary troops provided by the city-states and client kings in the area. In spite of this military might, these messianic movements were difficult to subdue.

Because of the lack of sources, it is difficult to identify any messianic movements between the aforementioned revolts and those surrounding the First Jewish Revolt (except, of course, the followers of Jesus). With regard to the First Jewish Revolt, Josephus notes two messianic movements that bear mentioning. The first was led by Manahem, son of Judas the Galilean, who took some of the men of note with him and retired to Masada, where he broke open King Herod's armory and gave arms not only to his own people, but also to other robbers. These he made use of for a guard and returned in the state of a king to Jerusalem; he became the leader of the sedition and gave orders for continuing the siege (J.W. 2.433-434; cf. J.W. 2.422-424).

The second messianic movement mentioned by Josephus was built around Simon bar Giora (i.e., "Simon son of a proselyte"). In A.D. 66, at the outbreak of the war, Simon helped aid the Jews against Cestius by attacking the Roman rear guard (J.W. 2.521). Simon's messianic movement was also motivated by the social oppression exerted by Israel's aristocracy. When Simon had gained control of the Judean and Idumean countryside, the citizens of Jerusalem invited him to lead the defense against Rome. After a power struggle in which he forced the Zealots and John of Gischala aside, Simon took control of Jerusalem (J.W. 4.556-577). Simon was a strict disciplinarian and did well in his struggle against the Romans, but the Roman army was overwhelmingly powerful. Adorned in a white tunic and a purple cape as the king of the Jews, Simon surrendered and was taken to Rome. There he was ritually executed (J.W. 7.26-36, 153-157). The messianic movement led by Simon was the largest of all the movements described by Josephus, lasting nearly two years. It may have been fueled by eschatological hopes. Josephus tries to explain how a messianic prophecy in the Scripture, according to him, misguidedly drove Jews to their hopeless war against the Romans: "But now, what did the most elevate them in undertaking this war, was an ambiguous oracle that was also found in their sacred writings, how, 'about that time, one from their country should become governor of the habitable earth.' The Jews took this prediction to belong to themselves in particular, and many of the wise men were thereby deceived in their determination. Now this oracle certainly denoted the government of Vespasian, who was appointed emperor in Judea" (J.W. 6.312-313).

Although Josephus does not specify the biblical passage, one likely candidate is a combination of Daniel 2 and Daniel 9. A calculation of end times as mid-60s A.D. based on the prophecy about "seventy weeks" of years in Daniel 9:24-27, together with the hope of a world ruler who would destroy the fourth kingdom of Daniel 2:34-35, 44, might have fueled the Jewish messianic fervor in the 60s (see Wright; Grabbe).

The final messianic movement in recorded Jewish antiquity (A.D. 132-35) was led by Simon bar Kokhba (see 2 below).

1.3. Revolutionary Prophets. Despite the amount of prophetic activity prior to the first century A.D., there is virtually no evidence for a Jewish expectation of the imminent return of the promised eschatological *prophet. Nor were there vivid expectations for the appearance of the prophet like *Moses mentioned in Deuteronomy 18:18. There may have been some expectations for the return of *Elijah, but a claimant to this identity never materialized. Thus, the appearance of any popular prophet of reputed eschatological significance was more than just the fulfillment of a popular expectation.

A helpful distinction has been made between "popular prophetic movements" and "oracular prophets" (Horsley and Hanson). The latter group were similar in character to the classical oracular prophets such as Hosea or Jeremiah; they prophesied either *judgment or deliverance. Oracular prophets proclaiming deliverance appeared just prior to and during the First Jewish Revolt. Typically, those oracular prophets who pronounced judgment were not well received, being perceived by the establishment as a threat and consequently silenced.

1.3.1. Popular Prophets. Popular prophetic movements, on the other hand, had leaders who led sizeable movements of peasants. The political authorities generally viewed this activity as an insurrection and therefore forced a military confrontation. These prophets and their followers generally arose in anticipation of the appearance of God's eschatological liberation. This liberation was perceived as imminent, and when it arrived, the Jews would be freed from their political bondage and would again govern Palestine, the land that God had given to them as their own possession. The leaders of these popular prophetic movements were dismissed by Josephus as imposters and demagogues deceiving the people (J.W. 2.259; cf. Ant. 20.168).

These popular prophets, preying on social conditions, apparently taught that God was about to transform their society—characterized by oppression and social injustice—into a society marked by *peace, prosperity and righteousness. Responding to the call, large numbers of peasants left their homes, their work and their communities to follow these charismatic leaders into the desert. There in the wilderness they awaited God to manifest his presence through signs and wonders, purify his people, and unveil the eschatological plan of redemption that he had previously revealed to his prophet. At this juncture God himself would act and defeat Israel's enemies.

1.3.1.1. The Samaritan. The first of these prophets appeared when Pontius Pilate was prefect. Interestingly, this first movement appeared among the Samaritans. The Samaritans, like the Jews, revered Moses as the prophet and cultivated hopes for a future Mosaic prophet who was discussed in terms of the Taheb ("restorer"). The Taheb would appear and restore Solomon's temple on Mount Gerizim. Josephus tells of a Samaritan prophet who summoned people to go to Mount Gerizim, promising to show them the holy vessels buried by Moses. A large crowd gathered at the nearby village of Tirathaba, but this movement was perceived by Pilate as seditious, and was quickly suppressed (Ant. 18.85-87).

1.3.1.2. Theudas. Perhaps ten years later, about A.D. 45, a second major prophetic movement began. A certain Theudas organized one of these prophetic movements during the reign of Fadus (A.D. 44-46). Although Josephus calls him a "magician" (goēs), Theudas claimed to be a prophet and persuaded a large crowd to follow him to the Jordan River, promising that at his command the river would be divided (Ant. 20.97-98). Perhaps Theudas, in some sort of reverse exodus, saw himself as the new Moses leading the people out of bondage (like Egypt) and across the Jordan (like the Red Sea) into the wilderness to be divinely prepared for the new conquest. Fadus, taking no chances, acted decisively, thus showing his fear of such movements. The movement's swift annihilation almost certainly indicates that, unlike the messianic movements, this prophetic band was unarmed. Theudas's posthumous public humiliation by the ceremonial parading of his severed head was intended to send a stern warning to any would-be leaders of similar prophetic movements.

Acts 5:36 also mentions a Theudas, but this reference is not without a serious chronological problem. It is possible that he is not the same person as the Theudas whom Josephus describes.

1.3.1.3. The Egyptian. Another movement, about ten years later, involved a Jewish prophet who originated from Egypt (Josephus, Ant. 20.169-171; J.W. 2.261-263; cf. Acts 21:38). Josephus records that this prophet had thirty thousand followers who were to march from the wilderness to the Mount of Olives and then into Jerusalem. Felix sent Roman troops to slaughter all those involved in the movement. The Roman army easily defeated this prophetic band even though the Egyptian himself escaped.

It seems fairly clear that these prophetic movements saw themselves in some sort of continuity with Israel's past great historical deliverances. They also had an eschatological dimension to their claim that God was about to deliver Israel and grant their autonomy in the promised land.

1.3.2. Oracular Prophets. The second category of prophets, the oracular prophets, pronounced imminent divine deliverance or judgment; these prophets were concentrated around the First Jewish Revolt. Josephus (J.W. 6.300-309) recalls with considerable detail a certain prophet Jesus, son of Ananus. This Jesus appeared four years before the First Jewish Revolt, during a time when Jerusalem was "in very great peace and prosperity," and prophesied against Jerusalem for seven years and five months. In the end he was struck by a stone from a war engine and was killed. As the war began and the number of prophets increased, the Jews were urged to await help from God (J.W. 6.286-287). Even at the end of the war, when the temple had already been sacked and set afire, a prophet pronounced to six thousand refugees that they would receive "miraculous signs of their deliverance." Every one of those six thousand perished (J.W. 6.283-285).

1.4. Apocalypticists. Revolutionary movements are a complex phenomenon. Resistance against empires consists not only of visible, physical acts of rebellion, but also of texts and discourses that seek to resist the imperial domination and its ideology. The latter become the basis for the former (Horsley 2008; Portier-Young). Thus, Jewish *apocalypticism became a powerful counterimperial ideology of the Jewish people under Hellenistic and Roman imperial dominion. The apocalyptic texts produced by Judean scribes became powerful tools for resistance against imperial rule (Horsley 2009).

The apocalypticists do not seem to have been a party per se, but many of the Jews in the period 200 B.C.–A.D. 100, including some of the oracular prophets, apparently became persuaded by *apocalyptic *eschatology. For the apocalypticists, Israel's situation looked funereal. It was a depressing period of unfulfilled hopes, shattered eschatological dreams, conflict with the ruling class, lack of an authorized prophetic spokesperson and, above all, periods of persecution for the righteous who remained faithful to the Torah. At the same time, the Hellenized and severely compromised Jewish aristocracy was prospering. This situation, perceived as a crisis by some within Israel, forced a search for creative solutions. This gave rise to an apocalyptic eschatology that represented a new interpretation of human history and destiny, with new emphases and insights. While maintaining continuity with the prophetic eschatology of the past, it developed in a direction that was at once dualistic, cosmic, universalistic, transcendental and individualistic.

Apocalyptic eschatology led to an emphasis on otherworldliness and a disinterest in temporal affairs. With their stress on cosmic dualism, the apocalypticists understood the real battle to be in the heavens between the powers. They were called upon, therefore, to participate with Michael and the heavenly host in the battle against evil (see Angels). The Qumran War Scroll describes the eschatological war between the "sons of light" and the "sons of darkness." The latter, led by Belial, includes the army of the "Kittim," which in the first-century A.D. context referred to the Romans. The "king of the Kittim" (1QM XV, 2) would then be the Roman emperor. The primary weapon of this warfare was prayer, but it also included personal holiness and faithfulness to the Torah, even if that meant severe trial. In this way, the apocalypticists could defeat Israel's oppressor and rightly be classified as a "revolutionary movement."

The apocalypticists believed that in the end God would intervene in human history and defeat the Gentile powers, thus vindicating his own people. This optimistic belief may explain the mystery of why the various factions of rebels in Jerusalem spent enormous energy fighting each other instead of being united in fighting against the Romans (Grabbe).

After the defeat of the First Jewish Revolt and the destruction of Jerusalem and its temple in A.D. 70, several apocalypses were written in reaction to this national tragedy. The book 4 Ezra deals extensively with the question of theodicy concerning the destruction of Jerusalem by the Gentiles. Set in the time of biblical Ezra, in the narrative world of the book they refer to the Babylonians, but for the first-century A.D. readers of the book, they clearly refer to the Romans. Ezra laments the fate of Jerusalem, but also he receives an eschatological hope for Israel. In a night vision Ezra sees an eagle, symbolizing the Roman Empire. The eagle is rebuked by a lion (i.e., the Messiah), and eventually is destroyed (4 Ezra 11:1–12:35). In the end, although 4 Ezra defends God's justice in judging Jerusalem, it also provides a future hope for Israel and the ultimate destruction of Rome. In a similar vein, 2 Baruch talks about the judgment and destruction of the "fourth kingdom" (i.e., Rome) by God's anointed one (2 Bar. 39–40). The destruction of the temple is also the central theme of the Apocalypse of Abraham. Toward the end of the book it also talks about the eschatological judgment of the oppressors of God's people (Apoc. Ab. 29–31). Thus, in the apocalyptic responses to the defeat of the First Jewish Revolt the hope of a final victory over the Roman Empire had not died out, which may have provided the theological background for the Second Jewish Revolt.

1.5. The Fourth Philosophy. Josephus mentions, in addition to the *Pharisees, *Sadducees and *Essenes, a "Fourth Philosophy." The precise identities of the Fourth Philosophy, the Sicarii and the Zealots, as well as the relationship of these three to each other, have been a matter of continuous scholarly debate. Although many have linked this Fourth Philosophy with the Zealots and the Sicarii, R. Horsley and J. Hanson have persuasively argued that this identification is not correct (Horsley and Hanson). On the one hand, Judas the Galilean was a teacher with his own party (Josephus, J.W. 2.118), but on the other hand, the people of the sect "agree in all other things with the Pharisaic notions; but they have an inviolable attachment to liberty, and say that God is to be their only Ruler and Lord" (Ant. 18.23). At least prima facie, the Fourth Philosophy was a branch of Pharisaism in which certain teachers (e.g., Judas, Saddok) advocated a strongly proactive stance against Roman rule. Horsley and Hanson suggest that the advocacy of resistance against Rome was rooted in four interrelated concepts.

The first concept was related to taxes. To pay tax to Rome was considered equivalent to slavery. Second, Israel was to be ruled solely by God. To submit to foreign rule was no less than idolatry and a violation of the first commandment of the Decalogue. Third, God would work synergistically through his faithful people if they would stand firm and actively resist their oppressors. Fourth, if Israel would demonstrate their resistance, God would work through them to establish his kingdom on earth.

Judas is mentioned in Acts 5:37. In Gamaliel's counsel to the Sanhedrin he talks about Judas together with Theudas and Jesus, both of whom were considered prophets and messianic claimants. Based on this treatment in Acts, as well as Judas's exhortation for the Jews to assert liberty (Josephus, Ant. 18.4), C. Evans thinks that he was another messianic claimant. Evans nevertheless admits that his primary roll was that of a teacher.

Indeed, although Josephus seems to indicate the Fourth Philosophy provided an ideological basis for later violent activities, he never describes this resistance as armed rebellion. In fact, they seem instead to be willing sufferers and cared little about either their own deaths or those of their relatives and friends (Ant. 18.23). The assumption that the Fourth Philosophy called people to armed rebellion has led to the mistaken identification of the Fourth Philosophy with the Zealots, with Judas as the founder of the movement. Instead of armed resistance, proponents of the Fourth Philosophy felt that if they remained firm and resisted Rome without shrinking from violent deaths, God certainly would assist them (see Ant. 18.5). If this understanding of the Fourth Philosophy is correct, this group could trace its ideological lineage to the martyrs under Antiochus Epiphanes.

The martyrological tradition, though it had antecedents, largely developed in the second century B.C. when Israel was experiencing severe persecution. The aristocracy had compromised its faith and was cooperating with the oppressing nation, while those faithful to the Torah were experiencing severe persecution. The suffering of the righteous, however, was interpreted as "warfare." Part of the worldview of these pious Jews was the belief that their innocent suffering would be so heinous that it would force God to act, almost in a reflex action. This notion is most obvious in the words of Taxo in the Testament of Moses: "If we . . . die, our blood will be avenged before the Lord and then his kingdom shall appear throughout all his creation. . . . He shall . . . avenge them of their enemies. . . . He will go forth from his holy habitation with indignation and wrath on account of his sons" (T. Mos. 9:7–10:3).

The martyrdom of the innocent Taxo and his sons was portrayed by the author of the Testament of Moses to provoke God to action because of the cry of innocent blood. God's response would be no less than the complete annihilation of Israel's enemies and the appearance of the eschatological kingdom (see Kingdom of God/Heaven). This perspective also appears in literature from this period, especially 4 Maccabees.

The book of 4 Maccabees was written sometime just before the First Jewish Revolt as an encomium to the martyrs under Antiochus Epiphanes. The book includes a reworking of the story of the martyrdoms of the priest Eleazar and of the seven brothers and their mother found in 2 Maccabees 6–7. The purpose of the book was not only to apotheosize the martyrs, but also to encourage those who were facing similar trials to stand firm and fight against the opposition with the weapons of obedience and suffering. The author clearly perceives the martyrs' struggle as nothing less than war. It is a conflict of good against evil, God against Satan. The mother of the seven sons has earned the complete respect of the author as an assailant in the battle against Antiochus. He gives her the title "soldier of God" (4 Macc 16:14) and remarks in amazement at her spirited combat. The writer attributes the vindication of the nation to the struggles of the martyrs (4 Macc 17:10).

This evidence suggests that the martyrs, by their innocent suffering, participated in the war against Antiochus and were the principal agents of victory. Their suffering was the decisive factor in the war effort. If R. Horsley is indeed correct in his identification of the Fourth Philosophy, these martyrs, with their theology of martyrdom, are likely to have been its antecedents, and the Fourth Philosophy held many, if not all, of the aforementioned theological constructs. Although this was principally a theology of suffering, the outcome was victory over Israel's enemies and therefore no less a revolutionary movement than any other.

1.6. The Sicarii. The name "Sicarii" was derived from the weapon that its adherents employed, a curved dagger like the Roman sica (Josephus, Ant. 20.186). Josephus describes them thus: "When the country was purged of these, there sprang up another type of robbers in Jerusalem, which were called Sicarii, who killed men in the daytime, and in the midst of the city; this they did chiefly at the festivals, when they mingled themselves among the multitude, and concealed daggers under their garments, with which they stabbed those that were their enemies; and when any fell down dead, the murderers became a part of those who had indignation against them; by which means they appeared persons of such reputation, that they could by no means be discovered" (J.W. 2.254–255).

This famous passage from Josephus had been much exploited to characterize the Sicarii as urban assassins in contrast to rural robbers. This understanding of the Sicarii, however, has been challenged in recent scholarship (see Brighton 2009; 2011). Although Josephus calls attention to their use of daggers in order to explain the origin of their name, overall he describes the activities of the Sicarii in broader terms, not limited to the use of daggers or to urban settings (see Ant. 20.187). Rather, his use of the term "Sicarii" loosely refers to a group of Jews who acted against their own people for religious or political reasons. This understanding of the Sicarii fits well with the use of the term in Acts 21:38, where a Roman tribune asks Paul if he is the Egyptian who led four thousand sikarioi out into the wilderness.

In any case, obviously these violent tactics are not those of the Fourth Philosophy. Josephus, however, seems to suggest a connection in the leadership: Eleazar, leader of the Sicarii at the outbreak of the revolt, was Judas of Galilee's grandson or perhaps son (see J.W. 7.253–254). This could mean that there was some degree of correspondence between the religio-political orientations of these two groups. More likely, however, Josephus lumped various revolutionary groups together into a single family, originating from Judas, in order to deflect Roman suspicion from the rest of the Jews (McLaren).

The tactics of assassinations first appeared during the reign of Felix in the A.D. 50s (see Josephus, J.W. 2.254–257, 264–265; Ant. 20.163–165, 186–188). Unlike the social bandits who preyed on Roman petty officials and supply trains, the Sicarii apparently attacked the Jewish aristocracy. These attacks took one of three forms. First, there were the selective assassinations of the ruling elite. The assassination of the high priest Jonathan, which was committed under the initiative of Felix (Ant. 20.163), is an example. This shows that the Sicarii sometimes even collaborated with the Roman authority. Second, the Sicarii slaughtered selected pro-Roman members of the Jewish aristocracy who lived in the countryside. These attacks also included plundering and burning selected aristocratic estates (J.W. 2.264–265; Ant. 20.172). Third, the Sicarii practiced terrorist hostage taking (Ant. 20.208–210).

These attacks by the Sicarii helped precipitate a revolutionary situation. They led to distrust among the ruling elite and fear among the aristocracy, and they catalyzed the fragmentation of the social order. That which normally provided the upper class with security began to erode, and vague feelings of anxiety and insecurity came in their place; anyone could be next. The fragmentation of the ruling class was inevitable; individual personal safety became society's most important value. Thus, instead of engaging in cooperative efforts to protect their interests, the ecclesiastical aristocracy and ruling class began hiring personal armies to do so (Josephus, Ant. 20.206–207). By responding with force and violence, the ruling class further contributed to the breakdown of the social fiber and helped set the stage for the First Jewish Revolt.

The Sicarii's role in the revolt itself seems quite limited. Apparently, they were not in the midst of the fray at first, but before long they entered the action. They helped in the siege of the upper city and its aristocratic inhabitants (Josephus, J.W. 2.425); they also helped raze the royal palaces and the residence of the high priest Ananias. Shortly thereafter conflict broke out between the Sicarii and the rest of the revolutionary forces. Within weeks the main body of the Sicarii either had been executed, had retreated to Masada, or had fled into hiding. The Sicarii who occupied Masada sat out the rest of the war and preyed upon the surrounding countryside for their food supplies. In A.D. 73/74 the Romans attacked Masada, one of their last holdouts, only to find, after a long siege, virtually all of its occupants had committed suicide and only a few women and children remained (J.W. 7.320-406).

1.7. The Zealots. Although Luke mentions a certain Simon the "Zealot" (zēlōtēs) (Lk 6:15; Acts 1:13), this is probably a characterizing name (i.e., Simon was zealous) rather than a technical term identifying his affiliation with a revolutionary party (see Disciples). The Zealot party per se was not formed until the winter of A.D. 67-68. The party's origins can be traced back to the clash between the Roman procurator Florus (A.D. 64-66) and the Jerusalem citizenry. During his term Florus had pilfered the *temple treasure, allowed his army to loot the city, and attempted to capture and control the temple. With such abuses left without redress and the city in a rebellious mood, the lower priests began to agitate for war. The temple captain, Eleazar, son of Ananias, provided leadership and, together with the lower priests and the revolutionary leaders of the populace, decided to terminate the sacrifices offered twice each day on behalf of Rome and the Roman emperor (Josephus, J.W. 2.409-410). Previously, the offering of this sacrifice had been negotiated as a satisfactory substitute for emperor worship and therefore was a tangible sign of Jewish loyalty to Rome. Thus, the refusal to offer sacrifices was tantamount to a declaration of war; it broke the peace treaty and Israel was now regarded as outside the Roman Empire (J.W. 2.415).

The chief priests and leading Pharisees, however, resisted the changes, and civil war soon broke out. Eleazar was joined by the Sicarii (Josephus, J.W. 2.425), and together they defeated their rivals. But a power struggle ensued, with the Sicarii battling Eleazar and his faithful. The Sicarii were defeated and took refuge in Masada. Manahem, their leader, was captured and executed (J.W. 2.441-448). Eleazar was now in control in Jerusalem. In August of A.D. 66, however, Cestius, the governor of Syria, bolstered with Roman forces, attacked Jerusalem. Through an unexpected turn of events, Cestius abandoned the siege of Jerusalem and, in the process of retreat, lost a good number of troops. Buoyed by their success, most of Jerusalem and Judea rallied around the revolutionary cause. It is important to note that the revolt was supported by the local Jewish ruling class, because without their backing no serious rebellion against Rome was possible (Goodman). Now basically unified, the nation named Joseph the son of Gorion and the high priest Ananus as its head (J.W. 2.563).

The Romans then began their reconquest. During the summer and fall of A.D. 67 they had subdued Galilee and were marching through Judea. The brigands and revolutionary forces in these areas were retreating. As these fugitives, as well as those from Idumea and Perea, took refuge in the city, their own views seemed to resonate with those lower priests who had started the revolt with the cessation of the sacrifices on behalf of Rome. This new coalition is the group that Josephus calls "Zealots" (zēlōtai) (J.W. 4.160-161). The Zealots agitated against the ecclesiastical aristocracy and soon decided to assert themselves. First, they attacked some Herodian nobles against whom they still had some "ancient quarrel" and who also were accused of treason (J.W. 4.140-146). These "ancient quarrels" almost certainly were focused on those members of the nobility who were wealthy landowners with a large number of peasants indebted to them. The Zealots, regardless of the Roman threat, were also fighting a class war against the Jewish aristocracy.

Obviously, this activity against the Herodian nobility would give rise to anxiety throughout the rest of Israel's upper class. If this discriminate violence were not enough, the Zealots elected by lot their own people to priestly offices, even installing an uneducated lay person in the office of high priest (Josephus, J.W. 4.152-157). Without doubt, the Zealots were conspiring for political control. Given the inflammatory nature of this Zealot activity, it is no surprise that the Jewish aristocracy immediately turned on the Zealots and viciously attacked them. Incited by Ananus and Jesus son of Gamala, both high priests, the people of Jerusalem forced the Zealots into the inner court (J.W. 4.196-204). Trapped in the temple, the Zealots contacted sympathizers outside of Jerusalem to free them (J.W. 4.224-232). The Idumeans responded, freeing the Zealots and slaughtering Ananus and Jesus (J.W. 4.316). While they were at it, a number of other nobles also were assassinated. There was yet another purge of Jerusalem's nobility, and this one also included many who were formerly in power, as well as the wealthy.

Within the Zealot ranks, however, all was not well. Many of the Zealots were not responsive to the dictatorial ways of John of Gischala. Since John could not gain absolute authority among the Zealots, he broke away to form his own revolutionary faction (Josephus, J.W. 4.389-396). John's independence, however, was short-lived. The messianic movement by Simon bar Giora was a threat to the Zealot regime in Jerusalem, and a significant part of John's army deserted, so that John and the Zealots again formed an alliance. This alliance, however, did not prevent Simon from attempting to liberate the city from the Zealots and John (J.W. 4.573-576). Simon was able to force the Zealots back into the temple (J.W. 4.577-584). The faction-prone Zealots split over the leadership of John. Josephus records that for a time there was even a three-way battle raging. Simon bar Giora, in control of Jerusalem, pressed in upon John of Gischala, who was fighting to control the temple courtyard and was caught between Simon and the rest of the Zealot party, who were in the inner court above the temple (J.W. 5.2-24). Shortly thereafter, John was able to reconcile himself to the rest of the Zealot party, although he was able to accomplish this only by way of trickery. John was now the Zealot leader again (J.W. 5.98-105).

By this time the Romans, led by Titus, were at Jerusalem's gates; this threat galvanized the rival factions to form a united front. The Jews, however, were no match for the Romans. During the siege the Zealots were the smallest of the rival groups and therefore had the least significant role to play (2,400 Zealots, six thousand under John of Gischala, fifteen thousand under Simon bar Giora) (J.W. 5.248-250). Nevertheless, the Zealots, in spite of their less significant role, did fight courageously to the end in cooperation with their Jewish rivals against the overwhelming military strength of the Romans.

The Zealots should be remembered primarily for their thwarting of the nobility's plan to negotiate a settlement with the Romans. Moreover, the Zealots were not the Fourth Philosophy mentioned by Josephus; indeed, they were not a sect or philosophy at all. Furthermore, the Zealots were not in the vanguard among those who were agitating for rebellion, but once the revolt was underway and the only choice was to fight or to flee, they stayed and fought to the death.

2. The Second (Bar Kokhba) Revolt.

Between the First and Second Jewish Revolts in Palestine, the Jews in the Diaspora revolted during the reign of Trajan (A.D. 115-117). The Jews in Cyrene were led by a certain Lucuas into rebellion (Eusebius, Hist. eccl. 4.2.3-4). The Jews destroyed pagan temples and killed Gentiles, indicating the religious and possibly messianic undertone of the revolt. The revolt spread into Egypt, Cyprus and Mesopotamia. It is possible that the Jews in Palestine also revolted against Rome during this period, but there is no firm evidence for this.

The Second Jewish Revolt against the Romans in Judea broke out in the summer of A.D. 132. This time most of the Jews were united under a single leader, Simon ben Kosiba, also known as Bar Kokhba ("Son of the Star"), based on the messianic interpretation of Numbers 24:17. He was indeed hailed as the "King Messiah" by Rabbi Akiba, although not all agreed with him (y. Ta'an. 4:5).

Archeological evidence concerning the Second Jewish Revolt includes Bar Kokhba coins (restamped Roman coins) and numerous documents discovered mostly in the 1950s, most important of which are fifteen letters written or dictated by Bar Kokhba himself. These finds indicate that Bar Kokhba was a practical and demanding leader, and he and other rebels strictly observed the Jewish law.

However, unlike the First Jewish Revolt, which was meticulously documented by Josephus, no detailed documentation of this revolt exists, so many questions with regard to this revolt remain unanswered. These include the cause of the revolt and its geographical extent, and especially whether or not Bar Kokhba was able to take Jerusalem under his control.

Several options have been provided as to the cause of the revolt, including the foundation of the pagan city Aelia Capitolina on the ruins of Jerusalem, Hadrian's ban on circumcision, and his plan to rebuild the Jewish temple (which later was reneged). There may not have been a single cause, but a combination of several elements may have led to the revolt. With regard to the geographic extent of the revolt, it seems that Judea proper was under the control of Bar Kokhba, but Jerusalem remained under the control of the Romans. It remains unclear but possible that the influence of the revolt spread beyond the borders of Judea to Samaria, Galilee, the Transjordan, and elsewhere.

Bar Kokhba's last stand was at Bethar, south of Jerusalem. The Romans apparently perceived the revolt as a real threat to the empire and so sent a large army and experienced generals to crush the rebellion. Although the Romans finally succeeded in defeating the rebels, Roman casualties were so numerous that Hadrian omitted the customary opening phrase "I and the legions are in health" from his letter to the senate (Cassius Dio, Hist. 69.14.3).

After the war the land of Judea was devastated. Jews were forbidden to enter Jerusalem, now rebuilt as the new pagan city Aelia Capitolina. The center of Judaism shifted to Galilee. The messianic and apocalyptic elements of Judaism were strongly discouraged thereafter. Due to the apparent failure of Yahweh to save his people from the Romans, some Jews even abandoned Judaism altogether. E. Yamauchi sees one of the roots of gnosticism in the thoughts of some of the disillusioned Jews.

3. Jesus, Christians and the Revolutionaries.

A question remains as to the relationship of the Jewish revolutionary movements on the one hand and Jesus and the Christians on the other. Some scholars have seen a connection between the Jesus movement and the violent Jewish revolutionary movements, suggesting that Jesus and his followers were revolutionaries or at least were sympathetic to them.

This claim, however, remains unconvincing on both exegetical and historical bases. Neither the Gospels nor any other NT documents explicitly endorse the use of physical violence against one's enemies. Jesus' enigmatic command for his disciples to buy a sword (Lk 22:36), which apparently contradicts his rebuke of one of the disciples' use of a sword in the very same chapter (Lk 22:49-51), is best to be taken as symbolic. As stated above, Simon the Zealot should not be considered a member of a certain party against Rome. One should also note that Jesus' twelve apostles also included Matthew the tax collector—odd company in a revolutionary group. Jesus' movement consisted of a politically diverse people.

Although Jesus was executed by the Romans as the "King of the Jews" (Mk 15:26 par.)—that is, as a royal messianic figure—his earthly ministry lacks one crucial feature of the standard Davidic royal messianism: violent eradication of the enemies of God and his people (see Collins 2010). In Jesus' case, the defeat of God's enemies is spiritualized (i.e., victory over Satan [Jn 12:31; Heb 2:14-15]) and at the same time is deferred until his parousia (Rev 17:14; 19:15). But precisely for this reason Christians are urged not to resist the earthly powers by violent means (Mt 26:52; Rom 12:19). The book of Revelation contains a martyrdom theology comparable to that found in Judaism: the faithful Christian martyrs will be vindicated by God in the eschatological war against both Satan and the earthly powers (Rev 19:19; 20:7-10; cf. Rev 6:9-11; 12:11; 20:4).

Neither is there any firm evidence that Christians actively participated in the First or Second Jewish Revolts. Eusebius relates that during the First Jewish Revolt a group of Christians escaped Jerusalem and fled to the town of Pella in Transjordan (Hist. eccl. 3.5.3). Although there is an indication that some non-Jews participated in the Second Jewish Revolt, Christians most likely were not participating in it. They certainly would not have acknowledged the messiahship of Bar Kokhba.

All of this, however, does not necessarily mean that Jesus and his followers affirmed the imperial domination of Rome or were indifferent to politics. The recent rise of anti-imperial readings of the NT shows that many NT documents contain a severe critique of the Roman Empire. The mode of resistance, however, varies from book to book. Anti-Roman tendencies are most evident in the book of Revelation, but even those documents that previously were considered very pro-Roman, such as Luke-Acts, can be read as subtle critiques of the imperial ideology (see Yamazaki-Ransom). Horsley (2003; 2008) argues that documents such as *Mark and *Q represent the "hidden transcript" (offstage critique of the power) of the Jesus movement. Thus, while not revolutionaries in the sense of armed rebels, Jesus and his followers show some proximity to the nonviolent branch of the resistance movements in early Judaism.

4. Conclusion.

The centuries leading up to the First and Second Jewish Revolts were very painful for the Jewish nation. The political subjugation by foreign nations, especially the Roman Empire, was extremely difficult. In addition, their religious, cultural and socio-economic structures eroded. Israel's response to this situation was variegated. The social bandits, Zealots, Sicarii and messianic pretenders generally advocated armed rebellion and agitated for a military solution. These groups, however, often fought among themselves, significantly weakening their impact. The other response, generally advocated by the apocalypticists, prophets and martyrs, was to wait upon God, who, they believed, was about to intervene and personally defeat the enemy. The Fourth Philosophy, generally identifiable as having a genealogical link with the Maccabean martyrs, advocated suffering and martyrdom in order to move God to deliver Israel. These passive or intellectual resistance movements, however, also fermented the more active modes of rebellion. That being said, none of these responses were adequate to deal with the Roman threat. After the Second Jewish Revolt Israel lost its political identity for almost two millennia.

See also APOCALYPTICISM AND APOCALYPTIC TEACHING; CHRIST; EXILE AND RESTORATION; HERODIAN DYNASTY; ISRAEL; JERUSALEM; JOSEPHUS; KINGDOM OF GOD/HEAVEN; PEACE; PROPHETS, PROPHECY; ROME; SAMARITANS; TRIUMPHAL ENTRY.

BIBLIOGRAPHY. S. A. Applebaum, "The Zealots: The Case for Reevaluation," JRS 61 (1971) 165; E. Bammel and C. F. D. Moule, eds., Jesus and the Politics of His Day (Cambridge: University Press, 1984); P. W. Barnett, "The Jewish Sign Prophets—A.D. 40-70: Their Intentions and Origin," NTS 27 (1981) 679-97; S. G. F. Brandon, Jesus and the Zealots: A Study of the Political Factor in Primitive Christianity (Manchester: University Press, 1967); M. A. Brighton, The Sicarii in Josephus's Judean War: Rhetorical Analysis and Historical Observations (SBLJL 27; Atlanta: Society of Biblical Literature, 2009); idem, "The Sicarii in Acts: A New Perspective," JETS 54 (2011) 547-58; W. Carter, The Roman Empire and the New Testament: An Essential Guide (Nashville: Abingdon, 2006); J. J. Collins, The Apocalyptic Imagination: An Introduction to Jewish Apocalyptic Literature (2nd ed.; Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1998); idem, The Scepter and the Star: Messianism in Light of the Dead Sea Scrolls (2nd ed.; Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 2010); O. Cullmann, Jesus and the Revolutionaries, trans. G. Putnam (New York: Harper & Row, 1970); C. A. Evans, Jesus and His Contemporaries: Comparative Studies (AGJU 25; Leiden: E. J. Brill, 2001); W. R. Farmer, Maccabees, Zealots, and Josephus: An Inquiry into Jewish Nationalism in the Greco-Roman Period (New York: Columbia University Press, 1956); M. Goodman, The Ruling Class of Judaea: The Origins of the Jewish Revolt against Rome, A.D. 66-70 (Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 1993); L. L. Grabbe, An Introduction to Second Temple Judaism: History and Religion of the Jews in the Time of Nehemiah, the Maccabees, Hillel and Jesus (London: T & T Clark, 2010); W. J. Heard, "The Maccabean Martyrs' Contribution to Holy War," EvQ 58 (1986) 291-318; D. Hellholm, ed., Apocalypticism in the Mediterranean World and the Near East: Proceedings of the International Colloquium on Apocalypticism, Uppsala, August 12-17, 1979 (Tübingen: Mohr Siebeck, 1983); M. Hengel, Was Jesus a Revolutionist? trans. W. Klassen (Philadelphia: Fortress, 1971); idem, The Zealots: Investigations into the Jewish Freedom Movement in the Period from Herod I until 70 A.D., trans. D. Smith (Edinburgh: T & T Clark, 1988); R. A. Horsley, Jesus and Empire: The Kingdom of God and the New World Disorder (Minneapolis: Fortress, 2003); idem, Jesus in Context: Power, People, and Performance (Minneapolis: Fortress, 2008); idem, Revolt of the Scribes: Resistance and Apocalyptic Origins (Minneapolis: Fortress, 2009); R. A. Horsley and J. S. Hanson, Bandits, Prophets and Messiahs: Popular Movements in the Time of Jesus (Harrisburg, PA: Trinity Press International, 1999); P. Kingdon, "Who Were the Zealots and Their Leaders in A.D. 66?" NTS 17 (1970) 60-75; J. S. McLaren, "Resistance Movements," in The Eerdmans Dictionary of Early Judaism, ed. J. J. Collins and D. C. Harlow (Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 2010), 1135-40; J. Neusner, Messiah in Context: Israel's History and Destiny in Formative Judaism (Philadelphia: Fortress, 1984); A. E. Portier-Young, Apocalypse against Empire: Theologies of Resistance in Early Judaism (Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 2010); J. J. Price, Jerusalem under Siege: The Collapse of the Jewish State, 66-70 C.E. (Leiden: E. J. Brill, 1992); D. M. Rhoads, Israel in Revolution, 6-74 C.E.: A Political History Based on the Writings of Josephus (Philadelphia: Fortress, 1976); D. S. Russell, The Message and Method of Jewish Apocalyptic, 200 BC-AD 100 (Philadelphia: Fortress, 1964); S. Safrai and M. Stern, The Jewish People in the First Century: Historical Geography, Political History, Social, Cultural, and Religious Life and Institutions (2 vols.; CRINT 1/1; Philadelphia: Fortress, 1976); E. Schürer, The History of the Jewish People in the Age of Jesus Christ (175 B.C.-A.D. 135), rev. and ed. G. Vermes and F. Millar, vol. 2 (3 vols.; Edinburgh: T & T Clark, 1973-79); M. Smith, "Zealots and Sicarii, Their Origins and Relations," HTR 64 (1971) 1-19; idem, "Troublemakers," in The Cambridge History of Judaism, 3: The Early Roman Period, ed. W. Horbury, W. D. Davies and J. Sturdy (Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 1999) 501-68; N. T. Wright, The New Testament and the People of God (Minneapolis: Fortress, 1992); E. Yamauchi, "Christians and the Jewish Revolts against Rome," FH 23.2 (1991) 11-30; K. Yamazaki-Ransom, The Roman Empire in Luke's Narrative (LNTS 404; London: T & T Clark International, 2010).

W. J. Heard and K. Yamazaki-Ransom

REWARDS. See ETHICS OF JESUS.

RICH AND POOR

This article addresses the manner in which Jesus and the Gospels characterize rich and poor people, how they evaluate the character of money, and what ethics they endorse vis-à-vis wealth. It first discusses significant terminology related to poverty and riches and briefly sketches first-century A.D. Jewish and Greco-Roman perspectives relating to wealth, impoverishment and charity. It then comments on the economic status of Jesus and the disciples, before outlining Jesus' teachings regarding poor and rich people. The final and most extensive portion of the article devotes attention to the perspectives of the four Gospels and the Q document.

1. Rich and Poor in the First Century A.D.
2. The Historical Jesus on Rich and Poor
3. The Gospels on Rich and Poor
4. Conclusion

1. Rich and Poor in the First Century A.D.

Academic discussion of riches and poverty has often been hampered by incautious lexicography that makes questionable distinctions between the Hebrew terms 'ānî ("poor, afflicted, humble") and 'ebyôn ("poor"), as well as between the Greek terms plousios ("rich"), ptōchos ("poor, impoverished") and penēs ("poor"). Consequently, the present article is obliged to address these distinctions.

1.1. Hebrew Terminology and the Piety of the Poor. The term 'ānî (and its plural forms 'ānîm and 'ānāwîm, which, whatever their distinct etymological histories, do not evince divergent semantic ranges) is the most widely used word for "poor" in the OT. It can refer not only to financial penury, but also more generally to oppression, humility or humiliation. The OT repeatedly depicts God as defending the poor and oppressed against the wicked (Ex 22:25-27; Pss 12:5; 35:10; 40:17; Is 3:14-15; Amos 8:4-8). Since evil deeds were often perpetrated by the rich and powerful, Jewish literature sometimes excoriates the rich and threatens them with divine judgment (Job 20:15-22; Is 5:8-13; Jer 5:26-28; 1 En. 94:6-9; 99:15). Consequently, certain circles came to associate rich people with wickedness, while conversely assuming that the poor were righteous (Pss 86:1-2; 132:15-16; Pss. Sol. 5:1-8; 10:6; 15:1; 18:2); it is similarly instructive to note the OT tendency to contrast the rich with the righteous (Prov 11:28; 28:6). Scholars refer to this association of poverty and religiosity as "'ānāwîm piety" (for a lucid history, see Kloppenborg, 201-16).

The terms 'ebyônîm and 'ānāwîm were occasionally appropriated by certain Jewish groups, in particular the *Essenes at Qumran (1QM XI 9, 13; XIII, 14) and the Ebionites, a later Jewish Christian sect. But they were not primarily used as technical titles (Keck 1965; 1966), nor did they necessarily indicate that the group was indigent (the Ebionites may have been poor, but archeology indicates that the Qumran community was reasonably well-appointed). Rather, by adopting these appellations, the groups in question characterized themselves as pious peoples who could expect God's favor (Hamel, 177-83).

NT scholars have often taken note of this self-characterization of Jewish religious groups as "the poor" and hypothesized that Paul's commitment to "remember the poor" (Gal 2:10) refers to caring for the Jerusalem church (based on Rom 15:26), supposing that the Jerusalem community (or a subsector thereof) had adopted the appellation "the Poor," allegedly in continuity with Jesus' disciples. Nonetheless, this perspective has recently come under fire; it now seems more likely that Paul's commitment to the "poor" was nothing less than an eager concern for the needy throughout the Gentile churches (Longenecker 2010, 157-219). This should caution us against considering Jesus' blessing of "the poor" as circumlocutious praise of his own followers (see section 2 below).

Unfortunately, the notion of the "pious poor" is something of a tradition-historical wax nose, a motif capable of being molded into whatever shape the interpreter desires. The terms 'ānî and, to a lesser extent, 'ebyôn are lexemes used in such variegated ways that scholars have been able to invoke the notion of 'ānāwîm piety to completely opposite ends. For example, some scholars claim that the first beatitude of the Sermon on the Plain ("Blessed are the poor" [Lk 6:20]) has no reference to material poverty, on the grounds that the supposed title "poor" reflects 'ānāwîm and thus refers simply to righteous Israel. Others, by contrast, explain that the first beatitude is a blessing on the impoverished precisely because 'ānāwîm piety associated the poor with righteousness. The slippery polyvalence of 'ānî and 'ebyôn means that the nuance of a given NT reference to the "poor" should be determined by its immediate context.

1.2. Greek Terminology and Social Stratification. It has for a time been fashionable to make a binary division in Greco-Roman social classes between the "rich" (plousios) (the top one percent of the ancient population) and the "poor" (the remaining ninety-nine percent of the population); the category of the "poor" is then subdivided into penēs and ptōchos (see Aristophanes, Plut. 552-54; Marcus Aurelius, Comm. 4.29.2). By this reckoning, anyone who worked for a living was penēs (poor), while ptōchos described only someone absolutely destitute (like a beggar). This literary characterization of ninety-nine percent of the population as “poor” has been supplemented by problematic economic analyses arguing that ninety-nine percent of the ancient world was actually impoverished (see Economics).

More recently, however, this scholarly consensus has been challenged. To say that only one percent of the world (the sociopolitical elite) qualified as plousios is to utilize a distinction operative only from a particular social location, that of rich, classical authors. Writers of a less privileged socioeconomic location would hardly feel constrained by the elite’s restrictive definition of the “rich” or by their cavalier tendency to characterize everyone from the successful merchant to the agrarian day laborer as poor (penēs). More to the point, the terms penēs and ptōchos are in fact not consistently distinguished from one another in the manner previously suggested, either in classical literature (see, e.g., Menander, Dysk. 284-867; Philo, Virt. 90; 97; Spec. 2.85, 105; Legat. 123) or in the LXX. Some people (e.g., those whose social status had slipped a few notches) were called “poor” even though they remained quite wealthy by most standards (Martial, Epig. 4.67; Novel 4) (Longenecker 2009, 244-49; Hamel, 173-74; Ling, 100-101). Most importantly, the NT itself does not reflect these aristocratic definitions. Ptōchos is far and away the most common word for “poor,” and penēs occurs only once (2 Cor 9:9, citing LXX Ps 111:9). In sum, we should not allow a lexical distinction made by the ultrarich to dominate our reading of the NT, which derives from lower social strata.

Instead, the meaning of “poor” (ptōchos) ought to be determined by Gospel usage. To begin with, the Gospels persistently use the term “poor” to denote financial penury. The poor receive charity (Mk 10:21 // Mt 19:21 // Lk 18:22; Mk 14:5 // Mt 26:9 // Jn 12:5; Lk 19:8). They are associated with the handicapped and imprisoned (Lk 4:18; 7:22 // Mt 11:5; Lk 14:13, 21), since they are unable to sufficiently provide for themselves. A widow is described as poor (Mk 12:42; cf. Lk 21:2) insofar as she owns only two copper coins.

Naturally, financial status does not exhaust the Gospels’ characterization of the poor. The poor are sometimes those to whom the *kingdom is preached (Mt 11:5 // Lk 7:22; Lk 4:18), whose piety is exceptional (Mk 12:42-43 // Lk 21:2-3) or who will receive eschatological rewards (Lk 6:20; 14:21). In brief, the Gospels describe poverty as a socioeconomic condition, and they sometimes evaluate that condition in religious terms, insofar as indigence has significant religious entailments (as well as social entailments) (see further Green).

1.3. The Moral Economy of Riches and Poverty.

The texts of biblical and Second Temple Judaism express varied and sometimes discordant opinions on wealth and poverty. On the one hand, riches were often seen as desirable, and even as evidence of divine blessing, insofar as agricultural prosperity was among the benefits of the Deuteronomic covenant (Deut 28:1-14). This perspective was buttressed by the varieties of wisdom teachings that recognize the fiduciary benefits that accrue from piety and diligence (Ps 112:1-3; Prov 13:21; 22:4), in contrast with the impoverishment that results from sloth (Prov 10:4; 12:27; 13:4). In this vein, biblical and Second Temple documents emphasize the prosperity of Jewish heroes, such as the patriarchs (Gen 24:35; 26:13; 30:43; 47:27; Josephus, Ant. 1.263; 2.7).

On the other hand, the rampant incidence of exploitation and oppression of the poor by the rich gave rise to quite contrary sentiments (see 1.1 above). Prophetic and apocalyptic books inveigh against the rich for their abuse of the vulnerable to such a degree that affluence and corruption become interchangeable categories. By logical contrast, the impoverished and oppressed came to be associated with piety, as a result of which there arose a hope in the eschatological punishment of the wicked rich and reward of the righteous poor, a “reversal of fortunes” (see, e.g., 1 En. 103:3-15; T. Jud. 25:4; Sib. Or. 3:350-55).

In recognition of the inevitable vicissitudes of life, and in an effort to remedy various injustices perpetrated by humans, Judaism developed legal and voluntary mechanisms for the redistribution of goods. Harvest laws ensured that the needy could glean from the edges and corners of fields and recover any wheat dropped by harvesters (Lev 9:9-10; Deut 24:19; m. Pe’ah 4:10; 5:1; t. Pe’ah 2:13); similar regulations applied to vineyards and olive groves (Deut 24:20-21; m. Pe’ah 6:5; 7:3-8; t. Pe’ah 2:13). Although the tithe system provided first and foremost for the cult and the Levites (Num 18:21-24; Deut 14:22-27), every third year a tithe was to be distributed to the widows and orphans (Deut 26:12); in more radical expressions of piety, the tithe to widows and orphans was practiced every year (Tob 1:7-8). Every seven years the land was left fallow, and its produce was to feed the poor (Ex 23:11; Lev 25:6-7); so also Sabbath laws required the remission of all debts incurred by fellow Israelites (Deut 15:1-2) and the manumission of Israelite slaves (Deut 15:12). Jubilee laws echoed the injunction to manumission and further required that at the end of every period of fifty years any Israelite who acquired property from a fellow Israelite return that land to the one who had ancestral rights to it (Lev 25:13, 23).

In addition to these legal measures, which at least in theory ensured relief for the needy every fifty, seven and three years (or, in the case of harvest laws, annually), Judaism valued frequent and voluntary expressions of charitable care for the poor. The Torah expressed this particularly in the endorsement of extending interest-free loans to the impoverished (Deut 15:9-10; cf. Sir 29:1). Similarly, the Writings emphasized almsgiving (Job 31:16-20; Prov 28:27; 31:20), and this manifestation of charity flourished in postbiblical literature (Tob 4:7; 12:8; Sir 4:3-5; 7:10; 12:1-7; Philo, Fug. 29; Spec. 4.74). Similarly, Judaism came to laud the extension of hospitality as a means of caring for the indigent (Tob 7:9; T. Ab. [A] 1:2; T. Job 10:1-3). Jesus himself was an heir of this moral tradition, as he endorsed and even radicalized the Second Temple Jewish practices of charity.

The prevailing morality of Greco-Roman society differed in significant degree. Most extant literary and epigraphic evidence (which naturally derives largely from elite sources) evinces a generally warm estimation of the rich, educated and powerful. The poor, by contrast, were disdained by the affluent, frequently owing to the assumption that the disparity between social statuses reflected the relative virtue, talent or desert of each party (Cicero, Dom. 33, 89; Att. 1.16.11; Agr. 2.26.70; Lucan, Civil War 7.404).

Scholars have long commented on the disdain evident (among elite authors) toward beggars and charity (Demosthenes, Mid. 185; Plutarch, Mor. 235A; Plautus, Trin. 339), which led to the commonplace assumption that almsgiving was largely absent from the Greco-Roman world, apart from the influence of Judeo-Christian morality. Instead, most of the beneficent expenditures undertaken by the prosperous members of Roman society were intended to increase their prestige in the public eye or to solidify their social network of friends and clients (Hands, 26-51).

Nonetheless, without denying that almsgiving was far more prevalent among Jews and Christians, one ought not to think it absent in pagan circles (see, e.g., Seneca, Ben. 3.8.3; 4.29.2-3; Musonius Rufus 19.25-30). The very ubiquity of beggary makes it clear that minor charity was indeed frequently practiced, notwithstanding the protestations of many well-heeled ancient authors (Longenecker 2010, 74-87). In further contrast to prevailing elite opinion, there was a certain degree of recognition, at least within philosophical discourse, of the moral benefits (such as moderation or self-control) that could result from a life of meager means (see Plutarch, frgs. 151-152, from the treatise On Wealth; Stobaeus 4.72); among Cynic philosophers this perspective actually resulted in an overt endorsement of poverty in the pursuit of virtue (Ps.-Diogenes, Ep. 26, 31.4; 32.2; Seneca, Vit. beat. 18.3). As such, the high estimation of the poor that we encounter in the Jesus tradition did not lack Greco-Roman analogs, even if the ideological substructure of their shared perspectives differed radically.

2. The Historical Jesus on Rich and Poor.

Although it has occasionally been suggested that Jesus was rich, and (more often) that he was poor, neither characterization is quite on the mark. On the one hand, Luke's infancy narrative indicates that *Mary and Joseph hovered near the level of mere subsistence, since at Jesus' dedication they sacrificed two doves (Lk 2:24), the purification offering prescribed for new mothers who could not afford to purchase a sheep (Lev 12:8). On the other hand, as an artisan (tektōn, "carpenter") Joseph (and Jesus after him) would not likely have been indigent, and in later years he may well have lived stably above subsistence.

It would be inaccurate, moreover, to characterize Jesus and the disciples as "poor" during their ministry, notwithstanding their abandonment of jobs and homes. Although Jesus was itinerant (Mt 8:20 // Lk 9:58 // Gos. Thom. 86), this should not obscure the fact that he had a retinue of relatively wealthy women caring for him (Lk 8:1-3), and that he and his disciples were frequently the recipients of hospitality from affluent hosts (Mt 11:19; Mk 2:15; 14:3; Lk 7:36-50).

The Gospel passages narrating Jesus' instructions to the disciples as he sent them out to preach (the so-called itinerancy instructions [Mt 10:5-15 // Mk 6:6-13 // Lk 9:1-6; 10:1-12]) have sometimes been adduced as evidence of the disciples' poverty, insofar as Jesus told them to travel with just one set of clothes, no money and no provisions. Nonetheless, all three Synoptic Gospels express that this behavior was characteristic of only a limited period of their ministry with Jesus, and that the disciples could expect to receive hospitality. Indeed, if Luke 22:35-38 is any indication, the disciples typically did travel with some provisions (Hays, 93). In addition, the disciples enjoyed sufficiently regular meals that they could be indicted for neglecting to *fast (Mk 2:18-19), and Jesus himself was called "a glutton and a drunkard" (Mt 11:19 // Lk 7:34). Finally, if John's Gospel (Jn 6:5-7; 12:6; 13:29) reflects something of the situation of the historical Jesus, he and the disciples may have had liquid capital at their disposal (see 3.5 below). In sum, although the disciples were not, generally speaking, affluent, neither did they endure grinding poverty.

Although Jesus had quite a lot to say about riches and poverty, his mission was not to discuss wealth as such, but rather to proclaim the coming of the *kingdom of God. Therefore, any account of the historical Jesus' teaching on money ought to be located within his broader kerygmatic agenda. In contrast to the heyday of the Jesus Seminar in the 1990s, most recent historical Jesus scholarship has characterized Jesus as an apocalyptic prophet who believed that in his ministry God was bringing about his kingdom for faithful Israel. From this perspective, Jesus' teachings on money can be seen as (at least selective) instantiations of the OT's moral teachings and future expectations, expressed in a manner appropriate to the task of proclaiming the inauguration of the kingdom of God (Mt 16:24-27 // Mk 8:34-38 // Lk 9:23-26).

Jesus consistently prioritized the age of the kingdom over the present age, according to which he enjoined his disciples to subordinate every concern to the pursuit of the kingdom of God (Mt 16:25-26 // Mk 8:35-37 // Lk 9:24-25; Mt 10:28; 13:45-46; Gos. Thom. 76), in which they would be rewarded (Mt 19:29 // Mk 10:30 // Lk 18:29-30; Mt 25:31-46; Lk 12:33; 14:7-24; 16:1-11). This prioritization brooked no half-measures, no rival fidelities, a point that was of eminent importance for the subject of money: one cannot serve both God and mammon (Mt 6:24 // Lk 16:13). The *parable of the talents (Mt 25:14-30 // Lk 19:11-27) urged Jesus' listeners to use their time and resources wisely and aggressively (Mt 25:25-27 // Lk 19:20-23) to prepare for the arrival of the *Son of Man (cf. Mt 16:27 // Mk 8:38 // Lk 9:26). Accordingly, Jesus instructed one rich man to sell all he possessed and to give the proceeds to the poor in order to have eternal life (Mt 19:21 // Mk 10:21 // Lk 18:22).

According to a number of scholars, Jesus' eschatological proclamation developed the Isaianic assertion that the kingdom of God was good news particularly to the poor and oppressed because it signaled the end of their sufferings (Is 61:1-11; cf. Mt 11:5 // Lk 7:22; Lk 4:18; 6:20; Gos. Thom. 54). Consequently, Jesus allotted a prominent place in his ministry to marginalized individuals: the handicapped, the perpetually unclean, children and also the poor. This eschatological proclamation included a resumption of the prophetic notion that people should practice justice and mercy in order to prepare for God's redemption of Israel (Is 56:1; 58:6-10; Amos 5:14-15; Mal 3:1-12), a belief that Jesus shared with *John the Baptist (Mt 3:1-6; Mk 1:3-5; Lk 3:1-14).

In accordance with the prophetic summons to justice, Jesus spoke out against exploitation (Mt 23:23 // Lk 11:42; Mk 12:40 // Lk 20:47) and acted on his convictions as well. Jesus' so-called cleansing of the temple (see Temple Act), an event typically considered to be one of the precipitating factors of his crucifixion, probably was an expression of outrage against the injustice of the high priestly establishment. The meaning of this event is heavily debated, but one possibility is that Jesus characterized the temple as a "den of robbers" because of the corruption of the leading priests, who were known at times to use price manipulation and even thuggery (b. Pesah 57a; Josephus, Ant. 20.181, 206-207) to increase their already considerable fortunes (see Bauckham).

In addition to demanding just treatment for the poor, Jesus called for generosity toward the needy. The multiple attested accounts of the rich ruler (Mt 19:21 // Mk 10:21 // Lk 18:22) and Matthew 5:42 // Luke 6:30 (cf. Gos. Thom. 95), as well as a significant body of singly attested sayings (Mt 6:2-4; Lk 6:34-35; 11:41; 12:33; Jn 12:5; 13:29), indicate that Jesus endorsed the extension of alms and loans to the indigent. He also seemed to encourage the forgiveness of debts (Mt 6:12 // Lk 11:4; Mt 18:23-35; Lk 7:40-43; cf. Mt 18:23-35), in keeping with the Torah's regulations for years of *Sabbath (Deut 15:1-2) and *Jubilee (Lev 25). It is for this reason (and owing to the fact that in Lk 4:16-18 Jesus invokes Is 61:1-2, which itself alludes to Lev 25) that some scholars have suggested that Jesus intended to implement the Jubilee in his ministry. Still, considering the relative paucity of explicit reference to other major features of Jubilee remissions (such as the liberation of slaves and the return of lands to their historic proprietors) and the lack of evidence that the Jubilee was celebrated in the Second Temple era, it seems more likely that Jesus' allusions to Jubilee and Sabbath laws were expressions of a more general appeal to OT morality.

At times, the anointing at Bethany (Mt 26:6-13 // Mk 14:3-9 // Jn 12:1-8) has been adduced to relativize the social aspects of Jesus' teaching, since, in that context, Jesus comments, "You always have the poor with you" (Mt 26:11 // Mk 14:7 // Jn 12:8, citing Deut 15:11). But in fact, Jesus does not dispute the necessity of almsgiving; he simply affirms that his lavish anointing was an even more worthy expenditure.

Jesus' reference to Deuteronomy 15:11 in the passage, far from endorsing indifference to the poor (i.e., "The poor will always be poor, so do not waste your money"), invokes Sabbath laws that ensured that the poor always receive loans in time of need and have their debts remitted regularly. In context, Deuteronomy 15:11 explains that the people of God should be unstintingly generous to the impoverished (so to speak, "The need is so great that you should never hesitate to be generous").

Notwithstanding Jesus' ministerial emphasis on the marginalized, he also called and consorted with the affluent. He is repeatedly depicted as dining at banquets ostensibly hosted by the well-off, and his followers included well-heeled individuals such as the women mentioned in Luke 8:1-3, Zacchaeus and Joseph of Arimathea. This association, however, should by no means be taken as an indication that Jesus was indifferent to the possession of riches. On the contrary, as a result of his call to serve the kingdom above all else, Jesus thought that the pursuit of riches was a misuse of one's energies (Mt 6:19-33 // Lk 12:15-31; Gos. Thom. 63).

More than merely inveighing against preoccupation with wealth or the unjust accrual of riches, Jesus considered affluence to be the greatest obstacle to entering the kingdom. He averred that wealth and the desire for it would choke out a disciple's fruitfulness (Mt 13:22 // Mk 4:19 // Lk 8:14) and make impossible the attainment of eternal life, barring only the miraculous intervention of God himself (Mt 19:23-26 // Mk 10:23-27 // Lk 18:24-27). Thus, Jesus called the rich to sell their possessions and give them to the poor (Mt 19:21 // Mk 10:21 // Lk 18:22; 12:33), and he may well have endorsed the renunciation of possessions more generally (Lk 14:33; Gos. Thom. 81).

The fact that Jesus and his disciples left behind their lives and livelihoods to follow him, and that he is elsewhere said to have demanded precisely the same renunciation of possessions by all his disciples (Lk 14:33; cf. Lk 12:33), should caution us against thinking that Jesus' command was only intended for, say, the rich young ruler. Moreover, the repeated promise that God would provide for the needs of those who seek the kingdom first (Mt 6:25-34 // Lk 12:22-32; cf. Mt 7:7 // Lk 11:9; Gos. Thom. 36) suggests strongly that Jesus expected more than just a small handful of disciples to leave behind or give away their wealth. Indeed, if Jesus considered one's *family (Mt 12:46-50 // Mk 3:31-35 // Lk 8:19-21; Mt 10:37-38 // Lk 14:25-27; Mt 8:21-22 // Lk 9:59-62) and physical wholeness (Mt 5:29-30 // Mk 9:43-47) to be less important than the kingdom, how much less privileged ought one's wealth to be construed?

It is not immediately clear why Jesus calls for the renunciation of possessions, a behavior that is not required anywhere in the OT. The answers available in the Gospel texts are not entirely helpful. For example, Luke 14:33 calls for renunciation in order to be a *disciple, but the link between the two is unclear. Jesus' command to the rich young ruler (Mt 19:21 // Mk 10:21 // Lk 18:22; cf. 12:33) promises "treasure in heaven," a phrase that contextually seems equivalent to eternal life and inclusion in the kingdom of God (Mt 19:16, 23 // Mk 10:17, 23 // Lk 18:18, 24), but most orthodox readers would be eager to situate such actions in a more developed soteriological framework. As such, scholars have been pushed to offer more speculative suggestions. Some have posited that the abandonment of possessions was the result of a belief that the kingdom of God would arrive in its fullness with Jesus' ministry, such that renunciation was a temporary expedient necessitated by the urgency of Jesus' proclamation. Other scholars have seen renunciation as an expression of religious communalism (perhaps under Essene influence) or as the logical inference of Jesus' foci on charity, justice and loving one's neighbor as oneself. C. M. Hays has argued that Luke's Gospel construes renunciation as a consequence of absolute commitment to the kingdom of God, even though such renunciation seems to have taken a variety of forms and was not limited to exhaustive divestiture (Hays, 267); it does not seem implausible that this reading of Luke's Gospel may reflect the dynamics of Jesus' own teaching and practice.

Still, none of this amounts either to a direct critique of rich people qua rich or to a characterization of the wealthy as generally unjust. It should, however, dispel any notion that Jesus saw money as "neutral." Quite the contrary, Jesus thought of money like fire: a useful thing in its proper place, but in abundance ever more likely to leap its bounds and to consume its erstwhile master.

3. The Gospels on Rich and Poor.

The myriad studies on riches and poverty in the NT provide the Gospel interpreter with an enormous amount of sociological and comparative Jewish material relating to wealth; with recourse to this abundance of data, and drawing on parallel Gospel accounts, scholars have often illuminated the manners in which the Gospel texts may have functioned as social criticisms. It is, however, beyond the scope of the present article to give sufficient attention to readings that rely in large part on a scholarly "back story”; as such, space will be primarily devoted to such ethical teachings as can be most readily identified on the surface of the Gospel texts themselves, without thereby excluding the possibility of more profound analyses.

3.1. Mark. The Gospel of Mark reflects Jesus’ hostility toward wealth, both in its critique of avarice (Mk 7:22) and in its indication that wealth itself is a dangerous enticement (Mk 4:18-19; see also Mk 14:10-11). This point is illustrated nowhere so clearly as in the account of the rich man (Mk 10:17-31), where Mark shows that great wealth so binds its “possessor” that it becomes impossible for the affluent to attain eternal life, apart from the express intervention of God. The strong implication of this text is that those who possess great riches should, for the sake of eternal life, do away with them; this is, however, not quite explicit in Mark.

Although abandoning possessions might imperil one’s survival, Mark’s Jesus promises that those who leave behind their families, homes and fields will in turn be provided for, probably through the community of disciples (Mk 10:29-30; cf. Acts 2:44-45; 4:32-35; Rom 16:13; Gal 4:19; 1 Tim 5:2). Still, in comparison to other Gospel authors, Mark places relatively little emphasis on divine provision for one’s material needs. One might think that the account of the widow’s mite (Mk 12:41-44) offers some encouragement to those who give all they have in service of God, but closer inspection disappoints on this account. The text applauds the extent of the widow’s commitment to God, but it offers no assurances regarding how she will survive when she leaves the temple courtyard.

Interestingly, the poor do not play a significant role in Mark’s narrative or ethical agendas. Not even in the story of the widow’s mite do we find compelling evidence that Mark uniquely privileges the poor as a group. The fact that the pious widow is impoverished does not imply either that Mark lauds the poor or that he believes them to possess a superior measure of piety. Rather, in the context of Mark 11:12—13:2, a section that demonstrates Jesus’ superiority over all the denizens of the temple establishment, Mark’s praise of this widow is largely a function of his denigration of the *scribes, who are guilty of impoverishing widows just like this one (Mk 12:40). Though wary about riches, Mark does not extol the benefits of poverty.

3.2. Q. In recent years the dominant source-critical theory (i.e., the two-source theory) has come under renewed scrutiny, especially by advocates of the Farrer-Goulder-Goodacre hypothesis, which disputes the very existence of a *Q document (see Synoptic Problem). Nonetheless, the two-source theory remains the most widely held view in the NT academy, and thus the debates about Q’s perspective on riches and poverty merit our attention, especially since one’s analysis of Q bears implications for one’s assessment of the redactional emphases of Matthew and Luke.

Owing to the complexities involved in reconstructing Q, scholars differ greatly in their assessment of the document’s agenda. Nonetheless, two-source theorists are generally in agreement that Q at least partially reflects the teachings of itinerant figures who imitated Jesus by abandoning their homes (Mt 8:19-20 // Lk 9:57-58), families (Mt 8:21-22 // Lk 9:59-60) and possessions (Mt 9:37-38; 10:7-16 // Lk 10:2-12; Mt 6:20-21 // Lk 12:33-34; Mt 6:11 // Lk 11:3). While the poor are in some way considered to be privileged recipients of the proclamation of these itinerants (Mt 5:3 // Lk 6:20; Mt 11:5 // Lk 7:22), there is little by way of an endorsement of charity in Q (excepting perhaps Mt 5:42 // Lk 6:30).

Further specification of Q’s assessment of riches and poverty depends in large part on whether one sees Q in broad terms as a sapiential document or as a prophetic text.

3.2.1. Sapiential Readings of Q. Sapiential readings of Q are often (but not always) dependent on J. Kloppenborg’s reconstruction of Q’s stratification, which asserts that the earliest stage of Q lacks any material of *apocalyptic character. Some Q scholars who roughly conform to this school (e.g., Mack) have argued that Q reflects the teachings of itinerant disciples of Jesus who adopted a particularly *Cynic form of proclamation (see Downing). The Q itinerants are understood to have abandoned all their possessions and traveled with only the most austere accoutrements (thus being literally “poor”); they expected to be recompensed materially by those to whom they preached. These Cynic-sage disciples announced that in nature God provided for all one’s needs, and they railed against the rich for their bondage to wealth. This view has not gained wide acceptance among Q scholars and has been critiqued at length by C. Tuckett (Tuckett, 368-90).

R. Piper has offered an alternative account to the Cynic reading of Q. He does not see the Q community as comprised exclusively of itinerants. According to Piper, Q addressed a group of Jesus’ followers who had been ostracized for their commitment to Jesus, suffering alienation from their families and financial insecurity. For these struggling disciples, Q endorses an exclusive commitment to the kingdom of God. Q assures the disciples that God will provide for them, helping them to cope with whatever deprivation they may endure as a result of their discipleship. Accordingly, Q's blessings on the poor primarily laud those who have become poor as a result of their discipleship. By contrast, passages in Q that seem hostile to riches and to wealthy people should be interpreted as exhortations not to allow anxiety over subsistence to distract from commitment to God's kingdom. Finally, Piper denies that Q advocates any form of charity beyond the extension of hospitality to Q missionaries.

3.2.2. An Eschatological Reading of Q. In contrast to what we have dubbed "sapiential" readings of Q, Tuckett argues that Q is occupied with the prophetic annunciation of the imminent eschatological kingdom of God. The book reflects a group of wandering prophets who, in order to proclaim God's inauguration of the kingdom, voluntarily chose an itinerant lifestyle (although not one that necessarily engendered poverty), trusting in God to provide for their needs. In this way, the disciples symbolically expressed and proleptically realized the values of the kingdom.

Tuckett says that the instructions on itinerancy are only incumbent upon one subgroup of Q readers. Alongside these itinerant prophets, Q bespeaks the existence of a network of like-minded localized disciples with homes and varying degrees of wealth, people who use their possessions and incomes to support the itinerants. Tuckett argues that Q texts hostile to wealth confront instances of selfishness or greed among these localized disciples. Because of his eschatological framework, Tuckett's reading of Q is in significant agreement with the account of the historical Jesus' teachings given above.

3.3. Matthew. Matthew's Gospel talks about money a good deal more than does Mark's, while saying relatively little about the poor or the rich per se. In Matthew, Jesus does characterize his ministry in terms of preaching to a variety of marginalized people (blind, lame, lepers, deaf, dead), among whom are the poor included (Mt 11:5, alluding to Is 61:1), though he does not depict the poor as a priori soteriologically privileged. Neither are the rich characterized as wicked (cf. Mt 2:11; 27:57-60). Matthew does contrast John's ascetic garb (Mt 3:4) and the finery of people who dwell in palaces (Mt 11:8), but this may reflect a standard first-century A.D. criticism of luxury rather than antipathy toward rich people themselves.

Without fulminating against the rich, Matthew does echo and expand upon Mark's sentiment that riches are a grave hindrance to eternal life (Mt 13:22; 19:16-26; cf. Mt 16:24-26; 26:14-16; 27:3-10) and warns more generally against self-aggrandizement (Mt 20:16; 23:5-12) and the injustice that results from its pursuit (Mt 23:14, 23-24). Moreover, Matthew sees the quest for wealth as a fool's errand, since wealth is ephemeral; the kingdom of God, by contrast, is eternal (Mt 6:19-21), such that it ought to be the primary object of the disciple's endeavors (Mt 6:33). The evangelist accordingly emphasizes that God will provide for all who serve him (Mt 6:25-34; cf. Mt 6:11; 7:7-11) and warns that those who neglect to do so in favor of storing up wealth are guilty of idolatry (Mt 6:24).

Matthew emphasizes generosity to a greater degree than does Mark. In the Sermon on the Mount Matthew's Jesus instructs disciples to give and lend to anyone who asks (Mt 5:42), in keeping with the commands of Deuteronomy 15:7-11 and Leviticus 25:35-55. Here it is assumed that almsgiving constitutes part of religious piety, qualifying its practice only with an injunction toward discretion (Mt 6:1-4), in accordance with his sensitivity to one's internal motivations (cf. Mt 5:21-22, 27-28; 6:5-6, 16-18). Still, far from merely approving of charity (an approval that predominates in his religious milieu), Matthew is keen to quicken generosity through the threat of eschatological judgment and the promise of eschatological reward (as in Mt 19:21; see also Mt 19:27-30, which, by removing the phrase "now in this age," transforms the Markan promise of this-worldly provision into one of heavenly exaltation; contrast Mk 10:28-31; see 3.1 above). He devotes a significant portion of his eschatological dialogue to the subject of *ethics (Mt 25:14-46). The parable of the talents (Mt 25:14-30) depicts characters who are alternately rewarded and punished in accordance with how proactively they utilized the resources entrusted to them (Mt 25:25-27 // Lk 19:20-23). While the parable's invocation of monetary measures (talents) does not limit its moralizing potential to the use of money, wealth should, the parable tells us, certainly be included prominently among the resources to be invested aggressively for the sake of the kingdom.

The social and financial implications of the parable of the talents are unpacked in the ensuing pericope: the judgment of the sheep and the goats (Mt 25:31-46; cf. Mt 10:42). This text explains that the eternal fates of individuals will be decided according to their service to Jesus. Jesus avers that he is served by kindness to those of his followers (see Mt 25:40) who are hungry, thirsty, foreign, naked, sick or imprisoned. Jesus, Emmanuel, "God with us" (Mt 1:23; cf. Mt 18:5) (see Rowland, 516), is present in the marginalized, so that service to them is tantamount to serving him and is worthy of reward. The “goats,” who failed to serve Jesus in the poor, however, are summarily sent unto eternal punishment (Mt 25:41), even though they recognize him to be “Lord.” This text vividly describes Jesus’ concern for the needy and warns against neglecting them. It does not, however, characterize those who neglected the needy as rich; no reference is made to the financial status of the “goats” at all, for Matthew does not see affluence as blameworthy, just as he does not see poverty as praiseworthy (Mt 5:3 notwithstanding).

It warrants mention at this juncture that Matthew has frequently been considered to soften his source texts in regard to issues of wealth and poverty (e.g., Mealand, 13-16; against which, see Schmidt, 121-22). A classic example to this effect is the claim that Matthew “spiritualized” the allegedly more original Lukan form of the first beatitude, transforming a blessing of the (financially) “poor” (Lk 6:20) into a benediction of the “poor in spirit” (Mt 5:3), thus kowtowing to a supposedly affluent constituency. Now, it is probably true that Matthew 5:3 has little to do with material poverty. The phrase “poor in spirit” reflects the Semitic ʾānīm rūaḥ, a description that can simply denote humility as a moral attribute, without any connotations of financial status (1QM XIV, 7; cf. Prov 29:23; Is 57:15; 66:2). Since Matthew’s beatitudes focus primarily on spiritual traits (meekness, mercy, purity of heart), there is no more reason to think that the poor in spirit are financially poor than there is to think that those who hunger and thirst for righteousness are physically hungry and thirsty (on which, see Ps 42:2; 63:1; 143:6; Amos 8:11). But it has also been argued, perhaps more persuasively, that the Matthean version of the first beatitude is the more original, and that Luke decided to simplify the odd Semitism “poor in spirit” in keeping with his general tendency to see the impoverished as the recipients, not only of the gospel proclamation, but also of the kingdom (Ling, 123-31).

Commentators have also averred that Matthew toned down the account of the rich ruler, since in Matthew 19:21 Jesus tells the rich young man to sell all he has if he would be “perfect.” This comment was crucial for the later Christian distinction between precepts and counsels of perfection, the latter of which were considered supererogatory (i.e., not incumbent upon all followers of Jesus). Nonetheless, the interpretation of Matthew 19:21 as an example of supererogatory piety falters at two points. First, Matthew has by that point of the narrative already explained that discipleship is itself a call to perfection (Mt 5:48; cf. Mt 5:20). Second, Matthew does not alter Jesus’ comment about the impossibility of the rich entering the kingdom (Mt 19:23-26), which might be expected if the issue at stake were only supererogatory piety. In short, it does not seem appropriate to construe Matthew as softening his source texts, at least not in a proactive or programmatic way.

3.4. Luke. It is in Luke’s Gospel that we encounter the most developed favoritism toward the poor and hostility toward the wealthy. Luke depicts Jesus’ ministry as being for the poor in much stronger terms than do Matthew and Mark. Still, Luke does not typically assert that the poor are members of the kingdom of God just because they are poor. For example, the Magnificat celebrates God’s action for poor and oppressed Israel (Lk 1:52-55). In the Nazareth synagogue sermon Jesus’ message is preached especially to the poor and the outcast (Lk 4:18; so also Lk 7:22; cf. Is 61:1-2), but that does not make irrelevant the poor’s response to Jesus (even though the poor and marginalized are depicted in Lk 14:15-24 as responding readily to the invitation to God’s eschatological banquet). In the first beatitude the poor are construed as heirs of the kingdom (Lk 6:20), though the fourth beatitude (“Blessed are you when people hate you . . . on account of the Son of Man” [Lk 6:22]) may be seen as filling out the description of the blessed poor; so also, the Sermon on the Plain’s ensuing ethical instructions could well be taken as moral prerequisites for the inclusion of the poor in the kingdom.

Still, when saying that Luke generally couples favoritism toward the poor with an expectation that the poor respond properly to Jesus’ proclamation, we should perhaps be cautious not to dampen the force of the parable of the rich man and Lazarus (Lk 16:19-31). In this unsettling text poor Lazarus is said to have received eschatological rest for no other reason than that he lacked good things during his life (Lk 16:25); there is no indication in the parable that Lazarus demonstrated even a scrap of religious piety. By this reading, the eschatological blessedness of the poor may be partially a matter of theodicy: the promise of eternal happiness helps affirm the goodness of a God who allows the poor to endure a lifetime of suffering. Nonetheless, many scholars prefer to read this parable within the framework Luke seems to have developed earlier in the Gospel, thus asserting that the piety of Lazarus can be safely assumed; accordingly, the emphasis of the parable is strictly upon the judgment to be incurred by the rich who revel in luxury while neglecting the needy.

Luke reflects Matthew's conviction that God will provide for people's needs (Lk 12:22-31), but for Luke this notion is integrated into his agenda to stimulate charity. The promises of divine provision by which Matthew encouraged pursuit of the kingdom more generally (Mt 6:19-34) are in Luke made impetuses to self-divesting almsgiving specifically (Lk 12:33-34; cf. Lk 16:9-13).

Luke echoes and expands upon Mark and Matthew's belief in the dangers of wealth (Lk 8:14; 14:18-19; 19:20-23; cf. Lk 11:39; 16:13), but it is only in Luke, in the first woe of the Sermon on the Plain, that the rich are threatened with punishment simply for being rich (Lk 6:24). This daunting assertion is resumed in the parable of the rich man and Lazarus. At first, the rich man is told that he received eternal torment because he had already enjoyed his share of good things in his own life (Lk 16:19-26). It is only in the second half of the parable (Lk 16:27-31) that the man's fate is further specified to be the consequence of neglecting "Moses and the Prophets," the Scriptures that, by Luke's reckoning, commanded the rich to care for the poor (Hays, 156-58). Thus, Luke's initial and apparently unqualified damnation of the rich is reframed in terms of a punishment for the neglect of God's law (cf. Lk 14:12-14).

Luke also shares with Matthew and Mark a conviction that claims of the kingdom of God ought thoroughly to overshadow the concerns of this world (Lk 9:24-25; 17:26-33). He is nonetheless more adamant than his predecessors that eschatological punishments and rewards hang upon one's use of money (Lk 12:13-31; 16:1-9). Luke is so convinced that God will reward the poor and punish the unrighteous rich that he adopts the Jewish motif of the "reversal of fortunes" (see, e.g., 1 Sam 2:7; Is 26:5-6; Sir 11:5, 13, 21; see also 1.3 above), averring that in the end God will exalt and reward the poor while abasing and punishing the rich (Lk 1:50-53; 6:20-26; 14:7-24; 16:19-31). Although the other Synoptics could justifiably be characterized as hostile to wealth, only Luke is antagonistic toward the rich.

This point notwithstanding, Luke does, as mentioned above in relation to Luke 16:27-31, hold out the hope of eschatological reward for the rich, insofar as they cease to be preoccupied with worldly concerns (Lk 12:22-33; 14:18-20; 16:13; 17:26-33) and instead focus on providing generously for the needs of the poor (Lk 12:33-34; 16:1-9; 18:18-30; 19:1-10; cf. Lk 14:12-14). Although the other Gospels do encourage care for the poor in degrees, Luke excels them all (see further Lk 6:30-38; 11:41-42; cf. Lk 10:25-37). As such, it is no surprise that Luke omits from the account of Jesus' anointing (Lk 7:36-50) the comment "the poor you always have with you" (Mt 26:11 // Mk 14:7 // Jn 12:8); he likely anticipated that such a phrase could be taken as an expression of the futility of charity.

Combining the Synoptic teachings on the importance of charity and the supremacy of the kingdom of God, Luke emphasizes that following Christ and caring for the poor require profound renunciation of possessions: "Nobody is able to be my disciple who does not renounce all of his possessions" (Lk 14:33 [cf. Lk 18:22, 28-30; 19:1-10; 21:1-4]). Accordingly, Lukan redaction is characterized by heightening the element of renunciation in texts where people are instructed to renounce, or are described as abandoning, their possessions: Simon and Andrew leave behind not just their nets (so Mt 4:20 // Mk 1:18), but "everything" (Lk 5:11) to follow Jesus (so with Levi [Lk 5:28]); the rich ruler is told to sell "everything, whatever you have" and to give it to the poor (Lk 18:22) (see further Hays, 82-84, 173-75). Although there is no legislation about a particular percentage that must be given to the needy (contrast the aforementioned texts with Lk 11:41-42; 19:8), everything must be renounced for the sake of discipleship (Lk 14:33).

Thus, while neither Luke's preference for the poor nor his antipathy toward the rich amounts to an unqualified determination of their eternal states, his (sometimes hyperbolic) rhetoric gives the most potent expression to Jesus' own warnings about the dangers of wealth and the neglect of the poor, as well as most vibrantly highlighting the constituency of the poor among those to whom Jesus directed his preaching.

3.5. John. In marked contrast to the Synoptics, the Fourth Gospel displays no hostility toward affluence. Jesus associates with wealthy people such as a royal official (Jn 4:46-54), Mary, Martha and Lazarus (Jn 12:1-8), as well as Nicodemus and Joseph of Arimathea (Jn 19:38-39); he facilitates lavish consumption of fine alcohol at a rich man's wedding (Jn 2:1-11 [note the employment of a "chief steward"]); and he is entombed in opulence (Jn 19:38-42; cf. Jn 12:1-7). There is little attention given to the poor; they are referred to only in passing (Jn 12:5-6; 13:29) and are never the explicit objects of Jesus' actions. (One must widen the angle of the interpretive lens to include "the marginalized" before one can begin to develop a Johannine theology of the needy [so Motyer].) Finally, John does not propound a particular wealth ethic; the command to "love one another" (Jn 15:12, 17) lacks any specific application to the needy of the sort that occurs in 1 John 3:16-18.

Notwithstanding the absence of attention to wealth ethics, the Fourth Gospel may reflect, however dimly, some of the Synoptics' presuppositions. A belief in the dangers of wealth might lie behind John's characterization of Judas as a thief (Jn 12:6). The Fourth Gospel also preserves a faint echo of the Synoptic choruses about divine provision (Jn 16:23-24).

Most significantly for our purposes, the Fourth Gospel assumes the value of almsgiving. While John does not explicitly call for almsgiving, he mentions (in passing) that Jesus and his disciples practiced charity. John 12:5-6; 13:29 indicate that the disciples possessed a money box (glōssokomon), and that from that box they would give alms. Some have argued that the Johannine account of the feeding of the multitudes (see Jn 6:5-7) implies that the chest contained a large amount of money, if not enough to provide for a crowd of five thousand (Karris, 28-31), though this latter assertion seems tenuous.

Scholars have on occasion suggested that this money box was a receptacle in which the disciples pooled all of their resources, hence the NRSV rendering of glōssokomon as "common purse." This translation is lamentable, however, since the term glōssokomon denotes only a container or chest and, on occasion, a money-box or purse (LXX 2 Chron 24:8, 10; Plutarch, Galb. 16.1; P.Ryl. 127.25). The lexeme does not refer to an item in which communally shared funds are held, nor does the context of John indicate that the disciples pooled their resources into the chest. Moreover, as discussed earlier (see 2 above), the Synoptic itinerancy instructions (Mt 10:5-15 // Mk 6:6-13 // Lk 9:1-6; 10:1-12), which describe the disciples as traveling without purses, do not profess to depict the disciples' typical modus operandi, but rather refer to a nonstandard practice undertaken by the disciples when traveling without Jesus; this is especially clear in Luke 22:35-38, which reveals that at least some of the disciples carried their own purses. This is not to eschew the historicity of John's contention that the Twelve had a money box, or even that the contents of that box could have been used to provide for the disciples' needs (cf. Jn 13:29a: "Some thought that Jesus was telling him, 'Buy what we need for the festival'") alongside those of the poor (Jn 12:5-6; 13:29b); rather the possession of such a purse does not exclude the persistence of private funds.

4. Conclusion.

The Gospel authors do not evince identical ethical agendas; neither, however, are they intractably at odds with each other or with the teachings of the figure whom they seek to display. They are diverse receptions of Jesus, each with distinct emphases and lacunae; but for all that, each of them can reasonably be said to transmit to us, in varying degrees and from various angles, the views of Jesus on riches and poverty.

Far from reiterating identical bits of Jesus' teachings, these texts complement each other's portraits of Jesus' ethics. By reading only John's Gospel, one might get the impression that almsgiving is a relatively low priority for the church; Luke and Matthew, however, leave no room for such an assumption. If we had only Luke's Gospel, we could easily emphasize God's preferential option for the poor so as to forget that the poor too must hunger and thirst for righteousness in order to be filled. But the collective witness of the fourfold Gospel transmits a more fully orb'd account of wealth, giving us Jesus' view of riches and poverty.

See also DISCIPLES AND DISCIPLESHIP; ECONOMICS; ETHICS OF JESUS.

BIBLIOGRAPHY. R. Bauckham, "Jesus' Demonstration in the Temple," in Law and Religion: Essays on the Place of the Law in Israel and Early Christianity, by Members of the Ehrhardt Seminar of Manchester University, ed. B. Lindars (Bristol: James Clarke, 1988) 72-89; C. Blomberg, Neither Poverty nor Riches: A Biblical Theology of Material Possessions (NSBT; Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1999); F. G. Downing, Cynics and Christian Origins (Edinburgh: T & T Clark, 1992); S. J. Friesen, "Poverty in Pauline Studies: Beyond the So-called New Consensus," JNT 26 (2004) 323-61; J. B. Green, "Good News to Whom? Jesus and the 'Poor' in the Gospel of Luke," in Jesus of Nazareth: Lord and Christ; Essays on the Historical Jesus and New Testament Christology, ed. J. B. Green and M. Turner (Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1994) 59-74; G. H. Hamel, Poverty and Charity in Roman Palestine, First Three Centuries C.E. (UCNES 23; Berkeley: University of California Press, 1990); A. R. Hands, Charities and Social Aid in Greece and Rome (AGRL; Ithaca, NY: Cornell University Press, 1968); C. M. Hays, Luke's Wealth Ethics: A Study in Their Coherence and Character (WUNT 2/275; Tübingen: Mohr Siebeck, 2010); R. J. Karris, Jesus and the Marginalized in John's Gospel (ZS; Collegeville, MN: Liturgical Press, 1990); L. E. Keck, "The Poor Among the Saints in the New Testament," ZNW 56 (1965) 100-29; idem, "The Poor Among the Saints in Jewish Christianity and Qumran," ZNW 57 (1966) 54-78; J. S. Kloppenborg, "Poverty and Piety in Matthew, James, and the Didache," in Matthew, James, and Didache: Three Re- lated Documents in Their Jewish and Christian Settings, ed. H. van de Sandt and J. Zangenberg (SBLSymS 45; Leiden: E. J. Brill, 2008) 201-32; T. J. Ling, The Judaean Poor and the Fourth Gospel (SNTSMS 136; Cambridge: Cambridge University Press 2006); B. W. Longenecker, "Exposing the Economic Middle: A Revised Economy Scale for the Study of Early Christianity," JSNT 31 (2009) 243-78; idem, Remember the Poor: Paul, Poverty, and the Greco-Roman World (Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 2010); B. W. Longenecker and K. Liebengood, eds., Engaging Economics: New Testament Scenarios and Early Christian Reception (Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 2009); B. L. Mack, The Lost Gospel: The Book of Q and Christian Origins (Shaftesbury: Element, 1993); D. L. Mealand, Poverty and Expectation in the Gospels (London: SPCK, 1980); S. Motyer, "Jesus and the Marginalised in the Fourth Gospel," in Mission and Meaning: Essays Presented to Peter Cotterell, ed. A. Billington, T. Lane and M. Turner (Carlisle: Paternoster, 1995) 70-89; D. E. Oakman, Jesus and the Economic Questions of His Day (SBEC 8; Lewiston, NY: Edwin Mellen, 1986); R. A. Piper, "Wealth, Poverty, and Subsistence in Q," in From Quest to Q: Festschrift James M. Robinson, ed. J. M. Asgeirsson, K. de Troeyer and M. W. Meyer (BETL 146; Leuven: Leuven University Press, 2000) 219-64; C. Rowland, "Apocalyptic, the Poor, and the Gospel of Matthew," JTS 45 (1994) 504-18; W. Scheidel and S. J. Friesen, "The Size of the Economy and the Distribution of Income in the Roman Empire," JRS 99 (2009) 61-91; T. E. Schmidt, Hostility to Wealth in the Synoptic Gospels (JSNTSup 15; Sheffield: JSOT Press, 1987); L. Schottroff and W. Stegemann, Jesus and the Hope of the Poor (Maryknoll, NY: Orbis, 1986); C. M. Tuckett, "Discipleship in Q," in Q and the History of Early Christianity: Studies on Q, ed. C. M. Tuckett (Edinburgh: T & T Clark, 1996) 355-91.

C. M. Hays

ROME

Biblical interpreters have recently become increasingly conscious of the fact that both the life of Jesus and the writing of the Gospels took place under the Roman Empire. Understanding the institutions and values of that empire helps us better appreciate the events and teaching in the Gospels. This article offers a brief historical and social framework for understanding some key features of Rome and its culture. We will then look at some issues and examples in relating Jesus and the Gospels to Rome.

1. A Brief History of Rome up to the New Testament Period

2. The Organization of the Roman Empire
3. Roman Social Structures and Pietas
4. Jesus and Rome
5. The Gospels and Rome
6. Mark and Rome
7. Luke and Rome
8. Conclusions

1. A Brief History of Rome up to the New Testament Period.

1.1. Origins: Myth, Reality and Ideology. It is important to distinguish between Rome's mythology about its origins and what we can determine through historical inquiry. That is not to say that the accounts of Roman origins by Livy, Virgil and Dionysius of Halicarnassus are unimportant for readers of the NT. Their accounts carry invaluable evidence of ideas contemporary with the roots of the Christian movement. These writers express the ideology and attitudes of the time of Augustus, the first emperor (31 B.C.–A.D. 14), ideas that shaped life in the first century A.D.

Mythologically, Rome stems from the fall of Troy. Aeneas, son of a liaison between the prominent Trojan Anchises and the goddess Venus (a claim that later will be important for the ideology of the family of Julius Caesar) escapes the ruin and sails the Mediterranean. He then escapes the seductive lure of Carthage (centered on what is now Tunisia), encapsulated in its queen, Dido, and arrives at his destiny: founding a settlement in Italy (see esp. Virgil's Aeneid). This is a narrative expressing a sense of cultural proximity and yet difference. As well as making reference to the Carthaginian state that was Rome's main rival in the third century B.C., the myth, more significantly, positions Rome in relation to the Greeks. Romans were Trojans, part of the Greek civilized world but opponents of the Greeks and different from them. Romans saw themselves as more serious, pious and hardworking than the intellectual but effete Greeks. Key Roman attitudes are expressed here, as is an ideology that legitimated the rule that the Roman Empire had exercised over the Greeks for a century by the time of the Augustan historians and poets.

As well as ideology and attitudes, there is in fact something here that relates to the historical development of Rome. Rome grew up at the intersection of two cultures. Greek colonies were first founded in Italy in the early eighth century B.C. Rome was not one of them but was strongly influenced by city-based Greek life and Greek military organization. The second culture was that of the Etruscans, who occupied a large region north of Rome and dominated the city up to at least the end of the sixth century B.C. Etruscan influence can be seen particularly in some Roman religions and customs. The Romans were rather like Greeks (and rather like Etruscans), but they saw their similarities as more than counter-balanced by differences.

From Aeneas's descendants came Romulus and Remus, twins from another divine liaison, this time involving Mars (see esp. Livy's history of Rome, Ab urbe condita). Romulus was seen as having founded Rome in 753 B.C. A crucial event in this was the taking of auspices, a ritual involving the flight of birds and designed to find out the will of the gods. Auspices and other omens were always a pervasive force in Roman life. Another element of this story that would prove significant in the NT period was Romulus's apotheosis—his being taken up to heaven to be one of the gods.

In reality, the founding of Rome began with an adjoining group of hilltop villages located at the lowest crossing point of the strategically important river Tiber. In the seventh century B.C. the inhabitants drained a marshy area between the hills and formed a meeting place, the Forum. For a long period Rome was ruled by a series of monarchs who were essentially Etruscan. Then (in 509 B.C., according to Roman tradition) the monarchy was overthrown, and Rome became a republic.

1.2. Developing a "Balanced" Political System. The avoidance of monarchy became, and remained, a central element of Roman politics, even, paradoxically, under the emperors. To avoid monarchy there were always two rulers, consuls, who were elected annually and, in principle, could not hold office twice. However, the most prominent duties of the consuls were as military leaders. This led to pressure for successful consuls to serve more than once, especially in times of danger, resulting in some repeat consulships from the fourth century B.C. onward. Conversely, political considerations in the late republic and early imperial period led to many consuls serving only part of a year, being then replaced by suffect consuls. The danger of monarchy was also kept in check by the consuls being constrained by other voices, beginning with the senate, a large council that rulers had been expected to consult on important decisions, even back in the time of the kings.

During the first half of the fifth century B.C. the so-called struggle of the orders took place, between the aristocratic patricians (who then monopolized membership of the senate) and the rest of the population, the plebeians (this word did not yet have its later connotation of referring to the poor). The political system that emerged was one that the Romans saw as properly balanced, avoiding the extremes of tyranny and of Greek democracy. In Rome the consuls were elected from among the senators. The senate formed a general governing body. Alongside its patrician members it now included increasing numbers of plebeians. Membership of the senate came to be dependent on a qualifying level of wealth (expressed in ownership of land), although wealth did not give automatic entry. The power of the senate was balanced by that of the comitium, the popular assembly. Particularly representing that body were a number of tribunes, who could propose laws and veto senatorial legislation. Officials were elected, and legislation was subject to votes. However, elections and legislative voting were not fully democratic. Various voting methods were used, but all of them were complex systems that tended to give more say to wealthier voters. For instance, one system, the comitia centuriata, effectively weighted people's votes in terms of how great a contribution they (in accordance with their wealth and occupation) could make to the army.

1.3. Gaining an Empire. The Tiber Valley was a key access route into central Italy. In the fourth century B.C. Rome forced itself to the head of a group of Latin-speaking tribes. Early in the third century B.C. Rome and its allies defeated the Etruscans and Samnites, their neighbors. Shortly afterwards Rome defeated the forces of the Greek colonies of Italy's south. This spread of Rome's power across Italy brought it into competition with the existing major power in the western Mediterranean, Carthage. In the middle of the third century B.C. this state controlled much of North Africa, Spain and most islands in the region. The First Punic War (Carthage was initially a Phoenician colony, hence the name) ended in 241 B.C., with Rome gaining Sicily. This became Rome's first overseas province. In 218 B.C. war broke out again. Hannibal of Carthage invaded Italy and rampaged irresistibly for over a decade, but without taking Rome. In the meantime, Rome fought the Carthaginians in Spain, taking over their territory. Then Rome sent an army to attack Carthage itself, and the undefeated Hannibal was forced to return home in a vain effort to stave off the attack. When the war ended in 202 B.C., Rome had taken over Carthage's western Mediterranean empire.

Meanwhile, in an inept gesture of belligerence, Philip V, king of Macedon, a state in northern Greece that exercised control over many of the cities of the rest of Greece, had proclaimed support for Hannibal without backing this up militarily. Rome attacked Philip's forces in Greece and in 196 B.C. Rome proclaimed "the freedom of the Greeks": the Greek cities would be free of Macedonian control, with Rome guaranteeing this. Despite not maintaining an army in Greece, Rome became the key power there. In 171–167 B.C. and 148 B.C. Rome fought two more wars with Macedon. After the first war Macedon was weakened by being divided into four parts (cf. Acts 16:12). After the second war the area became a province, Macedonia. In 133 B.C. the ruler of Pergamum bequeathed to Rome a large area in western Asia Minor. Through the following century generals pushed Rome's control and influence into northern Europe and on round the Mediterranean. Judea became subject to Rome after the intervention of Pompey in its politics in 63 B.C. The Romans ended up giving authority to Antipater, an Idumean already involved in Judean politics. His son Herod ("the Great") was made governor of Galilee, then tetrarch, then king of Judea. The Romans identified him as an allied king. The modern term "client king" better captures the extent to which his rule was entirely subject to Rome.

1.4. The Collapse of the Republic and the Emergence of Emperors. By the late second century B.C. cracks were appearing in the fabric of the Roman Republic. Many writers, then and since, have blamed the effects of gaining an empire. Luxury goods and slaves came in. The small farmers of Italy, the traditional backbone of the army, were squeezed both by long campaigns in distant lands, keeping them from their farms, and by ways in which newfound wealth of the elite, with access to slave labor, changed the way they wanted to use the countryside. The tribune Tiberius Gracchus passed a land reform law, and then he was murdered (133 B.C.), as was his brother Gaius (122 B.C.). Gaius Marius opened membership of the army to the poor, unable to provide their own equipment as the small farmers had. The financial dependence of the new soldiers on their general led toward the destabilizing pattern of the first century B.C. in which leaders built armies with primary allegiance to them rather than the senate. Marius's military successes led to him becoming consul six times (up to 100 B.C.), flouting part of the rulebook that kept monarchy at bay. A vicious civil war then broke out between his followers and those of Sulla, another general. In 81 B.C. Sulla took an obscure political office, dictator, a powerful emergency post intended to be held for up to six months, and turned it into a lifelong appointment. He died three years later.

Now the leaders of the last act of the republic appear. Pompey is consul in 70 B.C. (after the slave revolt led by Spartacus). In 67 B.C. Pompey is voted an extraordinary imperium, an authority giving him geographically wide-ranging power to fight pirates. This power overrode that of provincial governors. In 63 B.C. Cicero is consul, and Julius Caesar becomes official chief priest, pontifex maximus. In 59 B.C. Caesar is consul, and then he spends most of the decade fighting in Gaul. In 50 B.C., in response to senatorial attempts to limit his power, he breaks with all precedent and brings his provincial army across the Rubicon River into Italy. Civil war ensues, with Caesar defeating Pompey at Pharsalus in 48 B.C. Caesar follows Sulla in taking the dictatorship as a long-term post. However, as with Sulla, a post for life turns out to mean only a few years. On the Ides (15th) of March in 44 B.C. Caesar is murdered.

To widespread surprise, not least that of his key military supporter Mark Antony, Caesar, in his will, adopts his great-nephew Gaius Octavius, whose name now changes to "Gaius Julius Caesar Octavianus" (Octavian). Octavian and Antony join forces to defeat Caesar's opponents, led by Brutus and Cassius, at the battle of Philippi in 42 B.C. In 37 B.C. Antony abandons Octavian's sister to marry Cleopatra and takes increasingly wide control of the eastern half of the empire. During the struggle that follows Octavian issues coins carrying the propaganda that he is divi filius, son of the deified Julius Caesar, who, after the example of Romulus, was declared to have become a god after death. (Notice that Octavian's claim comes about only by adoption. This process was viewed as literally putting a person into the adoptive father's genealogical line [cf. the *genealogies of Jesus via Joseph].) Antony and Cleopatra are defeated in 31 B.C. at the naval Battle of Actium. Octavian now holds all Rome's armies in his control.

To us, the situation looks rather like monarchy. However, Octavian, no doubt with Caesar's fate in mind but probably also acting in accordance with his Roman attitudes, proclaims that he is restoring the republic. He will simply hold normal republican offices. He will just be princeps, the first among equal citizens. However, he will also retain control of the legions in the provinces where Rome tends to be engaged in fighting, which means the great majority of the army. Technically, he hands power back to the senate and consuls (of whom he is one for several years, then stands down). He merely expects to be consulted on state matters because of his auctoritas, his moral authority. The senate responds by giving him the title “Augustus,” meaning “revered one.”

The auctoritas of Augustus extends to effectively nominating his successor, Tiberius, his adopted son. Tiberius comes to power in A.D. 14. After a long and somewhat checkered reign, including the anti-Jewish machinations of Sejanus and the governorship of Pontius Pilate, he dies in 37 B.C., handing power to the wildly erratic Gaius Caligula. The latter's four-year reign must have stretched the credibility of the moral authority of the Caesars close to breaking point. He dresses up as a deity (strongly against Roman norms, despite the imperial cult [see 3 below]), appoints his horse to the senate, and attempts to have his own statue installed in the Jerusalem temple. He is assassinated in A.D. 41, and his uncle, the rather more sane Claudius, rules for fourteen years, during which time the earliest NT documents are written. Nero comes to the throne in 54 A.D., begins benignly, under the influence of his tutor, Seneca, and then becomes obsessed with theatrical performance and increasingly erratic. After the great fire of Rome in 64 A.D. he puts to death many of the city's Christians. In 66 A.D. Judea and Galilee erupt in rebellion. In 68 A.D. Nero is killed or commits suicide. The effects of army loyalty to their generals reach a disastrous peak in 69 A.D. as various legions march on Rome, with four emperors coming to power in quick succession, ending with Vespasian, who returns from Judea, leaving the conclusion of the war to his son Titus, who brings the great menorah and other items from the destroyed Jerusalem temple back to Rome for a triumphal procession. Mark's Gospel is written probably some time in this troubled period, either late in Nero's reign or when Vespasian is emperor. Titus succeeds Vespasian in 79 A.D. but rules only briefly before his brother Domitian comes to the throne, ruling until 96 A.D. Second-century Roman and Christian writers see Domitian's reign as a dark time, including persecution, although the extent of this has been disputed. Domitian begins to use the nontraditional titles dominus (“lord”) and deus (“god”). Most scholars put the writing of the other three canonical Gospels during his reign.

2. The Organization of the Roman Empire.

The most striking point about the running of the empire was that very few Romans were involved in doing it. Since the early second century B.C., when unarmed Roman senators, with very small entourages, would go to Greek city states and tell them what to do, Rome generally had managed the trick of getting local people to run the empire for them, with the threat of overwhelming military force being held very much in reserve. The Jewish War of A.D. 66–73 is a case in point. The Romans did not have enough troops permanently on the ground in Judea and Galilee to prevent the rebellion. It took time to bring sufficient force to bear.

Roman provincial governors had only a limited number of officials and support staff with them, typically less than a hundred. The governor's primary responsibility was to maintain order. This included ensuring that taxes were collected, and that Roman citizens were protected. The governor and his staff did not administer the province as such. Local legislation and administration were the responsibility of the local elite. One of Rome's main organizational strategies was to strengthen and support the position of local elites, enhancing their prestige and their loyalty to Rome. Archeologically, we can see evidence of this in the spread of Roman patterns of patronage, benefaction and honoring, attested in inscriptions throughout the empire.

There were two types of province. Those away from the troubled borders were in the control of the senate. The governors were proconsuls, senators who had completed a period as consul and were now acting on behalf of the consuls. The province of Asia, centered on Ephesus, is a case in point (see Acts 19:38). Border provinces, in which almost all the legions were stationed, were under direct control of the emperor. He would send out his own representative, a legate, to govern on his behalf. Such a legate usually was of senatorial rank and held the title legatus Augusti pro praetore. However, in Egypt and in smaller provinces such as Judea, the legate was an equestrian, usually holding the title of praefectus (“prefect”). Equestrians were members of the social rank next below senators. Like senators, equestrians had to have a certain level of wealth. However, whereas senators faced a series of status-related taboos such as a (frequently breached) ban on commercial activity, these did not apply to equestrians.

Equestrian commercial enterprises acted, in fact, somewhat as economic glue in the empire. Equestrian-owned companies conducted a great deal of long-range trade and were heavily involved in tax collecting (esp. prior to Augustus). The interregional links forged by equestrian and other companies had the effect of channeling money and goods toward Rome (as is satirized and condemned in Rev 18). Money raised in tax, generally in silver, was re-minted and sent out to the borders to pay the legions (bronze money was mainly for local use, gold money was for convenient movement of wealth). As the Gospels attest, at a local level the collection of taxes was delegated to non-Romans. Zacchaeus (Lk 19:1-10) perhaps held a tax-raising contract for an area. Matthew/Levi was at the bottom of the tax-raising chain, sitting at a tax booth to collect money (Mt 9:9; Mk 2:14).

We should not think of the first-century A.D. Roman Empire as having sharply delineated boundaries. Rome's authority, its imperium, extended to varying degrees beyond any specific line that one could have drawn on a map. Rome's control was not a matter of having thousands of soldiers standing spaced out along a borderline. It was more a matter of concentrations of soldiers who could take action to protect the interests of Rome and its allies. The allies in question varied in their type of relationship to Rome. Some, such as Herod Agrippa I, ruled under Roman control in areas that would otherwise be normal provinces (in this case culminating in kingdom of Judea and Galilee, A.D. 41-44). Others, such as various Armenian rulers, held power because of Roman intervention but without the ruler's kingdom lying so obviously within what might be thought of as the empire.

The running of the empire was ultimately underpinned by the army. After very early use of the Greek-style phalanx, the Romans adopted a pattern based on legions of about five thousand soldiers. Each legion was subdivided into ten cohorts, which in turn were split into centuries, each of which, ironically, typically had eighty rather than one hundred soldiers. By the time of the Gospels, the army had moved far from its roots as an occasional force of farmers summoned from the fields to meet a threat to Rome. Now the army was fully professional, with a standard service length of twenty years. Alongside the legions, which were made up of Roman citizens, Rome increasingly relied on auxiliary forces of non-citizens (service in the auxiliary forces was a common route to citizenship). Retiring soldiers often settled in border areas where they had been stationed. Land was cheap, and the soldiers frequently had unofficial families there. In the Gospels and Acts we meet various soldiers who seem rather settled in their locales (Lk 7:1-10; Acts 10:24).

3. Roman Social Structures and Pietas.

Roman society was shaped so as to have strong vertical links and weak horizontal ones. The main social structures focused on allegiance and dependency between less powerful and more powerful people rather than on solidarity between people of equal power. The characteristic practice was patronage. A wealthier individual acted as patron to a number of poorer clients. Roman writers mainly depict this in terms of clients arriving at the patron's house for the morning ritual of greeting, the salutatio. The resultant packed atrium lent prestige to the patron. The clients might also follow him to the forum, giving him further honor. They also supported him in elections. The patron gave the clients handouts (sportulae) and might invite them to meals.

This classic picture reveals only part of patronage. The most fixed patronal structure was between freed slaves and their former owners, with the freed slave being expected to carry out various forms of regular or occasional unpaid service. In many patronal relationships the overall flow of money was from client to patron, not vice versa. This particularly came about when the patron was also either landlord or a creditor. The tenant or debtor paid rent or loan interest. The patron might sometimes show favor by deferring or reducing payments. In many ways, the Greco-Roman town was a patchwork of local patronal networks. Large houses tended to be scattered across the town, with smaller dwellings surrounding each one. The mass of election graffiti from Pompeii suggests that various areas showed allegiance to particular members of the elite (Oakes). Among the house church members for whom the Gospels were written, the householders who acted as hosts probably often acted as patrons to the group. This sets up an interesting dynamic in the way the socially more radical aspects of the Gospels would have been heard in this group setting (see Balch).

The harshest form of vertical dependency was *slavery. The proportion of slaves varied across the empire, from a low percentage in Judea to maybe about thirty percent of the population in Rome. In the urban contexts in which the Gospels were written slavery was slightly mitigated by the fairly common practice of manumission (granting of freedom), even if such freeing often was timed to coincide with the slave's decline in productivity (and earning capacity) through age or ill health. Less harsh, although no doubt still tough by today's standards, were the relationships of dependency within the *family. The father (paterfamilias) had powers over his *children that were absolute in theory though constrained in practice. In principle, the paterfamilias was the only person who held property. Even grown sons could not do so while their father was alive. *Women were almost always subject to the authority of a man, usually their father. In the first century A.D. this tended even to extend partially to married women. The prevalent sine manu ("without hand") form of marriage left the bride's father with considerable power. He could instigate divorce of the couple. The only women with substantial independence tended to be those whose fathers had died, especially if the woman was a widow who had several children and hence was favored by Roman law.

This leads us to probably the core Roman value, pietas. It is not quite right to translate this as "piety." Although pietas does have a strong link with religion, it is fundamentally a value about respect for parents, ancestors, benefactors, patrons. It is the virtue most prized by a vertically oriented social system. The Romans felt that their pietas was the reason they were given an empire (Cicero, Har. resp. 19). They respected the mos maiorum, the custom of the ancestors. Innovation was resisted or was presented as a return to the past. Novelties such as Christian belief faced an uphill struggle. Gospel writers present a continuity between Christian belief and Jewish Scripture that attributes a kind of ancient pedigree to the Christian movement.

Since the gods were the ultimate benefactors and ancestors, pietas did demand right practice toward them, particularly to the most traditional gods of state and household. Respect was shown them by participating in sacrifices and festivals. Domestically, this mainly meant small sacrifices to the lares and penates (household gods) and to the genius, the procreative and protective spirit of the head of the household. At a civic level it meant sacrifices, processions and other festivals for the traditional Capitoline Triad of Jupiter, Juno and Minerva and to other gods, some of which were of very long standing, while others had been accepted within Roman religion in the previous couple of centuries, such as the cult of magna mater from Asia Minor.

Given the bias against radical religious innovation, the spread of the imperial cult is something of a surprise. However, the specific ways in which it spread actually fit the pattern of pietas. Broadly, it developed in two ways in different parts of the empire. In Rome Julius Caesar was declared, on the basis of the flight of an eagle, to have been deified after death, following the pattern of what had happened to Romulus and linking in with the Julian family's tradition of being descended from Venus. Octavian, as well as using his relationship to the deified one on coins, established a cult in his honor. After the death of Octavian/Augustus, Tiberius repeated the pattern, and as generations of Caesars passed, the cult of the deified dead Caesars grew, being joined by some other family members, such as Augustus's wife, Livia, declared a deity by Claudius. As well as the precedents to which this was appealing, it had much of the character of reverence for ancestors. To this was added another essentially traditional element. Although the current emperor was not worshiped in Rome in most of the NT period, sacrifices could be offered to the emperor's genius, the protective spirit of the father and patron of the entire civilized world.

Meanwhile, in the Greek eastern part of the empire, a long-standing form of religious devotion became focused on the emperor. For centuries, cities had set up altars, temples and festivals on behalf of rulers and other major benefactors. By the first century B.C. this already included cults dedicated to some Roman governors. It was inevitable that such cults would also be set up for the Roman emperors, especially if a city perceived itself as having received particular benefaction from an emperor. These cults developed to cover the imperial family more broadly. They also became the focus of competition between cities wanting to be seen as major cultic centers. Despite the early emperors' reluctance to accept divine titles in Rome, they sanctioned the focusing of cults onto themselves in the Greek East, as they similarly focused onto themselves more and more honors that earlier had been spread around: triumphal processions, acclamation by troops as imperator after military victories, and major patronage. As became explicit under Domitian, throughout the first century there was only one figure on whom the highest honors should be showered, who was a man worthy of divine titles.

4. Jesus and Rome.

Jesus was a craftworker's son, living in *Galilee under a client ruler, Herod Antipas, sponsored by Rome. Jesus taught, *healed and led a movement among Galilean fishing families, peasants, craftworkers and others. He also taught in the Roman province of Judea, especially at the end of his life, which came about by Roman crucifixion. Despite periodically attracting very large crowds, Jesus did not launch any sort of violent resistance to Roman actions or their control of the land. However, there were ways in which his teaching and actions ran contrary to Roman expectations and interests.

Jesus disturbed the social status quo. He ate with outcasts, effectively challenging society's normal processes for inclusion and exclusion. Among these outcasts were tax collectors. Jesus' inclusion of them fitted with his general nonrebellious approach, although the Romans would not have appreciated him calling tax collectors away from their jobs (or, indeed, calling fishermen or others away from economic activity). More broadly, Jesus' teaching appears to have implied a future in which current social hierarchies would no longer apply. He also challenged existing religious authorities. By his claim of a direct authority from God and his willingness to use this to overturn conventional religious wisdom, Jesus undermined both the elite religious authorities, such as the chief *priests, and the more commonly visible authority figures, such as *scribes, whose skills at interpreting law gave them a "retainer" position, as experts close to the elite. As explained above, the Roman Empire functioned mainly by bolstering local elites, who then ran most institutions. In the first century A.D. there was no clear division between religion and politics. The religious elite generally was the social elite, so a challenge in one sphere affected both.

Jesus' teaching about the future was something of which Rome would have disapproved overall. Central to his vision was the advent of the *kingdom of God (Horsley and Silberman, 53). Jesus saw this idea, expressed in Daniel 2:44 and implicit elsewhere in Scripture, as now coming into being in his own ministry, which involved events that would lead ultimately to the full implementation of God's sovereignty on earth. This clearly placed a time limit on Roman sovereignty and flatly contradicted the Roman imperial view of time in which the Pax Romana, the Roman peace, had brought about the stable golden age for the world. Jesus' *parables are full of expectation of the growth and fruition of God's kingdom, both as time goes on and at a final crisis of judgment.

5. The Gospels and Rome.

Many issues in relation to Jesus and Rome are, of course, also true of the Gospels and Rome. For instance, the "render to Caesar" saying (see 6 below) could also be discussed in considering Jesus' own attitude toward Rome. However, there are four sharp changes that we should bear in mind in moving from thinking about Jesus and Rome to thinking about the Gospels and Rome. First, Jesus has now been put to death by Rome. The Gospels are glorifications of a central character who, in Rome's eyes, has been declared a dangerous criminal. Second, most scholars date the Gospels to the period from the start of the First Jewish War against Rome (A.D. 66) to its aftermath (A.D. 70 onwards). For Jews in particular, Rome was then a much more obviously hostile power than during the time of Jesus.

Third, this dating also puts all the Gospels after the great fire of Rome (A.D. 64) and Nero's reprisals against Christians. Some other Christians too were put to death by the Roman authorities from this time on (notably Peter and Paul). Fourth, and most subtly, whereas Jesus spoke almost exclusively to Jews, who lived a largely rural life in a peripheral part of the empire and whose cultural and religious practices were already outside Roman norms, the Gospels were written to inhabitants of the empire's major cities and mostly to Gentiles. Urban Gentiles often came to reports of Jesus' teaching with different cultural assumptions from those of Jesus' Jewish peasant hearers. In particular, usually the Gentiles' family religious practice previously fitted that of their cities. The Gospels effectively called their readers away from the religious practices of family and city, such as the imperial cult, to the worship of the God of Israel and a new universal lord.

Consideration of a number of passages from two of the Gospels will show a range of the issues involved and something of the spectrum of approaches that scholars take.

6. Mark and Rome.

Mark opens his Gospel, "The beginning of the good news [euangelion] of Jesus Christ, son of God." Mark goes from this opening to a link with Isaiah, who also uses terminology of "good news" (Is 40:9), so Mark's use of the term probably is part of his proclamation of Jesus as bringing about a new redemption like that foretold by Isaiah. However, in nonbiblical texts euangelion typically is used in situations such as announcement of political events (see Gospel: Good News). In an inscription from Priene the birth of Augustus is described as marking for the world "the beginning of good news," since he has come as "a savior who put an end to war" (Lewis and Reinhold, 624). As we have seen, Augustus also called himself "son of a god." The possibility that Mark intends the drawing of a comparison is greatly strengthened by the fact that his climactic assertion of Jesus' identity, "Truly, this man was son of God" (or "son of a god," but it is the same wording as in Mk 1:1), is made by, of all people, a Roman centurion (Mk 15:39). C. Evans draws particularly far-reaching conclusions: "The Markan evangelist presents Jesus as the true son of God and in doing so deliberately presents Jesus in opposition to Rome's candidates for a suitable emperor, savior, and Lord" (Evans, lxxxix). M. Pappard argues that the *baptism of Jesus, with the omen of descent of a dove—the proverbial contrast to the warlike Roman eagle—mimics Roman imperial adoption while disavowing militaristic power (Peppard, 451).

W. Carter is among those who see the story of the Gerasene demoniac (Mk 5:1-20) as relating to Rome. "Mark shows Rome's empire to be of the devil. . . . Mark's story of casting the demon Legion out of the man . . . declares God's judgment on Rome's imperial order" (Carter, 17-18). As well as the word "legion," Carter picks up on the violence and unshackled power of the demons and on the use of a pig as the mascot of the Tenth Legion, which destroyed Jerusalem in A.D. 70. C. Myers sees the story as symbolizing Jesus' aim to free Jewish territory from Rome (Myers, 190-94). R. T. France, on the other hand, dismisses this kind of theory on grounds that the way details are picked up is fanciful, that the location of the exorcism is not in occupied Jewish territory, and that this kind of reading has been unknown for two thousand years (France, 229n12). A. Collins takes an intermediate position. She sees the primary context as being cosmic conflict between Jesus and Satan, whose legions occupy the man. However, Collins appeals to the link between heavenly and earthly events in texts such as Daniel to allow the possibility of a secondary political significance for the story (Collins, 270).

In Mark 7 Jesus shows a lack of respect for ancestral tradition. He attacks the *Pharisees for their adherence to tradition. He contrasts tradition with God's will (Mk 7:8, 13). For Roman hearers, this would be scandalous. For Romans, the "custom of the ancestors" was the way to understand the will of the gods. Adherence to it was pietas. Admittedly, Jesus was defending the honoring of parents in the example he used (Mk 7:10), which was equally central to pietas. However, Jesus does not look so good at honoring parents elsewhere in Mark. When Jesus' mother and brothers try to reach him (to take custody of him), he responds by redefining his family as those who do God's will (Mk 3:31-35). Jesus may well have appeared rather suspect from the viewpoint of Roman pietas.

The discussion at Caesarea Philippi, about Jesus' identity and suffering (Mk 8:27-9:1), forms the central hinge of Mark's Gospel. This fits with the general pattern of Mark, with its great emphasis on the week of Christ's death. In Mark 8 the discussion of Christ's suffering moves on into a call for Christians to be willing to suffer, even to following Christ to their own crucifixion. Early church tradition puts the writing of Mark in Rome under Nero. Such a setting would make considerable sense of the prominence of suffering in Mark's Gospel. If Mark is dated a little later, the book is still in the shadow of Nero's persecution, maybe now also with Rome's destruction of the Jerusalem temple in mind. In Mark 13:9 Jesus predicts Christians coming before "courts," "synagogues," "governors" and "kings" (a word that might include emperors). Mark's readers are likely to have read much of his material about suffering in relation to suffering at the hands of Roman authorities.

In Mark 12:17 Jesus says, "The things of Caesar pay back to Caesar, and the things of God to God." This has long been a central text for Christendom's idea of dual loyalty to state and to God. However, it has recently been subject to very different analysis. N. T. Wright argues that Jesus is alluding to the revolutionary sentiment uttered by the dying Mattathias in 1 Maccabees 2:68. Mattathias calls for vengeance against those attacking Israel: "Pay back to the Gentiles in full, and obey the commands of the law" (NRSV). Wright sees Jesus echoing this saying in a context that makes his reply neatly ambiguous. It sounds revolutionary in some way, but without denying payment of taxes. The second half of Jesus' saying, according to Wright, evokes texts such as Psalm 96, which glorify God and condemn idolatry, as seen on the coin that Jesus' opponents turned out to have in their possession. Jesus condemns idolatry and recommends giving the idolatrous coin back to the idolaters. His revolution does not fit into the normal categories (Wright, 502-7). Carter argues that Jesus "cleverly combines loyalty and deference with his own subversive agenda": showing that the religious authorities flouted the biblical prohibition against images; effectively recognizing that the earth belongs to God, not Rome; interpreting payment of taxes as a way of removing illicit images from Judea; even irreverently asking about an image of the emperor, the most powerful person in the world, "Who is this guy?!" (Carter, 29). Various other scholars support the interpretive status quo. France suggests that Jesus undermines the zealot theology that sees loyalty to Caesar and God in opposition to each other. France argues that for Jesus, the normal situation (although there may be exceptions) is that loyalty to both can be maintained at the same time (France, 466).

7. Luke and Rome.

The relationship between Luke-Acts and the Roman Empire has been a topic of debate for many years. Reasons for this are clear. Luke begins with an address to an apparently eminent person, "most excellent Theophilus" (Lk 1:3). He carefully sets his main narrative in the chronological context of Roman rule:

"In the fifteenth year of the rule of Tiberius Caesar" (Lk 3:1). Acts features many encounters between Christians and Roman officials. It ends in Rome, with Paul under arrest by the Roman authorities.

Various views have been proposed. H. Conzelmann argues that Luke presents Rome with a defense of political harmlessness of the Christian movement. Roman officials consistently find Jesus and other Christian leaders innocent (Conzelmann, 137-49). P. Walaskay turns this around, arguing that the books are written not for officials but rather for Christians, to allay Christian suspicion of the empire, portraying officials in generally positive terms. P. Esler subtly turns this again, seeing the books as legitimating to Christians their faith and practice, as things rooted in (Jewish) antiquity and not politically subversive. In contrast, R. Cassidy sees many negative points about the empire in Luke-Acts, and also a fair amount that could be seen as socially or politically controversial. (For a survey of the matter, see Walton.) Without getting into this debate as such, here I can highlight a few features of Luke's Gospel that relate in interesting ways to Rome.

One is the announcement of what appears a radical social program with implications for the authorities. In the *birth narratives of *John the Baptist and Jesus prophecy is prominent. *Mary announces that God "has brought down the powerful from their thrones and has exalted the lowly" (Lk 1:52). Zechariah prophesies that in the arrival of the Messiah God has "brought redemption for his people ... salvation from our enemies" (Lk 1:68, 71). Later, in the temple, the prophetess Anna speaks about Jesus "to all those awaiting the redemption of Jerusalem" (Lk 2:38). Jesus' ministry is launched by his announcement that he fulfills the Scripture promising a Spirit-endowed figure to "announce good news to the poor ... to proclaim release to the imprisoned ... to set the oppressed free" (Lk 4:18). In fact, the events that Luke's Gospel actually then describes as happening in and through Jesus' ministry do not straightforwardly map onto the expectations that these announcements create, most notably in terms of Jerusalem being freed. However, Luke does set up Jesus' ministry as fulfilling an agenda that will lead to the social landscape of the Roman Empire being radically transformed.

Returning to the birth narrative, we see that Luke sets the actual birth in a markedly imperial context: a tax census ordered by a named emperor, Augustus, and implemented under a named provincial governor, Quirinius (Lk 2:1-2). An angel "announce[s] good news" to the shepherds that the baby is "savior" and "lord" (Lk 2:10-11). Then a crowd of the army of heaven proclaims that this baby will bring peace to the earth (Lk 2:13-14), this being the greatest thing that Augustus and the other emperors saw themselves as maintaining. J. Fitzmyer is one of many scholars who draw comparisons between the announcement to the shepherds and texts such as the Priene inscription, noted above (Fitzmyer, 393-97). S. Kim, although he denies that Luke aims to write about political change, does argue that "Luke deliberately contrasts the Messianic king/lord to Caesar Augustus" (Kim, 80).

A third point of contact between Luke's Gospel and the Roman Empire is material that appears to relate to the Roman siege of *Jerusalem in A.D. 70. Jesus predicts this not only in the passage parallel to the prophecy of Mark 13, on the fall of the temple, but also during his *triumphal entry into Jerusalem. In Luke's account of this the crowd's acclamation already differs in interesting ways from that in Mark. Instead of talking about the kingdom, Luke's crowd describes a king (Lk 19:38). They then proclaim peace, as did the angelic speakers in the announcement to the shepherds. At Jesus' birth the armies of heaven announced peace on earth and glory in the highest (Lk 2:14); now, the crowd on earth announces peace in heaven and, again, glory in the highest (Lk 19:38). In Roman thought peace in the heavens and peace on earth go together. Tumult on earth stems from a breaking of the pax deorum, the peace of the gods. For Luke, the triumphal entry relates to the advent of the ultimate peace brought by the Messiah. After the acclamation Luke brings in two further elements. One is a rebuke by Jesus against the Pharisees trying to silence the acclamation. Jesus responds that the very fabric of the cosmos, the stones, will call out the acclamation if no human does. The second is that, astonishingly, in the midst of all this celebration Jesus starts weeping. He weeps that Jerusalem will not share in the peace that is coming because the people have not understood the way to peace (Lk 19:41-42). Instead, the city's enemies will encircle it, lay siege to it and tear it down (19:43-44). E. Franklin argues that this "suggests knowledge of the Roman destruction of Jerusalem in 70 CE. Jewish rejection of Jesus and his way of peace leads them into confrontation with Rome with its inevitable disastrous results" (Franklin, 952).

This impression is reinforced in Luke 21:20 (Nolland, 930-33, 1000), Jesus' prediction of the fall of the Jerusalem temple. At this point in his recounting of Jesus' prophecy Mark evokes the apocalyptic language of Daniel: "When you see the abomination of desolation standing where it ought not to be ..." (Mk 13:14 [cf. Dan 9:27; 11:31; 12:11]). In place of this Luke reads, "When you see Jerusalem surrounded by armies, then know that its desolation has arrived" (Lk 21:20). The specific language here and in Luke 19:41-44 has a strong OT background in a range of prophetic visions of God's judgment on various cities (e.g., cf. Lk 19:44 with Is 3:26; Nah 3:10). J. Nolland argues that the Lukan texts are making a theological case that "All of God's acts of judgment and threats of judgment, as recorded in Scripture, come to their culmination in the prospect of judgment held forth here" (Nolland, 1003).

The expectations of the messianic liberation of Israel from Rome, set up in Luke's birth narratives, appear to be turned on their head. Luke's two-volume story takes the idea of the Messiah's relationship with Israel, Rome and the world in very unexpected directions.

8. Conclusions.

There are significant issues relating to Rome in understanding both the life of Jesus and the particular emphases that the Gospel writers bring out in their accounts of Jesus. The evidence is complex. Neither Jesus nor any of the four evangelists fit neatly into a well-known political pigeonhole. The points that relate to the Roman Empire are also often part of a larger argument that the writer is making—for instance, about the nature of Christ. However, the issues of relationship to Rome and Roman ideas are a vital part of the picture. This is true not only in the passages examined above, which generally have some obvious link to Rome, but also in the rest of the four Gospels, written in cities of the Roman Empire, about a person whose life was lived within that empire.

See also GODS, GREEK AND ROMAN; HELLENISM; HERODIAN DYNASTY; PONTIUS PILATE; REVOLUTIONARY MOVEMENTS.

BIBLIOGRAPHY. D. Balch, "Luke," in Eerdmans Commentary on the Bible, ed. J. D. G. Dunn and J. W. Rogerson (Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 2003) 1104-60; W. Carter, The Roman Empire and the New Testament: An Essential Guide (Nashville: Abingdon, 2006); R. J. Cassidy, Jesus, Politics and Society: A Study of Luke's Gospel (Maryknoll, NY: Orbis, 1978); A. Y. Collins, Mark: A Commentary (Herm: Minneapolis: Fortress, 2007); H. Conzelmann, Acts of the Apostles: A Commentary on the Acts of the Apostles, trans. J. Limburg, A. T. Kraabel and D. H. Juel, ed. E. J. Epp and C. R. Matthews (Herm: Philadelphia: Fortress, 1987); P. F. Esler, Community and Gospel in Luke-Acts: The Social and Political Motivations of Lucan Theology (SNTSMS 57; Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 1987); C. Evans, Mark 8:27-16:20 (WBC 34B; Nashville: Nelson, 2001); J. A. Fitzmyer, The Gospel According to Luke I-IX: Introduction, Translation, and Notes (AB 28; NY: Doubleday, 1981); R. T. France, The Gospel of Mark: A Commentary on the Greek Text (NIGTC; Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 2002); E. Franklin, "Luke," in The Oxford Bible Commentary, ed. J. Barton and J. Muddiman (Oxford: Oxford University Press, 2001) 922-59; R. A. Horsley and N. A. Silberman, The Message and the Kingdom: How Jesus and Paul Ignited a Revolution and Transformed the Ancient World (Minneapolis: Fortress, 1997); S. Kim, Christ and Caesar: The Gospel and the Roman Empire in the Writings of Paul and Luke (Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 2008); N. Lewis and M. Reinhold, eds., Roman Civilization: Selected Readings, 1: The Republic and the Augustan Age (3rd ed.; New York: Columbia University Press, 1990); C. Myers, Binding the Strong Man: A Political Reading of Mark's Story of Jesus (Maryknoll, NY: Orbis, 1988); J. Nolland, Luke 18:35-24:53 (WBC 35C; Dallas: Word, 1989); P. Oakes, "Urban Structure, Patronage and the Corinthian Followers of Christ," in Understanding the Social World of the New Testament, ed. D. Neufeld and R. E. DeMaris, (London: Routledge, 2009) 178-93; M. Peppard, "The Eagle and the Dove: Roman Imperial Sonship and the Baptism of Jesus (Mark 1.9-11)," NTS 56 (2010) 431-51; P. Walaskay, "And So We Came to Rome": The Political Perspective of St. Luke (SNTSMS 49; Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 1983); S. Walton, "The State They Were In: Luke's View of the Roman Empire," in Rome in the Bible and the Early Church, ed. P. Oakes (Carlisle: Paternoster, 2002) 1-41; N. T. Wright, Jesus and the Victory of God (London: SPCK, 1996).

P. Oakes

S

SABBATH

The English word sabbath is an adapted transliteration of the Greek sabbaton, as this is in turn of the Hebrew šabbāt. The Hebrew term has the same root as the verb “stop, cease”; a similarity to the Hebrew word for “seventh” allows for a word play suggesting the seven-day cycle of Sabbath observance. The keeping of Sabbath was an important marker of Jewish identity and a matter over which Jesus came into conflict with the *Pharisees of his day.

1. Sabbath in the Old Testament
2. Sabbath in Jesus’ Day
3. Sabbath in the Gospels

1. Sabbath in the Old Testament.

The seven-day cycle with rest at the end of a working week is given its most profound theological basis in Genesis 2:3: “God blessed the seventh day and hallowed it, because on it God rested.” The importance of the OT Sabbath command is evident from its inclusion in the Ten Commandments (Ex 20:8-11; Deut 5:12-15), where, alongside the prohibition against idols, it holds the honor of being the most expanded of the commandments. In the Exodus form of the commandment the requirement is grounded in God’s creation pattern; in Deuteronomy the requirement is grounded in God’s rescue of his people from the slave labor of Egypt. Keeping the Sabbath was a marker of the covenant between God and his people (Ex 31:16-17; Ezek 20:12, 20).

Sabbath rest was a solemn obligation, so serious that its violation was considered a capital offense (Ex 31:14-15; 35:2; cf. Num 15:32-36). But the OT makes very little investment in defining what constituted “not do[ing] any work” (Ex 20:9). In the Pentateuch we learn only that fires were not to be lit (Ex 35:3) and sticks for a fire not to be gathered (Num 15:32-36), and that manna was not to be gathered (Ex 16:22-26). From elsewhere we can add only that burdens were not to be carried (Jer 17:21-22)—this probably directed at arrangements for commercial activity (cf. Neh 13:15)—and, at a higher level of generality, that pursuing one’s own affairs was not proper on the Sabbath (Is 58:13), nor was the resentful or reluctant keeping of the Sabbath (Amos 8:5).

On the positive side there is also very little specific definition. Not working involves resting (Deut 5:14). Leviticus 23:3 speaks of a “holy convocation” on the Sabbath. No further clarification is offered, but since the festivals involved holy convocations, the Sabbath probably was to be seen as a minor or even informal festival. Special offerings were required on the Sabbath (Lev 24:5-9; Num 28:9-10; cf. Ezek 46:4). Clearly, not working on the Sabbath marked and celebrated the relationship with God, but how this worked out in practice was left fairly open.

2. Sabbath in Jesus’ Day.

Both in the Jews’ own eyes and in the eyes of others Sabbath keeping was an important marker of Jewish identity (see Josephus, Ag. Ap. 2.20-21, 282; Philo, Mos. 2.21), and by the time of Jesus the mode of Sabbath keeping was much more specified, though different groups had their own understandings of what could and could not be done on the Sabbath. The length of a permitted Sabbath day journey had been agreed (Acts 1:12; CD-A X, 21). Sabbath prohibitions could be set aside when human life was in danger (1 Macc 2:29-41); except in extremis, Jewish soldiers would not carry arms on the Sabbath (Josephus, Ant. 14.226-227). Transport of goods was totally forbidden; food for the Sabbath was to be prepared the preceding day; water was not to be fetched; sexual engagement with one’s wife was proscribed (Jub. 2:29-30; 50:6-13). One might suspect that some of the more exacting additional restrictions of CD-A X, 14—XI, 18 were a distinctive of sectarian groups such as the Qumran community, as is probably sexual engagement with one’s wife from the Jubilees list.

By Jesus' time it had become customary to meet in *synagogues on the Sabbath for corporate prayer, reading of Scripture and instruction.

3. Sabbath in the Gospels.

In general, Jesus abided by the Sabbath stipulations of the Bible and of his surrounding culture. He attended the synagogue services and was allowed to teach there (Mk 1:21; 3:1; 6:2 par.; Lk 13:10). He was concerned about the likely impact on the *disciples if they needed to flee on a Sabbath (Mt 24:20). For the *women disciples, it was natural to forgo going to the tomb to attend to the body of Jesus until after the Sabbath (Mt 28:1; Mk 16:1; Lk 23:56—24:1). In relation to the Sabbath, Jesus came into conflict with Jewish leaders only over *healing (Mk 3:1-6 par.; Lk 13:10-17; 14:1-6; Jn 5:2-18; 7:19-24; 9:1-41) and over the freedom felt by his disciples to eat grain from a field (Mk 2:23-28 par.).

From one angle, these conflicts would seem to be unnecessary: no emergency was involved with any of the healings; and though the disciples probably were genuinely hungry, we are not to think that any serious threat to their well-being was involved. Although these are not exactly “staged” conflicts, they do seem to be conflicts that Jesus deliberately chose not to avoid, in order to have the opportunity to throw down a challenge. Therefore the Gospel accounts of Jesus' explanations are deserving of special attention.

3.1. Mark. Not all of Jesus' Sabbath healings are reported as stirring up controversy. The exorcism in Mark 1:21-28 garners a positive response, recognizing the striking authority exercised by Jesus over the demonic. In this case there is a presenting crisis as the *demons confront Jesus; deferral to the next day hardly seems appropriate. The healing of Peter's mother-in-law in Mark 1:29-31 is in a private setting with none but immediate followers of Jesus to scrutinize. In Mark 1:32-34 all the people who brought the sick and demon-possessed for healing waited until the end of Sabbath to do so.

A critical stance toward Jesus' Sabbath activity first emerges in Mark 2:23-28 in connection with the disciples plucking heads of grain on the Sabbath. Certain Pharisees insist that this action is unlawful. Jesus responds on three fronts or perhaps two, with the third addressed by Mark to his readers.

Harvesting on the Sabbath is specifically prohibited in Exodus 34:21. It is likely that postharvest gleanings by the poor would be covered by this prohibition. But should the prohibition extend to making use on the Sabbath of the limited access to the produce of the fields, prior to harvest, provided for in Deuteronomy 23:24-25? Poor people became hungry on the Sabbath. Although everything that could be done on the sixth day had to be done, immediate food preparation did not constitute a violation of the Sabbath (Jub. 50:8-10; m. Šabb. 7.2). Jesus' Pharisaic accusers considered that his disciples were harvesting.

In his initial response Jesus compares his provision of food for the disciples with David's provision of food for (himself and) his companions in 1 Samuel 21:1-6 (Mk 2:25-26). The food was loaves for priestly consumption only. The point is probably not that, in principle, hunger overrides the Sabbath—in extremis it may, but while it may have been David's, this is not the disciples' situation—or that Jesus, like David, was “above” the law. Perhaps Jesus saw David as operating by a hierarchy of values that allowed for the overriding of the normal requirements of the law; thus, on analogy, Jesus considered the same true in his situation. Another possibility is that Jesus is claiming to be a Davidic figure. But if so, in what way? Is it a crisis in relation to the founding of the Davidic dynasty versus the eschatological crisis of the coming of the messianic *kingdom of God? Or is Jesus claiming to be, like David, “a man after God's heart who will do all [God's] will” (Acts 13:22) who is also in a position to offer authoritative interpretation of the law? The matter is not entirely clear, but the last suggestion seems to have most in its favor. Messianic overtones may not be absent.

For the Markan Jesus, the strict rules about who may eat the presentation loaves was never intended to preclude David's action, just as the Sabbath restrictions were never intended to preclude the disciples' action. Jesus picks up on the Pharisees' use of “is not lawful” of his disciples' action to take up a case where the language “is not lawful” fits OT stipulations, but in which nevertheless nothing wrong was done by David. But Jesus does not accept the Pharisees' charges against disciples' behavior. As far as Jesus was concerned, the disciples violated no law, only an overly strict and inhumane application of the law. (The perspective of the poor and needy is strikingly invisible in the discussion of the Sabbath in m. Šabb.)

In his second response (Mk 2:27) Jesus appeals to the creation sequence of Genesis 1:1—2:3 to insist that the Sabbath was instituted for the benefit of humanity, not the reverse (cf. Mekilta on Ex 31:12, 14). The Sabbath is God's blessing, not a cramping and life-denying constraint and not a rigid and arbitrary set of rules to be obeyed.

Jesus' third response (Mk 2:28) may be quoted matter and therefore to be understood as Jesus' words, or it may be editorial comment indicating something that Mark considers can be inferred from the episode. The Greek allows for both possibilities. As Jesus' response, however, it is hard to make sense of the opening "so, with the result that" (Gk. hōste). As an aside to the reader it makes good sense. As we have seen, Jesus is claiming authority to interpret the law, in this case the law of the Sabbath. He is the one able to declare what is permitted and what is prohibited. As the *Son of Man, he is Lord of the Sabbath.

Mark 3:1-6 also raises the issue of what is lawful on the Sabbath (Mk 3:4). In the Pharisaic view, Jesus' healing activity was work and therefore unlawful on the Sabbath (cf. m. Šabb. 14:3-4, where eating or drinking what is considered to have healing properties is prohibited; and m. Šabb. 22:6, where setting a broken limb or relieving a dislocated hand or foot by pouring cold water over it is prohibited). That he healed by word alone might have been considered to make a difference, but clearly it did not in the eyes of his critics in Mark 3:1-6. Jesus' activity and its defense created enemies out to destroy him. Jesus defends himself with a question posed in terms of two antitheses. The second, "to save life or to kill" echoes well-established Jewish thinking (see 1 Macc. 2:39-41; m. Yoma 8:6-7; m. Šabb. 16:1-7; Mekilta on Ex 31:13; and, with strict limitations, CD-A XI, 16-17), but that Jesus wanted to extend this beyond the in extremis situation is made clear by the other juxtaposed antithesis: they interpret each other. Jesus' approach to Sabbath keeping is based on the conviction that love of God and of neighbor are inextricably linked. What dishonors my neighbor cannot honor God, and what leaves my neighbor in suffering can only be evil.

Although Jesus' words and actions lead immediately to a plot to destroy him (Mk 3:6), it is unlikely that a legal charge against Jesus of breaking the Sabbath was the intended mechanism. Since Sabbath keeping was a primary mark of Jewish identity in the eyes of both Jews (e.g., Ex 20:8-11; Neh 13:15-22; CD-A X, 14—XI, 18; Josephus, Ant. 14.237; m. Šabbat) and Gentiles (Seneca, Persius, Martial and Juvenal comment, negatively), an accusation of infidelity to the Sabbath, if credible, would discredit Jesus. Jesus' difference with the Pharisees here over what was permitted on the Sabbath belongs with other internecine Jewish disputes over what was permissible on Sabbath and other festival days. Only blatant disregard of the Sabbath would have attracted the attention of the Jewish courts, and even then not in terms of the death penalty envisaged by the OT law (Ex 31:12-17; Num 15:32-36). In CD-A XII, 3-6 it is clear that even very strict Essenes excluded the death penalty, and while m. Sanh. 7:8 keeps it in theory, the requirement of warning by two witnesses in advance of the infringement means that in practice lesser penalties would have been imposed.

The Markan Jesus is concerned with Sabbath practice, not with whether to keep the Sabbath.

3.2. Matthew. The relevant materials in Matthew are versions of those that we have looked closely at in Mark. Only the main differences will be attended to here. In Matthew 12:1-8 Matthew drops Jesus' second response of Mark 2:27, substituting another two responses. The first (Mt 12:5) draws attention to the way that *temple requirements override Sabbath rules: priests "profane" the Sabbath and are guiltless. Matthew goes on to insist that something greater than the temple is present. We should understand that what is asserted is that Jesus is of such importance that he can arbitrate in relation to what are not true violations of the normal nonwork requirements of the Sabbath. Matthew's second added response (Mt 12:7) explains why Jesus finds his disciples faultless. He takes seriously the prophetic perspective of Hosea 6:6: "I desire mercy and not sacrifice." The Sabbath intention is that of a God who embodies mercy and grace and therefore expects it of his people.

In Matthew 12:9-14 the mode of argumentation is quite different from that of Mark 3:1-6. In place of the double antithetical question comes a comparison with the care of sheep. A sheep that falls into a ditch on the Sabbath is rescued; people matter more than sheep. CD-A XI, 13-14 has a more severe view than that appealed to by Jesus (but cf. Prov 12:10; m. Šabb. 18:3). But Jesus' argument is intended to operate at the visceral level of imagination and experience.

3.3. Luke. At the level of our interest here the Lukan versions (Lk 6:1-5, 6-11) of the two Markan controversy accounts follow Mark closely and do not merit separate attention. (Like Matthew, Luke drops Mk 2:27.) But Luke also has Luke 13:10-17; 14:1-6. The argument in Luke 13:10-17 is of a similar kind to that in Matthew 12:9-14, but now with an ox or an ass led out to water on the Sabbath (cf. m. 'Erub. 2:1-4; CD-A XI, 5-6). The ox and the ass may be an echo of the Deuteronomic Sabbath command (Deut 5:14), and if so, probably indirectly supports such practice with animals as in line with God's intention that they too should benefit from the Sabbath. As in Matthew, the animal's distress rather than a threat to life is in view.

Although the setting and important details are quite different, the argument in Luke 14:1-6 is again broadly equivalent to that in Matthew 12:9-14. A

Sabbath meal in the home of a leading Pharisee is yet more provocative than the synagogue as a setting for healing (Lk 14:1). And this time Jesus initiates the confrontation by putting the question of the lawfulness of Sabbath healing (Lk 14:3). Now, rather than a sheep, we have an ass or an ox (or possibly a son or an ox—the text is slightly uncertain) (Lk 14:5). Either could, as above, echo Deuteronomy 5:14 (the latter as the first member of the first and last set of pairs). “Son” may have been introduced in the face of a more extreme Jewish view, less well disposed to the animals, like that found in CD-A XI, 13-14. Here, the place where he/it has fallen is a well, with its extra threat of drowning, rather than a ditch (Lk 14:5). The inability of the scribes and Pharisees to answer (Lk 14:6) points to the rhetorical effectiveness of Jesus’ words.

As with the other Synoptic Gospels, the concern is not to question the Sabbath but rather to defend a place on the Sabbath for the kinds of activity that Jesus was engaging in.

3.4. John. Jesus heals on the Sabbath on two occasions in John (Jn 5:2-18 [with 7:19-24]; 9:1-41), both quite distinctive. In John 5 Jesus creates a double Sabbath offense, with both the “work” of healing (Jn 5:15-16) and his getting the healed man to take up and carry away his mat (Jn 5:8-10). On healing as work, see discussion of Mark 3:1-6 in 3.1 above. Carrying on the Sabbath, especially outside the home, was generally considered work (m. Šabb. 5—6). Jesus’ defense of his behavior creates yet more offense, with its claim to an intimacy of relationship with God, which is seen as Jesus “making himself equal with God” (Jn 5:18).

Jesus doubly defends his behavior. First, in “working” on the Sabbath, he claims to be doing what God is doing (Jn 5:17). There is a paradoxical relationship between this claim and the perspective of Genesis 1. The apparent contradiction invites exploration as to what kind of work God might be continuing to do. The answer should be sought in connection with the renewal of creation, with redemption. At the mundane level Sabbath rest is about the renewal of the body, but at a higher level it is about the renewal of the relationship with God. For this reason, there could be no better day than the Sabbath for Jesus to be at work in restoring people to wholeness.

The second line of defense builds on this perspective but offers an argument more like those found in the Synoptics. The law not just allows, but even requires, the work of circumcision on the Sabbath to bring newborn infants into the covenant by removing the impediment that would otherwise exclude them (Jn 7:22-23). Circumcision deals with a problem with a part of the male anatomy; Jesus’ healing deals with the needs of the whole human body (Jn 7:23). The apparent acceptance in John 5:18 of the view that Jesus has broken the Sabbath is neutralized by “do not judge by appearances” in John 7:24 and revealed as only how things looked to Jesus’ opponents.

With the healing of the man born *blind in John 9, it is not Jesus, but the blind man, who defends Jesus. As far as the blind man is concerned, the goodness and the power involved in the healing make it clear that Jesus comes from God and does God’s will. There is nothing here about why the healing is an appropriate Sabbath activity. But the material in John 5 and John 7 will cover John 9 as well.

See also HEALING; JUBILEE; LAW; SYNAGOGUE; TEMPLE.

BIBLIOGRAPHY. M. Asiedu-Peprah, Johannine Sabbath Conflicts as Juridical Controversy (WUNT 2/132; Tübingen: Mohr Siebeck, 2001); D. A. Carson, “Jesus and the Sabbath in the Four Gospels,” in From Sabbath to Lord’s Day: A Biblical, Historical, and Theological Investigation, ed. D. A. Carson (Grand Rapids: Zondervan, 1982) 57-97; L. Doering, “Much Ado About Nothing? Jesus’ Sabbath Healings and Their Halakhic Implications Revisited,” in Judaistik und Neutestamentliche Wissenschaft: Standorte-Grenzen-Beziehungen, ed. L. Doering, H.-G. Waubke and F. Wilk (FRLANT 226; Göttingen: Vandenhoeck & Ruprecht, 2008) 217-41; D. A. Hagner, “Jesus and the Synoptic Sabbath Controversies,” BBR 19 (2009) 215-48; R. Krieger, “Le chabbat de Jésus,” RSR 93 (2005) 9-25; A. J. Mayer-Haas, Geschenk aus Gottes Schatzkammer (bSchab 10b): Jesus und der Sabbat im Spiegel der neutestamentlichen Schriften (NTAbh 43; Münster: Aschendorff, 2003); P. W. van der Horst, “Was the Synagogue a Place of Sabbath Worship Before 70 CE?” in Japheth in the Tents of Shem: Studies on Jewish Hellenism in Antiquity (CBET 32; Leuven: Peeters, 2002) 18-43; H. Weiss, “The Sabbath in the Synoptic Gospels,” JSNT 38 (1990) 13-27; idem, “The Sabbath in the Fourth Gospel,” IBL 110 (1991) 311-21; Y.-E. Yang, Jesus and the Sabbath in Matthew’s Gospel (JSNTSup 139; Sheffield: Sheffield Academic Press, 1997).

J. Nolland

SADDUCEES

The Sadducees were a Jewish religious and political group in first-century A.D. Israel, attested by the Jewish historian *Josephus, the NT Gospels and Acts, and later *rabbinic literature. In the NT they often appear beside the *Pharisees, who are viewed as both theological rivals and fellow opponents of Jesus. Their most prominent characteristic in the Gospels and Acts is their denial of the *resurrection, a belief that places them in opposition to both the Pharisees and the followers of Jesus.

The Sadducees have often been referred to as a “sect” of *Judaism, but this is not quite right. A sect is traditionally defined as a minority group in opposition to the religious status quo, viewing itself as the authentic people of God. By contrast, the Sadducees appear to have been important powerbrokers at the center of Judean politics, part of the religious elite who affirmed the status quo. It is best to refer to them as a religio-political “party” within first-century A.D. Judaism (where religion and politics were inseparable).

1. Origin
2. Sources
3. Summary

1. Origin.

The origin of the Sadducees is unclear, and none of our sources provide reliable information. The traditional view is that they arose from the priestly aristocracy that sided with the Hasmonean dynasty. Others consider them to have been opponents of the Hasmonean high *priests, supporting a rival priestly line. Their name may have been derived from the priestly line of Zadok, a high priest during the time of David.

2. Sources.

All the information that we have about the Sadducees comes from their opponents or from (later) antagonistic sources. No Sadducean primary source documents are extant.

2.1. Josephus. Josephus identifies the Sadducees as one of three main “philosophies” of Judaism, together with the Pharisees and the Essenes. Almost everything that he says contrasts the beliefs and practices of the Sadducees with those of the Pharisees, whose manner of life he chose as his own (Life 10-12). According to Josephus, while the Pharisees believed in fate and God’s active agency in the world, the Sadducees denied divine providence in favor of human free will, so that God was not responsible for human evil. While the Pharisees believed in the immortality of the soul, the Sadducees denied it, as well as punishment and reward in the afterlife (J.W. 2.162-164; Ant. 13.171-172). The Sadducees also rejected the oral “traditions of the fathers” passed down by Pharisees because they were not part of the written *law of Moses (Ant. 13.297-298; 18.16). Josephus adds, however, that when, reluctantly, the Sadducees became magistrates and made judicial decisions, they tended to follow Pharisaic teaching “because the multitude would not otherwise bear them” (Ant. 18.17).

This is in line with Josephus’s claim that the Pharisees were popular with the masses but the Sadducees were disliked, enjoying only the “confidence of the wealthy” (Ant. 13.298). Josephus even says that the Pharisees were affectionate to one another and cultivated harmonious relationship in their community (a comment no doubt biased by Josephus’s affinity with the Pharisees), while the Sadducees were as rude to each another as they were to outsiders and were “boorish” in their behavior (J.W. 2.166). The picture seems to be of an aloof aristocratic clique generally out of touch with the common people. How much of Josephus’s characterization is polemical rhetoric, perhaps prompted by personal animosity toward individual Sadducees, and how much is characteristic of the group as a whole is difficult to say.

2.2. The Gospels and Acts. The Sadducees are mentioned in the NT only in the Synoptics and Acts. They appear once in Mark’s Gospel, approaching Jesus in Jerusalem with a conundrum that attempts to refute the doctrine of the resurrection. Jesus responds by affirming the resurrection and accusing them of knowing neither the Scriptures nor the power of God (Mk 12:18-27 // Mt 22:23-33; Lk 20:27-38).

Only Matthew places the Pharisees and the Sadducees side by side in opposition to Jesus. *John the Baptist calls both groups a “brood of vipers” and warns them of coming *judgment (Mt 3:7-10). Jesus repeatedly warns his disciples against the “yeast of the Pharisees and Sadducees” (Mt 16:6, 11, 12), probably a reference to the permeating influence of their pride and hypocrisy.

In addition to his parallel to Mark 12:18-27, Luke refers to the Sadducees in three passages in Acts (Acts 4:1; 5:17; 23:6-7), where they are associated with the priestly leadership in Jerusalem, the high priest and the *Sanhedrin. They opposed the apostles because they were “proclaiming in Jesus the resurrection of the dead” (Acts 4:2). The apostles’ message that the death and resurrection of Jesus had launched the longed-for restoration of Israel was threatening to the Sadducees, whose authority in Israel was dependent on the Roman authorities and the political status quo. In Acts 5:17 the high priest “and all his associates” are said to be “members of the party of the Sadducees.” This is our best evidence that the Sadducees were part of the priestly aristocracy in Jerusalem. Whereas Jesus’ primary opponents in *Galilee were the scribes and Pharisees, in Jerusalem the early church faced greatest opposition from the Sadducees and the rest of the priestly leadership.

In Acts 23:6-7 the issue is again the resurrection. Paul, on trial in Jerusalem, splits the Sanhedrin, which is said to comprise Pharisees and Sadducees, by affirming his belief in the resurrection. Luke here adds an additional bit of information: the Sadducees not only rejected the resurrection, but also said that “there are neither angels nor spirits.” Since it is unlikely that they denied completely the existence of *angels, who appear throughout the OT, this could mean that (1) they rejected the hierarchies characteristic of apocalyptic Judaism (Finkelstein); (2) they rejected that angels were mediators of divine revelation (Bamberger); or (3) the statement concerns only the resurrection and means that they denied the interim state of the soul, whether as an “angel” or a “spirit” (Daube).

2.3. Rabbinic Literature. Rabbinic literature refers occasionally to the Sadducees, usually in opposition to the Pharisees. The Mishnah (ca. A.D. 200) mentions a few cases where the Pharisees and Sadducees differed over questions of law, especially purity issues. Later rabbinic material becomes even more polemical, and the Sadducees are sometimes associated with heretics. In general, the rabbinic literature is either too late to be reliable or gives us little new information.

3. Summary.

A minimalist approach to the Sadducees claims that the sources are so sketchy and polemical that we can know almost nothing about their origins, beliefs or practices. This is overly pessimistic. By comparing the various sources, we can draw a broad-stroke portrait of the Sadducees as a religio-political party that arose sometime during the Hasmonean period among the upper class of the priestly aristocracy of Judea. They had significant power and influence within the priesthood and in the Sanhedrin. At least two high priests (Acts 5:17; Josephus, Ant. 20.199), and probably others, were Sadducees. They competed for power with the Pharisees, their chief rivals, but were less popular among the common people (not unlike wealthy elites everywhere). Like the Jewish aristocracy in general, they were conservative politically and thus pro-Roman, supporting the status quo in order to maintain their own position and authority. Like most upper-class Jews of their day, they probably were more Hellenized than the average Jew, though this point is not stressed in the sources.

Concerning their beliefs, the Sadducees believed in free will and denied the resurrection and the final judgment. They rejected the oral traditions of the Pharisees because they were not part of the written law of Moses. It is uncertain, however, whether the “law of Moses” here refers to the Pentateuch or to the whole of the Hebrew Scriptures (the Prophets and the Writings). If the former, and the Sadducees accepted only the Pentateuch as fully authoritative, this might explain some of their unique doctrines, including their denial of the immortality of the soul and the resurrection of the dead, which are taught explicitly only in the later portions of the Hebrew Scriptures (see Dan 12:2-3).

Like their origin, the decline and disappearance of the Sadducees is obscure, but we can surmise that with the destruction of the *temple and the collapse of the Jewish state, the priestly leadership and their supporters lost influence. The center of Judaism shifted from the temple cultus to the study of the law, and the traditions of the Pharisees rather than the Sadducees played the leading role in the development of rabbinic Judaism from the second century A.D. onward.

See also LAW; PHARISEES; PRIESTS AND PRIESTHOOD; RESURRECTION; SANHEDRIN.

BIBLIOGRAPHY. B. J. Bamberger, “The Sadducees and the Belief in Angels,” JBL 82 (1964) 433-35; D. Daube, “On Acts 23: Sadducees and Angels,” JBL 109 (1990) 492-97; E. Ferguson, Backgrounds of Early Christianity (3rd ed.; Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 2003) 519-20; L. Finkelstein, The Pharisees: The Sociological Background of Their Faith (2 vols.; Philadelphia: Jewish Publication Society of America, 1962); J. Le Moyne, Les sadducéens (Paris: Librairie Lecoffre, 1972); G. G. Porton, “Sadducees,” ABD 5:892-95; A. J. Saldarini, Pharisees, Scribes and Sadducees in Palestinian Society: A Sociological Approach (Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 2001); E. P. Sanders, Judaism: Practice and Belief, 63 BCE-66 CE (London: SCM Press; Philadelphia: Trinity Press International, 1992); G. Stemmerger, Jewish Contemporaries of Jesus: Pharisees, Sadducees, Essenes (Minneapolis: Fortress, 1995); J. Wellhausen, The Pharisees and the Sadducees: An Examination of Internal Jewish History, trans. M. E. Biddle (MLBS 4; Macon, GA: Mercer University Press, 2001). M. L. Strauss

SALOME. See HERODIAN DYNASTY.

SALVATION

A description of salvation as an aspect of the theology of a particular Gospel depends on an analysis of the narrative world implied by that Gospel. And this implies determining the functional value and significance of the relevant soteriological terminology (e.g., the semantic field of the word sōzō) and especially of metaphors used to designate salvation (e.g., lytron, zoē, gennaō) within the narrative world of a particular Gospel.

At the same time, the narrative worlds of the Gospels exhibit some common features. Common to all Gospels is that the story of Jesus is narrated retrospectively and thus situated in a somewhat distant past. Jesus' story is thus narrated as a "history" of Jesus, culminating in his *passion, *death and *resurrection. The ongoing life of Jesus is (except for the appearance stories in Mt 28; Lk 24; Jn 20) not narrated; but the future return of the risen Jesus as the *Son of Man at the time of the last *judgment is presented as the next act in the Jesus story, with the exception of John's Gospel with its realized as well as futuristic eschatology. The death and resurrection (and/or assumption) serve as a temporal watershed, structuring the time of Jesus (which in all three Synoptic Gospels is considered as the final phase of history—i.e., as the end time [see Mk 12:6 par.]) as bipartite, as time of the earthly and of the risen Jesus, as time of Jesus' presence and of his absence (or a different mode of presence [see Mt 28:20; Jn 14]). These common features determine the structure of the following description of the soteriology of the Gospels. In the case of each Synoptic Gospel, the role of salvation will be examined with reference to the preresurrectional past (i.e., Jesus' life as presented in the Gospel), the "present" (i.e., salvation with respect to the postresurrectional present of Jesus' adherents) and the future (i.e., at the return of the Son of Man). Since the present and future to some extent merge in the realized eschatology of John, salvation is expressed in terms of existence (life) in the eternal family of God.

1. Mark
2. Matthew
3. Luke
4. John

1. Mark.

More than any other early Christian writing the Gospel of Mark differentiates between the time of Jesus' presence and the time of his absence. Mark presents the presence of Jesus as beneficial, as a salvific presence, but his postresurrectional absence as perilous for his followers (Mk 2:18-20; 13:1-37; 14:27). The (past) presence of Jesus is salvific in a general and a specific sense: as the bearer of the Spirit (Mk 1:9-11), Jesus' presence generally mediates the *kingdom of God proleptically (Mk 1:13; 6:30-44; 8:1-9; 14:25) and especially in his *healings and exorcisms anticipates the final eschatological salvation (see, e.g., the allusions to Is 35:4-6 in Mk 7:31-37). Jesus' followers partake of the salvational "sphere" surrounding Jesus. Not only do they perform the same salvific deeds (Mk 3:13; 6:7-13, 30-32), but also the presence of Jesus fends off all danger from them (Mk 4:35-41; 6:45-51), so that the time of Jesus' presence is presented as nonhazardous (in contrast to the period of Jesus' absence, which is characterized as perilous [Mk 4:6-19; 10:30, 38-39; 13:5-22; 14:27]).

The Gospel of Mark also speaks of salvation in a narrower, specific sense. This sense of salvation is connected with the use of the verb sōzō (Mk 3:4; 5:23, 28, 34; 6:56; 8:35; 10:26, 52; 13:13, 20; 15:30-31). In all instances sōzō means "to save life," either in the sense of saving it from death (Mk 3:4; 5:23; 8:35; 10:26; 13:13-20; 15:30-31) or in the sense of securing its (physical) integrity (Mk 5:28, 34; 6:56; 8:35; 10:52). Two different aspects of salvation could be distinguished. (1) There is salvation by Jesus from physical hazards, especially illness (Mk 3:1-6; 5:21-43; 6:53-56; 10:46-52), which conspicuously corresponds with the semantic field pistis/pisteuō (see Mk 5:34, 36; also Mk 2:5; 9:19-24). In Mark's Gospel *faith is understood as unconditional reliance on God's absolute and creative power (see Mk 11:23-25; 10:27; also Mk 9:23), especially his power to intervene actively in his creation to save from peril (particularly in answer to prayer: Mk 9:29, 11:23-25). Such faith occurs when people confidently turn to Jesus as God's eschatological messenger and bearer of his Spirit for help (e.g., Mk 2:1-5; 5:21-43; 6:53-56; 9:14-29; 10:46-52). Salvation in this sense constitutes a particular aspect of the broad salvation associated with Jesus' salvific presence. (2) In other instances sōzō is used to designate the saving of life within an eschatological horizon (Mk 8:35; 10:26; 13:13, 20)—that is, to refer to salvation from God's final judgment (Mk 8:38). This use of sōzō corresponds with the use of the verb akoloutheō (Mk 8:34; 10:21, 28-31) and indicates that eschatological *life (i.e., "eternal life" [see Mk 10:17, 30] or "entering the kingdom/life" [see Mk 10:23-24; also Mk 9:43, 45, 47]) depends on following Jesus. According to Mark, behavior vis-à-vis Jesus as God's final messenger determines one's fate in God's final judgment (Mk 12:6-9; cf. Mk 8:38, 10:21; see also Mk 14:62-64). Therefore, the following of Jesus during his earthly presence constitutes a precondition for eschatological salvation (Mk 8:34—9:1; 10:28–31). “Following Jesus” is understood as unconditionally becoming Jesus’ *disciple (Mk 8:34) (including the readiness to die for him and his gospel [Mk 8:34–35]) and as sharing communal life with him (Mk 1:16–19; 2:14–15; 10:28–29; 15:41). Jesus and his followers constitute a new community understood to be an eschatological *family or household (Mk 10:30; cf. Mk 3:34–35) (see Church).

Mark’s concept of salvation requires an understanding of his concept of history. Fundamental to the theology of Mark is the conception that the presence of Jesus determines the character of reality. Just as his presence constitutes a period of salvation, his absence (Mk 2:20; 4:26–29; 13:34–37) equally implies the absence of salvation and therefore implies peril for his followers (Mk 4:16–19; 10:30; 13:7–13; 14:27). According to Mark, the situation of believers is one of imminent danger (Mk 10:30; 13:7–13, 19–20), especially the danger of the loss of salvation (Mk 4:16–19; 13:6; 14:27). Many scholars (Best; Fritzen) interpret the *miracles (esp. Mk 4:35–41; 6:45–52; see also Mk 8:14–21) symbolically as allegories for Jesus’ salvific presence and for his fending off of danger from his adherents in the postresurrectional period. However, at no point in the Gospel is the postresurrectional absence of Jesus relativized, and a symbolic reading of the Jesus events is nowhere indicated. Rather, Mark’s concept of history implies that in the interim period between Jesus’ resurrection and his return (Mk 13:34–37) Jesus does not intervene (cf. Mk 4:26–28).

The adherence to Jesus remains a precondition for eschatological salvation during the postresurrection period. However, since “following Jesus” in the sense of joining his company is not possible anymore because of his postresurrectional absence, “following Jesus” becomes a metaphor for adhering to the *gospel (euangelion) and thus to Jesus. The parallels of Jesus and gospel in Mark 8:35, 38; 10:29 clearly show that the gospel in the postresurrection period serves as a certain substitute for the absent Jesus: to adhere to Jesus, one must break with existential and social bonds “for the sake of the gospel” (Mk 10:29) in order to be integrated into the family of Jesus (Mk 10:30). Proclaiming the “gospel” and the family of Jesus’ followers constitute bridges of continuity between the time of Jesus’ presence and his absence. In the face of persecution and affliction during Jesus’ absence the precondition for participation in the eschatological salvation is faithfulness to Jesus and the gospel: whoever denies adherence to Jesus or the gospel (Mk 8:38) forfeits salvation (Mk

8:34, 38; cf. Mk 4:16–19). For this reason, the time of Jesus’ absence is superscribed with warnings to be aware and watchful (Mk 13:5, 9, 23, 34, 37; see also Mk 14:34, 37) and leads up to the admonition that whoever “endures to the end [telos] will be saved [sōthēsetai]” (Mk 13:13). The term telos is ambiguous and probably is used purposely to refer either to death or to the eschatological end of time (cf. Mk 13:7). In the first case it is implied that they will be saved—that is, will receive eternal life (Mk 8:35–37; 9:43, 45; 10:17) or enter the kingdom (Mk 9:47; 10:24–25)—who do not renounce their adherence to Jesus (Mk 8:34; see also Mk 13:11–12) in order to save their earthly life (Mk 8:35–37). In the second case the admonition refers to the final end of time and corresponds to Jesus’ prophecy that the final great tribulation will be such that no one would be saved were it not for the fact that the Lord had cut it short (Mk 13:19–20). The implication is that everybody will either die because of the tribulation or will not be able to endure and remain faithful to the end (see Mk 13:13)—that is, renounce their adherence to Jesus (Mk 8:34; see also Mk 13:11–12) in order to save their life (Mk 8:35–37).

For Mark, salvation first of all means participation in God’s eschatological reign (Mk 1:14–15; 9:47; 10:24–25), which will be brought about finally when the Son of Man returns (Mk 8:38—9:1; 13:24–27). The coming of the Son of Man is depicted as God’s final judgment and is understood as the destruction of God’s enemies (Mk 13:24–27, cf. Is 13; 34). Salvation therefore entails being saved from God’s final judgment administered by the Son of Man (Mk 8:34—9:1; 13:24–27; 14:62). Jesus, the Son of Man, has the authority to *forgive sins (Mk 2:10), so that he gathers the elect (Mk 4:29; 13:27) to participate in the kingdom of God and eternal life (Mk 8:35–37; 9:43, 45; 10:17). Participating in the kingdom of God implies, among other aspects, having *table fellowship with Jesus (Mk 14:25), thus continuing the earthly community with Jesus (Mk 2:14–15; 6:30–45; 8:1–9).

Of special relevance for understanding Mark’s concept of salvation is the much-disputed lytron saying in Mark 10:45. Usually the saying is interpreted with Isaiah 53 in the background (see Servant of Yahweh). Such interpretations claim either generally that Mark interprets Jesus’ death as vicarious, or that Mark views Jesus’ death as an atoning (sacrificial) death. Such interpretations should be considered inappropriate because lytron anti pollōn has no equivalent in Isaiah 53, and because the understanding of Jesus’ death as an expiatory, even sacrificial, death would be an isolated, erratic block in the Gospel with no interconnection to the Markan narrative world. The lytron metaphor should therefore rather be understood against the background of the general meaning of lytron in the sense of a “payment of compensation” (see LSJ s.v. λύτρον) and more specifically in the technical sense of a compensatory payment on behalf of somebody to fend off punishment, especially a death penalty, as found in the LXX (Ex 21:30; Num 35:31-32; Prov 6:34-35) or in inscriptions from Asia Minor devoted to the god Men, where lytron designates expiatory payments on behalf of persons in order to prevent imminent punishment of these persons by the divinity (CMRDM 61, 66, 90). Interpreting Mark 10:45 on this background allows for an understanding of the text in line with the context (cf. also the household imagery in Mk 10:43-44) and with the narrative world conjured up by the Gospel. Because of past transgressions of God’s will by his followers (Mk 3:35; 10:19, 20-23) Jesus as paterfamilias of his family (Mk 3:34-35; 10:20-30) pays his life as compensation on behalf of the members of his family in order to fend off the pending punishment in God’s final judgment (cf. Mk 8:36-37). For the sake of contextual coherence, the only other assertion concerning the meaning of Jesus’ death in the Gospel of Mark—the “cup” saying in Mark 14:24—should be interpreted within the framework set by Mark 10:45.

2. Matthew.

The soteriological program of the Gospel of Matthew is stated in the birth narrative of Matthew 1:18-24 (see Birth of Jesus). In allusion to the Hebrew meaning of Jesus’ name (yēhōšuaʿ/lyēšūaʿ = “God is savior”), it is said that he will save (sōsei) his people from their sins (Mt 1:21). In the parallel formulated in Matthew 1:23 the birth of Jesus is interpreted as the fulfillment of Isaiah 7:14, and Jesus is ascribed the name “Emmanuel,” which means “God with us.” Matthew 1:21 assumes that God as Israel’s savior (cf. Deut 32:15; 1 Sam 10:19; Ps 23:5; Is 12:2; 43:3, 11-12) will save *Israel from its sins through Jesus as instrument of salvation and thereby subtly construct an opposition to the *temple cult as institution for the remission of sins (cf. Mt 9:1-8). This opposition becomes fully clear in Matthew 1:23 because the presence of God in Israel was associated with his dwelling in the temple in *Jerusalem/Zion (cf. Mt 5:33-37; 12:4; 23:16-22; see also 1 Kings 8:12-13; Ps 46:6; 48:3; Is 8:18). Note that the original context of Isaiah 7:14 associates Emmanuel with the presence of God (Is 8:8-10), who dwells on the temple mount, Zion (Is 8:18; 12:6), and saves from imminent judgment (Is 7:17-25; 8:6-8, 14-15). Matthew therefore programmatically sets up Jesus in opposition to the temple cult in Jerusalem as the point of God’s saving presence in Israel.

In Matthew’s Gospel this central theme is developed in a twofold manner. (1) On the one hand, the story of Jesus is told as the narrative of Israel’s rejection of God’s eschatological salvation presented in Jesus (Luz). The leaders and, in the end, the majority of Israel reject Jesus (Mt 11:20-24; 12:14, 24, 38; 15:1-2, 12; 16:1-12; 21:46; 26:2-3; 27:25), which culminates in his death. Israel thereby forfeits God’s salvation (Mt 21:28-32, 33-46; 22:1-14; 23:1-35), and consequently Jesus’ public ministry ends with the prophecy of the desolation (Mt 23:38) and destruction (Mt 24:1-2) of the temple and Jesus abandoning the temple (Mt 23:29—24:1), signifying the loss of God’s saving presence in the temple (cf. Mt 27:51), which thereby is abandoned for destruction (cf. Ezek 10; 2 Bar. 6:7; 8:1-2; Josephus, J.W. 519). God abandons his presence in Israel and turns toward the nations (Mt 21:41-45; 22:7-10; 28:19).

(2) On the other hand, the Jesus story is narrated as a story of God’s salvific presence in Jesus. To do so, Matthew adopts central aspects of Mark’s portrayal of Jesus and adapts them for his own theological ends. As bearer of the Spirit (Mt 3:13-17) (see Holy Spirit), Jesus is depicted as God’s messenger (Mt 21:33-40) in and for Israel (2:6; 15:24), who teaches God’s will (Mt 5—7, esp. Mt 7:21; furthermore Mt 10—11; 13; 18; 23—25) and proleptically mediates the kingdom of heaven in healings, exorcisms and other miracles (Mt 8—9). As is the case in Mark, these acts often are signified by the term sōzō (Mt 8:25; 9:21-22; 14:30) and associated with faith terminology (Mt 8:26; 9:22; 14:31; see also Mt 8:10, 13; 9:2, 28-29). The miracle narratives therefore serve to portray Jesus’ presence in Israel as salvational presence.

Matthew also adopts the other strand of Mark’s soteriology: sōzō designates the saving of life within an eschatological horizon (Mt 16:25; 19:25; see also Mt 10:22; 24:13, 22) or salvation from God’s final judgment and eternal punishment (Mt 13:41-43; 16:27-28; 19:28; 24:29-31, 37-41; 25:31-46; see also Mt 8:11-12; 10:28)—that is, eschatological life (Mt 7:14; 10:39; 16:25-26; 18:8-9; 19:16-17, 29; 25:46) and participation in the kingdom of heaven (Mt 5:20; 7:21; 13:43; 18:3-4; 19:23-24; 21:31; see also Mt 5:3-12; 19:12). Matthew furthermore adopts Mark’s interpretation of Jesus’ death as lytron effecting the remission of sins (Mt 20:28; 26:28; cf. Mt 1:21). As in Mark, this aspect of salvation is connected to “following Jesus”—that is, discipleship (Mt 16:24; 19:21, 27-28; cf.

Mt 8:19-22; 20:34)—primarily understood, however, as participation in a teaching community (Mt 5:2; 7:29; 10:24-25; 23:8-10; 26:18; also Mt 16:18; 18:17) based on the confession that Jesus is Christ and *Son of God (Mt 14:33; 16:13-20) and probably *Lord (see Mt 7:22; 8:25; 14:30; 25:11). Jesus teaches that participation in salvation depends not only on faithfulness to Jesus (Mt 10:31-32; 24:42—25:30), but also on fulfilling his *commandments, particularly his authoritative interpretation of the Torah (see Law) as God's will (Mt 5:17-20; 7:15-27; 16:27; 21:28-32, 43; 23:2-3). This ethical dimension of salvation is only slightly indicated by Mark (Mk 3:35).

The specific profile of Matthew's soteriology consists in the way he adapts Mark's concept of history. According to Matthew 28:20, the presence of Jesus is continued after his resurrection. This implies that the salvific presence associated with Jesus as Emmanuel continues. Since Jesus, who was present in Israel, is the same Jesus who arose from death and who will be with his adherents forever (Mt 28:20; cf. Mt 18:20), the Matthean narrative of Jesus is largely transparent for the present of the readers. This becomes particularly clear in the case of the narrative of the calming of the storm (Mt 8:18-27). Since the disciples follow Jesus in the boat, the boat becomes a symbol for the community of disciples in the presence of the risen Jesus (Bornkamm; Luz). In the same way, the disciples in the narrative and their experiences of salvation become transparent for the disciples in the postresurrection period. This makes it possible to read the Matthean miracle narratives symbolically as narratives about the experiences of the present Matthean church with the salvific presence of the risen Jesus, who, when called upon, saves from danger, is supportive of those of little faith, and heals from (spiritual) blindness. In the same manner, the teachings of Jesus delivered during his earthly ministry are transparent for the postresurrection period (see Mt 28:20); they are primarily addressed to the readers as "gospel of the kingdom" (Mt 4:23; 9:35; 24:14; 26:13)—that is, as guidance for salvation.

3. Luke.

As in the case of Matthew's Gospel, the structure of Mark's Gospel fundamentally determines not only the storyline of the Gospel of Luke but also the narrative world evoked by Luke's narrative. But unlike these other two Gospels, Luke (partially) narrates the postresurrection period in the second part of his two-volume work, Luke-Acts. A description of salvation in Luke's Gospel can therefore not be isolated from the whole narrative of Luke-Acts; rather, it must consider the function of Luke's portrayal of salvation in the Gospel within the narrative world elicited by the whole narrative. A fundamental aspect of Luke's soteriology is his conviction that God ultimately is the subject of salvation (Lk 1:47): God is savior (sōtēr [Lk 1:68-79]) and effects salvation for Israel (see Lk 15, esp. Lk 15:7, 10, 20-24, 32). Accordingly, it is a constant theme of Luke-Acts that God effects salvation through Jesus. He is God's "means of salvation" (sōtērion [Lk 2:30; 3:6; Acts 28:28]), so the salvation effected through him is part of God's salvific history with Israel (Lk 1:69-79; Acts 7:1-53; 13:16-41), is part of God's providential plan for Israel and the world (cf. the use of providential dei in Lk 9:22; 13:33; 17:25; 24:7, 26, 44), and is therefore the subject of prophecy (cf. Lk 24:44; Acts 3:18; see also Lk 2:25-35, 36-38; 3:4-6, 16-17; 4:18-19; 10:22-23), angelical announcements (Lk 1:13-17, 30-35; 2:9-14) and divine portents (Lk 1:18-20, 44).

Decisive for Luke's concept of salvation is the interpretation of Luke 2:11 as a prophetic interpretation of the *birth of the child in Bethlehem as the birth of a sōtēr ("savior") (note also the prophetic assertions about the sōtērion in Lk 2:30; 3:6), then defined as christos kyrios ("[the] Christ [the] Lord") (cf. the prophetic use of "Lord" and "Christ" in Lk 1:17, 43, 76; 2:26; 9:20). In the further development of Luke's story God validates Jesus' status as Christ and Lord (Acts 2:36) and as savior (Acts 5:31; cf. Acts 13:23; savior for Israel; Acts 13:47; savior of the nations; see also Acts 4:12) by resurrecting Jesus from death (Acts 2:14-36; 4:10-12; 5:30-31; see also the present tense in Lk 2:11; 4:41; 9:20). Accordingly, the terms "Christ" and "Lord" are used of the risen Jesus in Luke 24:26, 34, 46. God furthermore appointed the risen Jesus to be the eschatological judge (Acts 10:42-43; 17:31).

In Luke's concept of salvation God installed the risen Jesus as Christ and Lord—that is, as savior and judge who forgives sins and has power over life and death. Salvation accordingly consists of the forgiveness of sin (Acts 5:31; cf., e.g., Acts 2:38-40; 13:38-39; see also Lk 1:77-78; 24:47) and eschatological life (Acts 11:18; 13:46, 48; 17:25). Participation in eschatological salvation is effected by responding to the message about Jesus (Lk 24:45-47; see also Acts 2:14-36, 37-41; 10:34-43, 44-48; 13:23-37, 38-48) with the faith that Jesus is Lord (Acts 16:30-31; see also Lk 8:12; Acts 2:21; 5:14; 9:42; 11:17, 21; 13:39; 18:8; 20:21; 24:24; 26:18), followed by *baptism (Acts 2:38-41) and/or the bestowal of the Spirit (Acts 10:42-48)—that is, by incorporation into the Christian communities (Acts 2:40-41, 47; 20:21; 26:20).

It should be noted that Luke's portrayal of Jesus encompasses his life between his birth as future savior, Lord and Christ (Lk 2:8-11) and his resurrection appearances (Lk 24:1-49) as this risen Lord (Lk 24:34) and Christ (Lk 24:26, 46). This depiction has the function to explain why the child born in Bethlehem became the risen Lord and Christ, the universal savior and final judge. In line with Mark's Gospel, Luke portrays Jesus as bearer of God's Spirit (Lk 3:21-22; cf. Lk 1:35; Acts 10:38) and as God's eschatological prophet (Lk 3:4-6; cf. Is 49:11; Lk 4:14-21; cf. Is 61:1-2; Lk 7:18-23; cf. Acts 10:38; see also Lk 4:24, 27; 7:16, 39; 9:8, 19; 22:64; 24:19). This is combined with the motifs of the killing of the prophets (Lk 13:33-34; cf. Lk 6:23; 11:47-51; see also Acts 3:14-15; 7:52; cf. Acts 2:22-23; 10:37-39; 13:28) and of the obedience (Lk 2:41-51; 4:1-13; 22:39-46), suffering (Lk 9:22, 44; 18:31-33; 22:21-23:43), death (Lk 23:44-56, esp. Lk 23:47) and restitution (Acts 3:14; 7:52; 22:14) of the just one (dikaïos).

Within this framework Luke adopts the Markan concept of salvation. Jesus' presence is depicted as salvific and beneficial presence (Lk 9:11; 11:20; 17:21; 19:9; Acts 2:22; 10:38). As is the case in Mark, salvation terminology is being used to characterize Jesus' healings (Lk 6:9; 18:42), exorcisms (Lk 8:36), raising of a dead person (Lk 8:50), cleansings of impurity (Lk 8:48; 17:19) and the forgiving of sins (Lk 7:50), and correspondingly faith terminology appears in these contexts (Lk 5:20; 7:9, 50; 8:48, 50; 17:19; 18:42). Jesus' salvific presence evokes faith as a persisting reliance on his ability to help (cf. Lk 18:1-8). However, Luke massively expands the Markan conception of eschatological salvation. Unconditional and unfailing discipleship in complete dependence on God's providential care is understood to be the precondition for participation in eschatological life (Lk 9:23-27; 18:18-30; see also Lk 12:4-12, 35-48; 14:25-35; 16:1-13, esp. Lk 16:9)—that is, in the kingdom of God (Lk 9:57-62; 12:22-34; 13:22-30; 14:15-24; 18:15-17, 26-30; 19:11-27; see also Lk 6:20-26). Characteristic for Luke (and Matthew) is his expansion of the prerequisites for eschatological life to include ethical aspects (Lk 10:25-37; 14:12-14; see also Lk 6:27-35, 46-49; 13:6-9; 14:15-24).

How do these views on salvation relate to Luke's concept of salvation developed in Acts? Jesus is depicted as the eschatological prophet like Moses (Acts 3:22-23; 7:35-38; cf. Deut 18:15-19; see also Lk 8:22-25; 9:10-17), who in analogy to Moses (Acts 7:38), is "horn/trumpet of salvation" (Lk 1:69) and "originator of life" (Acts 3:15) and therefore mediates God's "ways of life" (Acts 2:28 [cf. Acts 5:20: "words of life"]). Obedience to Jesus' words determines whether one adheres to God's eschatological people (Acts 3:23). Jesus' teaching in the Gospel therefore pertains to the life of those adhering to the Christian communities because of their faith.

4. John.

The Gospel of John follows a similar narrative structure to the Synoptic Gospels, but with a focus on Jesus as the one who was sent to this world to make *God the Father known and thus convey eternal life (Jn 1:1, 18; 3:16; 14:6-24). Underlying the narrative is the question "Where and with whom is God?" The narrative emphasizes that the true presence of God is no longer to be found within the religious structures of the Jewish opponents of Jesus (i.e., the physical temple [Jn 2:18-22]) and their interpretation and form of obedience to the law (e.g., Jn 5:45-47); rather, it is to be found in the presence of Jesus (Jn 1:14-18), in his words and deeds. Within the Johannine narrative the nature of this conflict influences the soteriological language and concepts.

Jesus is described as the savior (sōtēr) of the world by the *Samaritans (Jn 4:42), thus confirming that salvation comes from Israel (Jn 4:22). This happens in and through Jesus, who, as the way, the truth and the life (Jn 14:6), came to reveal the God of Israel, the God of *Abraham (Jn 8:33, 39-40, 51-56) and the God of *Moses (Jn 1:17; 5:45-47) to people dwelling in death and darkness (Jn 3:17-21; 5:25; 12:49-50; 14:9-11), thus saving the world (Jn 3:17; see also Jn 10:9; 12:47) by offering and giving them eternal life (Jn 3:16, 35-36). By believing in Jesus people receive eternal life (Jn 3:35-36; 20:31; see also Jn 5:24), the life God has, which he gave to Jesus, who gives it to believers (Jn 5:26; 6:57). The soteriology of John is developed within these cognitive domains of going into/being in a faithful relationship with the Son and the Father and receiving/having life within a new eternal reality through birth from above (Jn 3:3, 5). The two main motifs for attaining salvation are linked in John 1:12-13: faith and spiritual birth, which result in eternal life. For John, the moment of salvation is indeed when a person believes in Jesus and is being born into a spiritual family—that is, receives eternal life. From this point on, having salvation is expressed as an existential reality within which the child of God eternally lives. This brings us to an important point. "Eternal life" often is described as the essential soteriological term in John, but life should be seen as only part of a process. Birth from above results in eternal life through faith. Birth describes the moment when salvation takes place; eternal life is the soteriological result of the soteriological event of “birth of God.”

The moment of salvation is expressed in metaphorical terms as being born into the family of God, or simply of God. The metaphorical nature of terminology such as “birth of God,” “eternal life,” “children of God” and “God becoming our Father” is directly related to family imagery. Salvation in John’s Gospel is expressed metaphorically (as “being born” or “having life”) in terms of the central ancient social reality: the *family (see van der Watt 2000). Just as every person was born into this earthly world, every Christian is born into the “world of God.” The result is being a child of God, which implies that the person has the ability to partake in the spiritual things, belonging to the family of God; and this constitutes the essence of salvation. By becoming a part of the (fictive) family of God, a person is resocialized in terms of that spiritual family. This new society (God’s family) becomes the basic and determinative society toward which a person orientates himself or herself. The believer must obey the Father, act according to those rules, love those brothers and sisters, and so forth. Although believers are not taken out of their physical communities, another family—the spiritual family of God—determines their lives within those communities.

The gift of salvation is primarily based on the presence of the person of Jesus, the life (Jn 14:6) and light (Jn 8:12), the one sent by the Father (Jn 3:16). The Father has given him not only life itself (Jn 5:25; 6:57) but also the power over life and death (Jn 5:21; 10:17–18), so that he may convey life; he is indeed the resurrection and life (Jn 11:25–26). Thus, the Johannine soteriological model is based on a personal relationship of a person with (faith in) Jesus, within which new life is conveyed through birth of the Spirit. Jesus does not need to “earn” salvation through his death or by atonement; he has the power of God to convey eternal life (salvation) to those who believe even before his death on the cross.

The question is much disputed whether the cross has any soteriological value. Since it is directly mentioned in John that the cross is the place where the true nature of Jesus will be revealed (Jn 8:28), it is generally agreed that the cross has a revelatory function, thus identifying Jesus for who he is. That there are atoning or sacrificial undertones in the Gospel is argued by some. At least it can be said that the function of the cross amounts to more than just being a way back to his Father.

John emphasizes that through the events of the cross the divine identity of Jesus was revealed and the crucial question of his divine origin and identity answered. The cross and resurrection are where the *glory of Jesus is revealed, illustrating his intimate relationship with the living God. Among other things, references to his being lifted up (hypsōō [Jn 3:14; 8:28; 12:32]) might refer to the revelation of his glorious identity (Jn 7:39; 8:54; 11:4; 12:16, 23; 13:31–32; 17:1, 5). Thus, the soteriological riddle of “where God is” is solved. In and through Jesus God is present. In this light, it can be understood why revelation, through the cross events (among other things), forms a cornerstone of the soteriological process. The salvific power of the cross lies in its revelatory function, leading people to Jesus.

The use of hyper (“for, on behalf of”) in John’s Gospel might suggest some form of substitution, since it is used mainly in contexts where one person dies for another (Jn 6:51; 10:11, 15; 11:50–52; 13:37–38; 15:13; 18:14). That hyper implies substitution might, however, not simply be assumed. Only in John 11:50–52 is hyper without doubt used in the sense of substitution. In John 10:11, 15, where the *shepherd dies for his sheep, and John 15:13, where Jesus dies for his friends, it may be interpreted in a substitutionary way, but not necessarily so (it need not be “in their place”; it can also be “because of them”). We might therefore conclude that although John does not emphasize or focus on substitution or sacrifice, there are some insinuations in that direction.

John the Baptist called Jesus the “Lamb of God, who takes away the sin of this world” (Jn 1:29, 36). The link between sin and the Lamb in this expression is very suggestive of sacrificial atonement for sin. No consensus, however, exists among scholars on the interpretation of this expression. Whether John has the Paschal lamb in mind, or perhaps a more generic view of lambs in general that are sacrificed, is not clear (see Lamb of God). Even if it is implied that Jesus died as the Paschal lamb, it might not be sacrificial, since the main function of the Paschal lamb was to protect (Schlund), not to substitute. Again it must be concluded that this theme is not developed in detail or focused on in John’s Gospel.

Concepts such as sacrifice, atonement and substitution are not developed as central theological concepts in John’s Gospel. This “underdevelopment” should not be interpreted in the sense that John develops a separate Christian tradition that denies these soteriological aspects; rather, it illustrates that his soteriology is not formulated in an ahistorical manner. His soteriological message is formulated with a specific situation of conflict between the opponents and the followers of Jesus in mind (Jn 1:9– 13), and this situation directly influenced his choices of soteriological terminology and themes and therefore restricts the themes that he addresses. The basic issue in John's Gospel does not concern the way in which individual sins are reconciled or cleansed by the blood of Jesus, or related points. The issue rather has to do with where God, as the source and aim of salvation, is to be found: is it with the disciples of Moses or with the disciples of Jesus? The mistake should therefore not be made to conclude from this particular focus and the absence of terminology of or references to blood, sacrifices, reconciliation, expiation of sins, and so on that John either was unfamiliar with these soteriological traditions or rejected them (such language is used in, e.g., 1 John 1:7; 4:10). These types of conclusions are drawn when the soteriology of John's Gospel is read in abstraction.

See also DEATH OF JESUS; ESCHATOLOGY; EXILE AND RESTORATION; FAITH; FORGIVENESS OF SINS; GOSPEL: GOOD NEWS; HEALING; ISRAEL; JUBILEE; KINGDOM OF GOD/HEAVEN; LIFE, ETERNAL LIFE; NEW BIRTH; RESURRECTION.

BIBLIOGRAPHY. E. Best, The Temptation and the Passion: The Markan Soteriology (SNTSMS 2; Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 1965); G. Bornkamm, "The Stilling of the Storm in Matthew," in Tradition and Interpretation in Matthew, ed. G. Bornkamm et al. (Philadelphia: Westminster, 1963) 52-57; B. B. Colijn, Images of Salvation in the New Testament (Downers Grove, IL: IVP Academic, 2010); P. Doble, The Paradox of Salvation: Luke's Theology of the Cross (SNTSMS 87; Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 1996); D. S. du Toit, "Heilsbringer im Vergleich: Soteriologische Aspekte im Lukasevangelium," in Jamblich: Περὶ τοῦ Πυθαγορείου βίου = Pythagoras: Legende, Lehre, Lebengestaltung, ed. M. von Albrecht et al. (SAPERE 4; Darmstadt: Wissenschaftliche Buchgesellschaft, 2001) 275-94; idem, Der abwesende Herr: Strategien im Markusevangelium zur Bewältigung der Abwesenheit des Auferstandenen (WMANT 111; Neukirchen-Vluyn: Neukirchener Verlag, 2006); W. Fritzen, Von Gott verlassen? Das Markusevangelium als Kommunikationsangebot für bedrängte Christen (Stuttgart: Kohlhammer, 2008); B. K. Gamel, "Salvation in a Sentence: Mark 15:39 as Markan Soteriology," JTI 6 (2012) 65-77; J. B. Green, The Theology of the Gospel of Luke (NTT; Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 1995); U. Luz, The Theology of Matthew, trans. J. B. Robinson (NTT; Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 1995); C. Schlund, "Kein Knochen soll gebrochen werden": Studien zu Bedeutung und Funktion des Pesachfests in Texten des frühen Judentums und im Johannesevangelium (WMANT 107; Neukirchen-Vluyn: Neukirchener Verlag, 2005); H. J. Sellner, Das Heil Gottes: Studien zur Soteriologie des lukanischen Doppelwerks (BZNW 152; Berlin: de Gruyter, 2007); C. H. Talbert and J. A. Whitlark, Getting "Saved": The Whole Story of Salvation in the New Testament (Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 2011); J. G. van der Watt, Family of the King: Dynamics of Metaphor in the Gospel According to John (BIS 47; Leiden: E. J. Brill 2000); idem, ed., Salvation in the New Testament: Perspectives on Soteriology (NovTSup 121; Leiden: E. J. Brill, 2005) 7-160.

J. G. van der Watt and D. S. du Toit

SAMARIA. See SAMARITANS.

SAMARITANS

In NT times the Samaritans were a substantial religious group inhabiting parts of the central hill country of Samaria between *Galilee to the north and Judea to the south, but with diaspora communities in addition. Physically, they focused on Mount Gerizim, close to the ancient town of Shechem, while religiously, the focus of their faith was on a form of the *law of Moses, the Pentateuch, which differed only slightly, but in one or two respects crucially, from the form of the Pentateuch familiar to us from its Masoretic recension.

1. Sources and Their Difficulties
2. Origins and Early History
3. Varieties of Samaritanism and Principal Beliefs
4. Samaritans in the Gospels

1. Sources and Their Difficulties.

Despite the explosion in recent years in the publication of Samaritan texts and secondary discussions based upon them, considerable problems still confront us regarding most questions relating to the Samaritans in the first half of the first century A.D.

1.1. Samaritan Sources. Apart from the Samaritan Pentateuch itself, all Samaritan sources date from periods considerably later than the NT. Moreover, many of these sources, whether historical, doctrinal or liturgical, are known only from manuscripts of far more recent date still. In addition, it must be remembered that the Samaritan community has survived in unbroken continuity to this very day, and that during its history it has developed internally and, being usually a minority group, has inevitably been influenced by external pressures in its quest for survival. Scholars thus disagree, often quite widely, over the extent to which these sources can help in reconstructing early Samaritan history and belief.

Among the more important texts that incorporate valuable earlier traditions are (1) the Memar Marqah, a fourth-century composition that also includes later material; it is an expansive retelling of the biblical account of Moses, incorporating many *midrashic supplements; (2) the Kitāb al-Ta'rikh ("annals") of Abu'l-Fath, composed in A.D. 1355, and now generally recognized as the most valuable of the various Samaritan "Chronicles"; and (3) the Samaritan *Targum. Of course, even though the greatest caution has to be exercised before historical conclusions can be drawn from these and other such Samaritan sources, they have considerable significance on their own account in terms of heightening our appreciation of the Samaritans' sense of self-awareness.

1.2. Jewish Sources. Pride of place here belongs to *Josephus, who both recounts a version of the origin of the Samaritans and includes frequent references to them in his Jewish Antiquities and Jewish War. This material has to be evaluated in the light of Josephus's evident anti-Samaritan stance and his historical confusion (which can be independently verified) surrounding especially the last part of the Persian period and the start of the Hellenistic period, precisely the time in which he locates the most important step in the development of the Samaritan community.

There are also references of varied significance in the intertestamental literature and in the later Mishnah and Talmud (see Rabbinic Traditions and Writings). Although such references generally are negative, scholars have frequently remarked on the fact that several of these are a good deal more ambivalent than might at first have been supposed, reflecting, no doubt, the fact that the status of the Samaritans was extremely problematic from a Jewish point of view.

1.3. Other Sources. The NT itself contains important material from an historical point of view. In the context of the present discussion, particular awareness of the dangers of circular argumentation is required. Some of the early church fathers also include potentially relevant material. Finally, archeology is a particularly important source of information in an area where the textual data are so uncertain. Shechem has been extensively excavated, and work has been undertaken from the 1980s on, unearthing the remains of a substantial Hellenistic town on Mount Gerizim itself. (The excavator has also claimed that there was a Persian period temple there.) In the latter case, we await proper publications of the excavation results, so that we may hope for further advances in our understanding in the coming years. Almost four hundred inscriptions and fragments of inscriptions from Gerizim were published in 2004, and they provide valuable material. Also, two Samaritan inscriptions from the island of Delos in the Aegean Sea are important. All the inscriptions can be dated to 200–150 B.C. (Kartveit).

A full survey of much of these sources is available in The Samaritans, a magisterial compendium by a number of leading experts edited by A. D. Crown.

2. Origins and Early History.

Several views of Samaritan origins are attested in antiquity. Although each contains problems from a modern perspective, they retain their importance as evidence for how the situation was perceived in the first century A.D. The following survey represents a heavy simplification for the sake of clarity.

2.1. Samaritan Views. The Samaritans have always believed that they are the direct descendants of a faithful nucleus of ancient Israel. From their perspective, Israel's apostasy began as early as the time of Eli (eleventh century B.C.), when the nation's cultic center was removed from Gerizim to Shiloh (and thence eventually to Jerusalem); in the Middle Ages they thus would have regarded themselves not as the remnant of the old northern kingdom of Israel, but rather as original Israel, whereas the Jews descend from a splinter group. For them, therefore, the question of origins should be directed more toward *Judaism than to themselves.

2.2. Jewish Traditions and Josephus. Josephus links the origins of the Samaritans with the account in 2 Kings 17:24–41, which tells of how, following their conquest of the northern kingdom, the Assyrians colonized the area by settling it with people from a number of Mesopotamian towns, including Cuthah. These colonists adopted the Israelite faith alongside their own religion (2 Kings 17:41), and their descendants, often called "Cuthaeans" in Jewish polemical sources, are the Samaritans of later times. The hostilities between Judah and its northern neighbor recorded in the books of Ezra and Nehemiah demonstrate the antiquity of the division between the two groups but do not confirm the correctness of Josephus's interpretation of 2 Kings 17.

Building upon information in Nehemiah 13:28, Josephus adds a further significant ingredient: at the end of the Persian period the priest Manasseh was expelled from Jerusalem, and a sanctuary was built for him shortly after at the start of the Hellenistic period by Sanballat, his father-in-law, on Mount Gerizim. Over the course of time other priests from Jerusalem joined him there. Josephus thus recognizes a certain degree of Samaritan priestly legitimacy (at least in terms of descent), and his account helps him explain the Jewish character of much Samaritan practice.

2.3. Critical Reconstruction. After decades of discussion (which cannot be surveyed here), and as new pieces of evidence have come to light, scholars are now agreed that none of these positions can be maintained as an accurate reflection of the situation. Although disagreement inevitably remains, there is a widespread measure of agreement on some of the salient issues, the upshot of which for the present discussion is that the situation as reflected in the NT developed far more recently than had previously been thought, and that the division was by no means as clear-cut as the earlier views might be thought to imply. The following four points deserve notice.

First, the account in 2 Kings 17 should be discounted in discussions of Samaritan origins. (1) The word haššōmērōnīm in 2 Kings 17:29, often translated “the Samaritans,” seems merely to mean “inhabitants of (the city or province of) Samaria,” and this fits the context best. (2) There is no evidence to link the later Samaritans with the city of Samaria. All the earliest certain references to them point clearly to their residence in the region around Shechem, as we should expect on the basis of their theology (Sir 50:26; 2 Macc 5:22-23; 6:2), and one of Josephus’s sources refers to them as “Shechemites” (Ant. 11.340-347; 12.10). Shechem perhaps was inhabited until the early Hellenistic period. (3) Despite earlier mistaken suggestions, it is now clear that nothing of later Samaritan religion and practice owes anything to the proposed pagan influence of 2 Kings 17 or Ezra 4.

Second, it is not known for certain precisely who lived in Shechem and on Mount Gerizim at the start of the Hellenistic period. Most probably, an important element comprised a group of religious purists who were descendants of the original Israelite population in the north who had not been exiled by the Assyrians (that there were some is recognized by the OT itself [see, e.g., 2 Chron 30; 34:6; Jer 40:5]). Following the severe suppression of a revolt in Samaria in the time of Alexander the Great and the complete Hellenization of this city, the ancient site of Shechem would have been an obvious place to settle. “It often happened that when a Greek colony was established, native villages under its control formed a union around an ancestral sanctuary” (Bickerman, 43-44). The discovery of over two hundred skeletons in a cave in the Wadi ed-Daliyeh is generally thought to reflect part of this same upheaval.

A less certain but attractive suggestion is that they were joined, or even preceded, by a group of priests from Jerusalem who had been forced to leave the *temple service there because of the rigorous policies of those who succeeded Ezra and Nehemiah. Josephus’s account may include some memory of this; there is strong circumstantial evidence in the OT for a major reorganization of the Jerusalem priesthood at about this time; it would help account for Samaritan claims to a legitimate priesthood, their close association with a number of inner-Jewish developments (e.g., in halakah), and the apparently continuing inner-Samaritan tensions between the priesthood and the laity (see below). The later establishment of the Qumran community (see Dead Sea Scrolls), this time by a stricter group of priests and their followers, forms an interesting parallel development.

Third, the formation of this community and the building of a temple soon after would not of themselves have caused a decisive breach or schism. J. Purvis, however, notes four possible reasons for a steadily deteriorating situation during the third and second centuries B.C.: (1) political tensions because of different alliances with the Ptolemies and the Seleucids; (2) Jewish resentment because of Samaritans’ acceptance of a greater degree of Hellenization and their consequent failure to join in the resistance to Antiochus Epiphanes; (3) tensions between their respective diaspora communities; and (4) Hasmonean expansion (Purvis 1986).

This last element probably was decisive, for in 128 or 109 B.C. John Hyrcanus captured Shechem and destroyed the sanctuary on Mount Gerizim. Apart from natural resentment, this drove the Samaritans to a closer religious rationale of their situation (compare the effect of the destruction of the *Jerusalem temple in A.D. 70). As Purvis has tried to show, it was at this period that the Samaritan Pentateuch began its own separate history in terms of script, orthography and, crucially, textual tradition and recension (Purvis 1968). From this point on, therefore, though one certainly should continue to regard Samaritanism as a form of Judaism (“sect” would be an anachronistic term to use), it became crystallized as by far the most distinct by virtue of its wholesale rejection of the Jerusalem-centered Heilsgeschichte, something that cannot be said of any other variety of Judaism in antiquity.

Fourth, not surprisingly, relations continued thereafter at low ebb, and isolated events that are recorded from the first century A.D. may be regarded as symptomatic, though told from a Jewish standpoint. For instance, between A.D. 6 and 7 some Samaritans scattered bones in the Jerusalem temple during Passover (Josephus, Ant. 18. 29-30), while in A.D. 52 Samaritans massacred a group of Galilean pilgrims at En-Gannim (Josephus, Ant. 20.118).

3. Varieties of Samaritanism and Principal Beliefs.

It is clearly mistaken to speak of “normative” Judaism in the first century A.D., given the number of groups that often differed quite sharply from one another, and recent research has suggested that the same probably is true of the Samaritans (see Kippenberg; Isser).

3.1. The Dositheans. Because of the fragmentary nature and late date of all our relevant sources, it is not possible to go beyond informed conjecture, but S. Isser has made out a strong case for the view that “Dositheus was an early first century A.D. eschatological figure among the Samaritans, who applied the ‘Prophet like Moses’ passage of Dt. 18 to himself” (Isser, 163). He further argues that Dositheus became prominent within a Samaritan sect that had already been formed during the previous century and, as a *synagogue-based lay movement, was somewhat akin to the Pharisaic movement within Judaism, in contradistinction to the more Sadducee-like orthodox Samaritans, who no doubt were predominantly priestly and centered on Gerizim.

Such distinctions need to be borne in mind when evaluating references to contacts between the Samaritans and Jesus or the first Christians as well as between Jews and Samaritans, for the degrees of affinity between different groups across the divide may have varied far more than our severely fragmented knowledge allows us to recognize.

3.2. Principal Beliefs. The previous remarks also mean that it is difficult to speak in general terms about Samaritan beliefs. However, from the Samaritan Pentateuch, whose primary recension should be dated, as we have seen, earlier than the first century A.D., a few comments may be made. From the text-type of the Pentateuch that they elected to adopt for themselves, it is probable that already the passage in Deuteronomy 18:18-22 about a future “prophet like Moses” had been joined to the Exodus version of the Sinai account (following Ex 20:21). They themselves, however, will have added to the Decalogue the commandment, based on Deuteronomy 27, to build an altar on Gerizim.

Thus, we can be reasonably certain that the following elements of their later creed were already established in early times: belief in one God, in Moses the prophet, in the law and in Mount Gerizim as the place appointed by God for sacrifice. The other two elements of the creed are less certain: the day of judgment and recompense, and the return of Moses as the Taheb (the “restorer” or “returning one”). The latter is of particular interest in view of what we have seen about Dositheus, while in addition we may note the unrelated report by Josephus (Ant. 18.85-87) that in A.D. 36 a Samaritan fanatic assembled a crowd on Gerizim, promising to reveal the sacred vessels thought to have been hidden there by Moses. These indications, coupled with the Samaritan Pentateuch, suggest that from early times an important element of Samaritan belief, especially amongst the laity, was the coming of the “prophet like Moses,” but that only later did this develop into the more crystallized concept of the Taheb (see Dexinger 1989); beyond that, it would be hazardous to speculate.

4. Samaritans in the Gospels.

Although this article has sought not to go beyond the available evidence in its treatment of Samaritan history and belief, there is probably now sufficient data to do justice to the references to the Samaritans in the Gospels.

4.1. The Synoptic Gospels. In the first three Gospels there are references to the Samaritans in Matthew 10:5; Luke 9:52; 10:33; 17:16. All of these can be understood against the background described above, once it is additionally borne in mind that they are told from a predominantly Jewish standpoint. Thus, in order to make a point similar to that in Luke 7:1-10, the foreignness of the grateful Samaritan is emphasized in Luke 17:11-19, even though he is instructed according to Jewish law along with the other nine lepers in Luke 17:14. Similarly, Jesus’s instruction to his *disciples to go only to “the lost sheep of the house of Israel” (Mt 10:6) is contrasted not only with the negative command concerning the *Gentiles, but also, as in a separate and distinctive category, with “any city of the Samaritans” (Mt 10:5). The incident in Luke 9:51-56 reflects typical Jewish-Samaritan personal antipathies of the time, though it is of interest to note both here and elsewhere that Jesus did not always bypass Samaritan territory (by taking a circuitous route through Transjordan) as many Galilean pilgrims to Jerusalem did. At the same popular level, the selection of a Samaritan for the positive role in the parable told in answer to the question “Who is my neighbor?” (Lk 10:25-37) is telling, and in a veiled manner it anticipates the Jewish acknowledgement (recorded much later) that the Samaritans were often more punctilious in their observance of the law than were the Jews (b. Qidd. 76a).

4.2. John. John 4 gives the most extended account of an encounter of Jesus with the Samaritans (the only other reference in this Gospel being Jn 8:48). Despite its popularity, the title “woman of Samaria” is misleading. The incident takes place at Sychar (Jn 4:5), clearly identified as being close to Shechem and Mount Gerizim (cf. Jn 4:5-6 with Jn 4:20; see LXX Gen 48:22). The parenthetical comment in John 4:9 about Jewish-Samaritan relations, which follows the woman’s expression of surprise that Jesus asks her for a drink, probably is not a general statement but rather reflects a halakic ruling (mid-first century?) that “the daughters of the Samaritans are menstruants from their cradle” (b. Nid. 31b), and hence that vessels handled by them are unclean. If so, the comment may reflect more the time of the evangelist than of Jesus himself, and the woman’s surprise may not have been so specifically motivated. The woman’s question about the right place to *worship (Jn 4:20) is, as we have seen, entirely appropriate as reflecting the issue that stood at the heart of Samaritan identity, and it is exactly the kind of easily grasped popular polemic that someone of her status might have been expected to raise. Her response to Jesus’s reply (Jn 4:25), however, is more problematic; talk of a “messiah” probably would have been foreign to a Samaritan (though the caveat issued in 3 above about diversity in this particular area of eschatology must be borne in mind). If historical tradition lies behind the saying, its present expression must be regarded as a Johannine paraphrase for his more Jewish-oriented readership. A reference to the prophet like *Moses in the context of a discussion of the right place and mode of worship would have fitted well here, as is clear from the earlier discussion.

See also JUDAISM, COMMON.

BIBLIOGRAPHY. E. Bickerman, From Ezra to the Last of the Maccabees: Foundations of Post-Biblical Judaism (New York: Schocken, 1962); A. D. Crown, ed., The Samaritans (Tübingen: Mohr Siebeck, 1989); A. D. Crown and R. Pummer, A Bibliography of the Samaritans (3rd ed.; ATLAS 51; Lanham, MD: Scarecrow Press, 2005); F. Dexinger, “Limits of Tolerance in Judaism: The Samaritan Example,” in Jewish and Christian Self-Definition, 2: Aspects of Judaism in the Graeco-Roman Period, ed. E. P. Sanders (Philadelphia: Fortress, 1981) 88-114; idem, “Samaritan Eschatology,” in The Samaritans, ed. A. D. Crown (Tübingen: Mohr Siebeck, 1989) 266-92; S. J. Isser, The Dositheans: A Samaritan Sect in Late Antiquity (SJLA 17; Leiden: E. J. Brill, 1976); M. Kartveit, The Origin of the Samaritans (VTSup 128; Leiden: E. J. Brill, 2009); H. G. Kippenberg, Garizim und Synagoge: Traditionsgeschichtliche Untersuchungen zur samaritanischen Religion der aramäischen Periode (RVV 30; Berlin: de Gruyter, 1971); A. Montgomery, The Samaritans: The Earliest Jewish Sect (Philadelphia: J. C. Winston, 1907); R. Pummer, Early Christian Authors on Samaritans and Samaritanism (TSAJ 92; Tübingen: Mohr Siebeck, 2002); idem, The Samaritans in Flavius Josephus (TSAJ 129; Tübingen: Mohr Siebeck, 2009); J. D. Purvis, The Samaritan Pentateuch and the Origin of the Samaritan Sect (HSM 2; Cambridge, MA: Harvard University Press, 1968); idem, “The Samaritans and Judaism,” in Early Judaism and Its Modern Interpreters, ed. R. A. Kraft and G. W. E. Nickelsburg (BMI 2; Atlanta: Scholars Press, 1986) 81-98.

H. G. M. Williamson and M. Kartveit

SANHEDRIN

The Sanhedrin was the supreme Jewish religious, political and legal council in *Jerusalem in NT times. The term was also used of the smaller courts governing the affairs of the Jewish communities throughout Palestine and the Diaspora.

1. Terminology
2. Theories
3. Origin and History
4. Membership
5. Powers and Functions
6. Times and Procedures

1. Terminology.

1.1. Synedrion. In the LXX synedrion (syn [“together”] + hedra [“a seat”]) had no fixed meaning and translated a variety of Hebrew words: ma (Ps 25:4 [MT 26:4; ET 26:4]), sôd (Prov 11:13), dîn (Prov 22:10), qāhāl (Prov 26:26). By the end of the Maccabean period, synedrion is widespread in the Greek literature to refer to the supreme Jerusalem council. The Hebrew word sanhêdrîn, a transliteration of synedrion, is also used in the Mishnah for the Jerusalem court (m. Soṭah 9:11).

In the Gospels synedrion refers to the Jerusalem council (Mt 26:59; Mk 15:1; Jn 11:47; cf. Acts 5:27). In Matthew 5:22; 10:17 (// Mk 13:9) any judicial body may be in mind, such as the Sanhedrin, a local Jewish council or a group in the Christian community. In Luke 22:66 synedrion probably refers to the assembly room.

Josephus also uses the term for the Jerusalem council (Ant. 14.167-180; Life 62) and for the five districts and councils created in Palestine by Gabinius (Ant. 14.89-91). In other Greek literature of the period a “sanhedrin” was often a council of representatives from various constituencies (e.g., Diodorus, Bib. hist. 16.41).

1.2. Gerousia. Generally translated as “senate” or “council,” gerousia was a word used mainly for the Greek and Roman nondemocratic senates (Aristotle, Pol. 2.6.15) and was an older term than synedrion for the Jerusalem council from the end of the Persian period and the beginning of the Hellenistic period (Josephus, Ant. 12.138; and especially the Apocrypha: Jdt 4:8; 2 Macc 11:27). In the NT the term is used only in Acts 5:21, most likely for narrative impact, as an equivalent to synedrion: the high *priest “called together the council [synedrion]—all the senate [gerousia]—of the sons of Israel” (cf. Dionysius of Halicarnassus, Ant. rom. 2.13.3; CIG 2.3417).

1.3. Presbyterion. In Luke 22:66 presbyterion (“council of elders”) is probably not the group of *elders (Acts 22:5; 1 Tim 4:14), one of the constituents of the Sanhedrin, but rather the supreme Jerusalem council or Sanhedrin, which Luke specifies as consisting of chief priests and scribes.

1.4. Boulē. Josephus often uses boulē (“council”) to refer to for the senate in Rome (J.W. 1.284; 13.164), local Roman city councils (Ant. 14.230), local Jewish city councils (Life 64), the Jerusalem Sanhedrin (J.W. 5.532) and its meeting place (bouleutērion [J.W. 5.144]). However, NT writers only use the word for “plan” or “purpose” (cf. Lk 7:30; 23:51; Acts 2:43; 1 Cor 4:5).

2. Theories.

According to references in Greek literature (Apocrypha, NT, Josephus), there was a single body in Jerusalem. However, the Mishnah says that there were two major courts in Jerusalem: “The greater Sanhedrin was made up of one and seventy [judges] and the lesser [Sanhedrin] of three and twenty” (m. Sanh. 1:6). The conflicting sources and multitude of terms has resulted in a number of theories about the Sanhedrin. D. Goodblatt proposed that, for lack of a clearer mark in history, the Sanhedrin is a scholarly myth based on Tannaitic masters projecting views back (see Grabbe). A. Büchler proposed that before A.D. 70 there was a political body (boulē), a college of mostly priests (synedrion) and the Great Sanhedrin, which oversaw Jewish religious life. M. Wolff argued that the high priest presided over a Little Sanhedrin, and there was also a Great Sanhedrin (gerousia) of *scribes that condemned Jesus. S. B. Hoenig’s theory was that there were three Sanhedrins: a political as well as a priestly and also a scribal one, which was the Great Sanhedrin. However, it is difficult to determine how far the Mishnah has preserved reliable traditions on the Sanhedrin, for it is now generally agreed that it is reflecting the entirely different situation at Jamnia, not that in Jerusalem before A.D. 70. On the other hand, the Greek sources are more contemporaneous to the time of Jesus and are therefore to be favored in reconstructing the history of the Sanhedrin before A.D. 70.

3. Origin and History.

The rabbis at Jamnia legitimized their governing body by tracing it back to *Moses and his seventy elders (Num 11:16; m. Sanh. 1:6). However, apart from a supreme law court in Jerusalem (Deut 17:8-13; 19:15-21) and the occasional mention of “elders” (Ex 3:16; Deut 5:23), there is no hint of the existence of such an institution as the Sanhedrin in this period.

The actual seeds of the Jerusalem Sanhedrin in the time of Jesus were planted in the time of Ezra and Nehemiah. The high priest Joshua and Zerubbabel, the Davidic governor of Jerusalem, ruled the community together (Hag 1:1; Zech 4:14). The community was headed by a priestly nobility that formed an aristocratic council (Neh 2:16; 5:7) representing the people in negotiations with the Persian provincial governor Tattenai in the reconstruction of the *temple (Ezra 5:5, 9; 6:7-8, 14). After Zerubbabel, the last enthroned Davidic heir (1 Chron 3:19-24), the high priest emerged as the head of the gerousia and Jewish state (Zech 6:11; 1 Macc 12:6).

Despite difficulties in his account, from Hecataeus of Abdera, a contemporary of Alexander the Great, we may learn that the council was dominated by the priests: “He [Moses] picked out the men of most refinement and with the greatest ability to head the entire nation, and appointed them priests. . . . These same men he appointed to be judges in all major disputes, and entrusted to them the guardianship of the laws and customs. For this reason the Jews have never had a king, and authority over the people is regularly vested in whichever priest is regarded as superior to his colleagues in wisdom and virtue. They call this man the high priest” (from Diodorus, Bib. hist. 40.3.4-5).

Under the relative freedom provided by the Hellenistic kings, the influence of the Jerusalem court increased. The Seleucid king Antiochus III (223-187 B.C.) said that it was his will that the Jewish nation “shall have a form of government in accordance with the laws of their country, and the senate [gerousia], the priests, the scribes of the temple and the temple singers shall be relieved from poll tax” (Josephus, Ant. 12.142).

From the beginning of the Maccabean Revolt (167 B.C.) the power of the high priest increased (1 Macc 12:6), and with Simon being established as high priest, military chief and ethnarch (140 B.C.), the power of the Sanhedrin was reduced (1 Macc 14:24-49). With the reign of Queen Alexandra (76-67 B.C.), the Sanhedrin's power increased, and the domination of the priests and nobility was exchanged for that of the *Pharisees. Alexandra permitted "the Pharisees to do as they liked in all matters, and also commanded the people to obey them; and whatever regulations, introduced by the Pharisees in accordance with the traditions of their fathers, had been abolished by her father-in-law Hyrcanus, these she again restored" (Josephus, Ant. 13.408).

Gabinius, Roman governor in Syria (57-55 B.C.), divided the nation into five districts with councils (synedria) in Jerusalem, Gadara, Amathus, Jericho and Sepphoris (Josephus, Ant. 14.91). In 47 B.C. Caesar overturned this arrangement so that the high priest and the Jerusalem council were responsible for the affairs of the whole nation, even though these local councils survived (Josephus, Ant. 14.192-195). The Sanhedrin became sufficiently confident in its authority that the high priest and ethnarch Hyrcanus II (63-40 B.C.) summoned *Herod to stand trial on capital sentences that he had passed without the Sanhedrin's authority (Josephus, J.W. 1.204-215). When Herod took Jerusalem in 37 B.C., he retaliated by killing the entire membership of the Sanhedrin (Josephus, Ant. 14.174). However, according to Josephus, only forty-five leading men were killed (Ant. 15.6). In any case, the Sanhedrin continued to function (Josephus, Ant. 15.173).

Under the Roman procurators (A.D. 6-41) the Sanhedrin's power increased again (Josephus, Ant. 20.200, 251). So, in the NT the Sanhedrin is represented as the supreme court of justice (Mk 14:55).

After the destruction of Jerusalem and the temple in A.D. 70, the Sanhedrin was recreated at Jamnia (Yavneh in the OT [2 Chron 26:6]) in the northwest of Judea (m. Roš. Haš. 4:1-2) before moving to Usha in Galilee in the second century (b. Roš. Haš. 31a-b; t. Roš. Haš. 2:11).

4. Membership.

The Mishnah probably is correct in saying that prior to A.D. 70 the Sanhedrin in Jerusalem had seventy-one members (m. Sanh. 1:6; cf. Num 11:16; Josephus, J.W. 2.482; Let. Arist. 46-50).

After the exile the Jerusalem council was composed of Levites, priests and heads of families (2 Chron 19:5-11). In the Maccabean period the Sanhedrin consisted of lay aristocracy and priests of Sadducean sympathy (1 Macc 7:33; 11:23; 14:28). In the time of Queen Alexandra Pharisaic scribes belonged to the assembly (cf. Josephus, Ant. 13.408-409).

Both the NT and Josephus agree that in the first century A.D. the chief priests (archiereis) were leading figures in the Sanhedrin (Mt 27:41; Mk 14:53; Josephus, J.W. 2.301, 315-342). These probably were the former high priests and members of the priestly aristocracy from which the high priests were chosen and belonged to the party of the *Sadducees (Acts 4:1; 5:17; Josephus, Ant. 20.199), who, along with the Pharisees (Acts 5:34; 23:6; Josephus, Life 191, 197; J.W. 2.411), were also part of the Sanhedrin. In the Persian period all the members of the Sanhedrin (gerousia) were called "elders" (presbyteroi [1 Macc 14:20; 2 Macc 4:44]). By NT times the term "elders" was used for a group consisting of priests and lay members of the nobility (Mt 26:3; 27:1; 28:11-12) within the Sanhedrin. From observing the synonyms for these elders we learn that they are leading men of the people (Lk 19:47; Josephus, Life 194), the leading men of Jerusalem, and the powerful and the dignitaries (Josephus, J.W. 2.316, 410; Life 9).

There may have been a group of the ten foremost members within the Sanhedrin, for Josephus says that, along with Ishmael the high priest and Helcias the treasurer, ten leading men were sent on a delegation to Nero (Ant. 20.194), and some Greek cities in this period had a committee of ten leading men (Livy, Hist. 29.15.5; 45.29.1).

The high priest was always the president of the Sanhedrin (1 Macc 14:44; Mt 26:57; Acts 5:17; 24:1; Josephus, Ag. Ap. 2.194; Ant. 20.200, 251). From the time of Herod the Great the high priest was often appointed arbitrarily and out of political considerations. Otherwise, the office was hereditary (Num 3:32; 25:11-13; 35:25, 28; Neh 12:10-11), and the Palestinian Talmud says that the high priest would not be elected high priest if he had not first been captain of the temple (y. Yoma 3:8; 41a. 5; cf. Josephus, J.W. 2.409).

Second in rank to the high priest was the captain of the temple (Heb. sāḡān or segen; Aram. sēḡan; Gk. stratēgos) (Josephus, Ant. 20.131; Lk 22:4, 52; Acts 4:1, 24, 26; m. Yoma 3:1). Josephus also mentions a secretary of the Sanhedrin (J.W. 5.532).

We know little of how people were appointed to the Sanhedrin, though they may have been co-opted (m. Sanh. 4:4) from among those of legitimate Israelite descent (m. Qidd. 4:5). Actual admission was through the laying on of hands (m. Sanh. 4:4, cf. Num 27:18-23; Deut 34:9).

5. Powers and Functions.

At least theoretically, the Jerusalem Sanhedrin's sphere of authority extended over the spiritual, political and legal affairs of all Jews (m. Ta'an. 3:6). Thus, the Mishnah says that where members of a local court disagreed on a point of law, the matter was referred to the Jerusalem court that sat at the gate of the Temple Mount. If the dispute could not be resolved, it went to the court that sat at the gate of the court of the temple. If a resolution was still not found, the Sanhedrin heard the dispute. Thereafter, on pain of death, local judges were to follow the decision (m. Sanh. 11:2; cf. Josephus, Ant. 4.214-218; J.W. 2.570-571). However, the sphere of authority and geographical area over which the Jerusalem Sanhedrin exercised jurisdiction varied greatly over time according to the relative freedom of the Jews in relation to the succession of foreign oppressors.

In the time of the Hasmonean rulers the whole of Palestine was a single political unit over which the Sanhedrin exercised oversight. When Gabinius divided Jewish territory into five areas, the authority of the Jerusalem Sanhedrin may have covered only one-third of Judea (Josephus, Ant. 14.91; J.W. 1.170). From the death of Herod the Great, Galilee and Perea were separate administrative regions so that the civil jurisdiction of the Jerusalem Sanhedrin did not extend beyond Judea. Thus, while Jesus remained in Galilee, the Sanhedrin had no judicial authority over him. Even so, Luke says that the Sanhedrin authorized Paul to arrest Christians in Damascus (Acts 9:1-2; 22:5). Then Josephus says that in a peaceful period after the first stages of the Jewish War in A.D. 60, magistrates and members of the Sanhedrin dispersed from Jerusalem and collected the Roman taxes from the whole of Judea (J.W. 2.405).

In A.D. 6 Augustus appointed a procurator for Judea "with full powers, including the affliction of capital punishment" (Josephus, J.W. 2.117). That the Sanhedrin could no longer order and execute a capital sentence is reflected in John 18:31 and in the rabbinic literature (y. Sanh. 18a; 24b; b. Sanh. 41a; b. Abod. Zar. 8b). On the other hand, Josephus (J.W. 5.193-194) says that the second court of the temple was surrounded by a stone balustrade on which at regular intervals stood slabs giving warning in Greek and Latin: "No foreigner is to enter within the forecourt and the balustrade around the sanctuary. Whoever is caught will have himself to blame for his subsequent death" (CII 1400 no. 85). This could be a special case granted to the Jews. In any case, it is more likely to be a warning against being lynched (cf. Acts 6:8-8:2; Jn 10:31).

Also, Josephus says that the Sanhedrin condemned James, the brother of Jesus, to be stoned. In this case the procurator, Porcius Festus, had died, and Ananus took the opportunity of convening the Sanhedrin before Albinus, the new procurator, had arrived (Ant. 20.197-203). Further, the Mishnah relates the burning of a priest's daughter convicted of adultery (m. Sanh. 7:2). Those who argue that the Sanhedrin did not have the power of death under the Roman procurators suggest that this took place during the brief reign of Agrippa I (A.D. 41-44), when the Jews had their own independent state. Whether or not the Sanhedrin was able to execute capital punishment, the Romans maintained the right to intervene when a political crime was suspected (Acts 22:30; 23:15, 20, 28).

6. Times and Procedures.

The Sanhedrin probably met on the western boundary of the Temple Mount (Josephus, J.W. 5.144; 6.354) in the "Hall of Hewn Stone" (liškat ha-gāzīt), indicating that it was next to the gymnasium, or Xystus (gāzīt = xystos [1 Chron 22:2; Amos 5:11]).

The night meeting in Mark 14:53 (// Mt 26:57; Lk 22:54) probably was to be considered a preliminary meeting in the high priest's palace because trials could be held only in the hours of daylight (cf. Mk 15:1; m. Sanh. 4:1).

No record remains of the proceedings of the Jerusalem Sanhedrin. However, the Mishnah gives details of the judicial procedure of the lesser Sanhedrin of twenty-three, which may reflect procedure of the Jerusalem Sanhedrin before A.D. 70. Members sat in a half-circle so that they could see each other. Before them stood two scribes, one writing down what was said in favor of, and the other what was said against, the accused. Before them sat three rows of students who could participate in noncapital trials (m. Sanh. 4:1-4).

Noncapital trials began with either case, but capital trials were to begin with the case for acquittal. A majority of one was sufficient in noncapital trials to acquit the accused of a capital charge. A majority of two was required for a guilty verdict on a capital charge. Verdicts could be reversed, but not from an acquittal to a conviction in a capital trial. Those participating in the case could speak for and against the accused in noncapital trials. In capital trials a speaker in favor of conviction could only change and argue in favor of the accused, not the reverse. In noncapital cases the daytime trial could be followed by reaching a verdict that same night. In capital cases the verdict for an acquittal could be reached that night, but a verdict of conviction had to wait until the following day (m. Sanh. 4:1). In that way, members of the Sanhedrin could go off in pairs to eat a little (no wine was permitted) and discuss the matter all night before meeting in court early next morning (m. Sanh. 5:5). Therefore, trials were not to be held on the days before a *Sabbath or a festival (m. Sanh. 4:1). In capital cases voting began with the most junior members standing, each giving their verdict (m. Sanh. 5:5).

See also PHARISEES; PRIESTS AND PRIESTHOOD; SADDUCEES; SCRIBES; TRIAL OF JESUS.

BIBLIOGRAPHY. G. Alon, The Jews in Their Land in the Talmudic Age, 70-640 C.E., trans. and ed. G. Levi (Cambridge, MA: Harvard University Press, 1989); E. Bammel, ed., The Trial of Jesus: Cambridge Studies in Honour of C. F. D. Moule (London: SCM, 1970); J. Blinzler, The Trial of Jesus: The Jewish and Roman Proceedings Against Jesus Christ Described and Assessed from the Oldest Accounts, trans. I. McHugh and F. McHugh (Cork: Mercier, 1959); D. R. Catchpole, The Trial of Jesus: A Study in the Gospels and Jewish Historiography from 1770 to the Present Day (StPB 18; Leiden; E. J. Brill, 1971); H. Danby, "The Bearing of the Rabbinical Criminal Code on the Jewish Trial Narratives in the Gospels," JTS 21 (1919-1920) 51-76; L. L. Grabbe, "Sanhedrin, Sanhedriyyot, or Mere Invention?" JSJ 39 (2008) 1-19; S. B. Hoenig, The Great Sanhedrin: A Study of the Origin, Development, Composition, and Functions of the Bet Din ha-Gadol during the Second Jewish Commonwealth (Philadelphia: Dropsie College, 1953); H. C. Kee, "Central Authority in Second-Temple Judaism and Subsequently: From Synedrion to Sanhedrin," ARJ 2 (1999) 51-63; E. Lohse, "συνήδριον," TDNT 7:860-71; H. Mantel, Studies in the History of the Sanhedrin (HSS 17; Cambridge, MA: Harvard University, 1961); E. Schürer, The History of the Jewish People in the Age of Jesus Christ (175 B.C.-A.D. 135), rev. and ed. G. Vermes and F. Millar (3 vols.; Edinburgh: T & T Clark, 1973-1979) 2:199-226; A. N. Sherwin-White, Roman Law and Roman Society in the New Testament (Oxford: Oxford University Press, 1963); P. Winter, On the Trial of Jesus, rev. and ed. T. A. Burkill and G. Vermes (2nd ed.; SJ 1; Berlin: de Gruyter, 1974).

G. H. Twelftree

SATAN. See DEMON, DEVIL, SATAN.

SCANDINAVIAN SCHOOL. See ORALITY AND ORAL TRANSMISSION.

SCRIBES

Scribes appear frequently in the Synoptic Gospels as a major Jewish leadership group in opposition to Jesus. However, their precise historic role and status in the Jewish leadership structure, their relationship to other prominent groups, and the reasons for their antagonism toward Jesus in the Gospels are far from straightforward. It is thus necessary to consider a wide range of evidence for the development of the scribal office to ascertain more adequately both their historic identity in the first century A.D. and the evangelists' portrayal of them.

Scribes in the ancient world were officials who wrote, copied and preserved written documents ranging from common transactions and records to national archives and sacred texts. The preexilic OT scribe held an important position in the royal courts and worked closely with the priest on temple matters (2 Kings 22:3-13). Jeremiah describes a range of scribal roles and shows scribes as influential leaders closely associated with the written Torah and prophetic revelation (Jer 8:8; 32:12; 36; 43:3). In the Second Temple context, scribes increasingly became identified as interpreters and teachers of Scripture and as intellectual leaders in Jewish society.

The standard terms for "scribe" in the biblical texts and other ancient Jewish literature are the Hebrew sōpēr, Aramaic sāpar, and the Greek grammateus (for the synonymous usage of nomikos and nomodidakalos, see 2.3 below). Although the LXX consistently translates sōpēr with grammateus, it also uses the same term for the Hebrew śōtēr, referring to midlevel officials. The Greco-Roman use of grammateus denotes an official in government administration and does not entail the strong association of scribes with sacred texts or their prestigious status as in the Jewish context (Schams, 143). This may help to explain the absence or relative rarity of the term in some Greek Jewish literature written outside of Palestine (Philo) or aimed for Roman readership (Josephus).

Earlier scholarship (Schürer; Jeremias; Hengel) portrayed scribes during the NT era as lay Torah scholars who had taken over teaching and leadership roles from the *priests. More recently there have been challenges to various aspects of this scenario (Saldarini; Sanders; Schams), in which there is often criticism of the Gospel evidence as biased or inaccurate. However, it should be remembered that as a matter of literary necessity, the authors of the Gospels, like other writers of antiquity, generalized their portraits of larger groups. Although the Gospels do not attempt to provide a definitive, nuanced description of scribes, they do contribute to a balanced historical reconstruction.

1. Scribes in Second Temple Judaism
2. Scribes in the Synoptic Gospels
3. Conclusion

1. Scribes in Second Temple Judaism.

1.1. Recent Scholarship. C. Schams's comprehensive treatment of scribes in the Second Temple period provides a strong critique of previous scholarship and presents a general view of scribes as officials and writers. However, she acknowledges more specific nuances of function and status, including expertise in Scripture interpretation, that depend on linguistic and geographic factors. Despite a somewhat minimalistic approach, Schams contributes a helpful corrective and shows the growing diversification of scribal roles in the Roman period.

Recent work by R. Horsley (Horsley 2007; 2010), building on sociological models (cf. Saldarini), depicts scribes as "officials who assist the rulers in governing society," as well as guardians of Judea's "cultural repertoire" (Horsley 2007, 10). Due to imperial oppression and the competing factions of Jerusalem's ruling elite, scribes often were caught between service to their powerful patrons and being faithful to Jewish tradition and the commandments of God. This conflict sometimes resulted in a scribal resistance expressed through the writing of apocalyptic and wisdom texts. Although Horsley at times overemphasizes politics to the exclusion of theology, his contextualization of scribal roles in the Hellenistic and Roman periods provides a helpful background for the Gospels' depictions of scribes as both part of the central ruling establishment and teachers of the people.

1.2. Primary Evidence. The prominence of Ezra, identified repeatedly as both priest and scribe, exemplifies an increase in importance of scribes in the postexilic community (Ezra 7; Neh 8). Ezra's scribal role is defined by his study, doing and teaching of the Torah (Ezra 7:6, 10). The increasing significance of scribes is also perceptible in the work of the Chronicler where Levites are designated as *temple scribes (1 Chron 24:6; 2 Chron 34:13). Some Levites also assisted Ezra in Torah interpretation and teaching (Neh 8:7-9), suggesting that they too were scribes.

Ben Sira details scribal engagement with the wide range of authoritative Hebrew traditions (Sir 38:24-39:11), including the authoritative written texts of Israel (Sir, prologue). In addition to intense study and interpretation of sacred texts, Ben Sira claims for the scribe (and himself) divinely guided wisdom and prophetic teaching (Sir 24:33; 39:6-11), some of which was present in the book he wrote for the instruction of others (prologue). Although there is no evidence that Ben Sira was a priest, he belonged to the Jerusalem ruling establishment (Sir 39:4; 50:27), locates divine wisdom in the temple (Sir 24:8-11), and confirms the teaching and authority of the priesthood (Sir 45:17; 50).

Scribes are synonymous with Hasideans in 1 Maccabees 7:12-13, a distinct group of leading citizens loyal to the temple who may have been forefathers of the Pharisees (Kampen). Another Maccabean-era leading citizen and prominent scribe was the martyr Eleazar (2 Macc 6:18-31). His story is retold and expanded in the first-century A.D. Diaspora work 4 Maccabees (4 Macc 5-7), where he is called a "priest" but also is characterized as skilled in the law (4 Macc 5:4; Gk. nomikos). Since Luke uses nomikos synonymously for grammateus (Lk 11:45-53), the word likely had strong associations with scribal identity in the Jewish Diaspora, suggesting a blurring or overlap of priestly and scribal identities.

Despite the surprising rarity of the term sōpēr in the *Dead Sea Scrolls (only 11Q5 outside the biblical and Enochic manuscripts), most would view Qumran as something of a scribal community. The manuscripts show scribal activity beyond mere copying, including expansions, retellings of existing texts and production of new sectarian texts (Tov). Many view the leadership of Qumran to have been a rival priesthood to that in *Jerusalem, suggesting that it was a priestly-scribal group. A priestly-scribal overlap is also evident in Testament of Levi (T. Levi 8:17), where priests, judges and scribes come from Levi's offspring and possess teaching authority in the temple. It is likely that the writer behind this pseudepigraph himself was a priestly or Levitical scribe.

Apocalyptic literature portrays Enoch as a scribe, writer and authoritative figure (4Q203; 4Q206; 4Q530; 1 En. 12:4; 15:1; Jub. 4:17-26; T. Ab. [B] 11:3-4). Likewise, the names of eminent OT scribes Baruch and Ezra were used recurrently as pseudonyms. Both Ezra and Baruch are portrayed as authoritative writers (4 Ezra 14:19-48; 2 Bar. 77:11-87:1). The authors behind these pseudepigraphal works may have associated their texts with these scribal personalities as extensions of their own scribal identities (Orton, 77-120). Similarly, in the first-century A.D. Testament of Moses Moses uses scribal terminology and is identified as a great teacher (T. Mos. 1:15-18; 11:16). Targumic tradition confirms this perception by referring to him as "the great scribe" (Tg. Onq. Deut 33:21; cf. Mt 23:2).

Elsewhere in the *Targums scribes are portrayed as authorities and teachers in Israel (Tg. Onq. Gen 49:10; Num 21:18; Tg. Jon. Judg 5:9; Is 29:10; Hos 4:4). In Targum Jonathan the Aramaic sāpar (“scribe”) is often used in place of the MT’s nābi’ (“prophet” [1 Sam 10:5, 10-12; 19:20, 24; 28:15; 2 Kings 17:13; 23:2; Is 3:2; Ezek 22:25]). Many of these passages associate scribes with priests and other leaders (Is 3:2; 9:14; 28:7; Jer 6:13; 8:10; 14:18; 18:18; 23:11, 33-34; 26:7-8, 11, 16; 29:1; Ezek 7:26; Zech 7:3) and with prophetic characteristics, including insight regarding the future (Tg. Jon. 1 Sam 28:6, 15) (Hayward, 220-21). The Mishnah also contains numerous recollections of Second Temple sōpērīm as authoritative Torah experts and teachers (m. Pe’ah 2:6; m. ‘Or. 3:9; m. ‘Abot 6:9; m. Yebam. 2:4; 9:3; m. Sanh. 11:3; m. Kel. 13:7; m. Parah 11:4-6; m. Tehar. 4:7, 11; m. T. Yom 4:6; m. Yad. 3:2) and as officials (m. Ned. 9:2; m. Giṭ. 3:1; 7:2; 8:8; 9:8; m. Sanh. 4:3; 5:5). Although both the Mishnah and Targums Onqelos and Jonathan are later than the first century A.D., they contain some authentic strata that confirm and extend the trajectory of the first-century evidence.

Josephus locates teaching and judicial authority with the priests (Ag. Ap. 2.187) (see Sanders), but he also mentions nonpriestly teachers and group overlap (Life 1-10, 196-97). In Jewish Antiquities Josephus mostly follows the LXX use of grammateus, although his retelling of Ezra 7:24-25 (Ant. 11.128) suggests that he associated scribes with the temple leadership (cf. Ant. 12.142). His report concerning Eleazar (Ant. 20.208), both a scribe and son of the high priest, again illustrates the overlap of scribal and priestly roles (cf. J.W. 5.532). However, Josephus’s reference to “village scribes” (J.W. 1.479) shows the term’s broad range. Intriguing is his use of hierogrammateus, “sacred scribe” (Ant. 2.205, 209, 234, 243, 255; Ag. Ap. 1.289-90), which refers to Egyptian and Hebrew scribes known for predicting the future. Josephus reports that some of these rightly interpreted an astrological event over Jerusalem as a sign of coming judgment (J.W. 6.291 [cf. Mt 2:1-6]).

Josephus’s relative silence regarding scribes may be due to his Greco-Roman readership’s understanding of grammateus (see above). Josephus does use other terms, such as sophistēs (J.W. 1.648-56) and sophos (J.W. 6.313), a “wise or learned one,” that can at times be construed as a reference to scribes. However, if many scribes were in fact priests or Levites, Josephus may have simply preferred to call them “priests” and referred to nonpriestly scribes by party affiliation (Life 197).

There are few references to scribes in the NT outside the Synoptic Gospels. Paul refers once to scribes, paralleled with sages and debaters (1 Cor

1:20). John’s lone use (Jn 8:3) is in a passage not found in the earliest manuscripts and is thought by most to be a later interpolation. Whatever its origins (see Keith 2008), it conforms to a typical Synoptic scribe-Pharisee scene. Scribes appear five times in Acts, once in reference to a Greek clerk (Acts 19:35). In Acts 4:5; 6:12 they persecute the disciples along with the priests. However Gamaliel, called a nomodidaskalos (see 2.3 below), Pharisee and *Sanhedrin member, is portrayed more positively (Acts 5:34). This shift in Luke’s presentation of Pharisaic scribes comes full circle in Acts 23:9, where some of them defend Paul in the Sanhedrin.

2. Scribes in the Synoptic Gospels.

In the Synoptic Gospels terms referring to scribes occur sixty-five times. Scribes usually appear as a group and as associated with other groups, mainly the Pharisees and chief priests in different contexts (but these three are never portrayed together), in opposition to Jesus, who is highly critical of their hypocrisy and greed (Mt 23:1-12 // Mk 12:38-40 // Lk 20:45-47). Key to each evangelist’s portrait is how scribes are portrayed when they appear alone and how their relationship to associated groups is presented.

2.1. Mark. In Mark’s Gospel the Pharisees are the main opposition group to Jesus in Galilee. On two occasions where purity issues are being contested scribes appear with Pharisees. On one occasion they are referred to as scribes “of” the Pharisees (Mk 2:16), and on the other they are said to have come from Jerusalem (Mk 7:1-5; also Mk 3:22). The latter group could be the same scribes otherwise associated with the chief priests on numerous occasions. It is unclear whether or to what extent Mark is presenting the Jerusalem scribes as Pharisaic. It appears that Mark, unlike Matthew, does not wish to emphasize a Pharisaic connection with Jerusalem (only in Mk 12:13 do the Pharisees appear there) but links the Pharisees with Galilee and the scribes with Jerusalem (Mowery).

The Jerusalem priest-scribe (elder) alliance is always referred to either in the context of Jesus’ death (Mk 8:31; 10:33; 11:18, 27; 14:1, 43, 53; 15:1, 31) or where they challenge his *authority (Mk 11:15-19, 27-33). Jesus’ authority and Scripture interpretation are central issues whenever scribes are mentioned alone. In Mark 1:22 their teaching authority is questioned in comparison to that of Jesus, indicating that scribes functioned as the normative teachers of the people. Scribes alone question Jesus’ authority on other occasions (Mk 2:6; 3:22), while elsewhere Jesus engages them on questions of Scripture interpretation (Mk 9:11-13; 12:28-37). Two of the three scriptural issues have to do with particularly *eschatological questions (the identities of the coming Elijah and of the Messiah). Mark thus shows some differentiation between Pharisaic and Jerusalem scribes, but mostly he associates scribes with Jerusalem and Jesus' death, along with their lack of teaching authority and sometimes a wrong eschatological Scripture interpretation. They function literarily, according to E. Malbon, as "flat" and "bad" characters, defined by their opposition to Jesus.

2.2. Matthew. Matthew mentions scribes more than any other evangelist (23x), but his portrayal of scribes differs significantly from those of Mark and Luke. Matthew places scribes alongside the Pharisees in Jerusalem (Mt 23:2-34; cf. Mt 15:1) as objects of sharp criticism. Matthew's arrangement of this scene immediately before the lament over Jerusalem and the apocalyptic discourse insinuates that for Matthew these two groups in particular bear the responsibility for the eschatological judgment (Mt 23:35-36) or are representative of all Jewish leadership. Matthew also omits scribes several times where Mark includes them as part of the Jerusalem leadership (Mt 21:23; 26:3, 47; 27:1), suggesting that he wanted to distance scribes from those groups. Some view these tensions as indications that Matthew is not interested in distinguishing the groups but rather uses them interchangeably to generally represent Jewish leaders (Rivkin; van Tilborg, 6). However, D. Orton argues that this apparent tension is due rather to Matthew's desire to differentiate between the "scribes per se," of which he approves, and Pharisaic scribes, upon whom his most stringent criticism falls (Orton, 15-38).

Matthew also provides important unique material and significant redactions of scribal passages. Matthew alone narrates Herod's gathering of scribes and chief priests in response to the magi's report of the astrological sign of the Messiah's birth (Mt 2:4)—another instance of scribal involvement with eschatological interpretation and also recalling the sacred scribes of Josephus (see 1.2 above). He redacts Mark 1:22 from "the scribes" to "their scribes" (Mt 7:29), suggesting that scribes were known to have different affiliations, or that Jesus himself is perceived as a scribe (see Keith 2011, 180).

Three times Matthew presents scribes as followers of Jesus. First, a scribe is portrayed as a disciple of Jesus in Matthew 8:19, where Luke (Lk 9:57) omits grammateus. Second, Jesus designates his disciples as scribes who understand (Mt 13:52), a passage that some see as implying the evangelist's scribal identity (e.g., Orton). Similarly, in Matthew 23:34 Jesus promises to send "prophets, sages, and scribes," where the Lukan parallel reads "prophets and apostles" (Lk 11:49 [cf. Jer 18:18; Ezek 7:26 in the MT and the Targumim]). Earlier in the same chapter Matthew has recognized the legitimacy of scribes as sitting on Moses' seat (along with the Pharisees). D. Orton views the scribes in this passage, as well as those referred to in Matthew 17:10, whose interpretation of *Elijah Jesus has agreed with, as references to older, authoritative sōpërim, not the current Pharisaic group (Orton, 32-35). But by the end of the chapter (Mt 23:34) Matthew has made clear that only the scribe who is sent by Jesus retains this kind of authority. Matthew's arrangement and presentation of the woes may also serve as warnings to his Christian readers (see Mt 23:8-12) who have scribal-like roles (Garland, 212-15).

2.3. Luke. Luke follows much the same pattern as Mark, associating scribes with the Pharisees only in the Galilean and journey sections. Yet the pairing is much more prevalent in Luke. In Luke 5:17-21 Jesus' authority to forgive sins is questioned by Pharisees and scribes from all over Galilee and Judea, including Jerusalem, thus linking the scribes from all geographical locales. In Luke 5:30 the evangelist follows Mark (Mk 2:16) in explicitly designating these scribes as Pharisaic scribes, whose concerns are often centered on purity issues, and who sharply criticize Jesus for his identification with *sinners and outcasts (cf. Lk 7:34; 15:2). Scribes and Pharisees are also linked in encounters over the Sabbath (Lk 6:7; 14:3) and in Jesus' criticism of their rejection of John (Lk 7:30).

Luke provides some variation to the Synoptic scribal picture by using two synonyms of the standard grammateus: nomodidaskalos (Lk 5:17; cf. Acts 5:34 above) and nomikos (Lk 7:30; 10:25; 11:45-52; 14:3; cf. Mt 23:25). These are often translated as "teacher of the law" and "lawyer" respectively, but Luke makes clear in two contexts that the grammateis were the same group as the nomodidaskaloi and nomikoi (Lk 5:17-21; 11:45-53). The use of these terms may make more explicit for Luke's Gentile readers the role of scribes as teachers of Jewish *law (see 1.2 above on Eleazar in 4 Maccabees). Half of Luke's uses of nomikos are found in Luke 11:37-53, where he both associates and differentiates scribes and Pharisees so that Jesus speaks three woes to each group separately. The woes against the Pharisees deal with purity issues and hypocrisy, criticism that the scribes also receive (Lk 11:45), but the woes directed against the scribes center on their leadership and teaching failures (burdensome application of Torah, complicity in the killing of prophets, hindering the people from knowledge). The use of nomikos here may draw more attention to their role as teachers of Scripture. D. Gowler argues that Luke purposefully wants to distance the Pharisees from any association with Jesus' death, another reason why Luke may have kept the two groups separate.

The Pharisees disappear once Jesus reaches Jerusalem, but scribes continue to be present as part of the Jerusalem priestly-scribal alliance that challenges Jesus' authority (Lk 20:1) and plots his death (Lk 19:47; 20:19; 22:2, 66; 23:10). Luke mentions scribes alone only on two occasions (Lk 10:25-29; 20:39-44), both of these regarding Scripture interpretation. Luke thus appears to generalize the scribes more than the other evangelists, for the most part depicting them as antagonists of Jesus both with the Pharisees in Galilee and the priestly establishment in Jerusalem, but also singling them out as the teachers of Jewish Scripture (nomikoi) in Luke 11:45-53.

3. Conclusion.

From the village scribe of Josephus to the wisdom scribe of Ben Sira and the scribal authors behind the Qumran and apocalyptic texts, there was a broad range of Second Temple Jewish scribes. However, they shared in common a role as the keepers, interpreters and teachers of Israel's Scriptures and traditions that often led to their prominent roles in society and politics (Goodman). They were closely aligned with and, in many cases, overlapped with the priesthood and temple establishment, as well as with parties like the Pharisees, and their positions afforded them both religious and political authority. According to the Synoptics, Jesus criticized the scribes for abuse and neglect in this authority as well as for failing to rightly interpret the eschatological fulfillment of Scripture and recognize Jesus' messianic identity and authority. Nevertheless, Matthew maintains that there is still a role for the scribe disciplined in God's kingdom (Mt 13:52).

See also DEAD SEA SCROLLS; ELDERS; PHARISEES; PRIESTS AND PRIESTHOOD; SADDUCEES; TEACHER; TEMPLE.

BIBLIOGRAPHY. M. Bar-Ilan, "Writing in Ancient Israel and Early Judaism: Scribes and Books in the Late Second Commonwealth and Rabbinic Period," in Mikra: Text, Translation, Reading, and Interpretation of the Hebrew Bible in Ancient Judaism and Early Christianity, ed. M. J. Mulder and H. Sysling (CRINT 2; Philadelphia: Fortress, 1988) 21-38; M. J. Cook, Mark's Treatment of the Jewish Leaders (NovT-Sup 51; Leiden: E. J. Brill, 1978); D. E. Garland, The

Intention of Matthew 23 (NovT-Sup 52; Leiden: E. J. Brill, 1979); M. Goodman, "Texts, Scribes and Power in Roman Judaea," in Literacy and Power in the Ancient World, ed. A. K. Bowman and G. Woolf (Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 1994) 99-108; D. B. Gowler, "Hospitality and Characterization in Luke 11:37-54: A Socio-Narratological Approach," Semeia 64 (1994) 213-51; R. Hayward, "Some Notes on Scribes and Priests in the Targum of the Prophets," JJS 36 (1985) 210-21; M. Hengel, Judaism and Hellenism: Studies in Their Encounter in Palestine During the Early Hellenistic Period, trans. J. Bowden (Philadelphia: Fortress, 1974); R. A. Horsley, Scribes, Visionaries, and the Politics of Second Temple Judea (Louisville: Westminster John Knox, 2007); idem, Revolt of the Scribes: Resistance and Apocalyptic Origins (Minneapolis: Fortress, 2010); J. Jeremias, Jerusalem in the Time of Jesus: An Investigation into Economic and Social Conditions During the New Testament Period, trans. F. H. Cave and C. H. Cave (Philadelphia: Fortress, 1969); J. Kampen, The Hasideans and the Origin of Pharisaism: A Study in 1 and 2 Maccabees (SBLSCS 24; Atlanta: Scholars Press, 1988); C. Keith, "Recent and Previous Research on the Pericope Adulterae (John 7:53-8.11)," CurBS 6 (2008) 377-404; idem, Jesus' Literacy: Scribal Culture and the Teacher from Galilee (LNTS 413; New York: T & T Clark, 2011); D. Lührmann, "Die Pharisäer und die Schriftgelehrten im Markusevangelium," ZNW 78 (1987) 169-85; E. S. Malbon, "The Jewish Leaders in the Gospel of Mark: A Literary Study of Marcan Characterization," JBL 108 (1989) 259-81; R. L. Mowery, "Pharisees and Scribes, Galilee and Jerusalem," ZNW 80 (1989) 266-68; D. E. Orton, The Understanding Scribe: Matthew and the Apocalyptic Ideal (London: T & T Clark, 1989); E. Rivkin, "Scribes, Pharisees, Lawyers, Hypocrites: A Study in Synonymity," HUCA 49 (1978) 135-42; A. J. Saldarini, Pharisees, Scribes and Sadducees in Palestinian Society: A Sociological Approach (Wilmington, DE: Michael Glazier, 1988); E. P. Sanders, Judaism: Practice and Belief, 63 BCE-66 CE (Philadelphia: Trinity Press International, 1992); C. Schams, Jewish Scribes in the Second-Temple Period (JSOTSup 291; Sheffield: Sheffield Academic Press, 1998); E. Schürer, The History of the Jewish People in the Age of Jesus Christ (175 B.C.-A.D. 135), vol. 2, rev. and ed. G. Vermes, F. Millar and M. Black (Edinburgh: T & T Clark, 1979); E. Tov, "The Scribes of the Texts Found in the Judean Desert," in The Quest for Context and Meaning: Studies in Biblical Intertextuality in Honor of James A. Sanders, ed. C. A. Evans and S. Talmon (BIS 28; Leiden: E. J. Brill, 1997) 131-52; S. van Tilborg, The Jewish Leaders in Matthew

(Leiden: E. J. Brill, 1972); S. Westerholm, Jesus and Scribal Authority (ConBNT 10; Lund: Gleerup, 1978.)
G. Thellman

SECRET GOSPEL OF MARK. See GOSPELS:
APOCRYPHAL.

SECTARIANISM. See SOCIAL-SCIENTIFIC
CRITICISMS.

SECTS, JEWISH. See ESSENES; PHARISEES.

SEMITICISMS. See LANGUAGES OF JESUS.

SERMON ON THE MOUNT/PLAIN

“Sermon on the Mount” is the name traditionally given to the collection of Jesus’ teaching in Matthew 5:3–7:27, which is the longest teaching discourse in the NT (cf. four other such collections in Matthew: Mt 10:1–42; 13:1–53; 18:1–35; 24:1–25:46). The name originates from a commentary, De sermone Domini in monte (On the Lord’s Sermon on the Mount), which Augustine of Hippo wrote at the end of the fourth century A.D. A similar but much shorter version found in Luke 6:20–49 is called “Sermon on the Plain.”

Arguably the most quoted text from the NT, the Sermon has produced diverse interpretations in every aspect. Most of these discussions have centered around questions related to the Sermon’s literary and theological nature, such as whether it addresses only Jesus’ disciples or a wider group, whether it concerns law or ethics, whether the primary theme is the promise of grace or a stern warning of impending judgment, whether it presents an unrealistic ideal or doable commands, whether its style and tone reflect Greek or Jewish cultural contexts, and much more. Historical questions have also drawn their share of scholarly attention. What are the historical and cultural contexts of the Sermon’s composition? What is the historical relationship between the Sermon on the Mount and Sermon on the Plain, and what does it imply for the questions related to their source and tradition history? Does the Sermon originally come from the historical Jesus?

1. The Sermon on the Mount (Mt 5:3–7:27)
2. The Sermon on the Plain (Lk 6:20–49)
3. Historicity of the Sermon

1. The Sermon on the Mount (Mt 5:3–7:27).

1.1. Sociohistorical Context. The general scholarly consensus is that Matthew was written in a city in Israel in A.D. 80–90. This suggests three important aspects of the sociohistorical context of Matthew the evangelist and his primary audience. First, the weight of Roman Empire’s political, economic and cultural power was a fact of life for people living under the Roman occupation, and the Matthean community was no exception (see Rome). The presence of imperial officials and soldiers, imperial buildings, temples of *gods and goddesses, statutes of emperors, coins with images and words (e.g., Judea capta, “Judea captured”) praising imperial power, all of which people encountered in their daily life, advertised the imperial ideology: Rome was the benefactor and savior of the occupied people; these inferior peoples were to become civilized as a result of their occupation (Carter 2001). Second, after Roman soldiers destroyed *Jerusalem and its *temple, the *priests and the *Sadducees lost their leadership, and the *Pharisaic group became the dominant leaders in Israel. At the same time, several other Jewish groups, including the Matthean community, were competing to claim to be the true Israel loyal to God in the process of reformulating Jewish identity (Overman; Saldarini; Talbert). The parting of the ways between Christianity and *Judaism had not yet happened; the Matthean community, as a part of the formative Judaism, was in conflict with other Jews (especially the Pharisees), who did not believe that Jesus was the Messiah. Third, in an urban setting exposed to various ethnicities, religions and cultures, the Matthean community, as they formulated their identity as the true *Israel, had to be sensitive about their relationship to non-Jewish peoples.

1.2. Literary Context: Setting and Structure. Matthew’s Gospel begins by introducing the messianic identity of Jesus as the true Israel (“son of Abraham” [Mt 1:1]), the new *Moses who will save his people (“Jesus” [Mt 1:21]), the true king of the Jews (“son of David” [Mt 1:1], against King Herod [Mt 2:1–22] who received the title “king of the Jews” from the Roman emperor), and the embodiment of God’s presence (“Emmanuel” [Mt 1:23]) (see Incarnation). After going through two rites of passage revealing his true sonship with God—*baptism by *John the Baptist (Mt 3:13–17) and testing by the devil (Mt 4:1–11)—Jesus is ready to begin his ministry. Preceding the Sermon on the Mount (hereafter SM) is a brief summary of Jesus’ activity of teaching the good news of God’s *kingdom, recruiting *disciples and *healing many sick people (Mt 4:17–25). After the sermon itself Matthew reports on Jesus’ various healing events (Mt 8–9).

1.2.1. Setting. Before presenting the SM, the evangelist provides a brief remark about to whom and where Jesus spoke (Mt 4:25–5:2a). After a statement that huge crowds (see People, Crowd) followed Jesus from all around Palestine (Mt 4:25), the evangelist describes the setting with three parallel sentences. They are connected with “and” (kai), and each sentence includes one past (aorist tense) participle and one past (aorist tense) verb, suggesting the order of six movements: Jesus saw the crowds, he went up to the *mountain (Mt 5:1a); he sat down, his disciples approached him (Mt 5:1b); he opened his mouth, he taught “them” (Mt 5:2a). In this seemingly well-organized description the reader finds the problem of ambiguity about the word “them” in Matthew 5:2a. To whom does “them” refer? Does it refer to the disciples, the crowds, or both? The last answer seems to be the most plausible. First, regarding the reaction of the audience at the end of the SM, Matthew reports that the crowds recognized Jesus’ extraordinary authority and were amazed by his teaching (Mt 7:28–29). Second, in the next sentence Matthew says that the crowds followed Jesus when he came down from the mountain (Mt 8:1). Given that “following” is an essential element for discipleship in this Gospel (e.g., Mt 4:18–22), one may well say that the crowds, whose following of Jesus is repeatedly described, are potential disciples. The “them” refers to both the disciples and the crowds, who are potential disciples (Talbert, 13).

In Matthew’s Gospel “mountain” is an important motif (see Mt 17:1; 28:6). It is on a mountain that Jesus reveals his identity in the *transfiguration (Mt 17:1), and that the risen Jesus commissions his eleven disciples to make disciples of all the world (Mt 28:16). In the OT Moses receives the Torah (the teachings of God’s will) for Israel on the mountain of Horeb (Ex 19–24). In Matthew’s Gospel Jesus, the new Moses, teaches the true meaning of the Torah for the prospective and current disciples on a mountain.

1.2.2. Structure. There are various scholarly proposals regarding the SM’s structure. Often the proposal is made on the basis of popular modes of Jewish and Hellenistic literature such as chiasm (Luz; Patte), triads or other number patterns (Allison 1999; Stassen 2003; Betz), Greek education (Betz), and so on. Despite diversity of opinion, scholars generally agree that the SM consists of three parts: introduction (Mt 5:3–16), body (Mt 5:17–7:12), conclusion (Mt 7:13–27).

1.3. Analysis and Interpretation.

1.3.1. Introduction (Mt 5:3–16). As a poetic abstract of the SM, the introduction sets out its major themes: (1) the good news of the kingdom of God to the marginalized, who suffer from the absence of righteousness; (2) the expectation that these marginalized are to pursue righteousness as the role models of the members befitting God’s kingdom. The introduction consists of two units. The first unit consists of nine beatitudes, although H. Betz, author of a classic commentary on the SM, counts ten, uniquely seeing two beatitudes in the ninth one. The second unit consists of two metaphorical exhortations.

1.3.1.1. Beatitudes. The word “beatitude” comes from the Latin Vulgate translation of the Greek makarios, and so a beatitude is also called a “macarism.” Its plural form, the “Beatitudes,” has become the customary name for Matthew 5:3–12 and its parallel in Luke 6:20–23. A macarism is a declarative and congratulatory statement about God’s beneficial action to a person. Each of the nine beatitudes is a declaration of God’s promise to the marginalized, giving assurance that God’s kingdom belongs to them (see Allison 1999, 30).

Some scholars find a triad (3 x 3) in the nine beatitudes (e.g., Allison 1999), but the general consensus is that the first eight beatitudes are neatly divided into two sets of four (Mt 5:3–6; 7–10), and the ninth one (Mt 5:11–12) is a literary hinge that connects the beatitudes to the following metaphor. There are several literary features that support the idea of two sets of four beatitudes. First, all of the first eight beatitudes refer to the addressees with the third-person plural (Mt 5:3–10), whereas the ninth beatitude refers to the addressees with the second-person plural (Mt 5:11–12). Second, the first (Mt 5:3) and the eighth (Mt 5:10) beatitudes end with the identical phrase “for theirs is the kingdom of heaven,” bookending the first eight beatitudes. Third, each set of four beatitudes has exactly thirty-six words in Greek. Fourth, each word referring to the addressees in the first set begins with Greek letter pi. Fifth, each set seems to have a coherent theme. For example, some scholars find that the first four deal with the disciples’ vertical relationship, and the second four with a horizontal relationship (e.g., Talbert). Others find that the first four deal with the marginalized, who are, in difficult conditions, passively waiting for the coming of God’s kingdom, while the second four deal with those who actively work for the coming of God’s kingdom (e.g., Estrada, 188; Powell).

It is important to note that the two phrases “kingdom of heaven” and “righteousness” are used twice in the beatitudes. They obviously are key concepts not only in the beatitudes but also in the SM as a whole. The location of the terms in the beatitudes is conspicuous. “Kingdom of heaven” appears in the beginning and ending of the first eight beatitudes (Mt 5:3, 10). “Righteousness” appears in the ending of each of the two sets of four beatitudes (Mt 5:6, 10). Furthermore, the frequent appearance of the two terms signifies their significant roles in the SM. The term “kingdom of heaven” and its equivalent expressions, such as “kingdom of God” and “your [God’s] kingdom,” appear eight times (Mt 5:3, 10, 19 [2x], 20; 6:10, 33; 7:31); the term “righteousness” appears five times (Mt 5:6, 10, 20; 6:1, 33).

1.3.1.2. Kingdom of Heaven. “Kingdom of heaven” is Matthew’s favorite term for the kingdom of God. What is the “kingdom of God” or “kingdom of heaven” in Matthew? It is clearly contrasted with human kingdoms, in which the audience of the SM, and also Matthew’s audience, experience daily the systemic injustice of the Roman imperial world. The Romans claimed sovereignty over the land, people and resources in the world that they occupied. The ruling classes of the occupied land, such as dispatched officials, client kings and local elites, entangled in the patron-client system, supported the imperial ideology. Deprived of their proper resources, land and dignity under the Roman Empire, ordinary people suffered materially, physically and spiritually. Matthew points out the imperial injustice throughout his Gospel, usually implicitly, but also in some explicit statements. “Herod, the client king of Rome in Judea, massacres all of the infant boys in Bethlehem in an attempt to kill the infant Jesus (Mt 2:1-18), the God-sent rival king of Jews (Mt 2:2). His son Archelaus, who inherited the rulership of Judea, is also a threat to Jesus and Israel (Mt 2:21-23). Antipas the tetrach, another son of Herod, kills John the Baptist (Mt 14:1-12).

In contrast, the kingdom of God is a totally new world and qualitatively different from “all the kingdoms of the world,” which are in the devil’s hands (Mt 4:9). The kingdom of God is a reversal of the kingdoms of the earth (Mt 17:25), whose great kings are tyrants (Mt 20:25), because God the “great king” (Mt 5:35) is the God of *love and *mercy. Debts are forgiven (Mt 18:21-35), and all the marginalized are invited to enjoy the abundant life (Mt 22:1-14). The imperial agents proclaim the oppressive control of Rome as the good news of Pax Romana, but God’s agent Jesus proclaims the kingdom of God as the good news of *salvation from the imperial oppression and also embodies it in his ministry (see Gospel: Good News).

1.3.1.3. Righteousness. The Gospel of Matthew uses the term “righteousness” (dikaïosynē) seven times (Mt 3:15; 5:6, 10, 20; 6:1, 33; 21:32), none of which has a parallel in other Gospels. What does

Matthew mean by “righteousness”? In the OT and early Jewish literature, when used for human character and behavior, “righteousness” and its related words refer to one’s ethical response to God by obeying and doing God’s righteous will. Matthew uses these words in the same way (see Luz, 237-38; Davies and Allison, 452-53; Betz, 190). Earlier in the Gospel narrative, when John the Baptist hesitates to baptize Jesus, believing himself to be unworthy, Jesus convinces him by saying that doing so is the way to fulfill all righteousness (Mt 3:11). Being among the words of the very first sentence that Jesus speaks in Matthew’s Gospel, “righteousness” reveals the most characteristic feature of who Jesus is: Jesus, the Messiah, is the *Son of God, who humbly obeys the will of God. For Matthew, humble obedience to God’s will is not only the core essence of Christology, but also of discipleship. In the SM, therefore, Jesus highlights the importance of righteousness, doing God’s will thoroughly (Mt 5:20; 5:48), for those who long for the kingdom of God (see Davies and Allison, 499, Betz, 130; Powell).

Each of the addressees of the first four beatitudes refers to the marginalized: “the poor in spirit,” “who mourn,” “the meek,” “who hunger and thirst for righteousness.” In the Bible “the poor” denotes a broader category than just the financially impoverished. It refers to those who are economically, socially or politically marginalized, for whom God is the only one who can help (see Rich and Poor). What, then, does Matthew mean by adding “in spirit” to “the poor” (Mt 5:3)? The same expression, “the poor in spirit,” is found in a Qumran document, where it is contrasted with a “hardened heart” (1QM XIV, 7). Assuming that Matthew must use the phrase in exactly the same way as in 1QM XIV, 7, some scholars suggest that “the poor in spirit” in Matthew 5:3 refers not to “the economically marginalized” but rather to “the humble in heart” (Talbert, 51; Luz, 233-34; cf. Davies and Allison, 443-44). This interpretation, however, is unconvincing. Even if the phrase “the poor in spirit” has a connotation of humbleness, it does not necessarily exclude the fundamental semantic value about the oppressed and marginalized condition embedded in the term “the poor.” As Betz says, “The characterization of Matt 5:3a as ‘spiritualization’ and as a softening of Jesus’ original radicalism . . . is misleading” (Betz, 115). The poor in spirit are, then, the people whose spirits or hearts are crushed by their suffering from unjust marginalization. From the socio-historical and literary context of Matthew, it is not difficult to identify who are the poor in spirit. They are the women and men who come to Jesus from all over to be healed and to follow him (Mt 4:18-22). They suffer from all kinds of illnesses because “they bear in their very bodies the harmful effects of the imperial system,” especially the deprivation of human dignity and of material and spiritual resources under the weight of imperial rule, and because “there is no hope for change” (Carter 2000, 132). The poor in spirit, therefore, mourn the social system that runs against God’s will (Mt 5:4). They are meek because they have none in the world to rely on but God (Mt 5:5). They hunger and thirst for righteousness because their daily life is full of injustice (Mt 5:6) (see Betz, 129). It is to these marginalized people, Jesus proclaims, that God’s kingdom belongs (Mt 5:3), and in this kingdom their lowly status will be reversed. They no longer need to mourn, for God comforts them. They are no longer deprived of resources, for God provides them (cf. Ps 37:11 [in Heb. the “meek” [ʾānāwīm] are the poor]). They no longer need to hunger and thirst for the system running in accordance with God’s righteous will, for the life in God’s kingdom is filled with righteousness.

The second set of four beatitudes changes the focus from the human condition that will be reversed in God’s kingdom to human action that manifests the life of God’s kingdom. All of the first three actions mentioned—showing mercy, keeping integrity, peacemaking (Mt 5:7, 8, 9)—are part of “righteousness,” that is, obeying God’s righteous will. Because all of these actions of righteousness are in contrast with the ideology of the imperial system and human kingdoms, they bring persecution (Mt 5:10). As in the first set of beatitudes, those who are doing God’s righteous will are promised God’s eschatological reward.

The second set of beatitudes strongly reveals the connection of Christology and discipleship (pace Betz). An obvious example is the theme of mercy, which Matthew highlights throughout his Gospel. In contrast to those who exploit people with political and socioeconomic power (Roman officials and local elites) or those who oppress them with socio-religious power (the Pharisees and scribes), the Matthean Jesus mercifully heals those people damaged by merciless power. People ask mercy of Jesus (Mt 9:27; 15:22; 17:15; 20:30-31), and he shows it to them. Jesus quotes what God says in Hosea 6:6, “I desire mercy, not sacrifice,” on two occasions to correct the merciless Pharisaic leaders (Mt 9:13; 12:7; cf. 23:23). Jesus teaches his disciples to practice mercy as God shows mercy (Mt 18:33). Jesus is persecuted by local elites and killed by Roman officials, but the Son of God was raised by God’s mercy and given “all authority in heaven and earth” (Mt 28:18). As Jesus the Son of God was merciful, so all the disciples are to be merciful, and they will be called “children of God” (Mt 5:9).

The ninth beatitude (Mt 5:11-12), which is addressed to “you” (a second-person plural), functions as a hinge in three ways. First, beginning with this beatitude, Jesus addresses “you” throughout the SM, and the powerful effect of this direct address on his audience, as well as Matthew’s audience, is obvious. Second, repeating the theme of persecution from the preceding beatitude, it prepares the audience to understand the not-so-easy journey of discipleship, which is at the same time immensely rewarding and thus actually something to celebrate. Third, as both macarism and exhortation, it prepares for the next metaphors, which both commend the disciples and exhort them to keep their integrity.

The metaphors of salt and light (Mt 5:13-16) express the important role of the disciples in the world and their accountability. They are indispensable in the world, like salt, which is an essential necessity for human life (see Sir 39:26), and “light, which brightens darkness. Bearing such important roles, they need to keep their integrity (“not becoming ‘foolish’ salt” that has lost its identity in Mt 5:13) and should be role models for others.

Matthew’s consistent and emphatic reference to God as “your Father” (Mt 5:16, 45, 48; 6:1, 4, 6, 8, 9 [“our Father”], 14, 15, 18, 26, 32; 7:11, 21) in the SM no doubt reflects the context of Matthew. An important question for the reader is for what purpose Matthew highlights God as “your/our” Father. Given the SM’s consistent connection of God’s fatherhood to “heaven” (“the heavenly Father” [Mt 5:48; 6:14, 26, 32], “Father in heaven” [Mt 5:16, 45; 6:1, 9; 7:11, 21]), Matthew may well contrast heavenly God with the earthly emperor. “Conjoining imperial and patriarchal power, [the title ‘Father’] was commonly used of Jupiter/J Zeus . . . and emperors such as Augustus and Vespasian. It denoted origin, kinship, loyalty, and protection” (Carter 2000, 139 [see also D’Angelo; cf. Sheffield]). In Matthew, then, the Father in heaven has a political connotation. Against the emperor’s image of an oppressive and exploitative father, Matthew paints an image of God as the true father, who loves and protects his children with grace.

1.3.2. Body (Mt 5:17–7:12). The body consists of several units and subunits and includes a few thematically interrelated literary hinges: true righteousness (5:20); true righteousness as love originating from God (5:48); the Lord’s “prayer” (6:9-13); and the Golden Rule (7:12). Some hinges are, as a succinct abstract of the preceding unit, transitional summaries (5:20, 48; 7:12), but the Lord's Prayer (6:9-13) takes a special role as the centerpiece of the SM.

1.3.2.1. Matthew 5:17-20. As its introduction, 5:17-20 presents the major themes of the body (5:21-7:12): (1) Jesus' teaching is about fulfilling God's will, which is represented in the Jewish scriptural traditions (Law [Hebrew: Torah] and Prophets); and (2) true righteousness is the way to enter God's kingdom.

1.3.2.2. Matthew 5:21-48. Traditionally, this section has been called the "antitheses." This title is inappropriate because it reflects the problematic interpretation that Jesus rejects the Jewish law that he quotes from the OT and provides a new law to the Christians. This is an incorrect and unethical interpretation. First, not all of Jesus' quotations are from the OT. The quotation about divorce, "Whoever divorces his wife, let him give her a certificate of divorce" (Mt 5:31), is not exactly what Deuteronomy 24:1-4 says. The Deuteronomy text is about the prohibition of remarriage with one's ex-wife, and in describing the context, the text mentions the certificate, but not as something that one is required to do. Also, the quotation about the commandment to hate one's enemy (Mt 5:43) is not found anywhere in the OT. Those quotations, then, seem to reflect some popular oral traditions in first-century A.D. Jewish society in Palestine. Second, this interpretation assumes the complete separation between Judaism and Christianity by the time of Matthew's composition. As current scholarship increasingly suggests, however, the parting of the ways had not yet occurred, and the Matthean community was a part of formative Judaism (see 1.1 above). Third, the interpretation implies supersessionism that has unethically instigated anti-Judaism. Since he claims to have come to fulfill the Torah (Mt 5:17), Jesus does not reject the Jewish Torah. Instead, Jesus teaches, using six examples or case studies of popular understandings of righteousness, the life of true righteousness (Mt 5:20, 48) that "the children of God" (Mt 5:9, 45; cf. Mt 7:11) must pursue.

Although some scholars see this section as polemical or debate material (e.g., Betz, 173-97), this section shows a well-designed, experience-based teaching on one's relationship with other people for the crowds and disciples. G. Stassen offers helpful language in describing the consistent teaching pattern that Jesus uses in the six case studies. Jesus begins with a popular or conventional understanding of righteousness, which the crowds and the disciples witness, practice or expect in their daily life. Then he offers a "diagnosis of a vicious cycle" that the conventional righteousness incurs. Finally, he explains a different kind of righteousness as a "transforming initiative," which stops the vicious cycle and leads to a life befitting God's kingdom (Stassen 2006).

Anger (Mt 5:21-26), man's lust or abandoning one's wife on the basis of seeing women as sex objects or dispensable objects (Mt 5:27-32), dishonesty (Mt 5:33-37), retaliation "between persons of unequal power and status" (Mt 5:38-42) (see Reid, 244), discrimination against outsiders—that is, those who are not kin or friends or who are debtors (Mt 5:43-48) (see Betz, 591-92)—incur a vicious cycle that leads to a hate-based, violent world and ultimately to hell (cf. 4 Ezra 7:36; 2 Bar. 59:10; 83:13) rather than to God's kingdom at the last judgment (Mt 5:22, 29-30). In contrast, reconciliation, respecting the dignity of everyone, integrity, forgiveness, love for outsiders and debtors will stop the vicious cycle of the daily life and transform the world into a place of love and forgiveness. It is through these acts that children of God (Mt 5:45) will be rewarded (Mt 5:46). Jesus assures that true righteousness is possible because it comes from God (Mt 5:45-48; cf. Deut 30:11-19).

1.3.2.3. Matthew 6:1-18. At the end of the preceding section Jesus mentions a reward for righteousness in relation to others (Mt 5:46). In this section Jesus teaches on personal righteousness in relation to God and the reward from God, "your Father" (Mt 6:1, 4, 6 [2x], 8, 15, 18 [2x]). The point is that only genuine righteousness, not hypocritical righteousness, will be rewarded by "your Father" in heaven.

The teaching includes three examples of practicing "righteousness" (dikaïosynē, translated as "piety" in some English Bibles) in one's relationship with God: almsgiving (Mt 6:2-4), prayer (Mt 6:5-8 [plus the Lord's Prayer in Mt 6:9-13]) and *fasting (Mt 6:16-18). Similar to the six examples on one's relationship with other people in the preceding section (Mt 5:21-48), the teaching uses a consistent pedagogical pattern. It begins with a criticism of hypocrites who purposely draw public attention when giving alms, praying and fasting. Then Jesus determines that they have already received their "reward" (Gk. misthos [Mt 6:1, 2, 5, 16]) from public recognition, implying that they will not get any reward from God. Next Jesus exhorts his audience to give alms, pray and fast privately, without any public display. Jesus concludes with a promise: "Your Father will give [apodidōmi] you your appropriate reward" (Mt 6:4, 6, 18; cf. Mt 5:26, 33; 12:36; 16:27; 18:25, 26, 28, 29, 30, 34; 20:8; 21:41; 22:21; 27:58).

Does Jesus' use of "hypocrites" (Mt 6:2, 5, 16) in this section refer to a specific group? Both literary and historical contexts may well suggest the Pharisees. Historically, the Matthean community experienced conflicts with the Pharisaic group, which gained power after the destruction of the temple. Later in the Gospel Matthew includes a collection of Jesus' harsh words against the Pharisees and scribes in which he criticizes them as hypocrites (Mt 23:13, 15, 23, 25, 27, 29) who teach about the will of God (i.e., righteousness) but fail to practice it (Mt 23:3). Jesus also calls the Pharisees "hypocrites" in other places (Mt 15:7; 22:18). It is also notable that in setting out the central theme of righteousness in the introduction to the body of the SM, Jesus singles out the "righteousness" of the Pharisees and scribes as inadequate for God's kingdom (Mt 5:20).

The subsection on prayer (Mt 6:5-15) in this passage is unique because it includes additional material (Mt 6:7-15): the Lord's Prayer (Mt 6:9-13) and a teaching on *forgiveness (Mt 6:14-15). On the one hand, the additional material shares the same format with the three examples of almsgiving, prayer and fasting, moving from a criticism of ineffective prayer (Mt 6:7-8), to an explanation of what constitutes desirable prayer (Mt 6:9-13), and finally to a promise of a reward from God (Mt 6:14-15). On the other hand, there are multiple differences between the additional material and the preceding example on prayer. In Matthew 6:5-6 two opposite kinds of praying are contrasted between the Pharisaic group and Jesus' community, thus within Jewish people, but in the Lord's Prayer the contrast is between non-Jewish people ("Gentiles" [Mt 6:7]) and Jesus' community as Jewish people. In the former, the wrongness of the inadequate prayer is not the content of the prayer, but rather the desire to receive public attention. In the latter, it is the content and theological assumptions: the use of too many words, as if God can be manipulated into listening. Jesus says that since "your" Father, the God of Israel, knows already what people need even before they ask, they do not even need to mention it (cf. Is 65:24).

The Lord's Prayer consists of two parts. The first part includes three petitions regarding God ("you"), and the second part includes three petitions regarding the petitioning community ("we"). The major debate in the history of interpretation has been whether the prayer is eschatological or not, and recent scholarship has moved toward the eschatological interpretation. It is important, however, to recognize that in the NT the eschatological kingdom of God contains both present and future aspects, and the Lord's Prayer petitions for both the present kingdom of God, already launched, and its culmination in the future (Betz, 377-82; Davies and Allison, 590-614; cf. Luz, 373-85).

In the human kingdoms of the petitioning community people do not recognize the sacredness of God's name; rather, they worship the names of those who rule over them, such as emperors, kings and mammon. The human kingdom of the Roman Empire does not obey God's will of love, mercy and justice. Instead, it exploits God's people, oppresses them, and causes them to accumulate debts. With this characteristically and thoroughly Jewish prayer, very similar to other Jewish prayers (e.g., Kaddish, Eighteen Benedictions), God's people as a community ("we") invoke God to bring about the kingdom, where the sacred name of God the Great King is honored, where people thoroughly obey God's righteous will, where people are free of hunger and debt and are rescued from all evil (see Carter 2000, 162-68). While longing for this new, everlasting world, God's people petition for help not to succumb to daily temptation, as well as to the end-time tribulation, and to be deemed fit to enter the kingdom at the final judgment.

1.3.2.4. Matthew 6:19-7:12. Whereas scholars generally agree with the division of the several units in this section, there is no consensus about the structural relationship among the units. The widely diverse proposals range from a suggestion that there are eight separate units without any cohesive structure (e.g., Betz, 423) to a proposal of a well-organized structure (e.g., Allison 1999; Talbert). An alternative is to see that each unit is loosely connected to the others as an elaboration of the life that God's people who pray the Lord's Prayer are to practice. In this interpretation the "Gentiles" (ethnikoi [Mt 5:47; 6:7] and ethnē [Mt 6:32], meaning "nations" or "peoples") may be understood not to mean all the peoples who are not Jews, but rather those who promote and are committed to the imperial ideology instead of to "God's kingdom and God's righteous will" (Mt 6:33).

Matthew 6:19-34 focuses on the importance of the genuine commitment to God's righteous will, and not to "mammon" (NRSV: "wealth" [Mt 6:24]), a personification of uncontrollable greed for wealth and materialism. The Gentiles, by serving mammon, are controlled by the discourse of human kingdoms and imperial ideology. They are continually anxious to compete with each other for more treasure and better food, better drink and better clothes, and they "worry about tomorrow" daily. God's children must not adopt this lifestyle. They do not need to be anxious and worry about anything, because their good Father in heaven always knows what they need and provides it (Mt 6:25-34). Instead, they should strive first for God's kingdom and God's righteous will (Mt 6:33-34) by praying for the kingdom of God and living a life befitting God's kingdom, as Jesus has taught (see Davies and Allison, 661; Betz, 483). Jesus teaches that anyone whose heart is turned toward mammon rather than God will have a life full of darkness (Mt 6:22-23) and ceaseless anxiety (Mt 6:25-26), and any wealth that such a person accumulates is prone to be lost (Mt 6:19-21). A greedy heart cannot serve God; it can serve only mammon. A righteous heart can serve only God.

In Matthew 7:1-5 we learn that the privilege of being children of the heavenly Father does not mean that they may play God. God is the one who judges, and at the end time Jesus will judge everyone and separate the "righteous"—those who are worthy for the eschatological kingdom and everlasting life—from those designated fit for everlasting punishment (see Mt 25:31-46). The community of disciples is among those who will be judged, and not among those who may judge others. Instead of judging, one may help another to correct a fault only after examining one's own faults and removing them first.

In Matthew 7:6 does Jesus, after issuing a mandate not to judge, say that one should judge those who are referred to as "dogs" and "swine" and deny them what is holy (Mt 7:1-5)? Many commentators say that due to the lack of context, the verse is impossible to interpret (Luz, 418-19; Betz, 454). Others interpret it variously as, for example, a prohibition of mission or teaching to outsiders (Davies and Allison, 676) or advice not to correct those who reject one's kind correction (Carter 2000, 182).

Given that the terms "dogs" and "swine" were widely used to express hostility and contempt for enemies or outsiders (Lev 11:7; Prov 11:22; Mt 15:26), and that "pearls" refers to the kingdom in Matthew 13:45-46, one may interpret that the pearls are people of God, the members of God's kingdom, while the dogs and swine are the "Gentiles" who support the imperial ideology. In this interpretation the metaphor in Matthew 7:6 may be an exhortation not to buy into the imperial ideology and those who are committed to it, for they will not provide peace and prosperity, but rather will bring harm and destruction. In other words, "7:6 is exactly about a temptation, . . . the temptation to place our trust and loyalty in the promises of advancement and security afforded by the power structures and values of the Roman Empire" (Stassen 2003, 302).

Matthew 7:7-11 assures us that with continuous prayer and trust to God, the good Father, the community of disciples will be able to practice a life befitting God's kingdom (Betz, 501-2; Luz, 424; Carter 2000, 183).

The "therefore" in Matthew 7:12 signifies that the Golden Rule, with its inclusion of the "law and prophets" (Mt 5:17; 7:12), concludes the material that began at Matthew 5:17. Jesus identifies the Golden Rule as the Torah and the prophets—that is, the will of God (cf. Mt 7:21-23; 22:40). J. Wattles correctly emphasizes that, as a rule of reciprocity, the Golden Rule must be interpreted in its context. It is important to note that in Matthew the Golden Rule is located right after the passage on God as the loving Father who generously provides good things when the children ask. "The Golden Rule does not presuppose as its foundation divine or human retaliation but God's initiative of generosity, forbearance, and forgiveness. The disciples are to imitate this divine initiative in the hope that the people who they thus treat will respond in kind" (Betz, 518).

1.3.3. Conclusion (Mt 7:13-27). The conclusion of the SM concerns eschatological judgment, in congruence with the other four teaching discourses (Mt 10:37-42; 13:47-50; 18:23-35; 25:31-46). The point of the conclusion is that those who pursue true righteousness in accordance with Jesus' teaching will be led to life, while those who do not will be led to destruction and death (cf. Lev 26; Deut 11:26; 30:15-20; Jer 21:8). The conclusion starts with a general *parable (Mt 7:13-14), moves to a parable related to a specific example (Mt 7:15-23), and then returns to a general parable (Mt 7:24-27).

1.3.3.1. Parable of Two Gates (Mt 7:13-14). The first parable, about two gates, begins with the assumption that the life of true righteousness—that is, the life of loving the enemy with one's sole trust in God—is inconvenient and difficult (the narrow gate and road), whereas the life of complying with the human kingdoms and imperial ideology is convenient and easy (the wide gate and road). Jesus teaches that the community of disciples must choose the former because it leads them to God's kingdom, whereas the latter actually leads to death, both in the present world and at the end time.

1.3.3.2. Parable of Two Trees (Mt 7:15-23). The second parable, about two trees, concerns the false prophets who look innocent like sheep but actually are evil like ravenous wolves. Some scholars identify the false prophets as "Gentile" Christians among the Matthean community who confess Jesus as "Lord" (Betz, 546). Some identify them as Jewish rivals of the Matthean community, such as the scribes and Pharisees (Harrington, 111). Considering that “prophets” are listed as a part of the community leadership in Matthew (Mt 5:12; 10:41; 23:34), it may be more plausible to identify the false prophets as certain disciples who are active in teaching, healing and other mighty works but fail to practice true righteousness as Jesus taught. Since they are “doers of lawlessness [anomia]” (NRSV: “evildoers”) and fail to do God’s will (to produce “good fruits”), Jesus will judge them at the last judgment as not belonging to the kingdom of God.

1.3.3.3. Parable of Two Houses (Mt 7:24-27). As the final words of the SM, the third parable, about two houses, once more highlights the importance of “practicing” true righteousness as Jesus taught over and against just “hearing.” The latter is like a “foolish” person who builds a house on a sandy foundation, which is disastrous. Those who actually do what they hear will remain standing at the end time, no matter how difficult the obstacles in their path may be. The final lines exhort the audience to act, not just listen, and also warn them of the dangers of failing to act.

2. The Sermon on the Plain (Lk 6:20-49).

The Sermon on the Plain (hereafter SP) in Luke is much shorter than the SM in Matthew (thirty verses versus 109 verses), and most of the passages in the SP have parallels in the SM. The analysis and interpretation here will avoid duplicating what was presented in the Matthean counterpart above, except when it is important to understand the issues or theology specific to Luke.

2.1. Sociohistorical Context. Written around A.D. 80-90, the Gospel of Luke shares a historical context with Matthew: the world controlled by the evil of Roman imperial ideology and power. However, since it was written outside of the land of Israel, Luke’s readers included non-Jews, as well as Jews who were much more adapted to a non-Jewish cultural environment than their compatriots in the homeland.

2.2. Literary Context: Setting and Structure. Luke begins his Gospel with the birth stories of John the Baptist, who is an eschatological prophet like *Elijah, and Jesus, who is the Messiah (see Christ), Savior, *Lord (Lk 2:11) and *Son of God (Lk 1:32). The stories are framed by a conspicuously political background. It takes place in the time of King Herod (Lk 1:5) and Quirinius, the Roman governor of Syria (Lk 2:2). Caesar Augustus is the Roman emperor (Lk 2:1), whom the empire honors as the lord, benefactor, and savior of the world. From the moment of birth, Jesus directly experiences the power of the Roman Empire, expressed through the census, which aims to measure human and economic resources. Jesus, however, is bringing in a new world, characterized by a reversal of socioeconomic status (Lk 1:48, 51-53; 2:7), in which people will experience joy (Lk 1:14, 44, 58), mercy (Lk 1:25, 50, 54, 78), forgiveness (Lk 1:77) and peace (Lk 1:79; 2:14). Jesus begins his ministry of teaching and preaching about the good news of God’s kingdom, calling disciples and manifesting the presence of God’s kingdom through healings and exorcisms. In his inaugural sermon in his hometown Jesus proclaims himself as the fulfillment of Isaiah’s prophecy of the one anointed to liberate the oppressed (Lk 4:16-30; cf. Is 61:1-2; 58:6). While experiencing rejection from his hometown and opposition from Pharisaic Jewish leaders, Jesus successfully continues his ministry for many oppressed people, calling disciples and naming twelve of them “apostles” (Lk 4:31–6:16).

2.2.1. Setting and Audience. In Luke 6:17 the evangelist describes the setting of the SP as “on a level place” (thus the conventional name for the Lukan Sermon) and lists three categories of people as those who are present with Jesus: (1) the twelve apostles and other disciples who come down from the mountain with Jesus; (2) a great crowd of Jesus’ disciples; (3) a great multitude of people from various regions in Palestine (Lk 6:18; 6:27). The phrase that introduces the SP, “looking up his eyes at his disciples, he said” (Lk 6:20a), does not mean that Jesus addresses only his disciples. The evangelist’s description of the audience at the end of the SP, “in the hearing of the people” (Lk 7:1), recalls the description of the great multitude of people as the ones who “came to hear Jesus” (Lk 6:18). All those listed in Luke 6:17 must be the audience (see Green, 262; Carroll, 147-48).

2.2.2. Structure. There are many diverse proposals on the structure of the SP, from a neatly ordered structure (Topel) to a “loose and wobbly” organization (Fitzmyer, 628). Nevertheless, most scholars find a threefold division of introduction, body and conclusion, with great disagreement on the demarcation between the body and the conclusion, as well as the subdivision within the body. One of the favored structures divides the SP as introduction (Lk 6:20-26), body (Lk 6:27-42) and conclusion (Lk 6:43-49). This parallels the structure of the SM and, given that Luke arranges the SP in almost the same order as the SM, seems to be a reasonable solution.

2.3. Analysis and Interpretation.

2.3.1. Introduction (Lk 6:20-26). The introduction consists of four beatitudes and four woes, creating a symmetry in which the content of each beatitude is exactly opposite to the content of each woe. Addressed to “you,” a second-person plural, they effectively engage the audience to relate themselves to the beatitudes, the woes, or both. One may understand that each of the four beatitudes and its counterpart woe deals with a different group of people (the poor versus the rich, the hungry versus the filled, the weeping versus the laughing, the defamed versus the honored). A more plausible understanding may be to see the first pair as an overarching summary and the following three pairs as its elaborations. The broad concept of the term “the poor” (hoi ptōchoi) in the Bible directs us toward this understanding. As a relational term, “the poor,” denotes in the OT various people who are marginalized or oppressed due to poor health, low status or lack of economic or other social resources, whom God alone can help (e.g., Ps 35:10; 37:14). In accordance with the OT traditions, Luke uses the term “the poor” and its counterpart “the rich” as a “comprehensive” term (see Green, 267; cf. Topel, emphasizing the economic concept). The first beatitude and woe pairing, then, is a general proclamation that the kingdom of God belongs to those who suffer from marginalization and oppression, while those who marginalize and oppress others have no place in God’s kingdom. The remaining pairs elaborate on this theme by specifically naming the marginalized groups and their counterparts and promising the reversal of their earthly status. Those who lack basic resources for subsistence (“who are hungry now” [Lk 6:21a]), who are in severely distressful situations (“who are weeping now” [Lk 6:21b]), and who are defamed because they follow Jesus (Lk 6:22) will all enjoy the privileges that their counterparts keep now, and vice versa.

God’s promise of the reversal of status in the symmetry of the beatitudes and woes strongly reminds the reader of two preceding pericopes: Mary’s song (Lk 1:46–55) and Jesus’ visit to his hometown (Lk 4:16–30). The thematic similarity between Mary’s song and the symmetry of the beatitudes and woes is remarkable. *Mary’s song is full of praises of God’s mercy and justice. By God’s mercy (Lk 1:50, 54) the lowly person becomes the blessed one (Lk 1:48), and the places of the proud, the powerful and the rich become the places of the lowly and the hungry (Lk 1:51–53). When Jesus visits Nazareth, he proclaims the reality of his embodiment of the Isaiah text (Is 61:1–2; 58:6), which announces the good news to the “the poor”—that is, the liberation of those who are oppressed economically, physically, politically, socially, religiously or any other way (Lk 4:18–21). The people’s response to Jesus is one of strong rejection. The first three pairs of beatitudes and woes strongly evoke the Isaiah text, and the fourth pair evokes the violent response of the Nazareth people to Jesus (Lk 4:28–29). One may say, then, that as the introduction to the SP, the beatitudes and woes connect the theology revealed in Mary’s song and the Christology revealed in the Nazareth event to the body of the SP, which focuses on discipleship.

2.3.2. Body (Lk 6:27–42). The body consists of four sections (Lk 6:27–31, 32–36, 37–38, 39–42), each of which elaborates on one central theme of the way of discipleship: loving enemies. The last pair of beatitudes and woes has already hinted at the life of the disciples, which runs against the conventional norm. God’s kingdom, as the new world contrasted against the Roman Empire, requires its members to practice a different lifestyle by imitating God and by not adopting imperial practices and ideologies.

The first unit (Lk 6:27–31) focuses on loving one’s enemy. By “But I say to you that listen,” Jesus makes clear that he is now moving to his central teaching, and that they need to pay attention to it. The teaching starts by succinctly stating its “thesis” with just a few words: “Love your enemies.” Jesus continues with several specific examples about how to love those who wrong you. All the examples are in contrast to the social values or norms of the imperial world, such as patronage, exploitation of human and material resources by those who have power, and the accumulation of debts. By practicing a new norm of loving one’s enemy, the vicious cycle of dehumanizing one’s neighbors will stop, and life will be transformed. Jesus summarizes this new life with the Golden Rule (Lk 6:31).

The second unit (Lk 6:32–36) provides more examples of the life of loving one’s enemy by specifically contrasting it with the patronage system. If you give favors, gifts or loans only to those who will pay you back with an earthly reward, like those who are “alienated from God” (hamartōloi) (Topel, 164; cf. Green, 273; Fitzmyer, 640), you will get no reward (misthos) from God. As God is “merciful” (oiktirmōn [cf. Lk 18:13; see also Ex 34:6; Deut 4:31; Joel 2:13; Jon 4:2]) even to the evil, the disciples must be merciful by loving, doing good, and lending to their enemy without expecting anything in return.

The third and fourth units (Lk 6:37–38, 39–42) continue the teaching on loving one’s enemy with more specific examples from the conventional norm. In a society where debts accumulate due to exploitation by those who have power and who share resources only within a small circle of kinship and friends, debtors are targets of constant judgment. They are *sinners because they cannot repay their debts, and they must beg for even more loans. Jesus teaches that rather than judging those who cannot repay, debt holders must forgive debts and give abundantly. For this, they will be rewarded appropriately. At the same time, they must know that their faults are even greater than those in whom they find fault.

2.3.3. Conclusion (Lk 6:43-49). The SP concludes with several maxims and parables to highlight the importance of doing what Jesus has taught, much like the SM (Lk 6:43-49).

3. Historicity of the Sermon.

Most passages included in the SP have parallels in the SM. The exceptions are Luke 6:24-26, 34, 35a, 37b-38a, 39-40, 45b. The last two have parallels outside the SM in Matthew, and Luke also includes several parallels to the passages in the SM outside of the SP. The scholarly consensus is that the common source of SM and SP is Q, while some (e.g., Betz) propose that Matthew and Luke used different versions of Q (Q_{mt} and Q_{lk}). Regardless, it is noteworthy that the two sermons generally have the same order, and both begin with the beatitudes and end with the parable of the house builders. This does not necessarily prove, however, that Jesus actually delivered the sermon in that order.

In the studies of the sayings of the historical Jesus, scholars generally have focused on determining their authenticity on the basis of the likelihood of Jesus' exact wording. The usual process has been to peel off any redactional materials by comparing parallels and examining characteristics of the evangelist's theology and literary style. Recently, however, several scholars (e.g., Allison 2010; Horsley; Le Donne) have begun to pay attention to the importance of understanding oral communication and social memory in the study of the historical Jesus. According to this new direction, the historical Jesus can be constructed by studying the Gospel traditions as the social memory of Jesus' followers. In this regard, the general consensus of the scholarship that there is a strong continuity between the Sermon and the historical Jesus is correct. As the role model of true righteousness, the historical Jesus resisted imperial power and ideology and gave abundantly to the marginalized without expecting any earthly reward. When killed by the imperial power, he received a reward from God: to be eternally present with those who follow him. The Sermon certainly holds the community of disciples' strong memories of Jesus, a devout Jew, who thoroughly obeyed God's will and thoroughly embodied what he taught to his followers.

See also BLESSING AND WOE; ETHICS OF JESUS; JUSTICE; KINGDOM OF GOD/HEAVEN; LAW; RICH AND POOR; RIGHTEOUSNESS.

BIBLIOGRAPHY. D. C. Allison Jr., The Sermon on the Mount: Inspiring the Moral Imagination (CNT; New York: Crossroad, 1999); idem, Constructing Jesus: Memory, Imagination, and History (Grand Rapids: Baker Academic, 2010); H. D. Betz, The Sermon on the Mount: A Commentary on the Sermon on the Mount, Including the Sermon on the Plain (Matthew 5:3-7:27 and Luke 6:20-49), ed. A. Y. Collins (Herm; Minneapolis: Fortress, 1995); J. T. Carroll, Luke: A Commentary (NTL; Louisville: Westminster John Knox, 2012); W. Carter, Matthew and the Margins: A Socio-Political and Religious Reading (Maryknoll, NY: Orbis, 2000); idem, Matthew and Empire: Initial Explorations (Harrisburg, PA: Trinity Press International, 2001); M. R. D'Angelo, "Abba and 'Father': Imperial Theology and the Jesus Traditions," JBL 111 (1992) 611-30; W. D. Davies and D. C. Allison, A Critical and Exegetical Commentary on the Gospel According to Saint Matthew, 1: Introduction and Commentary on Matthew 1-7 (ICC; Edinburgh: T & T Clark, 1988); B. Estrada, "The Last Beatitude: Joy in Suffering," Bib 91 (2010) 187-209; J. A. Fitzmyer, The Gospel According to Luke I-IX (AB 28; New York: Doubleday, 1981); J. B. Green, The Gospel of Luke (NICNT; Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1997); D. J. Harrington, The Gospel of Matthew (SP 1; Collegeville, MN: Liturgical Press, 1991); R. A. Horsley, Jesus and the Powers: Conflict, Covenant, and the Hope of the Poor (Minneapolis: Fortress, 2011); A. Le Donne, Historical Jesus: What Can We Know and How Can We Know It? (Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 2011); U. Luz, Matthew 1-7: A Commentary, trans. J. E. Crouch, ed. H. Koester (Herm; Minneapolis: Augsburg, 1989); J. A. Overman, Matthew's Gospel and Formative Judaism: The Social World of the Matthean Community (Minneapolis: Fortress, 1990); D. Patte, The Challenge of Discipleship: A Critical Study of the Sermon on the Mount as Scripture (Harrisburg, PA: Trinity Press International, 1999); M. A. Powell, "Matthew's Beatitudes: Reversals and Rewards of the Kingdom," CBQ 58 (1996) 460-79; B. E. Reid, "Violent Endings in Matthew's Parables and Christian Nonviolence," CBQ 66 (2004) 237-55; A. J. Saldañini, Matthew's Christian-Jewish Community (CSHJ; Chicago: University of Chicago Press, 1994); J. Sheffield, "The Father in the Gospel of Matthew," in A Feminist Companion to Matthew, ed. A. J. Levine and M. Blickenstaff (FCNTECW 1; Sheffield: Sheffield Academic Press, 2001) 52-69; G. H. Stassen, "The Fourteen Triads of the Sermon on the Mount (Matthew 5:21-7:12)," JBL 122 (2003) 267-308; idem, Living the Sermon on the Mount: A Practical Hope for Grace and Deliverance (San Francisco: Jossey-Bass, 2006); C. H. Talbert, Reading the Sermon on the Mount: Character Formation and Decision Making in Matthew 5-7 (Grand Rapids: Baker Academic, 2006); L. J. Topel, Children of a Compassionate God: A Theological Exegesis of Luke 6:20-49 (Collegeville, MN: Liturgical Press, 2001); J. Wattles, The Golden Rule (Oxford: Oxford University Press, 1996).

S-A Yang

SERVANT OF YAHWEH

The Servant of Yahweh or Suffering Servant is a figure traditionally drawn from four passages in Isaiah seen to delineate the vocation of one whose task is to serve both Israel and the nations through acts of Spirit-anointed justice and suffering. In the Gospels this figure and these passages underlie various aspects of Jesus' identity and *mission, perhaps most notably his vicarious suffering and death.

1. Isaiah
2. Second Temple Judaism
3. The Gospels
4. Conclusion

1. Isaiah.

Isaiah 40—55 ("Second Isaiah") is the literary context for the "Servant Songs" of Isaiah 42:1-4; 49:1-6; 50:4-9; 52:13—53:12, first grouped as such by B. Duhm in 1892. Duhm argued that they were a later addition to the text of Isaiah and suggested an interpretation without reference to literary context. Many older commentators have followed him, although a growing trend in Isaiah studies is to see them as integral to the larger text of Isaiah and to analyze them within it (e.g., Mettinger).

This servant figure historically has been a point of great interest for interpreters, with some identifying the servant as Israel or a remnant of Israel, following the book's own lead in labeling Israel as the servant at various points (e.g., Is 41:8; 44:1, 2, 21 [2X]; 45:4; 48:20). Others, however, point to the unnamed servant of the Servant Songs themselves, as well as his apparent individualistic suffering (e.g., Is 50:4-9), and prefer a historical figure such as Cyrus or Isaiah the prophet.

Those who favor a literary reading often link the unnamed speaker in Isaiah 61 with the servant, suggesting that from a literary and functional perspective this figure speaks in the voice and takes on the role of the servant from especially Isaiah 42 and Isaiah 49 (e.g., both are anointed by Yahweh's spirit, proclaim freedom for captives, and console the faint). Even if traditional historical-critical distinctions are held, and Isaiah 61 is thus seen as part of "Third Isaiah," it may be argued that the plural "servants" (e.g., Is 65:8) as a community have claimed servant traits and experiences (from Is 40—55) for themselves. Already in this early period, then, there is a (historically) later group that utilizes the servant figure in the service of their own identity, an important reality that must be noted in studies of the servant motif in the NT.

2. Second Temple Judaism.

Many older commentators have stressed the tentativeness of our understanding of the servant motif in Second Temple Judaism, though the often minimal results that such tentativity creates are not necessarily the only possible conclusion. For example, it likely is important that Second Temple authors appeared to interpret Isaiah as a whole (i.e., as the work of Isaiah the prophet, without the traditional distinctions between "First," "Second" or "Third" Isaiah) and eschatologically. The nonatomistic thrust can be seen in Ben Sirā's "Hymn of the Fathers" (Sir 44:1—51:24), composed around 200 B.C., where Isaiah the prophet is described as trustworthy. Sirach then discusses Isaiah's vision of the last things and his words of comfort to mourners, clearly alluding to Isaiah 40—66. The eschatological use is evident from the Isaiah pesharim (4Q161; 4Q162; 4Q163; 4Q164; 4Q165) at Qumran, where the passages are directly related to the sect's existence at the end of the age (see Dead Sea Scrolls).

The servant passages, then, almost certainly were not seen as a separate group of texts, though it is still likely that readers and hearers of Isaiah would have picked up on the conceptual and linguistic similarities in what modern scholarship calls the "Servant Songs." In fact, texts that use Isaiah (especially at Qumran) are adept at utilizing the servant motif as culled from several different passages (e.g., Is 42:1-4; 52:13—53:12). All of this justifies the approach of analyzing the function of the servant in Second Temple texts within the larger grid of (at least) Isaiah 40—66.

The figure of the Isaianic servant often was used in this period, though at points the servant was interpreted individually, and at other points corporately (though an individual would still represent the corporate people). This generalization holds true across the spectrum, even for Isaiah 53. The old adage that Hellenistic Judaism interpreted the servant in Isaiah 53 corporately (e.g., in the LXX, which clarifies the servant's identity as Israel, adding "Jacob" and "Israel" in the song in Is 42:1 and including an explanatory note about servant Israel's task in Is 49:5), while Palestinian Judaism interpreted the figure individually (e.g., the Dead Sea Scroll 11Q13 [the work of J. Jeremias has contributed to this understanding]), does not seem to adequately represent the evidence. For example, at least some of the Qumran texts that utilize Isaianic servant material take it in a corporate sense (e.g., 1QS V, 6; VIII, 5-7). In other words, the interpretive milieu of Jesus and the NT writers allowed them to treat the servant as both an (often representative) individual and a corporate (as the faithful people of God/remnant) figure and to claim fulfillment or embodiment of Isaiah's servant texts in their own communities.

3. The Gospels.

Perhaps the best-known discussion of the servant motif in relation to Jesus is by M. Hooker. However, her larger concern is not simply the NT use of the OT but the atonement, and whether the doctrine originated with Jesus or his followers. The atonement thus brackets her discussion, making Isaiah 53, with its notion of vicarious suffering, an important and problematic passage in Isaiah as well as the NT.

Although Hooker is careful to point out that in Isaiah the servant is predominantly the collective figure of Israel (Hooker, chap. 2), her minimal investigation of the Second Temple sources restricts her ability to see the presence and function of the servant motif in NT texts (Hooker, chap. 3). It is not surprising, then, that her final results are negative: the Synoptics do not give conclusive proof that Jesus saw himself as the servant (Hooker, 102), and other NT works such as Acts and Paul's letters give "little evidence that the Servant-Christology held any important place in Christian thought of the New Testament period" (Hooker, 128).

Hooker may be critiqued as being too preoccupied with Isaiah 53 and the servant's suffering, as this limits her ability to see the multifaceted nature of the servant's experience and task. Also, her insistence that in order for a servant allusion to be present no other possible OT text may be in view (Hooker, 62) may unnecessarily tighten the parameters and be minimalistic, especially in light of the recent developments in intertextuality between the Testaments that stress the complex nature of the NT use of the OT (which includes conceptual as well as linguistic parallels, the importance of a cumulative case, and taking quotations as pointers to larger narrative or allusive uses).

3.1. The Synoptic Tradition. Many scholars have argued that in the Gospels an important part of Jesus' messianic consciousness was his awareness of fulfilling or embodying the servant task from Isaiah, seen especially in his insistence that it is "written" or "necessary" that the Son of Man must suffer and die (and be raised) (Mk 8:31; 9:12, 31; 10:33-34 par.) (for the connection to "Son of Man," see the discussion of the ransom saying in 3.2 below). Scholars such as P. Doble have argued that messianic psalms give "written" proof that one who serves *God (as servant) must suffer, but most commentators find the OT background for Jesus' *passion in the Isaianic servant.

3.2. Mark. In Mark's Gospel the Isaianic servant probably stands behind the voice from heaven at Jesus' *baptism: "You are my beloved son, with you I am pleased" (Mk 1:11 [// Mt 3:17; Lk 3:22]). Jesus is not called "servant" here, and there is no exact verbal overlap between the two passages, but there is still a likely allusion to one of the servant texts, Isaiah 42:1. Scholars generally agree on the servant basis here because the servant is anointed with God's Spirit in Isaiah 42:1 and is chosen and/or called in the literary context (e.g., Is 42:6-7).

Also, at Jesus' *transfiguration the voice from the cloud calls him "my Son, my beloved" (Mk 9:7 [// Mt 17:5; Lk 9:35; in the latter text Jesus is "chosen" rather than "beloved"; cf. the servant as "chosen" in, e.g., Is 49:7]). At the *Last Supper Jesus declares, "This is my blood of the covenant, which is poured out for many [pollōn]" (Mk 14:24 [// Mt 26:28, which adds "for the forgiveness of sins"; cf. Lk 22:20]), recalling the servant's sacrifice in Isaiah 53:12.

Particularly relevant (and problematic) in Mark is the famous "ransom saying" (Mk 10:45 [// Mt 20:28]), where Jesus claims of himself, "For the Son of Man came not to be served but to serve, and to give his life as a ransom for many" (cf. esp. Is 53:10, 12). Contextually, the ransom saying follows Jesus' third major passion *prediction (first, Mk 8:31 [// Mt 16:21; Lk 9:22]; second, Mk 9:31 [// Mt 17:22-23; Lk 9:44]; third, Mk 10:33-34 [// Mt 20:18-19; Lk 18:31-33]) and James and John's request for personal honor; it thus functions as a description of Jesus' self-understanding regarding his death as well as a critique of his disciples' desire for greatness, for their leadership must be servant-oriented.

Many scholars connect the ransom saying with the servant in Isaiah 53 because of its notion of service, especially the giving of life "for many." However, others dispute the connection (e.g., Hooker) on the grounds of only minimal verbal parallels between the saying and LXX Isaiah 53. Two other possible sources for the ransom saying are the *Son of Man of Daniel 7 (because Jesus calls himself "Son of Man" in the saying), though Daniel does not carry the idea of vicarious suffering. However, in the Second Temple text 1 Enoch 37–71 the Son of Man from Daniel 7 is a conglomerate figure, combined with the servant from Isaiah, suggesting that such a move is possible here in the ransom saying. The other suggested background of the ransom saying is the Second Temple martyr tradition, which at least sometimes was connected with atonement (evidenced in, e.g., 4 Macc 6:28–29), though the servant from Isaiah may be the "original" biblical basis for such atoning martyrdom in this period.

The question of the ransom saying's authenticity is also debated, with some scholars claiming that its origin is not Jesus but rather the early church. Arguments marshaled here include a supposed break in the Jesus-disciples parallel in the context (for this ransom would apply only to his death), the newness of this aspect of Jesus' death (i.e., ransom/atonement is not seen elsewhere), and that the Lukan parallel to Mark 10:42–45 and Matthew 20:25–28 (Lk 22:25–27) does not include it. The second concern is most easily answered, for Jesus apparently was aware of a scriptural reason for his impending violent death (e.g., Mk 8:31; 9:12; Lk 18:31–33; 24:25–27, 46), and he connects at least some aspects of his passion with the servant (e.g., Is 53:12 in Lk 22:37), making a further tie likely.

Regarding the first and third concerns, Luke appears to have drawn Luke 22:24–27 from his special source (rather than Mark) and may be describing a different event than the other Synoptic writers. Also, in light of Luke's concern to parallel the mission of the disciples with that of Jesus (esp. in Acts), any minimization by him of the atoning nature of Jesus' death (which is, of course, unique to Jesus and does not apply to the disciples) finds its warrant.

Finally, extrabiblical sources show that the word "ransom" (lytron), which occurs in the NT only here in the ransom saying (cf. antilytron in 1 Tim 2:6), seems to stress the cost of the deliverance wrought by Jesus, the Son of Man and servant. With the servant texts from Isaiah in view (esp., Is 50; 53), the cost is vividly painted in terms of severe rejection, physical, mental and emotional suffering, and death. Also, the servant in LXX Isaiah 53:12 bears the sins of "many" (pollōn) in death; Jesus in the ransom saying claims to give his life as a ransom for "many" (pollōn).

3.3. Matthew. One of Matthew's unique devices is his use of formula quotations, and in two of them he cites servant texts. In Matthew 8:17, after Jesus *heals "all the sick" and drives out *demons, Matthew writes that Jesus' actions fulfill "what was spoken through the prophet Isaiah: 'He took our infirmities and bore our diseases.'" The reference is Isaiah 53:4, though many scholars have noted that the Matthean emphasis is on Jesus' deliverance from physical ailments as opposed to his atoning suffering and death.

Matthew 12 details more healings (as well as Jesus' nonconfrontational approach, another possible servant link), and Matthew connects these acts with the first Servant Song, Isaiah 42:1–4 (quoted in full in Mt 12:18–21). His quotation of Isaiah here strengthens the probable servant background to the baptism and transfiguration scenes (at Mt 3:17; 17:5) (see 3.2 above), for he appears either to use a Greek text at Matthew 12:18 that parallels some of the vocabulary from the other scenes or to align his translation of Isaiah to stress the links. Again, the scholarly concern for the author's apparent lack of focus on the atoning nature of the servant's work appears, though it could be argued that the modern academic concentration on the atonement, especially as it relates to the Isaianic servant, is unwarranted in light of the multifaceted nature of the servant's task in Isaiah (which includes bringing justice, being a light to the nations, and enduring physical suffering).

3.4. Luke. It is commonly acknowledged that Luke also takes up Mark's use of the Isaianic servant background at Jesus' baptism and transfiguration (see 3.2 above), and Jesus defines his mission in the synagogue in Nazareth in Luke 4:18–19 by reading Isaiah 61:1–2 (with Is 58:6). Isaiah 61:1–2, though not one of Duhm's four famous Servant Songs, literarily is closely connected with those passages (see 1 above.)

One of the final chapters of Luke includes another clear citation, for in Luke 22:37 Jesus quotes from Isaiah 53:12 in reference to himself, claiming that the servant's lot of being "numbered with the transgressors" must be fulfilled in him (cf. the quotation of Is 53:7–8 in Acts 8:32–33).

However, it is also true that elsewhere Luke has been accused by H. Conzelmann and many scholars after him of downplaying the servant motif's notion of atoning or substitutionary suffering. Luke's supposed "theology of glory" (as opposed to "theology of the cross") is argued on the basis of several passages. For example, the only two texts in Luke–Acts that appear clearly to ground Jesus' death in terms of atonement, Luke 22:19–20 and Acts 20:28, have textual uncertainties. The former passage, Luke 22:20

(the parallel to Mk 14:24; Mt 26:28), also apparently removes at least one key lexical pointer to Isaiah 53 (though the idea of service is still present). Finally, Mark's "ransom saying," which many see alluding to Isaiah 53, is paralleled in Matthew but omitted in Luke. All this leads to the possible conclusion that Luke chose to focus on other aspects of the servant's task, such as his innocence or exaltation.

Many other probable uses of Isaianic servant material exist both in Luke and Acts (e.g., the references to Israel and the nations in Lk 2:29-32, recalling Is 42:49), and this leads to a second possible explanation for Luke's apparently minimal acknowledgement of Jesus' death as substitutionary. Luke demonstrates a clear interest in connecting the mission of the disciples with Jesus (especially in Acts, but also in Luke; cf. esp. the parallels of Peter, Stephen and Paul with Jesus; cf. also the way in which Paul and Barnabas quote the servant text Is 49:6 in reference to themselves in Acts 13:47), and the atoning nature of the servant's death is true only for Jesus, not his followers.

3.5. John. The only quotation from the Servant Songs in John's Gospel is in John 12:38. After the prediction of Jesus' death, John mentions the many signs performed by Jesus and then sums up the Jewish response to him by claiming fulfillment of Isaiah 53:1: "Lord, who has believed our message? And to whom has the arm of the Lord been revealed?" Scholars have pointed out that the Isaiah passage, although from the famous Servant Song of Isaiah 53, refers not to the servant's atoning work but rather to the unbelief of the Jews. Again, the scholarly interest in the substitutionary aspect of the servant's suffering may be a bit misdirected, since the servant's work is much broader in Isaiah. At least indirectly, Jesus is associated with the servant through the use of Isaiah 53:1 here.

Other famous Johannine passages often linked to the Isaianic servant include John the Baptist's labeling of Jesus as the "Lamb of God" (Jn 1:29, 36). The suggested background is the reference in Isaiah 53:7, where the metaphor of a lamb led to slaughter is used of the servant. Because the Passover lamb was not directly connected with the removal of sin, it appears likely that the sacrifice of the Isaianic servant is in mind here. Finally, the language of Jesus being "lifted up" (hypoō in various forms) in John 3:14; 8:28; 12:32 may refer to the servant's exaltation/lifting up (a form of hypoō) in LXX Isaiah 52:13.

4. Conclusion.

The servant figure of Isaiah's famous Servant Songs is important for understanding the mission and purpose of Jesus. However, much work remains to be done in this area. A wave of recent scholarship emphasizes the larger narrative framework and themes of Isaiah (such as the "new exodus" restoration of especially Is 40–55) and their placement in the Gospels (highlighted by, e.g., the use of Is 40:3-5 and its link to John the Baptist). Significantly, Isaiah 40–55 is the primary literary context of the servant's work, which is integral to the restoration; the servant's mission being embodied is, to a great extent, how the new exodus occurs or finds fulfillment.

If, then, a larger Isaianic paradigm is present in the Gospels, it gives warrant to a methodology that affirms the presence of the servant motif even in the absence of clear quotations (however important those may be). Indeed, in contrast to the narrower methodological parameters of times past, many scholars are prioritizing the presence of conceptual and thematic ties, as well as lexical links to words closely associated with the servant and his activity in Isaiah (e.g., chosen, witness, being delivered or handed over). Such suggested connections are especially significant if they appear in a cluster or in close association with a more explicit reference or an allusion to a servant passage. In other words, it is perhaps true that for the Gospel writers the servant motif grounds the identity of Jesus in a much larger way than often realized, and that various NT doctrines (such as salvation) would benefit from the exploration of these avenues in greater detail.

See also CHRISTOLOGY; DEATH OF JESUS; OLD TESTAMENT IN THE GOSPELS; PASSION NARRATIVE; PREDICTIONS OF JESUS' PASSION AND RESURRECTION; SON OF MAN.

BIBLIOGRAPHY. W. H. Bellinger Jr. and W. R. Farmer, eds., Jesus and the Suffering Servant: Isaiah 53 and Christian Origins (Harrisburg, PA: Trinity Press International, 1998); J. Blenkinsopp, Opening the Sealed Book: Interpretations of the Book of Isaiah in Late Antiquity (Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 2006); D. Bock and M. Glaser, eds., The Gospel According to Isaiah 53: Encountering the Suffering Servant in Jewish and Christian Theology (Grand Rapids: Kregel Academic & Professional, 2012); H. Conzelmann, The Theology of St. Luke, trans. G. Buswell (New York: Harper & Row, 1960); P. Doble, "Luke 24.26, 44—Songs of God's Servant: David and His Psalms in Luke-Acts," JSNT 28 (2006) 267-83; B. Duhm, Das Buch Jesaia (3rd ed.; HKAT 3/1; Göttingen: Vandenhoeck & Ruprecht, 1914); J. B. Green, The Death of Jesus: Tradition and Interpretation in the Passion Narrative (WUNT 2/33; Tübingen: Mohr Siebeck, 1988); M. D. Hooker, Jesus and the Servant: The Influence of the Servant Concept of Deutero-Isaiah in the New Testament (London: SPCK, 1959); B. Janowski and P. Stuhlmacher, eds., The Suffering Servant: Isaiah 53 in Jewish and Christian Sources, trans. D. P. Bailey (Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 2004); T. N. D. Mettinger, A Farewell to the Servant Songs: A Critical Examination of an Exegetical Axiom, trans. F. H. Cryer (ScrMin 3; Lund: Gleerup, 1983); S. H. T. Page, "The Suffering Servant Between the Testaments," NTS 31 (1985) 481-97; W. Zimmerli and J. Jeremias, "παῖς θεοῦ," TDNT 5:654-717.

H. Beers

SEVENTY, MISSION OF THE. See MISSION.

SHEPHERD, SHEEP

The agrarian and cultural background of shepherd-ing in the biblical world functions as the backdrop for understanding Jesus as shepherd in the Gospels. Shepherds were essential in the ancient world, caring for their own animals yet also hired to tend the large flocks of other owners. The main concern of the shepherd was to provide the sheep or goats with food, water and protection from wild animals or thieves. This common way of life is an obvious source for the shepherd/flock imagery prevalent throughout the Bible. The OT is replete with pastoral imagery as a way to depict God's relationship with God's people, and this is carried over into the NT for Jesus and his disciples. Although the symbol is most often used in the OT for describing God's care for Israel, Israel's rulers were also viewed as shepherds. The image takes on a positive role when it comes to God as the ideal shepherd (Ezek 34:5-6; cf. Is 40:11; Ps 23), but Israel's leaders are condemned for their neglect of the flock (Jer 10:21; Zech 11:15-17; 13:7-9). The Gospel writers most certainly borrow the image of shepherd for Jesus from their Scriptures and their social location, but then they situate the imagery in the larger narrative context of their interpretations of Jesus' ministry. Taking cues from the literary world of the individual Gospels and each Gospel writer's portrait of Jesus affords a number of possible meanings for this image of Jesus.

1. Matthew
2. Mark
3. Luke
4. John

1. Matthew.

Matthew's use of this imagery for Jesus is rooted in the messianic expectation of a new ruler or shepherd from the line of David (Ezek 34:23; 37:20, 22; cf.

Ps 78:70-72) whose rule over God's people will be as a shepherd for his flock (Mt 2:6) (see Willitts). Matthew depicts Jesus as having compassion for the crowds because they are "like sheep without a shepherd" (Mt 9:36; 26:31 [cf. Num 27:16-17; 1 Kings 22:17; Is 40:11; Ezek 34:5]) (see Son of David). This saying appears immediately before the missionary discourse, where Jesus gathers the *disciples, the twelve disciples are named, and Jesus sends them out with instructions for their *mission (Mt 10:1-11:1). In Matthew 10:6 the disciples are portrayed as shepherds themselves when Jesus says to them, "But go rather to the lost sheep of the house of Israel." Jesus will refer to his ministry in the same way later in the Gospel: "I was sent only to the lost sheep of the house of Israel" (Mt 15:24). At the same time, the disciples are viewed as sheep: "See, I am sending you out like sheep into the midst of wolves" (Mt 10:16). Jesus' commissioning of the Twelve anticipates the Great Commission, which concludes Matthew's Gospel (Mt 28:18-20) and suggests that a vital aspect of discipleship is to take on the role of shepherd. Jesus predicts his death and the denial of the disciples by quoting Zechariah 13:7: "You will all become deserters because of me this night; for it is written, 'I will strike the shepherd, and the sheep of the flock will be scattered'" (Mt 26:31). After Jesus is raised, he will go ahead of the disciples to *Galilee and gather the scattered disciples, just as a shepherd goes ahead of the flock and gathers the sheep that have strayed (Mt 26:32).

Matthew also includes the *parable of the lost sheep (Mt 18:10-14). Matthew's account of this parable is situated in the larger context of discussions concerning community life located in Jesus' fourth teaching discourse (Mt 18:1-35). Matthew 18 begins with the disciples asking Jesus, "Who is the greatest in the kingdom of heaven?" Although Jesus responds with general teachings about getting along with others, the primary focus of his address is the challenge to the understanding of social status that God's *kingdom upends. The kingdom of heaven requires one to "become like a child" (Mt 18:3) and care for the "little ones" (Mt 18:10, 14) (see Child, Children). Jesus tells the parable of the lost sheep to illustrate this point, and the ending of Matthew's version of the parable reiterates this focus: "So it is not the will of your Father in heaven that one of these little ones should be lost" (Mt 18:14 [cf. Zech 13:7]).

2. Mark.

Mark's use of shepherd imagery is limited to Mark 6:34; 14:27. In Mark's Gospel Jesus' response to the great crowd, having “compassion for them, because they were like sheep without a shepherd,” occurs within the story of the feeding of the five thousand (Mk 6:34). The crowd, having come from “all the towns,” is gathered on the shore to wait for Jesus and his disciples, who have tried to find a deserted place to rest. Although the disciples urge Jesus to send the crowd away because of the late hour, he responds with “You give them something to eat” (Mk 6:37), and the *miracle of feeding the crowd of five thousand with five loaves and two fish follows (see Table Fellowship). Jesus makes evident that his role as shepherd, along with the disciples because they distribute the food to the crowd, is to provide the sheep with the essential need of pasture/food. In Mark 14:27 Jesus quotes Zechariah 13:7, predicting his own *death and the desertion of the disciples in the narrative context of the foretelling of Peter’s denial.

3. Luke.

The imagery of shepherd and sheep is minimal in the Gospel of Luke, particularly with reference to Jesus. Unique to Luke’s story of Jesus is the appearance of *angels announcing Jesus’ birth to shepherds out in the fields who are watching their flocks at night (Lk 2:8-20). The first characters who hear of the *birth of Jesus are these lowly shepherds, who then take initiative and go to see “this thing that has taken place.” The response of the shepherds to the event of Jesus’ birth is glory and praise of *God, a major motif in Luke’s Gospel (see Worship). Luke includes the parable of the lost sheep in the wider narrative context of Luke 15. The parable of the lost sheep is the first of three parables having to do with an overall theme in the Gospel of Luke of concern for the lost (cf. Lk 19:10). The setting for Luke 15 finds Jesus surrounded by tax collectors and *sinners, with the *Pharisees and the *scribes “grumbling” about Jesus as one who “welcomes sinners and eats with them” (Lk 15:1-2). By responding to the distaste of the Pharisees with the parables of the lost, Jesus intimates that by welcoming and eating with sinners he is like the character in each of the parables who finds and welcomes the lost, rejoicing in their being found.

4. John

The Gospel of John provides the most extensive description and interpretation of Jesus as shepherd in the four Gospels (Jn 10:1-18, 22-29; 18:1-13) and depicts discipleship as taking on the role of shepherd in Jesus’ absence (Jn 21:15-19) (see Lewis). The primary image of Jesus as the “good” shepherd is found in John 10:1-18, Jesus’ discourse in response to his healing of the man *blind from birth. John 10:22-29 shares similar imagery with John 10:1-18, but there is a change in time from the Festival of Booths (mid-autumn) to the Feast of Dedication (early December), so that John 10:22-29 is not part of the narrative unit John 9:1—10:21 (see Feasts). The shepherd discourse is Jesus’ interpretation of the miracle that he has just performed, the healing of the blind man. When, as a result of his being healed by Jesus, the blind man is thrown out of the *synagogue, Jesus, having been absent from the story since John 9:7, returns in John 9:35 and finds the man and brings him into his fold. Jesus and the blind man “act out” Jesus’ words in John 10 before Jesus says them. The blind man is a true disciple, one who listens to the voice of the shepherd (Jn 9:7; 10:4) and represents the “other sheep” of which Jesus speaks in John 10:16. In John 10:22-29 the Jewish leaders are portrayed as not belonging to Jesus’ sheep because they do not listen to Jesus’ voice. This section reiterates the “blindness” of the Pharisees in John 9 in their failure to recognize who Jesus is.

The thieves and the robbers described in John 10:1-18 are like the false shepherds outlined in Ezekiel 34, the wicked shepherds of Israel. As a result, the “Jews”/Pharisees, who are members of Jesus’ audience, are equated with Israel’s past leaders. The good shepherd, Jesus, is the Davidic Messiah of Ezekiel 34. There seems to be little doubt that Ezekiel is a primary source for John’s portrait of Jesus in 10:1-18, as well as the means by which to understand and interpret the imagery. Throughout the history of scholarship Ezekiel 34 has been the lens through which to read John 10:1-18 and has functioned to fill out the imagery with details not provided by the Fourth Gospel.

The motif of Jesus as shepherd and his followers as sheep is also present in John’s version of Jesus’ arrest and crucifixion. After Jesus has washed the feet of the disciples and they have shared a meal (Jn 13—17), Jesus and his disciples cross the Kidron Valley and enter a garden (see Gethsemane). Jesus initiates his own arrest by coming out of the garden, leaving the disciples (the sheep) safely in the garden (the fold). Jesus thus clearly identifies himself as the good shepherd, who lays down his life for the sheep (Jn 10:11-18). The good shepherd also protects the sheep from the thief who tries to climb in by another way (Jn 10:1), and who comes to steal and kill and destroy. Apart from John 10:1-10, the only other occurrence of the word “thief” in the Gospel of John describes Judas in John 12:6. Judas, the thief, stands outside the garden, and the good shepherd will not allow the thief to get into the sheepfold. The crucifixion of Jesus also reveals how the good shepherd “lays down his life.” Jesus is “the Lamb of God who takes away the sin of the world” (Jn 1:29, 36). In John’s Gospel Jesus dies on the Day of Preparation for Passover, not on the day of Passover itself. As a result, he dies at the same time as the slaughter of the lambs for Passover (see Lamb of God).

Shepherd and sheep imagery is reworked in the conversation between Jesus and Peter in John 21:15–19 as well. A threefold interaction between Jesus and Peter repeats a threefold pattern: (1) the question by Jesus to Peter, “Simon [Peter] son of John, do you love me?”; (2) Peter’s response to Jesus, “Lord, you know that I love you”; (3) Jesus’ instructions to Peter to take care of his sheep. Several aspects of this brief passage resonate with the shepherd discourse. First, the use of the verb “to shepherd” in John 21:16 echoes the image of the shepherd in the discourse of John 9:39–10:21. The single occurrence of this verb in John 21:16 and the use of its cognate noun form “shepherd” only in the shepherd discourse (Jn 10:2, 11, 12, 14, 16) suggest that these episodes should be read together. The term for “sheep” in John’s Gospel is used only here (Jn 21:16–17), in John 10 and John 2 (Jn 2:14–15). The use of “sheep” in Peter’s conversation with Jesus in John 21, and Jesus’ words to Peter, “Follow me,” also recall John 10:27: “My sheep hear my voice. I know them, and they follow me.” Peter is restored to a relationship with Jesus after his threefold denial (Jn 18:15–19), but his discipleship is also reinstated. In the Gospel of John Peter does not deny knowing Jesus (cf. Mt 26:69–75; Mk 14:66–72; Lk 22:57), but rather denies his own discipleship: “You are not also one of his disciples, are you?” He denied it and said, “I am not” (Jn 18:25). The mutual interpretation of these passages indicates that the good shepherd is not Jesus alone. In Jesus’ last question to Peter the verb for “love” switches to the word root “friend,” thus linking the phrase “The good shepherd lays down his life for the sheep” (Jn 10:10) with the claim “No one has greater love than this, to lay down one’s life for one’s friends” (Jn 15:13) and with Peter’s laying down of his own life (Jn 21:18–19). The relationship between the shepherd and the sheep in John 9:1–10:21 provides the thematic basis for discipleship in John 21 by supplying the vocabulary and framework of love, knowledge and care of the sheep that Jesus as shepherd and Peter as sheep embody in their dialogue. With John 21:15–19 in view, the intimate relationship between Jesus and “his own” (Jn 10:14) implies that following Jesus also means engaging in the same activity as the good shepherd. The mutuality of the shepherd and the sheep moves beyond recognizing the shepherd to doing the shepherding. Being in relationship with Jesus is not only following Jesus, as a sheep follows its shepherd; it means taking on shepherding, caring for the sheep, and even laying down one’s life for the sheep. Jesus’ claim to be the good shepherd is as much for the disciples (Jn 9:2) as it is for the apparent audience (Jn 9:39–41). When Jesus says, “I have other sheep not of this fold, and I will bring them also,” at stake is not simply the identity of the other sheep, but the ongoing activity of the shepherd by the disciples (cf. Jn 14:12) for the sake of the promise of abundant life (Jn 10:10) and the mission of the gospel (Jn 20:30–31).

See also DISCIPLES AND DISCIPLESHIP; LAMB OF GOD; SON OF DAVID.

BIBLIOGRAPHY. K. E. Bailey, Poet and Peasant: A Literary Cultural Approach to the Parables in Luke (Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1976) 144–56; R. E. Brown, The Gospel According to John: Introduction, Translation, and Notes (2 vols.; AB 29, 29A; Garden City, NY: Doubleday, 1966–1970); C. Koester, Symbolism in the Fourth Gospel: Meaning, Mystery, Community (Minneapolis: Fortress, 1995); K. Lewis, Rereading the “Shepherd Discourse”: Restoring the Integrity of John 9:39–10:21 (SBL 113; New York: Peter Lang, 2008); J. Willitts, Matthew’s Messianic Shepherd-King: In Search of “the Lost Sheep of the House of Israel” (BZNW 147; Berlin: de Gruyter, 2007).
K. Lewis

SICKNESS. See HEALING.

SIGN OF JONAH

Matthew and Luke report Jesus’ declaration to those seeking a “sign” (sēmeion) that no sign will be given except the “sign of Jonah” (Mt 12:38–42; 16:1–4; Lk 11:29–32; cf. Mk 8:11–13). In Matthew 12:38–42 Jonah’s rescue from the belly of the fish is highlighted, while in Luke’s account the focus is on Jonah’s role as a sign to the Ninevites.

1. The Data
2. Critical Approaches
3. Meaning of the “Sign of Jonah”

1. The Data.

In Matthew’s Gospel Jesus is twice asked for a sign (Mt 12:38; 16:1). The latter request, for a sign from heaven, is described as an attempt to test or trap (peirazō) Jesus (cf. Mk 8:11). In both pericopes Jesus rebukes an “evil and adulterous generation” for their request and adds that “no sign will be given to it except the sign of Jonah (the prophet)" (Mt 12:39; 16:4). Matthew 12:40 continues, "For just as Jonah was three days and three nights in the belly of the sea monster [cf. LXX Jon 2:1], so for three days and three nights the Son of Man will be in the heart of the earth."

In Luke's Gospel Jesus similarly describes "this generation" as evil and denies any sign "except the sign of Jonah" (Lk 11:29). Luke 11:30 explains, "For just as Jonah became a sign to the people of Nineveh, so the Son of Man will be to this generation."

Both Matthew 12:38-42 and Luke 11:29-32 conclude with a double saying in which the Ninevites, who "repented at the proclamation of Jonah," and the Queen of the South, who "came from the ends of the earth to listen to the wisdom of Solomon," stand in eschatological condemnation of "this generation" because "something greater than Jonah is here" and "something greater than Solomon is here." The two evangelists reverse the order of these sayings (Mt 12:41 = Lk 11:32; Mt 12:42 = Lk 11:31).

2. Critical Approaches.

Verbal equivalents in Matthew's and Luke's accounts suggest that they made use of a common, probably written, source (*Q), while marked dissimilarity in how the sign of Jonah is related to Jesus by the two evangelists has led to varying interpretations of the meaning of the sign. Interpreters also differ over the way in which Jonah himself serves as a sign—that is, how the genitive construction "sign of Jonah" should be taken: appositive ("the sign which is Jonah" = his rescue from the fish = Jesus' resurrection), subjective ("the sign Jonah gave" = Jonah's preaching = Jesus' preaching, either its action or content) or objective ("the sign given to Jonah" = the repentance of the Ninevites = contrasting eschatological judgment for those who refuse Jesus' message). Proposals by B. Bacon and others that "Jonah" is a misreading of "John," on the basis of word play by Jesus or confusion in Q between ywnh ("Jonah") and ywn (possibly an abbreviated form of ywhnn, "John"), and thus that the sign originally referred to John the Baptist, have received little support.

The sign of Jonah reflects at least three stages of tradition: Jesus, Q and the evangelists. Source-critical and *redaction-critical studies (von Harnack; Manson; Vögtle; Tödt; Edwards) have focused on retrieving its form and meaning in Q, viewed by the majority as best preserved in Luke's version. R. Edwards suggests that the doublet in Matthew's Gospel is a result of Matthew following Q's order in Matthew 12:38-42 but Mark's order in Matthew 16:1-4. J. Anderson, however, takes a narrative approach to Matthew's doublet, observing that while the request in Matthew 12:38 may be genuine, the request in Matthew 16:1 is specifically identified as testing or entrapment, indicating to the implied reader the growing animosity of the Jewish leaders toward Jesus. Anderson notes similarly the narrative impact of the lack of interpretation of the sign in Matthew 16:4: "None is necessary. The implied reader learned its meaning from the first episode and is expected to recall it in retrospect. The Pharisees have not learned a thing" (Anderson, 80).

3. Meaning of the "Sign of Jonah."

Recent studies (Anderson; Chow; Powell) emphasize the separate narrative interests of each evangelist in differing historical and literary contexts. Such studies suggest that Matthew, with a Jewish Christian audience in view, builds on contemporary Jewish interpretations of Jonah that treat Jonah's fish experience as a symbol of God's deliverance and, in some texts, rebirth or resurrection (cf. Jon 1—2 [for surveys of relevant Jewish literature, see Jeremias; Chow; Sherwood]). In contrast, Luke's interest in the *Gentile mission leads him to interpret Jesus' words in light of Jonah's prophetic role (cf. Jon 3—4), portraying the Ninevites as representatives of his readers, "signifying Gentiles who turn their back on their former beliefs and submit themselves to the message of Jesus" (Chow, 115).

Thus, in Matthew 12:38-42 (presumed in Mt 16:1-4) the sign of Jonah indicates Jesus' death and resurrection, of which the OT prophet Jonah's three days and three nights in the fish serve as a type (see Typology). That Jesus did not spend three full days and nights in the tomb is explained by interpreters in terms of cultural conventions in counting days or as poetic license. As Edwards notes, "Whatever the possible origin of the 'three days' or 'on the third day' tradition, by the time we reach Matthew it has become an integral part of the passion kerygma" (Edwards, 99). In Luke 11:29-32 the sign of Jonah is Jonah's preaching to and/or the subsequent repentance of the Ninevites, corresponding to Jesus' own message and the response required: "In both the narrative and the reader's own situation the only thing which is given, greater than Solomon and Jonah, and which invites 'this generation' to repent, is the preaching of Jesus and of the Church" (Chow, 116).

See also OLD TESTAMENT IN THE GOSPELS; RESURRECTION; TYPOLOGY.

BIBLIOGRAPHY. J. C. Anderson, "Double and Triple Stories, the Implied Reader, and Redundancy in Matthew," Semeia 31 (1985) 71-89; B. W. Bacon,

“What Was the Sign of Jonah?” BibW 20 (1902) 99-112; S. Chow, The Sign of Jonah Reconsidered: A Study of Its Meaning in the Gospel Traditions (Con-BNT 27; Stockholm: Almqvist & Wiksell, 1995); R. A. Edwards, The Sign of Jonah in the Theology of the Evangelists and Q (London: SCM, 1971); J. Jeremias, “Ἰωνᾶς,” TDNT 3:406-10; T. W. Manson, The Sayings of Jesus: As Recorded in the Gospels According to St. Matthew and St. Luke, Arranged with Introduction and Commentary (London: SCM Press, 1949); M. A. Powell, “Echoes of Jonah in the New Testament,” WW 27 (2007) 157-64; Y. Sherwood, A Biblical Text and Its Afterlives: The Survival of Jonah in Western Culture (Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 2000); H. E. Tödt, The Son of Man in the Synoptic Tradition, trans. D. M. Barton (London: SCM, 1965); A. Vögtle, “Der Spruch vom Jonaszeichen,” in Synoptische Studien: Alfred Wikenhauser zum siebzigsten Geburtstag am 22. Februar 1953 dargebracht von Freunden, Kollegen und Schülern, ed. J. Schmid and A. Vögtle (Munich: Karl Zink, 1953) 230-77; A. von Harnack, The Sayings of Jesus: The Second Source of St. Matthew and St. Luke, trans. J. R. Wilkinson (London: Williams & Norgate, 1908).
S. L. Black

SIGNS. See MIRACLES AND MIRACLE STORIES.

SILLOAM. See ARCHEOLOGY AND GEOGRAPHY.

SIN, SINNER

Palestinian Judaism generally followed its scriptural heritage by warning of conduct that was deemed “sinful” and persons who were regarded as “sinners.” Yet these were not simply moral terms for violators of God’s *law. What was regarded as “sin” and who was a “sinner” were matters of legal dispute among Jewish leaders. In many cases, “sin” and “sinner” were freighted terms within Jewish sectarianism and were deployed in order to denounce or exclude persons for behavior that did not meet the perceived norms of certain Jewish factions. Jesus entered the conversation about what conduct and what persons were deemed unacceptable to *God. Jesus’ statements on this topic appear to represent a controversial challenge to the dominating views of the day about “sinners.” According to Jesus, it is the restoration of sinners through *repentance, rather than the exclusion of sinners from communal life, that is God’s intended purpose for sinners.

1. Terminology
2. Social Context
3. Usage in the Gospels

4. Jesus and the Sinners
5. Sinners in the Gospel of Luke
6. Conclusion

1. Terminology.

In the biblical witness sin is what occasions the rupture in the relationship between God and human-kind. The concern with sin in the OT reflects the ethical nature of Israel’s faith and its concern for identifying and then removing moral impurity from the covenant community. Several Hebrew words are used to indicate sin. The most common term is ḥaṭṭāʾt, which refers literally to missing a goal or mark (e.g., Gen 18:20). Such “misses” become an offense to God because one incurs guilt by failing to perform some duty or by engaging in wrongful behavior. In the LXX this term often is rendered with the Greek word hamartia, which appears frequently in the NT. The word hamartia has a fairly broad range of meaning, including a departure from a divine norm, the consequences for committing an offense, the state of being in moral error, or a destructive power exerted upon a person. It possesses semantic connotations of guilt, liability and even impurity (BDAG 50-51; LN 1:776). The second most common Hebrew term for “sin” is rāšāʿ, which is used to describe a wicked person. The word rāšāʿ was used to signify persons who lived without respect for the law of God and were generally considered impious (e.g., Ps 1:1). In the LXX rāšāʿ usually is translated by the Greek word hamartōlos, meaning “sinner.” In the Hellenistic world hamartōlos was a negative term that connoted the negation of right order and conduct (Rengstorf, 320). In the LXX the primary referent of hamartōlos is persons or behavior that does not measure up to the moral and cultic obligations of the Mosaic law. The Jewish tradition from the Torah to the Talmud regards sinners as persons known to be lawless, idolatrous, impious, violent and oppressive to the poor.

2. Social Context.

The terms for “sin” and “sinner” continued in the Greek and Roman periods to designate acts and actors who violated prescribed norms of behavior (e.g., Sir 1:25; 2:12; 15:12; 21:10; 27:30).

Hellenistic notions of sin as involuntary or deliberate offenses against the deity were accentuated in Jewish contexts that focused on Israel’s holiness and uprightness amidst a wider pagan culture. National sin could be expunged from the community when it confessed its guilt before God for failing in its covenantal conduct (e.g., Neh 9:2, 27; Tob 3:3; 2 Macc 12:42). The content of sin could be anything that violated the commandments of God. Sometimes particular attention was given to those acts that compromised the integrity of Israel's worship and impinged upon separation from the nations (e.g., 2 Macc 5:17-18; 4 Macc 5:19). Jewish wisdom literature from Proverbs to Sirach makes lengthy exhortations about fearing God and avoiding the dangerous results of sin. The act of sinning inevitably brought dire consequences for both the individual and the community, which had to punish sin, atone for sin, and ensure a change in conduct from sin.

Usage of "sinner" was not restricted to a description of people who were regarded as being especially impious, wicked or corrupt. It was also used in the factional context of Jewish sectarianism, where "sinner" was a label attached in order to imply deviancy from a perceived norm. In other words, to call someone a "sinner" was to render a judgment about a person's exclusion from a specific religious group. Those beyond the boundary of a group were regarded as intrinsically wicked. In Jewish literature we see *Gentiles being regarded as quintessential "sinners" as opposed to "righteous" Israelites (Ps 9:17; Tob 13:8; Jub. 23:23-24; Sib. Or. 3:303; cf. Gal 2:15). Yet the same distinction could be made within Israel, so that some Jews came to be regarded as outsiders despite still claiming ethnic descent from Israel and adhering to the law of Moses. A sinner could be a person who did not follow the law in the precise manner that some Jewish sect thought it should be followed. Those derided as sinners could include (1) those who failed to understand Daniel's revelation in contrast to the "wise" who do comprehend it (Dan 12:10); (2) apostate Jews who followed Greek customs and effectively abandoned Judaism (1 Macc 1:34; 2:44, 48); (3) Jews who did not hold to the distinctive interpretations, calendars and rituals of a particular Jewish sect (e.g., Enochic Judaism [1 En. 82:4-7]; Qumran community [1 QpHab V, 1-12; 1 QS V, 7-11; 1 QH^a VII, 12]; non-Pharisaic Jews [As. Mos. 7:3, 9-10]; *Pharisees [Pss. Sol. 2:34; 17:5-8, 23, 36]; *Priestly/*Essenic Judaism [Jub. 16:4]); and (4) more generally, those said to be opponents of the pious and the devout (Sir 13:17; 33:14; Pss. Sol. 17:5-8, 23; cf. Jude 15).

The identity of the sinners whom Jesus addressed in his ministry (e.g., Mk 2:17; Lk 19:9-10; 15:1-2) has been disputed in modern scholarship. J. Jeremias argued that "sinner" was a specific term in Jesus' day for people who engaged in despised trades and for the general "people of the land" (the 'am hā'āreṣ). These persons were thought to be uneducated, ignorant and lax concerning the law. This bucolic impiety was a stumbling block to their salvation in the eyes of the Pharisees (Jeremias, 109-12). The problem with Jeremias's proposal is that he assumed a formalistic *Judaism based on a theology of merit. He also caricatured the dominant perspective as being that the people of the land were mostly irreligious, and for his reconstruction he was overly dependent on later rabbinic sources that postdate the NT (see Rabbinic Traditions and Writings). Thus, while all sinners could be "people of the land," not all "people of the land" were therefore sinners (Wright, 265). N. Perrin regarded a sinner to be a Jew who had effectively made himself as a Gentile (Perrin 1967, 93-94). Perrin's designation fits with the widespread application of the label "sinner" to Gentiles (e.g., 1 Macc 2:58; Gal 2:15) and to Hellenized Jews during the Seleucid period for being sinners who were in association with Gentiles (e.g., 1 Macc 2:44). Yet the application of the title to intra-Palestinian debates about keeping the law means that it cannot be restricted to Jews compromised by *Hellenism. J. Crossley underscores the socioeconomic aspect, with sinners comprising of persons regarded as generally lawless but chiefly known for their exploitation of the poor (Crossley, 75-96). In which case, sinners are not the poor who are exploited, but the exploiters of the poor. Crossley is correct about an economic element to the category "sinner" in Jewish literature, but in most cases in the Gospels it is either the moral or sectarian connotation of the designation "sinner" that seems to be the most prominent.

E. P. Sanders maintained that "sinners" simply means "wicked" or "law-breakers" (Sanders, 177-82), which is why the designation is linked so frequently with tax collectors. The offense of Jesus' ministry was that he was consorting with persons known to be deliberate transgressors of the law and promising them entry into the kingdom without requiring repentance of them. In Sanders's favor is that the Greek word hamartōlos, is based on the Hebrew word rāšā' for those who break the law (e.g., Ex 23:1; Deut 25:2; Prov 17:23). Yet what constituted a violation of the law seems to have differed from sect to sect. There was no objective law code as to how the law of Moses should be followed and applied to daily Jewish life. Questions about what it meant to be a faithful Jew, how to move from contamination to holiness, how the nation should live corporately, and even how the temple should operate were disputed in Jewish legal interpretations of the day. The commandments of the Torah (i.e., Genesis through Deuteronomy) were applied according to halakhah (i.e., a specific manner of interpretation). Consequently, “sinner” can be a general term used to indicate wickedness of character (e.g., Lk 5:8; 6:32-34; 7:37; 13:2; 15:7, 10; 18:13), but it also functioned as a factional term to label deviant behavior. In the context of Jewish sectarianism to call a person a “sinner” was to issue a vituperative insult and an allegation of socio-religious deviancy. To designate someone a “sinner” was to imply that the person had violated a group consensus as to how one should live a law-abiding life before God. So when Jesus is accosted for partaking of the company of sinners, it is because he and his disciples failed to adopt the particular way of life regarded as valid by the self-described “righteous” of a particular sect such as the Pharisees (e.g., Lk 18:9-14). Sanders failed to fully take into account the sectarian nature of Judaism when it came to labeling persons as “sinners” or “righteous.” He also failed to take full account of Jesus’ prophetic message, which, like that of the biblical prophets, made repentance central (see Crossley, 89-95). Jesus was more critical of those who dismissed the sinners than of the sinners themselves because he saw in the efforts to marginalize persons a way of life that competed with his own message of the *kingdom of God (Dunn, 532).

3. Usage in the Gospels.

The word hamartia appears thirty-seven times in the Gospels alone. In its various appearances we learn that the *baptism of John was a baptism of repentance for the *forgiveness of sins (Mt 3:5-6; Mk 1:4-5). Jesus controversially mentions the forgiveness of sins in relation to his *healing of a paralytic (Mk 2:5-10; Mt 9:2-6; Lk 5:20-24). In Matthew’s infancy narrative it is stated that Jesus came to save his people from their sins (Mt 1:21). Matthew also includes reference to *blasphemy and sin against the Holy Spirit (Mt 12:31). At the *Last Supper it is said that Jesus’ blood is shed for the forgiveness of sins (Mt 26:28). In material unique to Luke, Zechariah prophesies that his son will give knowledge of *salvation for the forgiveness of sins (Lk 1:77). Jesus’ ministry is summarized as preaching repentance for the forgiveness of sins (Lk 3:3). At the house of a Pharisee, Jesus forgives the sins of a woman (Lk 7:47-49). Luke’s version of the Lord’s Prayer includes mention of the forgiveness of sins as opposed to Matthew’s “debts” (Lk 11:4). Luke also includes preaching the forgiveness of sins to all nations in Jesus’ resurrection commission to the disciples (Lk 24:47). The Johannine teaching on sin is similar to the Synoptics. There is common reference to the forgiveness of sins (Jn 1:29; 20:23). There is a constant allegation made that Jesus’ opponents are steeped in sin because of their antagonism toward him and their lack of faith, which leaves them without excuse (Jn 8:21, 24, 46; 9:34, 41; 15:22, 24). Elsewhere, those who sin are slaves to sin (Jn 8:34). In his farewell discourse, Jesus promises to send the Holy Spirit to convict people of sin (Jn 16:8-9). Judas is also guilty of a greater sin for delivering Jesus to the Judean authorities (Jn 19:11).

The verb hamartanō is used less frequently, appearing only eleven times in the Gospels and never in Mark. It pertains to the performance of sin and its concomitant effects of dislocation from divine favor and covenantal standards of conduct. It appears in Matthew pertaining to sin and reconciliation among *disciples (Mt 18:15, 21) and in Judas’s regret for his actions in betraying Jesus (Mt 27:4). Luke utilizes the word as well in relation to reconciliation as seen in the parable of the lost son (Lk 15:18, 21) and in the restoration of erring persons among the disciples (Lk 17:3-4). John uses the verb simply as a designation for immoral conduct (Jn 5:14; 8:11) and pertaining to the question of whose sin was responsible a man being born blind (Jn 9:2-3).

The word hamartōlos occurs forty-seven times in the NT. That breaks down into thirty-three occurrences in the Gospels and fourteen occurrences in the Epistles. In the Gospels this usage appears in fourteen individual units. In four of these units the word is used adjectivally to describe “sinful” persons, and in ten units the word is used in substantive form to designate “sinners.” The adjectival form occurs when Jesus describes persons from this “adulterous and sinful generation” who are ashamed of his words (Mk 8:38); Peter admits that he is a “sinful man” in response to Jesus’ miraculous ability to enable him and his colleagues to catch an immense number of fish (Lk 5:8); the woman who enters the house of a Pharisee and washes Jesus’ feet with her tears is described as a “woman who was a sinner” (Lk 7:37); and the risen Jesus informs the travelers to Emmaus that it was the appointed vocation of the *Son of Man to be handed over to sinners, be crucified, and to rise on the third day (Lk 24:7). The substantive form of hamartōlos as a noun is found in the following ten units:

1. All three Synoptic Gospels record the story of Jesus’ call to a tax collector to leave his tax booth and to immediately follow him (Mt 9:9-13; Mk 2:13-17; Lk 5:27-32). Thereafter, Jesus and his disciples go and dine in the company of “tax collectors and sinners.” This prompts a question from the scribes and Pharisees about why Jesus does this when such behavior is unbecoming for a good rabbi. Jesus answers, "It is not the healthy who need a doctor, but the sick. I have not come to call the righteous, but sinners" (Mk 2:17). The first part of his answer quotes what probably was a well-known proverb in the ancient world: doctors help the sick, not the healthy. Jesus comes like a physician with a ministry of restoration, reconciliation and repentance for these sinners. The "righteous" are not the forensically righteous before God but rather those who regard themselves as holding to a pattern of life that alone constitutes a legally valid appropriation of the Torah. Jesus addresses his call (of repentance [Lk 5:32]) to the sinners who are marginalized by the Pharisees and *scribes on account of their collaboration with idolatrous foreigners and their general wickedness.

2. An accusation is made by opponents of Jesus that he is a glutton, a drunkard and a friend of "tax collectors and sinners" (Mt 11:16-19; Lk 7:31-35). In response, Jesus tells a parable in which he likens his critics' objections to him to a children's game in which a cohort of children sing a wedding dance and perform a funeral dirge, and other children refuse to play along. The Pharisees refuse to go along with Jesus' ministry of seeking out the poor, marginalized and sinners and restoring them to covenant standing. Furthermore, John the Baptizer's ascetic manner of life and warnings of *judgment are contrasted with Jesus' open table fellowship with sinners that symbolized the eschatological *joy associated with his message. Jesus partakes of the company of sinners and eats meals with persons of ill-gotten wealth who were thought of as irreligious. Yet the inclusion of them in his personal company is far more in keeping with the purpose of God than the Pharisees and Scribes, who rejected the Baptizer's message (Lk 7:30). Amidst the socioreligious games of accusation and counteraccusation, Jesus and John will be vindicated as God's children because their respective messages, though in some ways diverse, are part of the one purpose of God that can be identified with divine wisdom (Lk 7:35).

3. In the Sermon on the Plain the Lukan Jesus exhorts his followers to love others, to do good to others, and to freely lend to others (Lk 6:32-35; cf. Mt 5:46-47). Jesus urges a generosity beyond the closed circle of relationships between patrons and debtors that characterized much of the Mediterranean world. They are not to restrict their benevolence to those who love them, to those who do good to them, or to those who lend to them—even the "sinners" do that—rather, his disciples are to show love, goodness and generosity to those regarded as being outside of the covenant community. The only "credit" that can be gained (Lk 6:32) is when one chooses to be better than sinners by being better to sinners. By doing so, Jesus' followers become a living embodiment of the mercy of God.

4. When Jesus dines at a banquet in the house of a Pharisee named Simon, a sinful woman enters and begins washing Jesus' feet with her tears and anointing his feet with expensive oil (Lk 7:36-50). The woman most likely was known as a local prostitute, given the description of her as a "woman having been sinful in the city" and her access to expensive perfume. Simon supposes that if Jesus were a genuine prophet, he would know what type of woman she was—a sinner. In response, Jesus tells the parable of a creditor who had two debtors, and the creditor unexpectedly canceled the accounts of both debtors. The debtor who owed the most was, of course, the more grateful for this undeserved act of generosity. In the same way, the sinful woman by her actions was simply showing her gratitude to Jesus for the forgiveness of her sins. This episode addresses readers who ordinarily would sympathize with Simon's concerns about group boundaries and upright behavior, and it urges them to adopt the expansive love that characterized Jesus' actions. It is all too easy to dismiss this woman as immoral, unclean and deviant, but taking that position fails to appreciate the complex web of sociocultural factors that led to her disempowered and desperate predicament. It is to sinners like this woman—poor, vulnerable, exploited—to whom Jesus announced the good news (Green, 308-9).

5. Jesus asks his audience if the Galilean pilgrims whom Pilate had killed in the temple were worse sinners than anyone else in Galilee (Lk 13:1-3). Whereas it was commonly assumed that calamity and misfortune fell upon those who somehow deserved it, Jesus shows that judgment will overtake everyone who fails to repent. Thus, the issue is not whether one is a sinner, but whether one has repented.

6. The *parables of the lost sheep, lost coin and lost son are narrative explanations of why Jesus welcomes tax collectors and sinners and even eats with them (Lk 15:1-32). The parables are weapons of discourse between Jesus and his interlocutors. Jesus provides a threefold narrative defense of his actions by recounting God's concern for the restoration of those estranged from him, God's earnest quest to seek out those who have strayed from the covenantal pastures, and the heavenly joy that accompanies the repentance of a sinner. The Lukan cycle of parables defends Jesus' *table fellowship with sinners on the grounds that the *love of God is foremost concerned with the restoration of sinners as opposed to celebrating their exclusion from a purified covenantal community.

7. Jesus tells a parable about the Pharisee and the tax collector who pray in the temple, in which he implodes the worldview of some “who trusted in themselves that they were righteous and regarded others with contempt” (Lk 18:9-14). What made the Pharisee “righteous” in the eyes of some were his show of personal piety and his separation from others less observant than him. Yet the sinful tax collector remained far more humble and showed genuine contrition for his life as a wayward sinner. The shocking outcome of the parable is that it is the tax collector, not the Pharisee, who goes away justified (i.e., vindicated as a covenant member in good standing) by the fact of his contrite disposition and self-humiliation. The striking message of the parable is that it is those who recognize God as a gracious benefactor and not themselves as worthy of divine benefaction who possess the appropriate mindset for those who seek to be at peace with God (Green, 643).

8. In Jericho a crowd grumbles when Jesus goes to dine in the house of Zacchaeus, a sinner and chief tax collector (Lk 19:1-10). The comical picture of Zacchaeus climbing a tree in desperately seeking to see Jesus is matched by Jesus’ purpose being to “seek out and to save the lost.” Zacchaeus is a child of Abraham, and salvation comes to his house because he makes the appropriate response to the offer of God’s mercy, which is to be generous to the poor and to recompense those whom he has defrauded. The short story highlights further that one’s status before God is not predetermined, even for sinners, but instead is open, based on how they respond to Jesus’ message. There is hope for those ordinarily thought to be a lost cause. Furthermore, the story shows that Abrahamic sonship is determined by one’s relationship with God through Jesus, not by the religious leaders’ definition of group boundaries.

9. In John’s Gospel the Pharisees interrogate a man who had been born blind, whom Jesus had healed (Jn 9:1-41). Twice during the story they refer to Jesus as a “sinner” because he healed on the Sabbath (Jn 9:16, 24-25). There was considerable debate among Jewish leaders of the day over what activities were acceptable on the Sabbath and what activities were not (e.g., in contrast to the Pharisees, the Qumranites did not regard relief of animal suffering as a permissible action on the Sabbath [CD-A XI, 13-14]). Evidently the pharisaic halakah known to John clearly censured such healings that Jesus performed. Here Jesus is labeled as a sinner not because he was regarded as immoral or idolatrous, but because he failed to keep the Sabbath the way that some Pharisees thought it should be kept. In the Johannine narrative the “signs” that Jesus performs speak for themselves and demonstrate that he is not a sinner, but rather is one sent by God.

10. In *Gethsemane Jesus disturbs his sleeping disciples by announcing to them that “the Son of Man is betrayed into the hands of sinners” (Mt 26:45; Mk 14:41) when Judas leads a mob of armed men into the garden to arrest Jesus. Here “sinners” is used in a general sense denoting those who commit a malevolent deed. More specifically, it perhaps refers to Gentiles, or at least those acting as the instruments of Gentiles, who will kill Jesus, as Jesus himself had predicted (Mk 10:33; Lk 18:32; 24:7). We can also detect an echo of the biblical notion of the hands of the wicked and violent who commit sinful deeds against the righteous (e.g., Ps 26:10; 104:4; Is 31:7; 59:6; Jer 23:14; Jon 3:8), suggesting that Jesus located his own story in OT parameters.

4. Jesus and the Sinners.

What should be clear from the foregoing survey is the somewhat fluid and plastic nature of the label “sinner.” In many instances it constitutes a moral judgment upon a person’s behavior, as in the case of the sinful woman who anointed Jesus’ feet (Lk 7:36-50). On other occasions it signifies a mixture of oppressive and idolatrous conduct, such as collecting taxes on behalf of the Roman governor (e.g., Mt 9:10-11; 11:19; 18:17). Elsewhere the term is clearly used in a factional sense of not following the specific legal interpretation of a particular Jewish sect such as the Pharisees (e.g., Jn 9:16, 24) or in outrageous behavior that transgresses perceived norms concerning the limitation of fellowship with outsiders (e.g., Mk 2:14-17). A sinner can be either one of the oppressed or one of the oppressors who are known to violate the divine legislation and its accompanying halakic interpretation on how to live an obedient life under God.

Jesus’ ministry to sinners was distinctive in two senses. First, he saw the restoration, rather than the condemnation and exclusion, of sinners through repentance to be the chief intention of God. Second, he regarded table fellowship with sinners, especially the bitterly despised tax collectors, as an enacted parable demonstrating the open invitation to enter the kingdom to anyone who would receive his message. Jesus’ table fellowship also demonstrates the inaugurated character of his eschatology. In Israel’s sacred traditions and in Second Temple literature banqueting imagery is utilized as a metaphor of the vindication that awaits God's people (Is 25:6; Ezek 39:17-19; 1Q28a II, 11-22; 1 En. 62:14; 2 En. 42:5). The subversive element of Jesus' praxis is that he is celebrating the messianic banquet in advance, but celebrating it with the wrong people. Jesus' action in dining with sinners was much like serving the figurative hors d'oeuvres of the messianic feast and foreshadowing exactly who would be vindicated in the renewed *Israel that he was creating around himself. This coheres with a statement found in Matthew: "Truly I tell you, the tax collectors and the prostitutes are going into the kingdom of God ahead of you" (Mt 21:31). It is these sinners whom, because of their faith, repentance and contrition, Jesus regarded as his banqueting partners in the future kingdom. Jesus shakes up the standard stereotypes of who is an insider and who is an outsider when it comes to the dramatic advent of God's kingdom.

5. Sinners in the Gospel of Luke.

Out of all of the Gospels, it is the evangelist Luke who has the most material about the sinners in Jesus' ministry (see Neale; Adams). This group, much like the "poor," is the special object of God's care and concern in the Luke's Gospel. That is because in Luke's depiction, Jesus' gospel to the poor includes the marginalized and those of low social status. It is sinners who become the paragons of discipleship as they illustrate their alignment with Jesus and the kingdom by what they do in response to encountering Jesus. Levi leaves everything and throws a banquet in Jesus' honor (Lk 5:27-32), while Zacchaeus makes fourfold restitution to those whom he has wronged and gives half of his possessions to those in need (Lk 19:1-10). Luke consistently presents an inversion of values and expectations as the social outcasts are granted privileged status in the kingdom, while those thought to be religiously privileged find themselves on the outside. Jesus' embrace of sinners buttresses Luke's portrayal of salvation as the status reversal that occurs when grace intrudes upon the perceived norms of social and religious boundaries. God's acceptance of sinners is not contingent upon the agreement of religious leaders about whom he should accept and how and when he should do so. That is because the Isaianic script for the Gospel of Luke is that salvation is destined for "all flesh" (Lk 3:6) and "all nations" (Lk 24:47).

In sum, sinners are crucial to the narrative sequence and theological framework of Luke on these grounds: (1) they are the quintessential example of God's care for the outcasts; (2) they demonstrate the dramatic nature of salvation as status reversal;

(3) they are models of discipleship in their faith, repentance, remorse, attitude toward riches, and commitment to Jesus; (4) they are proof that the Isaianic hope for salvation has finally dawned; (5) they prefigure the influx of Gentiles as the ultimate sinners in the book of Acts. As D. Neale puts it, "For Luke the 'sinners' are one of the most important symbols of the purpose of Jesus' earthly ministry and their repentance was an essential part of what Jesus was called to accomplish" (Neale, 190).

6. Conclusion.

The sinners to whom Jesus ministered represented a diverse array of persons who found themselves on the margins of society for a number of reasons, ranging from victimization to willful disobedience to God. Pharisees might not necessarily object to the restoration and repentance of sinners, but they themselves ordinarily would be unwilling to undertake such a venture at risk of being morally and ceremonially contaminated, and they still would have reservations about the status of a reformed Jew with a history of wickedness. Jesus' interaction with sinners in healing them, dining with them, and pronouncing the forgiveness of their sins demonstrates how the kingdom's arrival impacts Israelites in the present. For Jesus, God's view of his people does not necessarily correspond with the palisade and walls that some Jewish leaders raised up to mark out the limits of fellowship and the identity for God's people. Jesus modeled before the people, who also could grumble against his openness to sinners, what the compassion of God looks like in action. Ultimately, the kingdom is a matter of *mercy rather than the enforcement of conventionally approved boundaries. For Jesus, covenant loyalty is defined by response to his message of God's kingdom. As such, whenever and whoever responds appropriately will be assured of a place in God's kingdom in the final assize.

See also BLINDNESS AND DEAFNESS; CLEAN AND UNCLEAN; EXILE AND RESTORATION; FORGIVENESS; GENTILES; HARDNESS OF HEART; JUSTICE, RIGHTEOUSNESS; LAW; MERCY; REPENTANCE; TABLE FELLOWSHIP.

BIBLIOGRAPHY. I. Abrahams, "Publicans and Sinners," in Studies in Pharisaism and the Gospels (LBS; New York: Ktav, 1967) 54-61; D. Adams, The Sinner in Luke (ETSMS 8; Eugene, OR: Pickwick, 2008); C. Blomberg, "Jesus, Sinners, and Table Fellowship," BBR 19 (2009) 35-62; G. Carey, Sinners: Jesus and His Earliest Followers (Waco, TX: Baylor University Press, 2009); J. G. Crossley, Why Christianity Happened: A Sociohistorical Account of Chris- tian Origins (26-50 CE) (Louisville: Westminster John Knox, 2006); J. R. Donahue, "Tax Collectors and Sinners," CBQ 33 (1971) 39-61; J. D. G. Dunn, Jesus Remembered (Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 2003); J. B. Green, The Gospel of Luke (NICNT; Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1997); J. Jeremias, New Testament Theology: The Proclamation of Jesus (New York: Scribner, 1971); D. A. Neale, None But the Sinners: Religious Categories in the Gospel of Luke (JSNTSup 58; Sheffield: JSOT Press, 1991); N. Perrin, Rediscovering the Teaching of Jesus (NTL; London: SCM, 1967); K. H. Rengstorff, "ἀμαρτωλός," TDNT 1:317-35; E. P. Sanders, Jesus and Judaism (Philadelphia: Fortress, 1985); N. T. Wright, Jesus and the Victory of God (COQG 2; London: SPCK, 1996); N. Y. Young, "Jesus and the Sinners: Some Queries," JSNT 24 (1985) 73-75.

M. F. Bird

SINAI. See MOUNTAIN AND WILDERNESS.

SLAVE, SERVANT

Slavery and service are distinct but overlapping categories, which are referenced frequently in the Gospels. There are both historical and fictional depictions, including portraits of literal slavery or service, as well as metaphors for a disciple's relationship with God. In the Greco-Roman world slavery was a legally defined, absolute category, while "service" was a relative term and could be applied to people of any social status. Accordingly, not all those who served were slaves; not all service was servitude.

1. Vocabulary, Translation and Interpretation
2. Background to the Gospels
3. Slavery in the Gospels
4. Service in the Gospels
5. Footwashing

1. Vocabulary, Translation and Interpretation.

The first-century A.D. multilingual context in Palestine employed Aramaic, Hebrew, Greek and Latin (see Languages of Palestine). Although each of these languages has "slave"/"servant" vocabulary, each of their ranges of meaning varies. The Gospels principally use ten Greek word groups to convey the overlapping categories of slavery and service, some of which occasionally reflect meanings beyond these simple categories. The most frequent nouns include doulos ("slave") and diakonos ("servant, attendant, agent, intermediary"), but also pais ("young person, boy, child, servant, slave") and hypēretēs ("helper, assistant, servant"). Some of these terms are occasionally interchanged in the same passage (e.g., pais and doulos in Lk 7:1-10; doulos and diakonos in Mt 20:26-27 // Mk 10:45-46). The principal verbs are diakoneō ("to serve, be of service, attend, minister") and douleuō ("to be a slave, be subjected").

In Matthew 12:18, quoting Isaiah 42:1, there is underlying dependence on a significant Hebrew word in the OT, ʿebed ("slave, servant, subject, worshiper [of God]"). Jesus is presented as a prophetic fulfillment of the Servant Songs, in which this Hebrew word is translated into Greek as pais in the sense of "servant" (cf. also Mt 8:17). The word ʿebed reflects a particularly broad range of meanings that does not map precisely onto any Greek (or English) equivalent. Pais is similarly used in the phrases "servant Israel" (Lk 1:54) and "servant David" (Lk 1:69). It is important to note that the original OT usage derives from a different social and cultural outlook to that of first-century A.D. Greco-Roman society. Most often ʿebed is translated in the Greek OT as pais or doulos (diakonos is rarely used in the Greek OT.) It is by no means always a degrading term, and sometimes it may reflect a relative, rather than an absolute, rank (e.g., the "servant" of a king may be an honored, freeborn, high-ranking officer [2 Sam 13:24]; or a host may deferentially refer to himself as his visitor's "servant" [Gen 19:2]).

The earliest English translation of the Bible (Wycliffe [late fourteenth century]) did not use the noun "slave." Dependence on the Latin Vulgate, which largely uses servus to convey doulos and minister to convey diakonos, may have led to a preference respectively for the similar-sounding "servant" and "minister." In addition, the comparatively late introduction into English of the word group slave (from the conquered Slavonic race) meant that this term had less currency in the Middle Ages. While most succeeding English translations of the NT similarly avoided "slave," more recently there has been a tendency to distinguish doulos as "slave" and diakonos as "servant," while pais has been translated variously according to context. There is, nonetheless, a continuing reticence to use "slave" to translate doulos in reference either to Jesus or a believer's relationship with God.

Contemporary interpreters of "slavery"/"service" language in the Gospel texts have to contend with two challenges: (1) the theological and ethical difficulty posed by English not having a single word group that is sufficiently multivalent to embrace categories ranging from, on the one hand, humble but voluntary service (e.g., of God) to, on the other hand, forced, oppressive and inhuman slavery; (2) the reality that different cultures, over different periods, both prior and subsequent to the writing of the Gospels, have regarded slavery quite differently.

For example, first-century A.D. social attitudes and practices toward slaves differed significantly from those of the African slave trade in the sixteenth to nineteenth centuries. Especially since the 1950s there has been a rebirth in historical interest in social and economic questions. This is reflected in changing currents of scholarship, including a widespread and intense critique of almost all aspects of slavery. These changes in perception are reflected in contrasting and polarized scholarly engagements on the topic (see Patterson), which in turn pose significant challenges to the contemporary task of interpreting references to slavery and servanthood in the Gospels in a way that avoids undue anachronism.

2. Background to the Gospels.

Roman society is the principal background to most of the references to slavery in the Gospels. The early Roman Empire continued to operate a long-established, pervasive and legally codified slave economy in which all human beings were classed either as slaves, or former slaves, or freeborn (cf. the contrast between slavery and freedom in Jn 8:33-35). Although the enslavement of the Jewish nation in Egypt is a significant biblical event and motif (cf. Ex 20:2: "house of slavery"), there is little that is distinctively Jewish about the portrayal or treatment of slaves in the Gospels.

Roman slavery may be defined as the absolute subjection of those who are not free. Slaves were under the unqualified power and control of another person and were regarded as human property, which could be sold, lent or bequeathed in perpetuity. Roman slaves were not merely forced labor or bonded workers. They had neither roots nor kinship relations. They had no rights, nor in most cases could they own property (although there are instances of well-positioned slaves accruing personal fortunes or running up debts [cf. Mt 18:23-35]). They were socially excluded, and, in a highly honorific society, they lacked honor. Perhaps most significantly, their very lives were vulnerable to extreme punishment. Exploitation of slaves was considered neither inappropriate nor unethical (Polybius, Hist. 4.38.4) and was structurally, legally and visibly embedded in the Roman social order and its economic fabric. Slavery was not a marginal feature; rather, it impinged on virtually every aspect of society and was evidenced not least by a high proportion of slaves among the population (although the actual figures are both uncertain and vary across the empire). In sum, although slavery was enshrined in law, slaves were not protected by it.

Notwithstanding these categoric and absolute features, portraits of Roman slavery are nonetheless diverse, with aspects both of similarity and contrast with other highly dependent, disadvantaged, or low-status people. While normally an involuntary state it was possible for individuals to submit themselves to slavery, choosing to exchange extreme poverty as a free laborer in favor of the unguaranteed possibility of shelter, clothing and a regular source of food as a slave. Slaves worked in both public and private settings, including domestic, urban or rural contexts. The settings of the Gospels include a preponderance of images of agricultural slavery (e.g., Mt 13:24-30). The majority of Roman slaves were male, and this is reflected also in the Gospel accounts (contrast the female slave [paidiskē] who confronted Peter after his denial [Mt 26:69 // Mk 14:66; Lk 22:56; Jn 18:17]; the one parable that refers to female slaves [paidiskē] in contrast to male slaves [Lk 12:45]; and Mary's self-reference as a slave girl [doulē] of the Lord [Lk 1:38, 48]). Slaves could be given any task, other than military service, and often were found working alongside the waged, free poor (cf. misthōtos [Mk 1:20; Jn 10:12-13], misthios [Lk 15:17, 19], referring to a "hired laborer").

While many slaves experienced no amelioration in their circumstances, some did benefit from advancement and even manumission (a master granting free status to a slave—an event not recorded in the Gospels). Consistent with other sources, some portraits of slaves in the Gospel parables describe instances where individual slaves had both influence and responsibility, including financial investments (Mt 25:14-30), managerial duties over junior slaves (Lk 12:42-48), and a means of rewarding success by advancement (Mt 24:45-51; 25:14-30). Many masters enhanced the value of their slaves by ensuring that they received some level of education and involving them in the education of their children. Nonetheless, any such good fortune remained precarious. Although violence and brutality were commonplace across Roman society, ill treatment was frequently the lot of slaves, and they had no protection against harsh treatment or corporal punishment. The Synoptic Gospels record a parable in which a succession of slaves is brutally treated by tenant farmers (Mt 21:33-42 // Mk 12:1-11 // Lk 20:9-17). In Luke's account, while Jesus' audience expects this mistreatment of the slaves, there is surprise at the tenants' mistreatment also of the vineyard owner's son (Lk 20:16). However, portraits of good masters also exist, both in the Gospels (e.g., Mt 18:23-35; Lk 12:37) and other contemporary sources, whose slaves enjoyed relatively benign circumstances, enviable both to other slaves and even to the most disadvantaged free.

In ancient Greek texts diakonos is often seen in contexts of household duties, especially waiting on tables. However, J. Collins argues that servility, humility, low status and menial tasks are not necessarily dominant features of this word (cf. the parable of the prodigal, in which the older son pleads that he has obediently served [douleuō] his father for many years [Lk 15:29]). Rather, the key notions include representation, agency and mediation. The noun diakonos may be applied to someone, of whatever social status, who is a subordinate go-between. Such a person may be in a position of *authority but is carrying out tasks on behalf of one yet higher in rank. Collins argues that while the focus in most Greek texts is not on lowly and loving service of others, in the Gospels the principal designation is of some kind of menial attendance.

3. Slavery in the Gospels.

The Gospels include historical, fictional and metaphorical examples of slavery. Slaves and masters encounter Jesus in the narrative of his ministry, but they are also a significant feature in his teaching. While most of the sources about first-century A.D. Roman slavery derive from slave owners, it is significant that neither Jesus nor the Gospel writers are identified as slaves or slave owners. These texts nonetheless tend to treat slaves and slavery incidentally rather than as a core focus. Throughout the early Roman period there was no concerted voice of opposition to slavery, and although the Gospels include occasional commendations of faithful slaves (Mt 24:45) consistent with isolated other contemporary writers, there is no clear disapproval of slave holding or slavery. Indeed, slavery is a frequent metaphor of *discipleship, and *God is repeatedly presented as a slaveholder, even an absentee master (cf. Mk 13:35-36; Mt 6:24 // Lk 16:30; Mt 10:24-25; 20:25-28; 23:11 // Lk 22:26-27; Jn 15:20; also *Mary's self-designation as a slave girl of the Lord [Lk 1:38, 48], and Simeon's understanding that God is a divine despotēs ["master"], whom he serves as a slave [Lk 2:29]). However, in distinction, John 15:15 also notes that the disciples begin to be identified as friends rather than slaves. The Gospels, thus, tend to presuppose, rather than challenge, contemporary Roman attitudes toward slavery. They reflect a range of portraits of slavery, including, on the one hand, representations of incongruently good masters (Mt 18:23-35) and responsible slaves (Mt 25:14-30) to, on the other hand, wicked slaves (Mt 18:23-35; 24:45-51 // Lk 12:42-46; Mt 25:14-30) and depictions of violent exploitation and abuse, including corporal discipline and execution of slaves (Mt 18:34-35).

The evangelists vary in their inclusion of the key vocabulary. While all four use doulos, Mark does not use pais, whereas John does not use pais of slaves, and Luke uses pais/doulos interchangeably. Whereas all the Gospels use hypēretēs ("helper") and paidiskē ("slave girl"), only Luke has the feminine doulē. Luke does not use diakonos, but all the Gospels use diakoneō, and all except Mark use douleuō.

Historical examples of slavery in the Gospels include the slaves (pais) of *Herod the tetrarch (Mt 14:2), the slaves (doulos) of the high *priest (Lk 22:50; Jn 18:10, 18, 26) and the slave (pais/doulos) of the centurion (Mt 8:5-13 // Lk 7:2-10). These are comparatively incidental figures.

Domestic, agricultural or commercial slaves and their masters (cf. also the "manager" [oikonomos] in Lk 16:1-13) are especially common motifs in the *parables (principally in Matthew and Luke, although cf. also the use of thyroōros ["doorkeeper"] in a domestic context in Mk 13:34; Jn 18:16, and an agricultural context in Jn 10:3). Slaves occur as either central or incidental characters. They often are used to present aspects either of faithful or of wicked/lazy discipleship (e.g., the parables of the faithful or unfaithful servant [Mt 24:45-51 // Lk 12:42-46]; the talents and the minas [Mt 25:14-30 // Lk 19:11-27]; the unforgiving servant [Mt 18:23-35]). By contrast, most of the parables about the *kingdom do not refer to slaves (although note the parable of the wheat and the tares [Mt 13:24-30]). It is important to bear in mind, however, that, not unlike other fictional literature of the period, the parables include elements of stock characterization that were deliberately framed to shock or challenge an audience, and thus they should not be regarded as representing normality. Consequently, while some expected norms are fulfilled within a constant worldview, the unusual also happens, and there is a reversal of anticipated norms (e.g., the parables of the unmerciful servant [Mt 18:23-35]; the servant's wages [Lk 17:7-10]; the unjust steward [Lk 16:1-13]; the wicked husbandmen [Mt 21:33-46 // Mk 12:1-12 // Lk 20:9-19]; the vineyard workers [Mt 20:1-16]). In themselves, the parables should not, therefore, be regarded as a reliable portrait of first-century A.D. Roman slavery.

The parables tend to focus especially on the superior-to-subordinate relationship between master and slave and on the responsibilities of the slave within this dynamic. This includes the vulnerability of the slave (especially in Matthew) and what consequences might reasonably be expected of an unfaithful servant (cf. Mt 24:45: “Who then is the faithful and wise slave?”; Mt 25:21, 23: “Well done, good and trustworthy slave; you have been trustworthy”). The audience often is encouraged to emulate the loyal, faithful and obedient slave. This may well suggest that a servile audience was predominantly in mind. However, for the most part, the parables do not subvert the inequality of this relationship. Indeed, in the brief parable of the servant’s wages (Lk 17:7-10) the message is not that a good slave deserves to be rewarded, but rather that a good slave should expect no reward. The contrary is unexpectedly presented in the parable of the waiting slaves, who end up being waited on by their master (Lk 12:35-40). In the parable of the faithful or unfaithful servant (Mt 24:45-51 // Lk 12:42-46), where the reward for the former is to be given responsibility for all his master’s possessions, the punishment for the latter sounds severely harsh to modern ears: he is dismembered by his master.

4. Service in the Gospels.

Terms from the diakon- word group occur thirty-one times in the Gospels. This language is principally used to refer to waiting at table in a domestic context, whether the work of household slaves (Lk 17:8), or ordinary family members waiting on Jesus in customary Eastern hospitality (Mt 8:15 // Mk 1:31 // Lk 4:39; Lk 10:40; Jn 12:2), or, in a deliberately shocking motif, a master waiting on his own slaves (Lk 12:37). While Jesus and his disciples are traveling through the cities and villages, proclaiming the kingdom, many *women support them in material ways (Lk 8:3; cf. Mt 27:55 // Mk 15:41). With no necessary menial connotations, *angelic intermediaries also ministered care to Jesus following his days of *temptation in the wilderness (Mt 4:11 // Mk 1:13). These portraits of service, both the literal and the figurative, reflect standard use of the language.

Luke makes particular use of two additional words that refer especially to cultic service of God: the verb latreuō (Lk 1:74; 2:37; 4:8 // Mt 4:10) and the noun leitourgia (Lk 1:23); John 16:2, in a similar fashion, uses the noun latreia of misguided ritual service. These references continue an important OT concept, in which *worship of God is regarded as service (Ex 9:13; Deut 6:13), whether practiced by priestly officials (Lk 1:74; cf. Lk 1:9 [ierateia, “priestly service”]) or by others (Lk 2:37). There is no necessary connotation of menial labor, although the associated adjective latreutos in the Pentateuch of the LXX does refer to ordinary, menial work, which is forbidden on the *Sabbath (e.g., Ex 12:16).

In the light of these two contexts of cultic service of God and domestic serving or personal care of others, which are described in the Gospels, it is especially notable that the most common feature of Jesus’ own use of this vocabulary refers both to his own ministry of self-giving service in his incarnation, life and death, and to the ways in which this is a model for his followers to emulate. Jesus came principally to serve rather than be served (Mt 20:28; Mk 10:45; Lk 22:26), and in so doing he set an example that others also ought to focus on serving (Mt 20:26 // Mk 10:43), whether they be masters or slaves. In both his life and teaching the customary hierarchy between the one who serves and the one who is served is either inverted or ignored (Mt 23:11; Mk 9:35; Lk 22:26-27). On this point, the disciples are expressly rebuked for seeking honor according to social norms (Mk 9:33-37 // Lk 9:46-48; Mt 20:20-28). Instead, honor is accorded directly by God to the one who serves (Jn 12:26). A disciple serves Jesus by meeting the needs of the hungry, thirsty, naked, sick, imprisoned or stranger (Mt 25:44). Jesus’ ministry incorporates both suffering and serving those who suffer.

On a different note, Jesus is also indirectly identified as the Suffering Servant of Isaiah 53:4 in Matthew 8:16-17 (cf. the quotation of Is 53:12 in Lk 22:37). More explicitly, Matthew 12:18 employs Isaiah 42:1 to describe Jesus as God’s chosen one: “my servant” (o pais mou). This important OT motif uses Jewish “servant” language to present Jesus as both a servant and a royal figure—an ideal, messianic, Davidic king working to bring about deliverance and justice for all (see Servant of Yahweh).

5. Footwashing.

One particularly illustrative example of Jesus’ identification as one who serves in a menial capacity as a domestic slave (doulos) occurs in John 13, which describes Jesus washing the feet of his disciples. The footwashing takes place during a supper, probably prior to the Feast of the Passover. The act is presented as an act of service, yet also an act of love (“he loved them to the end/utmost” [Jn 13:1]); an act of self-abasement, yet also an act of glorification (the impending “hour” of glorification [Jn 13:1; cf. Jn 12:23]); the act of a slave, yet performed by a master upon his disciples (“Lord and Teacher” [Jn 13:13-14]). It anticipates the betrayal by Judas (Jn 13:2), but also an ultimate victory given into the hands of Jesus by God (Jn 13:3). Throughout there is a repeated emphasis on Jesus’ complete knowledge (Jn 13:1, 3, 11, 17). The account suggests that Jesus anticipated that his actions would not be immediately understood (Jn 13:7), and yet in the discourse that follows the washing an explanation is outlined for the disciples (Jn 13:12-15). The setting is thus laden with ambiguity, suspense and theological significance.

In the light of this complexity, a number of interpretations of John 13 each identify a different dominant purpose for the passage. Most scholars agree that the account depicts humble service, an act normally carried out by a domestic slave who lays aside his outer garment and takes up a towel. In turn, this is a model for Jesus' followers and a lesson about true greatness. It may also convey aspects of welcoming hospitality, which the later church should embrace. Alternatively, it may be that there are associations also with *baptism, suggested by three things: (1) the only occurrence in the Gospels of the verb louō ("to wash, bathe" [Jn 13:10], often used of purificatory washing [cf. Heb 10:22]); (2) Jesus' statement that without this cleansing (the more common niptō ["wash"] occurs here and repeatedly in the wider passage) Simon Peter will have no fellowship with Jesus (Jn 13:8); (3) the enigmatic statement that not all of those present were clean (Jn 13:10). In a Gospel that has no reference to a sacrament of the Eucharist this passage may instead suggest that, distinct from initiatory baptism, footwashing is a separate sacrament and ordinance, which should be repeatedly carried out by the disciples (Jn 13:17). A further, widely supported view is that the primary emphasis in the passage is soteriological. The actions of Jesus "rising" from supper, "laying aside" his outer garment, "taking up" a towel and then "washing the feet" of his disciples together presage the salvific work of Christ lifted on the cross, which is alluded to by the opening statements of the chapter.

The Gospels offer a range of different contexts and reasons for wetting or washing or anointing the feet, head or hands, either of oneself or others. In the preceding chapter (Jn 12:1-8), in the house of Mary, Martha and *Lazarus in Bethany, Mary anointed (aleiphō) Jesus' feet, in the context of an intimate meal, with a considerable quantity of expensive ointment, and wiped them with her hair as a profound act of homage. In the face of Judas's misguided objection, Mary's action is endorsed by Jesus, although not as an act of menial service. Two further instances of Jesus being anointed in the context of reclining at table are recorded in the Gospels. Mark describes a similar occasion in the house of Simon the leper in Bethany, in which a woman pours (katacheō) an ointment of nard over Jesus' head (Mk 14:3-9 // Mt 26:6-13). In the account, the action is interpreted by Jesus as an anointing (myrizō or ballō to myron) of his body in preparation for burial—an act which will be memorialized wherever the gospel is preached. On another occasion, while sitting at the table of a Pharisee (Lk 7:36-50), Jesus reprimands Simon for providing no water with which Jesus could wash his own feet. Instead, he forgives the sins of a woman whose acts of adoration and love, which included wetting (brechō) Jesus' feet with her tears and kisses, anointing them with ointment (aleiphō), and then wiping them with her hair, were signs of her faith. These actions of anointing Jesus' feet or head with perfume or ointment carry wider connotations than those simply of menial service in a context of hospitality, and yet they take place in the context of table hospitality.

In yet another frame, Jesus encourages his followers that, when they fast, they should both anoint (aleiphō) their own heads and wash (niptō) their own faces, in order not to draw attention to their ritual (Mt 6:17); and Mark points out that it is the tradition of the elders that Pharisees and all Jews should wash their hands for reasons of avoiding defilement (Mk 7:3-4; niptō and baptizō).

J. Thomas explores a range of footwashing settings that are reflected in OT, Jewish and Greco-Roman sources (Thomas, 26-60). Most commonly, footwashing in the OT is an act of hospitality provided by a host but commonly carried out by the host's servants (Gen 18:4; 19:2; 24:32; 43:24; Judg 19:21; 1 Sam 25:41). Such acts represent humble service, courtesy and respect. Also in a domestic context, washing of one's own feet was done simply for reasons of personal hygiene and comfort (2 Sam 11:8). By contrast, Exodus 30:17-21 recounts God's injunction that priests, through the generations, consecrate themselves by washing their hands and feet before offering sacrifices in the holy place. These repeated actions follow a prior, one-time washing (Ex 29:4). Together with the Gospel accounts, these passages highlight that there are a number of reasons for washing the head, hands and/or feet (including, unusually, some cultic actions in domestic settings), with purposes ranging from gracious and courteous hospitality (with menial connotations), to personal hygiene (often self-washing), to ritual purification, and also anointing (for burial).

Within the complexities of John 13, it may be that the dominant motif is a model of service, including a reversal of status, and a plea that such actions and attitudes characterize Jesus' disciples. Simon Peter's objection (Jn 13:8) prompts the introduction of an additional motif of a repeatable rite that purifies and is distinct from the full bathing (of baptism). It is not clear whether the menial service and the cultic purification elements are to be combined and then continued by the disciples.

See also AUTHORITY AND POWER; DISCIPLES AND DISCIPLESHIP; ECONOMICS; SERVANT OF YAHWEH; SOCIAL-SCIENTIFIC CRITICISMS.

BIBLIOGRAPHY. M. A. Beavis, "Ancient Slavery as an Interpretative Context for the New Testament Servant Parables with Special Reference to the Unjust Steward (Luke 16:1-8)," JBL 111 (1992) 37-54; K. Bradley, Slavery and Society at Rome (KTAH; Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 1994); A. D. Callahan, R. A. Horsley and A. Smith, "Introduction: The Slavery of New Testament Studies," in Slavery in Text and Interpretation, ed. A. D. Callahan, R. A. Horsley and A. Smith (Semeia 83, 84; Atlanta: Scholars Press, 1998) 1-15; J. N. Collins, Diakonia: Re-interpreting the Ancient Sources (Oxford: Oxford University Press, 1990); P. Garnsey, ed., Non-Slave Labour in the Greco-Roman World (CPSSup 6; Cambridge: Cambridge Philological Society, 1980); J. A. Glancy, "Slaves and Slavery in the Matthean Parables," JBL 119 (2000) 67-90; idem, Slavery in Early Christianity (Oxford: Oxford University Press, 2002); idem, "Slavery and the Rise of Christianity," in The Cambridge World History of Slavery, 1: The Ancient Mediterranean World, ed. K. Bradley and P. Cartledge (Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 2011) 456-81; J. A. Harrill, Slaves in the New Testament: Literary, Social, and Moral Dimensions (Minneapolis: Fortress, 2006); R. A. Horsley, "The Slave Systems of Classical Antiquity and Their Reluctant Recognition by Modern Scholars," in Slavery in Text and Interpretation, ed. A. D. Callahan, R. A. Horsley and A. Smith (Semeia 83, 84; Atlanta: Scholars Press, 1998) 19-66; A. J. Hultgren, The Parables of Jesus: A Commentary (BW; Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 2000); S. R. Joshel, Slavery in the Roman World (CIRC; Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 2010); O. Patterson, Slavery and Social Death: A Comparative Study (Cambridge, MA: Harvard University Press, 1982); K. R. Snodgrass, Stories with Intent: A Comprehensive Guide to the Parables of Jesus (Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 2008); J. C. Thomas, Footwashing in John 13 and the Johannean Community (JSNTSup 61; Sheffield: JSOT Press, 1991); F. E. Udoh, "The Tale of an Unrighteous Slave (Luke 16:1-8[13])," JBL 128 (2009) 311-35; T. Wiedemann, Greek and Roman Slavery (London: Croom Helm, 1981); B. G. Wright III, "'Ebed/Doulos': Terms and Social Status in the Meeting of Hebrew Biblical and Hellenistic Roman Culture," in Slavery in Text and Interpretation, ed. A. D. Callahan, R. A. Horsley and A. Smith (Semeia 83, 84; Atlanta: Scholars Press, 1998) 83-111. A. D. Clarke

SOCIAL-SCIENTIFIC CRITICISMS

Over the last four decades, interest in utilizing social-scientific perspectives to understand the worlds of Jesus and the Gospels has risen exponentially. Sociology and sociocultural anthropology remain the two disciplines most frequently employed within this endeavor. These fields, respectively, have provided exegetes with heuristic apparatus (research frameworks, theoretical perspectives and ethnographic accounts) to navigate the strange and distant worlds that they encounter within the NT and offered means to reach plausible reconstructions of those worlds based on comparative evidence.

While the Pauline Epistles may at first sight seem to offer more directly relevant material for social-scientific investigation, the Jesus movement and the Gospels have in turn also generated important data for this type of analysis. The critical focus of social-scientific criticisms is not limited to the textual evidence, but also includes reconstructions of the social contexts of authors and/or recipients. This allows social-scientific critics to chart how particular texts may reflect, challenge or subvert aspects of the environments of which they are a part. Types of social-scientific inquiry can thus be codified (for a related typology of social-scientific research see Elliott, 18-20):

- Depiction of social realities: fundamentally a descriptive activity, outlining some element or elements of ancient contexts with no specific interest in critically scrutinizing this information.
- Construction of social history: again a largely descriptive exercise, detailing features of a particular epoch, society or group.
- Social organization: evaluation of social dynamics that lead to particular social forms by adopting the resources of social theories.
- Social-scientific modeling: research explicitly using social-scientific models to interpret biblical texts.
- Social and cultural scripts: studies of the dominant social principles and values functioning in specific cultural settings.

The following discussion documents projects in social-scientific criticism of Jesus and the Gospels under the labels of "sociological approaches" and “sociocultural anthropology approaches.” This division is in some respects forced, for these disciplines are closely linked through their focus on individuals and the social worlds that they collectively inhabit, though differences in their methodologies to some extent support their separate treatment here. The selection is, of course, illustrative, not exhaustive. (For general introductions to the aims and methods of social-scientific criticisms, see Malina 2001; Esler 1994; Elliott; Horrell 1999; Pilch 1999; 2000; Rohrbach; Stegemann, Malina and Theissen; Lawrence. For social-scientific commentary on Jesus and the Synoptic Gospels, see Malina and Rohrbach.)

1. Sociological Approaches
2. Sociocultural Approaches
3. Points of Contemporary Debate

1. Sociological Approaches.

Sociology generally conducts high-order analysis of the construction, growth, institutions and operations of human societies. It advances an etic standpoint: broad (often quantitative) analysis from an external perspective. This discipline has provided macrolevel analyses of growth rates and conversion in early Christianity, through kinship and social networks, and has charted the transformation from Christianity’s law-observant ethos to one that no longer submitted to Jewish legal systems. It has also enabled biblical interpreters to depict social structures and institutions of the ancient world, the millenarian impulses of the Jesus movement the sectarian character of early Christianity and the construction of its diverse social identities and worldviews. P. Berger and T. Luckmann’s sociology of knowledge, which views all meanings and identities as socially constructed, has traditionally formed an important theoretical framework for studies of this sort. Ideological interests served by “symbolic universes” (in reference to race, gender, politics and social stratification) and the reality of opposition and discordance within them have now also been increasingly acknowledged.

1.1. Social Structure of Ancient Palestine. The social structure of ancient Palestine has been of major interest in studies of the historical Jesus. Some, utilizing E. Durkheim’s structural functionalist model (in which society is viewed as an organic whole, cohesive, ordered and controlled), posit the followers of Jesus as itinerant radicals who left traditional kinship networks and livelihoods to follow a charismatic prophetic leader and embody a utopian vision of brotherly love (Theissen). Others have heavily criticized those adopting functionalist paradigms for not taking seriously enough the displacement and conflict caused by the political situation of the time (Horsley 1994; 1999). Such “conflict” studies highlight the stark social stratification of these contexts and the position of the nonelite subject to crippling social and economic pressures imposed by the ruling elite. Utilizing political scientist J. Scott’s concept of “little tradition” and the arts of resistance, other historical Jesus scholars have accordingly read Jesus’ ministry as typical of the exploited nonelite who subvert the “great tradition” built and maintained by colonial powers (Horsley 1994; 1999). A variety of Jesus’ teaching and actions can be read in this anti-imperial light: the exorcism of “legion” (Mk 5:9 // Lk 8:30), for example, has been read as a covert allegory for the expulsion of the filthy swine of Rome from the land (Horsley 2001; Moxnes 2003). Likewise, Jesus’ *healings are seen to be conscious social therapies to overcome the social “dis-ease” of Rome’s occupation, and his *parables have been read as “hidden transcripts” offering coded, disparaging critiques of the dominant social order (Herzog). Many others have likewise seen Jesus’ *kingdom of God ideal as the antitype of the Roman imperial regime’s exploitative practices, including burdensome taxation and social atomism (Malina 2001). Others have identified his surrendering of the patronage ideals of the dominant culture and construction of a radical, “brokerless” kingdom of God, in which free access to the divine was enjoyed by all in the present through free healing, sharing of spiritual and material resources and open commensality (Crossan). Through these contextually sensitive analyses Jesus’ ministry has been firmly cast in a social and economic spectrum; his central ethical command of love is accordingly understood not as a personal emotion but rather as one embodied in kinship groups, and likewise hate is conceived as the suspension of such kindred bonds (see Stegemann, 46-51). Jesus, in this light, is seen to have promoted, in contrast to the dominant symbolic universe, social inclusion (not based on traditional family ties), the annulment of debts and a vision for the egalitarian distribution of material and spiritual resources.

1.2. Sectarianism. The sectarian model, which finds its roots in M. Weber’s contrast between protest groups and more traditional groups and E. Troeltsch’s analysis of church and sect (which can be directly compared on issues of recruitment and membership, etc.), has been used to trace the fledgling Christian movement’s eventual split from its Jewish parent body. B. Wilson’s identification of diverse sectarian responses to the world has also been adopted in a number of ways in reference to early Christianity (Elliott, 75-95; Stark 217-18; Scroggs; Theissen, 33-37). M. Gordon's model of assimilation of migrant groups has been useful in charting the cultural integration of Jew and Gentile in the early church, and C. Tilly and A. Oberschall's work on "social movements" has been used to identify the emergence of Christianity apart from Judaism. Matthew's Gospel has accordingly been seen as a sectarian document in which Matthew's mixed race and status ekklēsia posits itself as the true inheritor of Jewish traditions (Zetterholm). Because sectarian reflexes are most pronounced in John's Gospel, with its conscious display of distancing language and explicit references to being "out of the synagogue" (Jn 9:22; 12:42; 16:2), it is perhaps no surprise that this text has proved a fruitful mine for analysis. W. Meeks's seminal essay, "The Man from Heaven in Johannine Sectarianism," for example, linked the symbolic ascent/descent mythology within John's Gospel to the social location of the Johannine community and their disassociation from not only the Jewish leaders but also the world as a whole. Like the Word from heaven, John's community was also in the world but not of it. John's readers were to be born from above and return, like their redeemer, to their heavenly home. Others have since built on this work by adopting M. Halliday's "anti-language" strategy to show how John constructs an antisociety that resists ideas from competing groups (Malina 1985; Neyrey 2009) and inverts their symbolic maps of meaning. For example, *Moses, the friend of God who did not go to heaven, is pitted symbolically against Jesus as the incarnate *Logos, whose home is above. This is read as part of John's sectarian polemic against non-Christian Jews, who sit in darkness, in contrast to the enlightened Johannine Christians (Petersen).

1.3. Deviance Labeling and the Construction of Social Identities. H. Becker and E. Goffman's work on deviance labeling and stigmatization, which are social strategies designed to marginalize those individuals who are perceived to contravene collectively held norms and practices, have shed light on a number of controversy dialogues within the Gospels. Jesus fields accusations from his opponents that he is a lawbreaker, demon-possessed, glutton, drunkard, blasphemer, false prophet and, during the mocking rituals of the trial, the "king of Jews." Such accusations reveal that Jesus is perceived as a threat to his opponents. Moreover, these accusations cluster around those episodes in which Jesus' politically explosive claims that God's kingdom will be found among the margins of society are made most explicitly (Guijarro 2002). Such approaches construct a "Christology from the side," a horizontal (human/human) pursuit rather than a vertical (divine/human) pursuit (Malina and Neyrey 1988). Labeling has also been traced in reference to the explosive conflicts between Jesus and the *Pharisees in Matthew's Gospel. For example in Matthew 23 Jesus launches a violent diatribe against the religious leaders, the rhetorical function being to discredit, shame and disassociate his listeners from their traditional authority (Malina and Neyrey 1988).

As deviance labeling is used to stigmatize those individuals not associated with a particular group's values, so "social identity" is a sociological concept used to positively construct new group associations and behavior (on both social and psychological levels) and discriminate against other alternative groupings. H. Tajfel's theory of social identity has recently been employed to interpret the community formation embodied within the parable of the good Samaritan. The stigmatized "outsider," the Samaritan, redefines neighborliness and recasts social identity affiliations (Esler 2000b). Similarly, social identity theory has been applied to posit Mary, Martha and Lazarus (the family that "Jesus loves") as representative models of Johannine Christianity (Esler and Piper 2006). Mary, in her symbolic action of *anointing Jesus' feet and its link to the anointing of Jesus' body on the "first day of the week," may well represent the Johannine community's own Sunday *table fellowship. Lazarus himself becomes emblematic of a community awaiting *resurrection. The character of Nicodemus has also been read as representative of the "out-groups" of the Pharisees and Jews (representatives of unbelief) in the Gospel of John. However, Nicodemus is an out-group member who ultimately espouses in-group values. In effect, as an "out-group deviant," he serves to legitimate the Johannine Christians' own perspectives (Hakola).

2. Sociocultural Anthropology Approaches.

It is often said that sociology's main focus is industrialized societies, whereas anthropology tends to focus on tribal societies. However, in reality this division is far more fluid. It is true, however, that the methodologies common to each are different. Sociocultural anthropology, in contrast to sociology, seeks to produce in-depth descriptions (ethnographies) of communities' lives, values and practices, based on participant observation and cross-cultural comparison. It includes an emic perspective: interpretations of a specific culture from an insider's perspective, alongside its own theoretical perspectives and terminology. These ethnographic resources have provided a means for biblical interpreters to bridge the cultural gap that exists between their own contexts and the ancient Mediterranean. Sociocultural anthropology has also aided the comprehension of various ritual and purity conventions encountered within biblical texts and provided comparative resources to understand anew other elements, including spiritual, visionary and charismatic experiences.

2.1. Cultural Scripts. The adoption of cultural scripts, largely based on ethnographies of the Mediterranean, which try to identify dominant assumptions and values held by the cultures producing biblical texts (e.g., honor and shame, dyadic personalities, limited good, evil eye) have enabled biblical interpreters to consciously evade the hazards of ethnocentrism (judging all contexts from one's own cultural standpoint) and anachronism (chronological misplacement of ideas) within their work. Such approaches presuppose that biblical texts are "high context" literature, in which many elements are assumed to be self-evident by the author and original receivers (e.g., collectivistic, group-orientated and anti-introspective elements) but when encountered in a different context may not be understood in quite the same way (Malina 2001). For example, whereas in an individualistic, guilt-driven context Judas's suicide may be read as an act of despair or escape, through the utilization of cross-cultural comparisons based on ethnographic studies of Gainj of New Zealand, this action can be read as an honorable death that attempts to make amends for the offence of betrayal (Reed).

The *genealogies of Jesus in the Gospels have likewise been understood in light of the cultural values of ascribed honor, and various controversy dialogues have been read as challenge ripostes, in which Jesus outwits his opponents and acquires honor as a result. Similarly, the Jewish leaders' increasingly violent attitudes toward Jesus have been interpreted through an ethos of limited good, typical of peasant societies, in which tangible and intangible resources are perceived to exist in limited supply, and thus reputation and honor are fiercely competitive. The related concept of "evil eye," which was used to injure and harm those perceived as enemies, is also relevant here. Jesus provokes the envy of the leaders, which erupts in conflict and hostility and ultimately in Jesus' enemies calling for his death (Hagedorn and Neyrey).

Jesus' frequent subversion of cultural scripts has often been noted. The patriarchal lines of blood kinship so central to the honor system are destabilized by Jesus, who asserts that fictive kin in faith are one's significant in-group (see Family). For example, in John's Gospel the disciple John being entrusted to Mary and vice versa modifies traditional kinship expectations, allows a certain fluidity within kinship patterns, and illustrates how family is now not an exclusive but rather an assimilative concept in which outsiders can be integrated.

The sexual division of labor has also been brought into greater relief through cultural scripts. Honor and social precedence have been classified as male values associated with public space, whereas positive shame has been associated more with the female private space. In this light, it is interesting how often in the Gospels marginal female characters are pictured in public space, and Jesus frequently interacts with such females in public arenas. The status quo, dominated by the patriarchal agrarian society, is thus replaced by the inclusive household of Jesus. The *women's stories accordingly "served to warn a relatively wealthy, urban community not to capitulate to the magnetic, powerful influences of gender differentiation and stratification so pervasive to advanced agrarian social norms" (Love, 22). A similar dynamic has been traced in reference to Jesus' mother, at the wedding of Cana (Jn 2:1-12), who tries to augment her family's honor by brokering from her son a favor for her hosts. However, rather than being a pawn within patronage frameworks, Jesus reproaches his mother that her worldly concerns are not akin to his otherworldly directives (Campbell) (see Mary, Mother of Jesus).

Medical anthropology also has been utilized in the construction of a social script relevant to Jesus' healing ministry. F. Kluckhohn and F. Strodtbeck's work on value orientations demonstrates the profound cultural differences observable between "curing disease" (the aim of Western biomedical science) and "healing illness" (a more folk-orientated approach common in traditional societies in which healing involves social reintegration). The latter seems to be the dominant mode in which Jesus operates: he removes the social stigma associated with certain maladies and incorporates individuals back into society, notwithstanding their ailments (Pilch 2000).

2.2. Ritual. V. Turner's work on ritual (structure and antistructure, liminality and communitas) has been instructive on a number of levels for understanding the Jesus movement and early Christianity. Some have read particular ritual events through this lens. For example, Jesus' *baptism has been interpreted as an initiation rite, and the *temptation in the wilderness as equivalent to a liminal testing. As a consequence of this ritualized experience, Mark's Jesus is revealed as holy and, as such, "capable of brokering God's patronage on his people" (Guijarro 2003, 28). Others have applied Turner's ideas on a macrolevel to the movement of Christianity, which itself embodies liminality. For example, in the Gospel of Luke the labels "rich" and "poor" serve to identify nonbelievers and believers respectively; however, in Acts these two terms recede. Reasons for this could be that Acts reflects a more structured and settled movement in which it was no longer appropriate to flatly characterize disciples of Jesus as poor and antistructure, for possessions in this later era now represent an individual's personal cost and incorporation into the evolving church's organization (Kraybill and Sweetland).

Purification and feasting rituals have also been a dominant form of inquiry. Anthropological studies of "gastro-politics" (who eats what, when and with whom) have informed studies of Jesus' use of meals in promoting kingdom ethics (see Table Fellowship). The historical Jesus' potentially deviant eating habits, vis-à-vis purity and social boundaries, have been charted in this regard, as have the countercultural overtones of some of his teachings surrounding meal practices, especially in the parables. Food and eating have also been seen to act as powerful symbols for Christian communities. Jesus not only eats with those rendered unclean, but also he is seen by some to flaunt legal obligations surrounding food, and most importantly he offers great gifts to the people in his miraculous mass feedings, acting as a broker of divine resources (Neufeld).

Others have employed ritual analysis to interpret the passion narratives. The crucifixion itself has been seen as a status degradation ritual in which the ruling powers publicly shamed a nonelite individual in order to deter other politically explosive revolutionaries (Neyrey 1996). Others have read it as a "remedial narrative exit rite" (DeMaris 2008, 97) in which Jesus is pictured by the evangelists as ritually carrying away the tribulations of the people and at last reinstating purity. Exit rites of this sort overlap with purification rites in the reestablishment of harmony, unity and holiness in the community.

2.3. Space and Place. Anthropological perspectives on space and place have furnished social-scientific interpreters with fresh insights into the social and ideological aspects of the Jesus movement's operations. Jesus is seen to render problematic common conceptions of place, defying the status quo in terms of not only physical but also social, political and economic spatial practices. Jesus called people to leave family, homes and livelihoods; moreover, his invitation to society's "out of place" members—eunuchs, children, childless women, sinners, the ill—inevitably meant that entering kingdom space would involve displacement and social tension (Moxnes 2003). Jesus' identity as a fatherless son, his apatriarchal ethos and his insistence on calling God "Abba" have been understood in light of this countercultural stance (Van Aarde). H. Lefebvre's insight that space is a social product, which is not ideologically innocent, and J. Smith's work on symbolic space, real space (built environment) and social space have likewise opened up new vistas on Jesus' conception of the kingdom. Questions surrounding where Jesus expected the reconstitution of the temple in a physical sense are important here, as are also the nature of Jesus' hope to enter a new land and the symbolic resonance of twelve disciples representative of the gathering of Israel's twelve tribes (see Wenne) (see Apostle).

2.4. Spiritual and Charismatic Experiences. Sociocultural anthropology has also offered key resources to interpret certain spiritual aspects of Jesus' own ministry and early Christian communities' experiences. Ethnographies of communities not dominated by an Enlightenment-informed scientific worldview predominant in the West are vitally important in this respect, for they offer comparative examples of cultures in which visions, demons, witches and jinns, travel through a tiered cosmos and intervention of spirits are accepted as realities. Jesus' control of spirits and spiritual and visionary experiences at the baptism, wilderness temptations (DeMaris 2002, 146-49) and transfiguration have been interpreted alongside shaman and shaman healer types (Lawrence, 35-54). Anthropological studies have also informed new interpretations of the resurrection whereby social-scientific interpreters are not straitjacketed into proving whether this was a concrete event, but rather focus on its status and effects as a cultural reality within the worldview of the recipients (Craffert). Jesus' ascension has also been filtered through social-scientific lenses, using ethnographic material that documents individuals undertaking sky journeys and experiencing alternate realities (Pilch 1998).

3. Points of Contemporary Debate.

3.1. Methodology. A number of methodological questions surround the use of social-scientific inquiry in NT studies. Most obviously, biblical evidence is textual. One cannot live among or interview the peoples whom we meet in the NT, for they are insurmountably distant to us in time and place. Many have also questioned the wisdom of using contemporary social-scientific comparisons for understanding the ancient world. Are such comparisons legitimate, helpful or at all possible? Others have felt uncomfortable with the reductionist impulses inherent within the social-scientific enterprise. Social-scientific giants such as L. Feuerbach, E. Durkheim and S. Freud played a part in proclaiming the maxim that theology, while claiming to be about God, is at base about humanity. In Berger's terms, social scientists are "methodological atheists" (see Berger, 179-85) not interested in correlating their observations to transcendental realities. The necessity and the soundness of the modeling enterprise are also fiercely debated, particularly in light of the scant nature of much of the evidence. Do models masquerade gaps and, like the emperor's new clothes, lull interpreters into seeing elements that actually are not there at all? Are they inevitably determinative, shaping and directing one's investigations and conclusions? There are also questions surrounding the compatibility of the model with the evidence under review. Those defending the inevitability of a model-type approach in social-scientific analysis argue that it is essential to social-scientific inquiry to adopt abstractions and types (models) as heuristic aids (Esler 2000a), while others insist that model-based approaches manipulate the evidence and actually are not the dominant mode of inquiry for most sociologists and anthropologists (Horrell 2000; 2009). Likewise, much work that has adopted static models has been criticized for the inability to trace development over time as well as individual dissent from social patterns. Such insights need to be part of any critical social endeavor, for all cultures involve agency, and all cultures involve agents acting in structured ways. The continuum of structure and agency will also be refigured for each individual according to their hierarchical and ideological place within social structures, since the ability of individuals to exercise transformative agency depends on their position.

3.2. "Community" Assumptions. S. Garrett has noted that the concentration on collective group consciousness, so characteristic of much social-scientific inquiry, may veil the part that individual authors have in initiating transformations, for one cannot blindly assume that texts are productions of communities. R. Bauckham's thesis, that the implied readership of each Gospel is not precise (Mark's community, Matthew's community, etc.) but rather open-ended, indeterminate and for "any and every Christian community in the late-first-century Roman Empire" (Bauckham, 1) has important implications for social-scientific inquiries that do posit a particular community in a particular location for each Gospel. P. Esler, in his critical response to the thesis, takes Bauckham to task for ignoring the vast cultural chasm that exists between the Gospels and the contemporary exegete. Esler defends the use of particular community knowledge, for discourse, he believes, can be understood only in its context of origin, through the aid of social-scientific material (Esler 1998, 237); without such methods, North American and European frameworks control and maneuver reconstructions in culturally unhelpful ways. Bauckham admits that the context of production will shape particular texts in certain ways, but still he defends a widespread readership for the Gospel texts and argues against adopting a rigid community model that shapes interpretations in unhelpful ways.

3.3. "Critical" Social-Scientific Criticism? All projects utilizing social-scientific criticisms to interpret Jesus and the Gospels must do so with the knowledge that they do not innocently construct ancient social situations. Rather, all interpreters are subject to particular ideological forces that must be openly acknowledged and exposed, through a hermeneutic of suspicion, so that oppressive elements are not intentionally or unintentionally sustained. *Feminists, for example, have warned against the fallacy of believing that one's social-scientific readings in any way present "objective" reality, for all models and frameworks are prescriptive and political, and they create reality as much as describe it (Schüssler Fiorenza). The construction of a specifically "Mediterranean" cultural script could be one example, and it has been the subject of a number of criticisms of this sort. Such scripts seem to negatively stereotype diverse individuals, communities and countries across a wide geographical expanse. J. Crossley, utilizing the insights of N. Chomsky, E. Herman and most particularly E. Said, who, in his celebrated study of Orientalism, exposed prejudices against Arab-Islamic peoples, has taken to task those who employ cultural scripts in NT studies for their latent racism. Crossley argues that stereotypes of Arab cultures "covering vast cultural areas . . . smack of old-fashioned imperialistic anthropology" (Crossley, 112). More provocatively, he submits that some scholars latently retain associations with Anglo-American foreign policy, including political justifications of military actions in Iraq and Palestine. Criticisms such as these powerfully jolt interpreters into reminding themselves that acknowledgment of their own social location is a crucial starting point for any meaningful social-scientific inquiry.

See also CHILD, CHILDREN; CLEAN AND UNCLEAN; ECONOMICS; FAMILY; FEMINIST AND WOMANIST CRITICISMS; HEALING; LATINO/LATINA CRITICISM; POSTCOLONIAL CRITICISM; REVOLUTIONARY MOVEMENTS; TABLE FELLOWSHIP; WOMEN.

BIBLIOGRAPHY. R. Bauckham, introduction to The Gospels for All Christians: Rethinking the Gospel Audiences, ed. R. Bauckham (Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1998); P. Berger, The Sacred Canopy: Elements of a Sociological Theory of Religion (Garden City, NY: Doubleday, 1967); J. C. Campbell, Kinship Relations in the Gospel of John (CBQMS 42; Washington, DC: Catholic Biblical Association of America, 2007); P. F. Craffert, "Jesus' Resurrection in a Social-Scientific Perspective: Is There Anything New to Be Said?" JSHJ 7 (2009) 126-51; Z. A. Crook, Reconceptualising Conversion: Patronage, Loyalty, and Conversion in the Religions of the Ancient Mediterranean (BZNW 130; Berlin: de Gruyter, 2004); J. D. Crossan, The Historical Jesus: The Life of a Mediterranean Jewish Peasant (San Francisco: Harper-San Francisco, 1993); J. Crossley, Jesus in an Age of Terror: Scholarly Projects for a New American Century (London: Equinox, 2008); R. E. DeMaris, "The Baptism of Jesus: A Ritual-Critical Approach," in The Social Setting of Jesus and the Gospels, ed. W. Stegemann, B. J. Malina and G. Theissen (Minneapolis: Fortress, 2002) 137-57; idem, The New Testament in Its Ritual World (London: Routledge, 2008); J. H. Elliott, What Is Social-Scientific Criticism? (GBS; Minneapolis: Fortress, 1995); P. Esler, The First Christians in Their Social Worlds: Social-Scientific Approaches to New Testament Interpretation (London: Routledge, 1994); idem, "Community and Gospel in Early Christianity: A Response to Richard Bauckham's Gospels for All Christians," SJT 51 (1998) 235-48; idem, "Models in New Testament Interpretation: A Reply to David Horrell," JSNT 78 (2000a) 107-13; idem, "The Parable of the Good Samaritan: Jesus and the Reduction of Intergroup Conflict in the Light of Social Identity Theory," BibInt 8 (2000b) 325-57; P. Esler and R. Piper, Lazarus, Martha and Mary: A Social-Scientific and Theological Reading of John (London: SCM, 2006); S. R. Garrett, "Sociology (Early Christianity)," ABD 6:89-99; S. Gujjarro, "The Politics of Exorcism," in The Social Setting of Jesus and the Gospels, ed. W. Stegemann, B. J. Malina and G. Theissen (Minneapolis: Fortress, 2002) 159-74; idem, "Why Does the Gospel of Mark Begin as It Does?" BTB 33 (2003)

28-38; A. Hagedorn and J. H. Neyrey, "'It Was Out of Envy That They Handed Jesus Over' (Mark 15:10): The Anatomy of Envy and the Gospel of Mark," JSNT 69 (1998) 15-56; R. Hakola, "The Burden of Ambiguity: Nicodemus and the Social Identity of the Johannine Christians," NTS 55 (2009) 438-55; W. Herzog, Parables as Subversive Speech: Jesus as Pedagogue of Oppressed (Louisville: Westminster John Knox, 1994); D. G. Horrell, ed., Social-Scientific Approaches to New Testament Interpretation (Edinburgh: T & T Clark, 1999); idem, "Models and Methods in Social-Scientific Interpretation: A Response to Philip Elser," JSNT 78 (2000) 83-105; idem, "Whither Social-Scientific Approaches to New Testament Interpretation? Reflections on Contested Methodologies and the Future," in After the First Urban Christians: The Social-Scientific Study of Pauline Christianity Twenty-Five Years Later, ed. T. Still and D. G. Horrell (London: T & T Clark, 2009) 6-20; R. Horsley, Sociology and the Jesus Movement (New York: Continuum, 1994); idem, Bandits, Prophets, and Messiahs: Popular Movements in the Time of Jesus (Harrisburg, PA: Trinity Press International, 1999); idem, Hearing the Whole Story: The Politics of Plot in Mark's Gospel (Louisville: Westminster John Knox, 2001); D. Kraybill and D. Sweetland, "Possessions in Luke-Acts: A Sociological Perspective," PRSt 10 (1983) 215-39; L. J. Lawrence, Reading with Anthropology: Exhibiting Aspects of New Testament Religion (Milton Keynes: Paternoster, 2005); S. Love, Jesus and Marginal Women: The Gospel of Matthew in Social-Scientific Perspective (Eugene, OR: Cascade, 2009); B. J. Malina, The Gospel of John in Sociolinguistic Perspective: Protocol of the Forty-Eighth Colloquy, 11 March 1984 (Berkeley, CA: Center for Hermeneutical Studies in Hellenistic and Modern Culture, 1985); idem, The New Testament World: Insights from Cultural Anthropology (3rd ed.; Louisville: Westminster John Knox, 2001); B. J. Malina and J. H. Neyrey, Calling Jesus Names: The Social Value of Labels in Matthew (Sonoma, CA: Polebridge, 1988); B. J. Malina and R. L. Rohrbaugh, Social-Science Commentary on the Synoptic Gospels (2nd ed.; Minneapolis: Fortress, 2003); W. A. Meeks, "The Man from Heaven in Johannine Sectarianism," JBL 91 (1972) 44-72; H. Moxnes, ed., Constructing Early Christian Families: Family as Social Reality and Metaphor (London: Routledge, 1997); idem, Putting Jesus in His Place: A Radical Vision of Household and Kingdom (Louisville: Westminster John Knox, 2003); D. Neufeld, "Jesus' Eating Transgressions and Social Impropriety in the Gospel of Mark: A Social Scientific Approach," BTB 30 (2000) 15-26; J. H. Ney- rey, "Despising the Shame of the Cross: Honor and Shame in the Johannine Passion Narrative," Semeia 69 (1996) 113-37; idem, The Gospel of John in Cultural and Rhetorical Perspective (Grand Rapids: Eerdmans 2009); N. Petersen, The Gospel of John and the Sociology of Light: Language and Characterization in the Fourth Gospel (Valley Forge, PA: Trinity Press International, 1993); J. Pilch, "Appearances of the Risen Jesus in Cultural Context: Experiences of an Alternate Reality," BTB 28 (1998) 52-60; idem, The Cultural Dictionary of the Bible (Collegeville, MN: Liturgical Press, 1999); idem, Healing in the New Testament: Insights from Medical and Mediterranean Anthropology (Minneapolis: Fortress, 2000); idem, "Holy Men and Their Sky Journeys," BTB 35 (2005a) 106-11; idem, "The Ascension of Jesus: A Social Scientific Perspective," in Kontexte der Schrift, 2: Kultur, Politik, Religion, Sprache, Text, ed. C. Strecker (Stuttgart: Kohlhammer, 2005b) 75-82; D. Reed, "Saving Judas'—A Social Scientific Approach to Judas' Suicide in Matthew 27:3-10," BTB 35 (2005) 51-59; R. L. Rohrbaugh, ed., The Social Sciences and New Testament Interpretation (Peabody, MA: Hendrickson, 1996); E. Schüssler Fiorenza, "Der wirkliche Jesus? Feministische Anfragen an die sozialwissenschaftliche Jesusforschung," in Jesus in neuen Kontexten, ed. W. Stegemann, B. J. Malina and G. Theissen (Stuttgart: Kohlhammer, 2002) 23-32; R. Scroggs, "The Earliest Christian Communities as Sectarian Movement," in Christianity, Judaism and Other Greco-Roman Cults: Studies for Morton Smith at Sixty, Part II Early Christianity, ed. J. Neusner (Leiden: Brill, 1975); R. Stark, The Rise of Christianity: A Sociologist Considers History (Princeton, NJ: Princeton University Press, 1996); W. Stegemann, "The Contextual Ethics of Jesus," in The Social Setting of Jesus and the Gospels, ed. W. Stegemann, B. J. Malina and G. Theissen (Minneapolis: Fortress, 2002) 45-60; W. Stegemann, B. J. Malina and G. Theissen, eds., The Social Setting of Jesus and the Gospels (Minneapolis: Fortress, 2002); G. Theissen, Sociology of Early Palestinian Christianity, trans. J. Bowden (Philadelphia: Fortress, 1977); A. G. Van Aarde, "Jesus as Fatherless Child," in The Social Setting of Jesus and the Gospels, ed. W. Stegemann, B. J. Malina and G. Theissen (Minneapolis: Fortress, 2002) 65-84; K. J. Wennel, Jesus and Land: Sacred and Social Space in Second Temple Judaism (LNTS 334; London: T & T Clark, 2007); M. Zetterholm, The Formation of Christianity in Antioch: A Social-Scientific Approach to the Separation Between Judaism and Christianity (London: Routledge, 2003).

L. J. Lawrence

SON OF DAVID

The phrase "Son of David" (huios David), when used as a christological title, signifies Jesus as the Davidic messiah (see Christ). It can be traced back to God's messianic promise to David in the OT (2 Sam 7). Such messianism has two aspects: *genealogical and *typological; that is, Jesus the Messiah is a descendant and an antitype of David. This double aspect sheds important light on our understanding of Jesus as "Son of David" in the Gospels.

1. The Background of "Son of David"
2. Jesus as "Son of David" and Davidic Messianism

1. The Background of "Son of David."

1.1. Davidic Messianism in the Old Testament.

The basic concept of Davidic messianism is seen in 1-2 Samuel. Its genealogical aspect is provided in 2 Samuel 7:12-16, where God makes a messianic promise to David that his offspring will establish his eternal kingdom. The typological aspect of Davidic messianism is also seen in Samuel's three songs (1 Sam 2:1-10; 2 Sam 22:1-51; 23:1-7; cf. Tg. 1 Sam 2:1; 2 Sam 22:1; 23:1). The three songs, as a "hermeneutical bracket," present the following four characteristics of David: God's chosen, pious, warlike and righteous king. Such poetic texts, which present an idealized David, create a tension with realistic portrayal of the king at the end of Samuel's narrative. Yet, this sort of tension makes the reader expect the coming of a more idealized David-like king in the future in the sense of the aforementioned four characteristics of David. So we see in 1-2 Samuel the basic concept of Davidic messianism, namely, both the genealogical and the typological aspects.

The Davidic messianic expectation continues in the prophetic books. In preexilic prophecies, such as Isaiah 9:6-7; 11:1-9; Hosea 3:5; Amos 9:11, the future Davidic king is the hope of the united kingdom, the solution for the problem of the present divided kingdom. In the prophecies of exile and restoration, such as Isaiah 55:3; Jeremiah 23:5; Ezekiel 34:23-24; 37:24-25, the future Davidic king is also the hope for Israel's return from the Babylonian captivity. In Israel's preexilic and postexilic experiences under corrupt kings, not only the genealogical aspect but also the typological aspect of Davidic messianism is particularly emphasized (e.g., "I will set up over them one shepherd, my servant David" [Ezek 34:23]).

Finally, explicit references to David appear in five psalms: Psalms 18; 78; 89; 132; 144. These five psalms focus on two historical incidents in David's life: God's election of (Pss 78:70-72; 89:20) and covenant with (Pss 18:50; 89:3-4, 28-37, 49-51; 132:1-5, 10-18) David. Furthermore, some important key expressions, such as “the king(s)” (Pss 18:50; 144:10), “the anointed one (messiah)” (Pss 18:50; 89:51; 132:10, 17) and “God’s servant” (Pss 78:70; 89:3, 20; 132:10; 144:10), appear in these five psalms. The book of Psalms shares the Davidic messianic tradition seen in Samuel and in the prophetic books.

1.2. Davidic Messianism in Early Judaism. Early Jewish writings show diverse views regarding Davidic messianism; some of them have no interest in a messianic concept, even though the Davidic covenant is mentioned. However, it must be emphasized that the Davidic messianic tradition is attested in the early Jewish writings, such as Psalms of Solomon, the *Dead Sea Scrolls and the *Targums. Interestingly, both the genealogical and typological aspects of Davidic messianism are seen in them.

Psalms of Solomon (dating to the middle of the first century B.C.) is particularly important; it attests to the only instance in pre-Christian Jewish writings in which the epithet “Son of David” is used in a messianic sense: “Behold, O Lord, and raise up for them their king, the son of David, at the time you have chosen, O God, to rule over Israel your servant” (Pss. Sol. 17:21). The author asks God to destroy the Jewish Hasmonean rulers by the Davidic messiah. Because they do not belong to the Davidic dynasty, the author stresses the genealogical relationship between David and the Messiah (Pss. Sol. 17:4, 21). The author is also anti-Rome; his description of the Davidic messiah who destroys Gentiles is based on the biblical tradition reflected in Samuel (the three songs) and the prophetic books (Is 11; Jer 23; Ezek 34; 37). In Israel’s corrupted situation, therefore, the author expects the ideal David-like messiah.

Davidic messianism seen in the Qumran writings is similar to that in Psalms of Solomon 17: the Davidic messiah is descended from David (4Q174 1 I, 7-13; cf. 2 Sam 7:11-14) and leads the eschatological war against Israel’s enemy, namely, Jewish rulers and/or Rome (4Q161 8-10 III, 11-25; cf. Is 11:1-5). Davidic messianism can be further seen in the Dead Sea Scrolls, where historical events in David’s life typologically become the future eschatological paradigm for Israel: his birth (4Q522 9 II, 3); his anointing by Samuel (11Q5 XXVII, 2-10); his foundation for the holy city and preparation for the temple building (4Q522 9 II, 4-6); his bringing the ark to Jerusalem (4Q457b II, 2); and his covenant with God (4Q504 1-2 IV, 5-8).

Finally, the Davidic messiah is depicted in the Targums, especially Targum Jonathan of the Latter Prophets. Genealogically, he is a descendant of David (Tg. Jer 23:5; 30:9; 33:15; Hos 3:5) and of Jesse (Tg. Is 11:1; 14:29). Typologically, he possesses the Spirit (Tg. Is 11:2), observes the Torah (Tg. Is 9:6), judges as a righteous ruler (Tg. Is 11:3-5; 16:5; Jer 23:5; 33:16), destroys the wicked (Tg. Is 11:4; 14:29), reunites the kingdom (Tg. Is 11:11-12; Jer 23:3), brings peace (Tg. Is 9:6; 11:6; Jer 23:6; 33:16) and rules over all the nations (Tg. Is 11:10). Thus, Targum Jonathan of the Latter Prophets sees David as the paradigm for the future messiah.

2. Jesus as “Son of David” and Davidic Messianism.

In reviewing Jesus in the Gospels in the light of Davidic messianic traditions, we need to emphasize the typological as well as the genealogical aspect. When Jesus the Messiah is called “Son of David,” one may assume both aspects in the title. But even where the phrase “Son of David” does not occur, one may find Davidic allusions that carry messianic significance particularly in the typological sense.

2.1. Mark. In Mark the phrase “Son of David” occurs only in two accounts (Mk 10:46-52; 12:35-37). However, it seems that Mark presents Jesus as the Davidic messiah throughout his narrative.

In Mark’s first section (Mk 1:16—8:21) Jesus is pictured as the one who delivers the people from the bondage of Satan (cf. Mk 3:20-30). While Jesus’ authority is emphasized in this section, his self-identification with David (cf. 1 Sam 21:1-9, David as a legal authority [cf. t. Kil. 5:6]) in Mark 2:23-28 is one piece of evidence of showing his authority. Jesus is “more than David”; he is also “Lord.”

In Mark’s second section (Mk 8:22—10:52) Jesus leads the metaphorically *blind, who do not comprehend true *discipleship, on the way to *Jerusalem. Interestingly, this section is sandwiched between the two accounts of healing a blind man (Mk 8:22-26; 10:46-52), and in the latter account, which tells that Jesus is about to arrive in Jerusalem (Mk 10:46), Jesus is called “Son of David” (Mk 10:47-48) for the first time in Mark.

In Mark’s final section (Mk 11:1—16:8) Jesus arrives in Jerusalem as the Davidic king, and he accomplishes the expected new exodus foretold in Isaiah through his suffering (see Watts). It is significant, after his entering into Jerusalem, that Jesus’ Davidic allusions are primarily seen with reference to three Davidic Psalms. (1) Psalm 118 is fulfilled in Jesus’ *triumphant entry into Jerusalem as the Davidic king (Ps 118:25-26 in Mk 11:9-10) and in his suffering (Ps 118:22-23 in Mk 12:10-11). (2) Quoting Psalm 110:1, Jesus raises the christological question in the temple: "David himself calls him Lord; so how can he be his son?" (Mk 12:36-37). Jesus affirms that the Messiah is both "Son of David" (in his Davidic genealogical sense) and David's "Lord." Here, the "Jesus as more than David" theme in Mark 2:23-28 resurfaces. In the previous narrative Jesus is already identified with the authoritative "Son of Man" (e.g., Mk 2:10, 28; cf. Mk 14:62) and with "God's son" (e.g., Mk 1:1, 11; 9:7; cf. Mk 15:39), but his messianic identity, being both "Son of David" and "Lord," culminates in this episode in Mark 12:36-37. (3) Psalm 22, which includes an image of a Davidic righteous sufferer, is employed in the depiction of Jesus' suffering (Ps 22:18 in Mk 15:24; Ps 22:7 in Mk 15:29; Ps 22:1 in Mk 15:34). The whole context of Psalm 22, however, is probably reflected in Mark's describing Jesus' *passion narrative (Mk 15) (see Matera and Ahearne-Kroll).

Thus, while considering the typological aspect of Davidic messianism, it can be said that in spite of the infrequency of the occurrence of the phrase "Son of David," Mark presents Jesus as the Davidic messiah throughout his narrative. Even so, it is true that "Son of David" in Mark, appearing around Jesus' entry into Jerusalem, has an important role as an indication of Jesus' identity as the Davidic messiah.

2.2. Luke. Luke's use of the phrase "Son of David" is similar to that of Mark. In Luke "Son of David" appears, except in the *genealogy (Lk 3:31), only in two parallel accounts with Mark: Luke 18:35-43; 20:41-44. However, as in Mark, it can be said that Luke also presents Jesus as the Davidic messiah throughout his narrative, which includes two volumes in Luke's case.

In Luke's *birth accounts (Lk 1—2) the Davidic messianic motif is prominent. Jesus' Davidic lineage is emphasized (Lk 1:27; 2:4), as he fulfills God's messianic promise to David in the OT. Born in Bethlehem, the "town of David" (Lk 2:4, 11), Jesus is the one who establishes his eternal kingdom (Lk 1:32-33, 69). So, in the beginning of Luke's narrative Jesus' Davidic genealogical aspect is stressed.

In the beginning of the main body of Luke's narrative (Lk 3—24) Jesus is *anointed with the Spirit (Lk 3:21-22), as in Mark; however, in Luke we do encounter the phrase "Son of David" shortly thereafter, in the genealogy (Lk 3:31). Furthermore, as in Mark, Jesus identifies with David (cf. 1 Sam 21:1-9) while Jesus' disciples are accused of violating the *Sabbath (Lk 6:1-5). However, Luke's depiction of Jesus' gathering many troubled people to himself and the Twelve (Lk 6:17-19) seems to recall the same scene of David in 1 Samuel 22:1-2.

In Luke's central section (Lk 9:51—19:27) the phrase "Son of David" appears before Jesus' arrival in Jerusalem (Lk 18:35-43). As in Mark, a blind man calls Jesus "Son of David." Actually, in Luke's central section (Lk 9—19) Jesus is pictured in Mosaic terms (especially Lk 9—13), not Davidic. However, with the episode of Jesus' healing a blind man in Luke 18:35-43, Luke begins to draw the Davidic picture of Jesus. In addition, Jesus' allusion to the image of the Davidic shepherd in Luke 19:10 (cf. Ezek 34:16) and the kingly image in the parable of the pounds (Lk 19:11-27) help the reader to grasp Luke's presentation of Jesus as the Davidic messiah.

In Luke's final section (Lk 19:28—24:53) Jesus is portrayed with allusions to Davidic psalms, as in Mark. Psalm 118 is used in Luke's depiction of Jesus' triumphant entry into Jerusalem as the Davidic king (Ps 118:26 in Lk 19:38) and of his suffering (Ps 118:22 in Lk 20:17). Employing Psalm 110:1, Luke's Jesus also raises the christological question (Lk 20:41-44). Jesus affirms that the Messiah is both "Son of David" and David's "Lord." Finally, Psalm 31 shows Jesus' hope in God in the midst of his suffering as parallel to that of David (Ps 31:5 in Lk 23:46).

Thus, regarding the employment of the phrase "Son of David" and the concept of Davidic messianism in Luke, we may draw the same conclusion as with Mark: Luke portrays Jesus as the Davidic messiah throughout his narrative, and the phrase "Son of David," appearing around Jesus' entry into Jerusalem, functions especially to signify his status. However, Luke's Davidic messianic motif seems to be more apparent than in Mark.

2.3. Matthew. As in Mark and Luke, Matthew presents Jesus as the Davidic messiah throughout his narrative. Significantly, Matthew employs the phrase "Son of David" more frequently than do Mark and Luke. Besides all the references to the phrase in the Synoptic Gospels, the phrase occurs in Jesus' genealogy, his birth and his healing accounts in Matthew.

2.3.1. The Genealogy and the Birth Narrative. From the very beginning of Matthew Jesus is presented as "Son of David": "An account of the *genealogy of Jesus the Messiah, the son of David, the son of Abraham" (Mt 1:1). In the genealogy the name "David" is mentioned frequently (Mt 1:1, 6 [2x], 17 [2x]), and it seems that Matthew's way of describing the genealogy is based on the person David, for the genealogy is made of three series of fourteen generations (Mt 1:17). The numerical value of the sum of the Hebrew consonants ($d + w + d$) in David's name is fourteen ($4 + 6 + 4$). Furthermore, the three series of the generations can be described as follows: (1) the days of the rise of the Davidic kingdom; (2) the days of the loss of the Davidic kingdom with the Babylonian exile; (3) the days of the restoration of the Davidic kingdom from the Babylonian exile (see Exile and Restoration). Then, Joseph, the earthly father of Jesus, is called "Son of David" (Mt 1:20). This picture of Jesus with the Davidic motif is not unrelated to the OT quotation of Micah 5:2 in Matthew 2:6. Interestingly, the citation includes the words from 2 Samuel 5:2 ("from you shall come a ruler who is to shepherd my people Israel"). Thus, from the beginning of Matthew, Jesus is presented with the Davidic messianic shepherding image (see Shepherd, Sheep) (see Chae). The motif of the restoration of the Davidic kingdom through Jesus in Matthew seems to be corresponded with the new-exodus motif with Jesus in Mark and Luke (see Watts and Pao).

2.3.2. The Therapeutic Son of David. The portrayal of Jesus with the Davidic shepherding image is related to Matthew's presentation of Jesus as the therapeutic Son of David in the main body of this Gospel (Mt 9:27-31; 12:22-23; 15:21-28; 20:29-34) (see Healing). Scholars have explained Matthew's emphasis on the therapeutic Son of David in several ways, but they turn mainly to the early Solomon-exorcist tradition (e.g., T. Sol. 20:1; Josephus, Ant. 8.45; see Charlesworth). Yet, the essential elements of the early Solomon-exorcist tradition cannot be seen in Matthew's portrayal of Jesus as the therapeutic Son of David. An alternative explanation for Matthew's therapeutic Son of David is that it comes from the Davidic messianic tradition in the OT. One scriptural basis comes from the book of Isaiah: Matthew states that Jesus' healing activity is the fulfillment of the OT, using Isaiah explicitly (Is 53:4 in Mt 8:16-17; Is 42:1-4 in Mt 12:15-21) and implicitly (e.g., Is 35:5-6; 61:1 in Mt 11:5) (see Novakovic). In Matthew's portrayal of the therapeutic "Son of David" the Davidic messianic tradition in Isaiah is tied to the Davidic shepherd tradition in Ezekiel 34: "I will seek the lost, and I will bring back the strayed, and I will bind up the injured, and I will strengthen the weak" (Ezek 34:16 [cf. Pss. Sol. 17:38-40; 4Q521 2 II, 1-14]).

2.3.2.1. Matthew 9:27-31. The healing of the two blind men is reported in the context of the coming of the new era (e.g., the wineskins for new wine [Mt 9:17]; raising the dead girl [Mt 9:18-26]). Then, Matthew 9:36 uncovers that the healing recalls Ezekiel 34:1-16; in fact, the whole context of Matthew 9 relates to Jesus' seeking the lost. So Jesus, as "Son of David," fulfills the Davidic messianic promise in the OT.

2.3.2.2. Matthew 12:22-23. After identifying himself with David (Mt 12:1-8; cf. Mk 2:23-28; Lk 6:1-5), Jesus heals a demoniac who was blind and mute, claiming that "this was to fulfill what was spoken by the prophet Isaiah" (Mt 12:17 [cf. Is 42:1-4]). The crowd shouts, "Can this be the Son of David?" The Davidic messianic tradition in Isaiah is combined with the Davidic shepherd tradition in Ezekiel. This can be seen in that the shepherding image appears in reference to the relationship between the sheep and the shepherd (Mt 12:11-12); in that many people follow Jesus, the Davidic shepherd (Mt 12:15); and in that Jesus gathers the scattered people as the expected Davidic messianic shepherd (Mt 12:30; cf. Ezek 34:12-13).

2.3.2.3. Matthew 15:21-28. Jesus heals the daughter of the Canaanite woman; Matthew emphasizes Jesus' healing, not his exorcizing *demons (cf. Mk 7:24-30). Here Jesus, the messianic shepherd of the lost sheep of the house of Israel (Mt 15:24; cf. Mt 10:6), also heals those outside of the lost sheep of the house of Israel. Yet, this is the picture of the "one" eschatological Davidic messiah who shepherds both Israel and the nations (cf. Mt 12:21; 25:31-46; Ezek 34:23; 37:24; Mic 5:3-4).

2.3.2.4. Matthew 20:29-34. Before his arrival in Jerusalem Jesus is called "Son of David" by two blind men. Matthew emphasizes Jesus' having compassion (Mt 20:34) more than does Mark (cf. Mk 10:46-52), and this recalls Jesus' shepherding image in Matthew 9:36 (cf. Mt 14:14; 15:32). Then, the healed men join the large crowd following Jesus (Mt 20:29, 34; cf. Mt 12:15; 14:13-14; 19:2). Thus, before the entry into Jerusalem, Jesus is already active as "Son of David" in Matthew.

2.3.3. Jesus' Entry into Jerusalem and the Passion Narrative. After Jesus' entering into Jerusalem (Mt 21), Matthew's portrayal of Jesus with Davidic allusions is similar to Mark in terms of the employment of three Davidic psalms: Psalms 22; 110; 118 (Ps 118:26 in Mt 21:9; Ps 118:22 in Mt 21:42; Ps 110:1 in Mt 22:41-45; Ps 22 in Mt 27:33-56) (see Triumphant Entry). However, when Jesus enters Jerusalem triumphantly in Matthew, unlike Mark and Luke, Matthew uses the phrase "Son of David" twice; the crowds shout, "Hosanna to the Son of David!" (Mt 21:9), and the children cry in the temple, "Hosanna to the Son of David!" (Mt 21:15). Interestingly, unlike Mark's parallel account, Matthew's Jesus heals the outcast and the lost in the temple that he cleanses (Mt 21:12-14; cf. Ezek 34:4). Then, Jesus raises the christological question (Mt 22:41-45); it is the final occurrence of the phrase "Son of David" in Matthew. What Jesus means is the same as in Mark (and Luke): the Messiah is not only "Son of David" but also his "Lord." However, the therapeutic picture of Jesus in the healing accounts described above gives a hint for the reader in terms of the context of Ezekiel 34. For the unique relationship between the Davidic shepherd and the Lord in Ezekiel 34:15, 23 is analogous to the relationship between David and the Lord in Matthew 22:41-45. The Davidic shepherd tradition appears later, in the final part of Matthew. For example, Jesus as the one who separates "people one from another as a shepherd separates the sheep from the goats" in Matthew 25:31-46 recalls the eschatological Davidic shepherd in Ezekiel 34:17-22. In addition, the entire context of Zechariah 9-14 can be reflected in Matthew's passion narrative (e.g., Zech 9:9 in Mt 21:4-5; Zech 11:12 in Mt 26:15; Zech 11:13 in Mt 27:3-10). Particularly in Matthew 26:31, Jesus, as he is about to endure the passion, is described in the explicit quotation of Zechariah 13:7.

2.3.4. Summary of Matthew. As stated above, among the Synoptic Gospels, Matthew's use of the phrase "Son of David" is prominent. "Son of David" in Matthew points to Jesus' Davidic sonship and signifies his unique relationship with the Lord. It is particularly interesting that "Son of David" in Matthew presents Jesus as the Davidic messiah, especially the eschatological David-like shepherd. Thus, Matthew's frequent use of the phrase "Son of David" for Jesus is interrelated to Matthew's unique theological motif of the presentation of Jesus with the Davidic shepherd tradition in the OT, such as is found in Ezekiel 34.

2.4. John. In John's Gospel the phrase "Son of David" does not appear, and this has led some scholars to maintain that there is no Davidic ideology in John (see Anderson, 229; cf. Daly-Denton). In John 7:42 the Messiah's Davidic lineage is attested, though here it is posed as a problem because the crowd perceives that Jesus is from Galilee and not Bethlehem. In spite of this fact, if we take into account the typology of Davidic messianism, it can be said that Jesus is portrayed as the expected Davidic messiah in John as well.

Explicit OT quotations in John (14x) are infrequent compared to those in other Gospels, yet half of the quotations in John (7x) come from Psalms. The explicit references to Psalms are spread over two parts of the Gospel of John. In the first part (Jn 1-12) Psalm 69:9 (Jn 2:17), Psalm 78:24 (Jn 6:31), Psalm 82:6 (Jn 10:34) and Psalm 118:26 (Jn 12:13) are used. In the second part (Jn 13-21) Psalm 41:9 (Jn 13:18), Psalm 35:19/69:4 (Jn 15:25) and Psalm 22:18 (Jn 19:24) are employed. These psalms describe Jesus' sufferings, such as his persecution, betrayal and cross. Thus, in the narrative in John the book of Psalms seems to function significantly to associate Jesus with the Davidic kingly image.

It might be argued that John also depicts Jesus as the one who fulfills the Davidic messianic tradition in the OT, for two explicit citations from Zechariah, which mention a kingly figure/the Davidic dynasty, appear at the end of the two parts of John respectively (Zech 9:9 in Jn 12:15; Zech 12:10 in Jn 19:37). And the Davidic correspondence in John 10:16 ("I have other sheep that do not belong to this fold. . . . So there will be one flock, one shepherd" [cf. Jn 11:52]) is also important. Its depiction of Jesus recalls the picture of the ideal Davidic king in Isaiah 56:8; Ezekiel 34:23; 37:24.

Thus, it seems that John presents Jesus as the Davidic king with the psalmic image throughout his Gospel, and particularly in John 10 Jesus is presented with the shepherding image. At first glance, John's Gospel seems to be different from the Synoptic Gospels in many ways, and especially John never calls Jesus "Son of David." However, an element of John's basic presentation of Jesus is likely the common Davidic messianic tradition as in the cases of the Synoptic Gospels. Jesus fulfills the Davidic messianic expectation in John too.

See also CHRIST; CHRISTOLOGY; HEALING; KINGDOM OF GOD/HEAVEN; SHEPHERD, SHEEP; SON OF GOD; SON OF MAN.

BIBLIOGRAPHY. S. P. Ahearne-Kroll, The Psalms of Lament in Mark's Passion: Jesus' Davidic Suffering (SNTSMS 142; Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 2007); P. N. Anderson, The Christology of the Fourth Gospel: Its Unity and Disunity in the Light of John 6 (WUNT 2/78; Tübingen: Mohr Siebeck, 1996); W. Baxter, "Healing and the 'Son of David': Matthew's Warrant," NovT 48 (2006) 36-50; Y. S. Chae, Jesus as the Eschatological Davidic Shepherd: Studies in the Old Testament, Second Temple Judaism, and in the Gospel of Matthew (WUNT 2/216; Tübingen: Mohr Siebeck, 2006); J. H. Charlesworth, "Solomon and Jesus: The Son of David in Ante-Markan Traditions (Mark 10:47)," in Biblical and Humane: A Festschrift for John F. Priest, ed. L. B. Elder, D. L. Barr and E. S. Malbon (SPHS 20; Atlanta: Scholars Press, 1996) 125-51; M. Daly-Denton, David in the Fourth Gospel: The Johannine Reception of the Psalms (AGJU 47; Leiden: E. J. Brill, 2000); P. Doble, "The Psalms in Luke-Acts," in The Psalms in the New Testament, ed. S. Moyise and M. J. J. Menken (NTSI; London: T & T Clark International, 2004) 83-117; D. C. Duling, "Solomon, Exorcism, and the Son of David," HTR 68 (1975) 235-52; idem, "The Therapeutic Son of David: An Element in Matthew's Christological Apologetic," NTS 24 (1978) 392-410; J. D. Kingsbury, "The Title 'Son of David' in Matthew's Gospel," JBL 95 (1976) 591-602; A. J. Köstenberger, "John," in Commentary on the New Testament Use of the Old Testament, ed. G. K. Beale and D. A. Carson (Grand Rapids: Baker Academic, 2007) 415-512; E. Lohse, "υἱὸς Δαυὶδ," TDNT 8:478-88; F. J. Matera, The Kingship of Jesus: Composition and Theology in Mark 15 (SBLDS 66; Chico, CA: Scholars Press, 1982); O. Michel, "υἱὸς Δαυὶδ," NIDNTT 3:648-53; Y. Miura, David in Luke-Acts: His Portrayal in the Light of Early Judaism (WUNT 2/232; Tübingen: Mohr Siebeck, 2007); L. Novakovic, "Jesus as the Davidic Messiah in Matthew," HBT 19 (1997): 148-91; idem, Messiah, the Healer of the Sick: A Study of Jesus as the Son of David in the Gospel of Matthew (WUNT 2/170; Tübingen: Mohr Siebeck, 2003); D. W. Pao, Acts and the Isaianic New Exodus (WUNT 2/130; Tübingen: Mohr Siebeck, 2000); K. E. Pomykala, The Davidic Dynasty Tradition in Early Judaism: Its History and Significance for Messianism (SBLEJL 7; Atlanta: Scholars Press, 1995); C. J. Rogers Jr., "The Davidic Covenant in the Gospels," BSac 150 (1993) 458-78; P. E. Satterthwaite, "David in the Books of Samuel: A Messianic Expectation?" in The Lord's Anointed: Interpretation of Old Testament Messianic Texts, ed. P. E. Satterthwaite, R. S. Hess and G. J. Wenham (Grand Rapids: Baker, 1995) 41-65; M. L. Strauss, The Davidic Messiah in Luke-Acts: The Promise and Its Fulfillment in Lukan Christology (JSNTSup 110; Sheffield: Sheffield Academic Press, 1995); idem, "David," NDBT 435-43; R. E. Watts, Isaiah's New Exodus in Mark (WUNT 2/88; Tübingen: Mohr Siebeck, 1997); idem, "Mark," in Commentary on the New Testament Use of the Old Testament, ed. G. K. Beale and D. A. Carson (Grand Rapids: Baker Academic, 2007) 111-249. Y. Miura

SON OF GOD

"Son of God" is perhaps the most well-known title for Jesus both inside and outside the church, and arguably it is the most important christological title in the NT. Yet, neither the title's fame nor its importance has guaranteed an accurate understanding of its numerous significances. In an attempt to bring greater clarity to this title, this article address three areas as outlined below.

1. Divine Sonship in the Old Testament, Second Temple Judaism and the Greco-Roman World

2. Divine Sonship in the Life of the Historical Jesus
3. Divine Sonship in the Canonical Gospels

1. Divine Sonship in the Old Testament, Second Temple Judaism and the Greco-Roman World.

1.1. Divine Sonship in the Old Testament. The OT uses the concept of divine sonship to describe three different groups: angelic beings, the people of Israel (or the collective nation of Israel) and Israel's kings (particularly those kings descended from David). Of the three, the divine sonship of Israel's king is the most helpful as a background to the NT. The identity of the king as God's son conveys a variety of meanings: the king as the recipient of God's paternal faithfulness to and love for the king (2 Sam 7:14-16; Ps 89:24, 28-37); the king as God's agent who exercises God's authority on earth (Ps 2); the king as the heir and the recipient of God's inheritance (Ps 2:7-8); the king as the recipient of God's paternal discipline (2 Sam 7:14; Ps 89:20-27); and God's role as the progenitor of the king, since it is God who called and established Israel's kings. It should be noted that divine sonship in the OT is understood metaphorically (perhaps in terms of adoption/legal legitimacy), and unlike the concept of divine sonship in Egyptian, Persian or Hellenistic thought, the king of Israel was not perceived in any way as either divine or a literal son of God. Additionally, although the concept of divine sonship in the OT is used to describe Israel's kings, it is never used explicitly to describe the Messiah or any messianic figure (see Christ).

1.2. Divine Sonship in Second Temple Judaism. The OT passages noted above were interpreted messianically during the Second Temple period (Pss. Sol. 17:23-24; 1 En. 48:10; 4 Ezra 13:35), though scholars long believed that no clear connection between divine sonship (or the title "Son of God") and the Messiah existed during this period. A handful of Jewish texts were put forward to support such a connection (e.g., 1 En. 105:2; 4 Ezra 7:28-29; 13:32, 37, 52; 14:9), but their evidentiary value was undermined by a variety of factors: late dating, suspicion of Christian interpolation, or possible transmission/translation errors. But scholarly opinion changed significantly with the discovery of the *Dead Sea Scrolls, a discovery that provided four texts that seem to support a connection between divine sonship and the Jewish Messiah. The most certain example is 4Q174, which links 2 Samuel 7:14 (a text in which David's kingly descendants are identified as God's sons) with a royal messiah. The more provocative (and debated) text 4Q246 actually contains the titles "Son of God" and "Son of the Most High.” Due to the quality of the manuscript (the text contains numerous holes/gaps) it is uncertain whether the titles are being used to describe a messianic figure or a messianic impostor (possibly a pagan ruler). Although the tide of scholarly opinion currently favors the former (see Fitzmyer 2000), uncertainty remains. According to J. Fitzmyer, 1Q28a reads, “when God begets the Messiah,” a reading that echoes Ps 2:7 and implies the divine sonship of the Messiah. However, the Hebrew words “begets” and “brings” differ by only a slight stroke of the pen. The latter reading, if accepted, undermines the messianic connection to divine sonship. Finally, a highly fragmentary manuscript, 4Q369, says, “you made him like a firstborn son to you,” and later, “like him for a prince and ruler in all your earthly land.” Although this text might connect one identified as a “son” (of God?) with a possible messianic figure, the fragmentary condition prevents any certain conclusions.

Debate persists, but there seems to be a growing consensus that divine sonship was associated with messianic thought during the Second Temple period, though the relative scarcity of evidence suggests that this association was infrequent. Such infrequency may be due to the fact that the use of divine sonship in the Greco-Roman world often implied the deity of a human being (e.g., ruler, military hero, philosopher), a blasphemous claim by any Jewish standard. The association of divine sonship with the Messiah during the Second Temple period, if accepted, would be directly related to the divine sonship of Israel’s kings in the OT, particularly the descendants of David. Divine sonship therefore emphasizes the Messiah’s royal identity through Davidic ancestry and carries no implications of deity (see Son of David).

G. Vermès notes two wonder-working rabbis who are linked with the notion of divine sonship in rabbinic literature. The first example is Honi the circle drawer (first century B.C.), who is said to have prayed to God “like a son of the house” (m. Ta’an. 3:8). Such a tradition might imply Honi’s divine sonship, though S. Safrai has argued that the phrase “son of the house” is best understood as a reference to a domestic slave. The second example is Hanina ben Dosa (first century A.D.), whom a heavenly voice addressed as “my son” (b. Ta’an. 24b; b. Ber. 17b; b. Hul. 86a). Clearly, such a tradition might imply the divine sonship of Hanina ben Dosa and is similar to that of Jesus’ *baptism (Mk 1:11). Although these traditions concern relative contemporaries of Jesus, the late date at which they were written down (ca. 500 A.D.) complicates their historical verification. Yet, if these traditions are accepted as authentic, they suggest that righteous miracle workers in the first century could be regarded as sons of God.

1.3. Divine Sonship in the Greco-Roman World.

Divine sonship was a prominent and prevalent concept in Greek culture and religion. However, the specific title “son of god” was less prevalent because the generic word for “god” often was replaced with the name of a specific god (e.g., Zeus, Apollo, Helios) (see Gods, Greek and Roman). Among the Greeks, divine sonship implied literal divine ancestry and thus some level of divinity, the degree of which could vary. Apollo was the literal son of the god Zeus and the goddess Leto and thus was fully divine. Heracles (Hercules), the son of a god (Zeus) and a human (Alcmene), was considered a demigod, having divine strength, courage and ingenuity, but also human mortality. But even historical figures were accorded divine sonship. Alexander the Great was regarded as a literal son of Zeus, an identity embraced by his Ptolemaic successors. The philosopher Plato was also rumored to be the son of Apollo. The divine sonship of such remarkable figures (both mythic and historical) was accepted with little objection by Greeks, for whom the line between the divine and human was much less absolute than it was for Jews.

Among the Romans, divine sonship was also quite prominent. They adopted the mythology of the Greeks and so embraced divine sonship as it related to the gods of the Greek pantheon. Romans also traced their origins back to the Trojan hero Aeneas, who was the son of the goddess Venus (Aphrodite). Julius Caesar himself claimed to be a direct descendant of Aeneas. But there is an important distinction between Greeks and Romans in their understanding of divine sonship. Unlike the Greeks, the Romans were extremely reluctant to attribute divine status to a living human being, though such status could be granted to the deceased. This fact is significant when we consider the attribution of divine sonship to the Roman emperor (see Rome). “Son of god” was a title frequently used of Roman emperors, Augustus in particular. This title did not imply divinity but instead demonstrated the emperor’s relationship to a deceased and subsequently deified predecessor. For example, Augustus was the adopted son of the deceased and subsequently deified Julius Caesar; in this way, Augustus was literally the son of the deified Julius—son of a god, but not a yet a god himself.

2. Divine Sonship in the Life of the Historical Jesus.

In the consideration of divine sonship and the historical Jesus, two questions must be addressed: (1) did the historical Jesus consider himself in any way to be God's Son, and (2) if so, what significance did he attribute to such sonship?

2.1. Did Jesus Consider Himself to Be the Son of God? It was long held by many that, contrary to the witness of the canonical Gospels, Jesus never understood himself in terms of divine sonship. Such a conclusion was largely based on one of two arguments. The first claimed that a concept of messianic divine sonship was absent in Second Temple Judaism, and therefore Jesus probably did not understand himself in such terms, nor did his disciples do so. The second argument claimed that texts such as Romans 1:4 and Acts 13:33 indicate that the earliest church believed that Jesus became "Son of God" only after his resurrection, and therefore the historical Jesus never thought of himself in such terms. Today, these arguments hold much less sway. The first argument was undermined by the DSS, which, as noted above, give evidence that a concept of messianic divine sonship was present in Second Temple Judaism and therefore readily available to Jesus and his disciples.

The second argument has been weakened by further scrutiny of the few passages that suggest Jesus became "Son of God" only at his *resurrection. It is widely accepted that Romans 1:3-4 represents a primitive church creed. C. K. Barrett (et al.) argued that the original portion of the creed reflected in Romans 1:4 simply read, "and according to the Spirit, was appointed to be Son of God by the resurrection of the dead." He concluded that the phrase "in power," which negates any claim that the resurrection was the starting point of Jesus' divine sonship, is a Pauline addition to the creed. But while most commentators agree that Romans 1:3-4 reflects a primitive church creed, few can agree on what parts of the creed belong to the early church and what parts belong to Pauline editing (see Fitzmyer 1993). Any reconstruction of such a creed is highly speculative and therefore quite uncertain. Such uncertainty makes subsequent conclusions about the earliest church's beliefs regarding divine sonship equally uncertain.

Acts 13:33 seems to link the resurrection with the prophetic fulfillment of Psalm 2:7: "You are my son, today I have begotten you." It often is argued that this text also reflects an early church belief that Jesus became Son of God only at his resurrection (see Dunn 1996, 2003). But in the passage the nature of the link between Psalm 2 and the resurrection is not certain. The word anistēmi might actually refer to Jesus' appearance in history rather than his resurrection. I. H. Marshall has suggested that Acts 13:33 is not attempting to establish the fact of Jesus' divine sonship on basis of his resurrection, but rather is attempting to establish the character of his divine sonship—that is, his obedience as God's Son, on the basis of his resurrection. Again, we can have little confidence on the basis of Acts 13:33 that the early church believed that Jesus became "Son of God" only at his resurrection.

We turn our attention to the Jesus tradition of the canonical Gospels and the historical evaluation of traditions in which Jesus associates himself with divine sonship. The following analysis of such traditions begins with and focuses on the Synoptic Gospels, which in most historical assessments are given pride of place over John's Gospel. However, the analysis concludes by considering the possible value of the Fourth Gospel for understanding the historical Jesus and divine sonship.

There is widespread scholarly agreement that Jesus addressed God as "Father," with many concluding that Jesus did so by using the Aramaic word abba (see Jeremias 1971, 1978; Dunn 1996, 2003; Marshall). Although the last two decades of scholarship have demonstrated an overestimation of the evidence regarding Jesus' use of "Father" (and perhaps more specifically abba), the conclusion that Jesus addressed God in paternal terms remains sound (see Prayer). Such an address is strongly supported by the criterion of multiple attestation, as it (using the Greek word patēr ["father"]) is found in Mark, Q, unique Matthean traditions, unique Lukan traditions, and Johannine traditions (see Jeremias 1971, 1978; Thompson). In fact, there is only one instance in the canonical Gospels in which Jesus does not directly address God as Father (Mk 15:34). This evidence strongly suggests that "Father" was the most frequent way in which Jesus directly addressed God. Less certain is the conclusion that the Aramaic abba lies behind the Gospels' use of the Greek patēr (as the historical Jesus primarily, if not exclusively, spoke Aramaic). Abba appears in the canonical Gospels only once (Mk 14:36), raising questions about its use by the historical Jesus. Yet the appearance of this Aramaic word in a thoroughly Greek Gospel likely indicates its importance in the early church and in the church's memory of the historical Jesus. Such a conclusion finds confirmation in the surprising appearance of abba in two of Paul's epistles (Rom 8:15; Gal 4:6). That this paternal form of addressing God was used and known among Gentile Christians indicates its unique significance for the church and strongly suggests its early origin. When these two Pauline uses of abba are taken together with the singular usage in Mark, a strong case for its origin in the life of Jesus emerges. We conclude, therefore, that Jesus did directly address God as “Father,” likely using the Aramaic abba, and thus thought of himself in some sense as God’s Son. However, at this point, we can say little about the significance of this divine address for Jesus’ filial consciousness.

We must note that in the Synoptic Gospels Jesus never used the title “Son of God” to identify himself (though Jesus affirms such an identity in Mark 14:62). However, there are three Synoptic texts in which Jesus identifies himself as “the Son,” with divine sonship clearly implied. The first saying is found in Mark 13:32 (also Mt 24:36), in which Jesus claims that “the Son” does not know the day or hour of specific eschatological events, but rather such knowledge belongs to the Father alone. A strong case for the historicity of this saying can be made on the criterion of embarrassment, as it seems highly unlikely that the early church would create a tradition that indicated Jesus’ ignorance.

The second saying comes in the *parable of the wicked tenants (Mk 12:1-9; Mt 21:33-41; Lk 20:9-16), in which Jesus clearly identifies himself as God’s Son. There is widespread agreement that some form of this parable can be traced to Jesus, but scholars such as J. Crossan conclude that it has undergone allegorical embellishments to reflect the Christology of the early church—that is, a conviction of Jesus’ divine sonship. It is often argued that an older and more original form of the parable is found in the Gospel of Thomas (Gos. Thom. 65), a form that lacks (supposedly) the allegorical elements of the Markan form (including any reference to divine sonship). However, A. Y. Collins (2007) notes that a nonallegorical rewriting of an allegorical original is a highly plausible explanation of the form found in the Gospel of Thomas. Additionally, the allegorical elements found in the Markan parable include nothing that is distinctly Christian (resurrection, heavenly exaltation, etc.) and therefore do not undermine the authenticity of the parable. C. Evans (2001) argues that the parable’s Semitic character, its coherence with interpretive tendencies in the Aramaic Targumim (particularly of Isaiah), and the historical viability of its Markan narrative context suggest that the parable finds its origin in the life of Jesus and not in the life of the early church. Although certainty of authenticity eludes us, we have little reason to doubt the authenticity of this parable as it appears in the canonical Gospels, and a number of good reasons to accept it.

The third saying is found in Matthew 11:27; Luke

10:22. Scholars such as R. Funk claim that this tradition reflects too high (and too Johannine) a Christology to be considered authentic Jesus tradition, but recent work by L. Hurtado challenges the presupposition on which this claim is built, which is that the christological thinking develops linearly from simple to more complex. There is significant evidence of “high” Christology at very early stages in the life of the church (e.g., 1 Cor 8:6; Phil 2:6-11; Col 2:9), a reality that at least increases the plausibility that such Christology could find its origin in Jesus himself. We therefore should be careful in dismissing this tradition simply because it reflects a “high” Christology. In fact, J. Jeremias (1971, 1978) has demonstrated that the passage has a strong Semitic character, indicating an early tradition. This passage remains the most uncertain of the three passages we have considered, but its historicity cannot be casually dismissed.

As we will see below, divine sonship is a prominent christological feature of John’s Gospel. This Johannine motif has largely been seen as the creation of the Fourth Evangelist, but P. Anderson has sought to locate the seed of the motif in the life of Jesus. Anderson argues that the Johannine Father-Son motif is intrinsically tied to the “prophet like Moses” of Deuteronomy 18:15-22. Anderson proposes that John’s use of both motifs is the result of theological reflection on the prophetic ministry of the historical Jesus, a ministry in which Jesus understood himself to be a prophet like Moses and expressed his prophetic identity in terms of filial agency. Anderson’s argument is worthy of consideration as an important step forward in elevating the place of John’s Gospel in the reconstruction of the historical Jesus.

2.2. How Might Jesus Have Understood Divine Sonship? If Jesus understood himself in terms of divine sonship, as the evidence above suggests, in what way did he understand such sonship? The Second Temple Jewish milieu offers three plausible options: (1) a son of God in the sense that all righteous Jews were children of God (e.g., Jesus’ disciples); (2) a righteous miracle worker such as Honi the Circle-Drawer or Hanina ben Dosa; (3) a royal messianic descendant of David.

2.2.1. Intimacy of Sonship. The significance of Jesus’ use of abba (if one accepts such use as historical) has received significant scholarly attention during the past two decades. Two things are generally agreed upon regarding Jesus’ use of abba: (1) abba should not be equated with the childish address “daddy” (see Barr); (2) abba was an intimate and perhaps colloquial way of addressing one’s own father (see Jeremias 1971, 1978; Dunn 1996, 2003).

However, the uniqueness of this divine address is debated. Jeremias was essentially correct in claiming that no example of direct prayer to God as abba existed in the literature of pre-Christian Palestinian Judaism, though use of the formal Hebrew ʾābī to address God does exist in the DSS (see Thompson; Fitzmyer 1985). However, the significance of this evidence has been questioned. The sample size of relevant literature is so small that it leaves us not only with no examples of God being addressed as abba, but also with no examples of human fathers being addressed as abba (see Thompson). Clearly, such limited evidence is insufficient for determining whether Jesus was unique in addressing God as abba. J. Dunn (1996, 2003) suggests that although Jesus' use of abba may not have been unique, the consistency and unvarying way in which he used abba to address God likely was. We can conclude that Jesus' use of abba reflects his sense of personal intimacy with God, an intimacy that was unique in the way it pervaded the prayer language of Jesus. Such unique filial intimacy might suggest that Jesus understood his divine sonship to be equally unique, but this conclusion remains speculative.

2.2.2. Uniqueness of Sonship. It is true that Jesus teaches his disciples to pray to God as "Father," but we should note that Jesus is careful to make a distinction between "my Father" and "your Father." He never refers to God as "our Father" (in Mt 6:9 "our Father" is the way in which the disciples are instructed to pray, and the first-person plural pronoun does not include Jesus). Therefore, although Jesus may have introduced to his followers a new and intimate way of understanding God as "Father," he also made a distinction between his relationship to God as father and theirs. Such a distinction would favor the conclusion that Jesus saw his divine sonship to be in some sense unique.

Mark 12:1-12; 13:32 also indicate the uniqueness of Jesus' divine sonship. Mark 12:1-12 contrasts Jesus, who is God's Son, with the prophets, who are God's servants. This clearly implies Jesus' superiority to the prophets who came before him and therefore his unique identity as God's Son. Mark 13:32 clearly distinguishes "the Son" from all others, and the rejected presumption that the Son would have unique insight into eschatological events clearly implies the uniqueness of the Son's identity and position.

The uniqueness of Jesus' divine sonship seems to eliminate the first two of the three options listed in 2.2 above. Our evidence then suggests that the third option is the most plausible way in which Jesus understood his identity as God's Son: as a royal messianic descendant of David. We cannot exclude the possibility that Jesus thought of his divine sonship in completely unique terms—in a way completely foreign to Judaism—but such an option must be considered less favorable (see Harvey).

3. Divine Sonship in the Canonical Gospels.

3.1. Mark. Jesus is identified as God's Son only eight times in Mark's Gospel, and God is addressed as "Father" only four times. But the relatively infrequent use of such identification should not be mistaken for relative unimportance. It is widely held that "Son of God" is Mark's primary christological identity for Jesus (see Evans 2001; Kingsbury; Telford), a conclusion based not on the frequency of usage but rather on the manner of usage: the title appears prominently in the narrative's beginning, middle, and end. Mark's Gospel begins with a bold claim of Jesus' divine sonship (Mk 1:1; 1:11 [though the former is textually uncertain]), with God himself declaring Jesus to be his Son (Mk 1:11). Again in the middle of Mark's narrative God identifies the transfigured Jesus as his Son (Mk 9:7). Finally, after Jesus' death he is declared to be Son of God by a Roman centurion (Mk 15:39). In addition to such significant placements, the title appears at the climactic moment of Jesus' trial before the high priest as Jesus responds affirmatively that he is "the Messiah, the Son of the Blessed One" (Mk 14:61).

For the Markan evangelist, Jesus' divine sonship clearly identifies him as a royal messianic figure. The divine affirmation of Jesus' sonship in Mark 1:11; 9:7 clearly allude to the divine affirmation of the Israelite king in Psalm 2:7. This kingly identity is further evidenced by Jesus' triumphal entry (Mk 11:1-11), Jesus' anointing at Bethany (Mk 14:1-9) and the written charge for Jesus' crucifixion (Mk 15:25). As God's son, Jesus is God's messiah and king, who will rule over not only the people of Israel but also the entire world. For Mark, Jesus' messianic kingship appears to be the basis for his identity as "Son of God."

For Mark, divine sonship clearly implies divine agency. Almost from the outset of Mark's Gospel Jesus the divine Son appears on the scene empowered by God's Spirit and acting as God's royal agent. The first eight chapters of Mark's Gospel present Jesus as an overwhelmingly powerful figure who proclaims God's coming kingdom, heals the sick, exorcizes powerful demons, controls nature, teaches authoritatively and even forgives sins on God's behalf. As the powerful agent of God, Jesus is highly popular with the people, drawing great crowds wherever he goes (Mk 1:32-33; 2:13; 3:7; 5:21; 6:32-34). And although Jesus creates some opponents in the first eight chapters of Mark's Gospel (Mk 2:6-7, 15-16, 23-24; 3:6), they are largely overshadowed by the favorable crowds.

But a dramatic shift in Mark's Gospel occurs after Peter's confession at Caesarea Philippi as Jesus predicts his suffering and death for the first time. The frequency of Jesus' powerful deeds decreases, while discussion of Jesus' impending passion and the number of his opponents increase. Clearly, the second half of Mark's Gospel introduces a new function of Jesus the divine Son: he will be the obedient Son, who surrenders his life in obedience to God's will and on behalf of God's people (Mk 10:45). Jesus' suffering and death is clearly central to Mark's presentation of Jesus' divine sonship (see Death of Jesus). In fact, it is widely held that, for the Markan evangelist, Jesus can only be understood as "Son of God" in terms of his suffering and death (see Moloney). But we must avoid the mistaken conclusion that the powerful divine Son has left the narrative only to be replaced by the weak, suffering Son, since that would discount the christological content of the first half of Mark's Gospel as well as the elements of power found in the second half (e.g., Jesus' prediction of his own death [Mk 8:31; 9:31; 10:33-34]; exorcising a demon [Mk 9:14-29]; healing a blind man [Mk 10:46-52]; withering a fig tree [Mk 11:20-21]). Rather, it is the same powerful agent of God who obediently chooses to embrace suffering in order to fulfill his role as the divine Son.

As we noted above, "son of god" was a common title used by Roman emperors. C. Evans and A. Winn argue that Mark's Gospel presents a case for Jesus, rather than Caesar, as the true "Son of God." Two noteworthy passages are of particular importance. Mark 1:1, which many regard as the title that introduces Mark's Gospel, clearly echoes the propagandistic language of the Roman emperors (see Evans 2006), setting the stage for a Markan contrast between Jesus and Caesar. Mark 15:39 concludes the crucifixion narrative with a Roman centurion's proclamation of Jesus' divine sonship, which Mark's readers would expect a centurion to make about the emperor but instead is made of Jesus, the true Son of God. Therefore, with these two verses, Mark bookends a Gospel that demonstrates Jesus' superiority to all other claimants to world rule.

3.2. Matthew. As in Mark, divine sonship is prominent in Matthew's Christology. Matthew maintains every Markan reference to Jesus' divine sonship, while adding ten references to Jesus as God's Son, and over forty references to God as Father. Matthew's understanding of divine sonship is also quite similar to that of Mark, though Matthew has expanded or intensified Mark's presentation of divine sonship, often making explicit what is only implicit in Mark.

As Son of God, the Matthean Jesus is a Spirit-empowered divine agent who, like the Markan Jesus, heals the sick, exorcizes demons, demonstrates power over nature, and acts/teaches authoritatively. But the Matthean Jesus makes more explicit claims to such agency than does the Markan Jesus. In Matthew 11:27 Jesus explicitly claims that the Father has handed all things to the Son, and as a result only the Son and those whom he permits have knowledge of the Father. In Matthew 28:18 the resurrected Jesus claims that all authority on heaven and on earth has been given to him. In Matthew's Gospel this authority possessed by Jesus finds unique expression in Jesus' interpretation of the Torah. The Matthean formula whereby Jesus says, "You have heard it said . . . but I say to you . . ." (see Mt 5), may indicate that Jesus' teaching is Torah messianically interpreted, or perhaps Torah messianically superseded.

Like Mark, Matthew also understands divine sonship in terms of obedience to the will of God (see Luz). This aspect of divine sonship is magnified by Matthew through a keen contrast with *temptation. At four points in Matthew's narrative Jesus is tempted to renounce the required obedience of his divine sonship. Immediately after being baptized, Jesus is tempted by Satan three times in the wilderness, with Satan twice beginning the temptation with the phrase "If you are the Son of God" (Mt 4:1-11). After Peter confirms Jesus' identity as the Son of God, Peter "tempts" Jesus by rebuffing the notion of Jesus' future suffering and death, a temptation that Jesus identifies with the work Satan (Mt 16:13-23). In the garden of *Gethsemane Jesus is again tempted to abandon his divine mission, and he pleads with God, his Father, to spare him his shameful fate (Mt 26:36-45). The final temptation comes while Jesus is on the cross. Onlookers claim that if he is truly the Son of God, he ought to save himself (Mt 27:40-43). Despite such temptations, Jesus remains the obedient Son of God, offering his own life for the *forgiveness of sins (Mt 26:28).

One possible difference between Mark's and Matthew's understanding of divine sonship is the perceived basis for such sonship. For Mark, the basis for Jesus' divine sonship appears to be his identity as God's messianic king (see Mk 1:11; 9:7). Matthew's basis for Jesus' divine sonship is less clear. Many conclude that Matthew bases Jesus' divine sonship on the virgin birth, and therefore Matthew understands divine sonship in a more literal sense than Mark (see Birth of Jesus). But there are reasons to question such a conclusion (see Nolland). First, Matthew's genealogy clearly claims Jesus' Davidic ancestry through his physical father, Joseph, contrary to Luke 3:23. Second, Matthew, unlike Luke, makes no explicit link between Jesus' virgin birth and his identity as God's son (cf. Lk 1:35). Third, the fulfillment citation that Matthew associates with Jesus' virgin birth is fraught with interpretive difficulties, complicating our understanding of this Matthean tradition. Such facts raise questions about an intentional Matthean link between Jesus' virgin birth and divine sonship. In addition, Matthew seems emphatic about Jesus' Davidic ancestry and kingly identity. He traces Jesus' ancestry through the line of Judean kings, he presents the magi seeking a Jewish king in the city of David, and he includes four unique references to Jesus as "Son of David" (Mt 12:23; 15:22; 21:9, 15). This Matthean emphasis on Jesus' Davidic kingship might indicate that such an identity is the primary basis for the Matthean Jesus' divine sonship and not Jesus' virgin birth.

3.3. Luke. Divine sonship is less prominent in Luke's Christology than it is in either Mark's or Matthew's. The majority of Lukan references to Jesus' divine sonship come from either Mark or Q, with few instances of unique Lukan material advancing such an identity. In fact, there are certain instances in which Luke omits the concept from his sources (Mk 13:32; 15:39). Since Luke embraces most of the references to divine sonship found in both Mark and Q, his presentation of Jesus' sonship shares many of the features that we identified in both Mark and Matthew. Luke understands Jesus' identity as Son of God in terms of messianic kingship (Lk 1:32-33; 3:22; 9:35), complete obedience to God's will (Lk 9:22; 9:44; 22:42) and divine agency (Lk 10:22). But perhaps more than either Mark or Matthew, Luke emphasizes the unique intimacy between God and his Son. This emphasis is seen in Luke's frequent presentation of Jesus in prayer to God, a motif that he often introduces into his source material (Lk 3:21; 5:16; 6:12; 9:18, 28; 11:1). J. Green notes that through the "overhearing" the intimate *prayers of the Son, Lukan characters seem to encounter both God's character and purpose. Such intimacy is also seen in Luke's crucifixion narrative, as the Lukan Jesus twice cries out to his Father from the cross: first, he requests the forgiveness of his executioners and mockers (Lk 23:34); second, he hands his life over to the Father (Lk 23:46). Luke also pushes Jesus' awareness of his divine sonship back into his adolescence (Lk

2:49), contrary to Mark and Matthew, where such awareness seems to begin at Jesus' baptism.

Another unique feature of divine sonship in Luke is the clear connection that Luke establishes between Jesus' divine sonship and virgin birth, a connection more explicit than that found in Matthew. Luke claims that the Holy Spirit will come upon Mary, and that "power of the Most High will overshadow" her (Lk 1:35). Such a description is reminiscent of the divine-human copulation present in Greco-Roman mythology, which resulted in the birth of such heroes/demigods as Hercules, Achilles and Aeneas. Although Luke's description of Jesus' conception is clearly less anthropomorphic than the aforementioned Greco-Roman myths (e.g., it lacks any reference to intercourse or physical begetting), his Greco-Roman readers would clearly perceive the significance of Luke's language, which is that Jesus is a literal son of God (a fact emphasized further in Lk 3:23). In fact, Luke explicitly claims Jesus' divine conception as the ultimate basis for his divine sonship (Lk 1:35). Luke certainly understands Jesus' divine sonship in terms of messianic kingship, as is made clear by his overt allusion to 2 Samuel 7:12-16 in Luke 1:32-33. But unlike Mark, and perhaps Matthew, Luke presents literal divine sonship as the basis for messianic kingship.

3.4. Jesus as the Preexistent Son in the Synoptic Gospels. Contemporary scholarship has largely concluded that none of the Synoptic Gospels present Jesus as a preexistent being. This position has been recently challenged by S. Gathercole. Gathercole ultimately argues that preexistence is implied by the "I have come" sayings in the Synoptic Gospels (e.g., Mt 5:17; 10:34; Mk 1:38; 2:17; 10:45; Lk 12:49). He argues that this coming usually is linked with a particular purpose or mission, and therefore that "coming" logically implies movement from one sphere into another sphere for the purpose of accomplishing one's mission. Gathercole claims that the entire earth is the object of Jesus' mission, and therefore Jesus' "coming" implies that he has come from an other-earthly or heavenly place. Although Gathercole has presented a noteworthy case, many remain unconvinced. A common point of contention is Gathercole's claim that the saying "I have come" has no idiomatic precedent and therefore must be understood literally. A. Y. Collins and J. Collins dispute this point, claiming that "I have come" is idiomatic for "I have been sent" and simply conveys the notion of one being sent by God for a divine purpose. Such a sending could describe a vast number of biblical characters, characters with no claim to preexistence.

If Gathercole's argument regarding the "I have come" sayings is ultimately refuted, there is little else in the Synoptic Gospels that indicates Jesus' preexistence (see Incarnation).

3.5. John. Divine sonship is the central christological motif in the Gospel of John. In fact, the author's express purpose in writing is that the reader "might believe that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of God" (Jn 20:31). Jesus is identified as the Son of God (or Son) in John's Gospel over twenty-five times, and Jesus identifies God as Father over one hundred times. John's Gospel shares many of the expressions of divine sonship found in the Synoptic Gospels, but he has expanded these expressions in distinct and significant ways. Like the Synoptics, John understands Jesus' divine sonship in terms of agency. However, the agency of the Johannine Son is both more personal and specific than the agency of the Jesus of the Synoptics. John specifically links the Father's love for the Son to the Son's divine agency (Jn 3:35). John also speaks of this agency in terms of oneness between the Father and Son (Jn 10:30), though John likely has in mind a oneness of will and mission rather than an ontological oneness (see Smith). The agency of the Johannine Jesus is specifically based on the Son knowing and seeing the Father, with the activity of the Son only reflecting the activity of the Father (Jn 5:19-20; 8:28, 55). Such activity includes the working of powerful signs (Jn 5:20), the judgment of humanity (Jn 5:22) and the giving of life to all who believe in the Son (Jn 3:16, 36; 5:21; 6:40).

The Son's intimacy with the Father is more pronounced in John's Gospel than in the Synoptics. John emphasizes the shared love between the Father and Son (Jn 3:35; 5:20; 10:17; 14:31; 15:9; 17:23). Additionally, the Johannine Son uniquely knows and is known by the Father (Jn 5:19-20; 7:28; 8:55; 10:15; 17:25). Finally, John presents the mutual indwelling of both the Father and the Son (Jn 10:38; 14:20) and states from the outset that the Son "is in the Father's bosom" (Jn 1:18).

Like the Synoptics, John presents Jesus as the obedient Son, who does only what the Father wills (Jn 4:34; 6:38; 8:29). However, the obedience of the Johannine Jesus, unlike the obedience of the Synoptic Jesus, appears axiomatic and effortless. Unlike the Jesus of the Synoptics, the Johannine Jesus is never tempted to disobey, nor does he wrestle with the cost of his obedience to the Father. For the reader of John, the disobedience of Jesus is an impossible narrative outcome, while such disobedience appears to be a possible narrative outcome for the reader of the Synoptics.

John clearly identifies Jesus' divine sonship with messianic kingship (Jn 1:49; 4:45; 11:27; 20:31), but such an identity is not the basis for divine sonship (contrary to Mark and possibly Matthew). John also does not base Jesus' divine sonship on a virginal birth (contrary to Luke and possibly Matthew), as the tradition is completely lacking in the Fourth Gospel. For the Gospel of John, Jesus' divine sonship finds its ultimate basis in the preexistent and metaphysical relationship between the Father and the Son. John clearly presents Jesus as a preexistent being, one who existed in the form of God's logos* ("word"). In John 1:1-18 the evangelist clearly links the logos with the divine Son. Unlike the Jesus of the Synoptics, the Johannine Jesus is clearly aware of his preexistent state and speaks openly about it (Jn 8:56-58; 17:5, 24). In this regard, John's presentation of divine sonship played a critical role in the development of orthodox Christology and trinitarian theology.

See also BIRTH OF JESUS; CHRIST; CHRISTOLOGY; GODS, GREEK AND ROMAN; INCARNATION; LOGOS; SON OF DAVID; SON OF MAN.

BIBLIOGRAPHY. P. N. Anderson, "The Having-Sent-Me-Father: Aspects of Agency, Encounter, and Irony in the Johannine Father-Son Relationship," Semeia 85 (1999) 33-57; J. Barr, "Abba' Isn't 'Daddy,'" JTS 39 (1988) 28-47; A. Y. Collins, "Mark and His Readers: The Son of God Among Jews," HTR 92 (1999) 393-408; idem, "Mark and his Readers: The Son of God Among Greeks and Romans," HTR 93 (2000) 85-100; idem, Mark (Herm; Minneapolis: Fortress, 2007); A. Y. Collins and J. J. Collins, King and Messiah as Son of God: Divine, Human, and Angelic Messianic Figures in Biblical and Related Literature (Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 2008); J. D. Crossan, The Historical Jesus: The Life of a Mediterranean Jewish Peasant (San Francisco: Harper, 1991); J. D. G. Dunn, Christology in the Making: A New Testament Inquiry into the Origins of the Doctrine of the Incarnation (2nd ed.; Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1996); idem, Christianity in the Making, 1: Jesus Remembered (Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 2003); C. A. Evans, Mark 8:27-16:20 (WBC 34B; Nashville: Thomas Nelson, 2001); idem, "The Beginning of the Good News and the Fulfillment of Scripture in Mark's Gospel," in Hearing the Old Testament in the New Testament, ed. S. E. Porter (Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 2006) 83-104; J. A. Fitzmyer, "Abba and Jesus' Relation to God," in À cause de l'évangile: Études sur les Synoptiques et les Acts offertes au P. Jacques Dupont à la occasion de son 70e anniversaire (LD 123; Paris: Cerf, 1985) 15-38; idem, Romans (AB 33; New York: Doubleday, 1993); idem, The Dead Sea Scrolls and Christian Origins (Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 2000); R. W. Funk and R. W. Hoover, eds., The Five Gospels: The Search for the Authentic Words of Jesus (New York: Macmillan, 1993); S. J. Gathercole, The Preexistent Son: Recovering the Christologies of Matthew, Mark, and Luke (Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 2006); J. B. Green, The Theology of the Gospel of Luke (NTT; Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 1995); A. E. Harvey, Jesus and the Constraints of History (Philadelphia: Westminster, 1982); L. W. Hurtado, Lord Jesus Christ: Devotion to Jesus in Earliest Christianity (Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 2003); J. Jeremias, New Testament Theology, vol. 1 (London: SCM, 1971); idem, The Prayers of Jesus (Philadelphia: Fortress, 1978); J. D. Kingsbury, The Christology of Mark's Gospel (Philadelphia: Fortress, 1983); U. Luz, The Theology of the Gospel of Matthew, trans. J. B. Robinson (NTT; Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 1995); I. H. Marshall, The Origins of New Testament Christology (rev. ed.; Downers Grove, IL: InterVarsity Press, 1990); F. J. Moloney, The Gospel of Mark (Peabody, MA: Hendrickson, 2002); J. Nolland, The Gospel of Matthew (NIGTC; Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 2005); S. Safrai, "The Teaching of Pietists in Mishnaic Literature," JJS 16 (1965) 15-33; D. M. Smith, The Theology of the Gospel of John (NTT; Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 1995); W. R. Telford, The Theology of the Gospel of Mark (NTT; Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 1999); M. M. Thompson, The Promise of the Father: Jesus and God in the New Testament (Louisville: Westminster John Knox, 2000); G. Vermès, Jesus the Jew: A Historian's Reading of the Gospels (London: Collins, 1973); A. Winn, The Purpose of Mark's Gospel: An Early Christian Response to Roman Imperial Propaganda (WUNT 2/245; Tübingen: Mohr Siebeck, 2008); B. Witherington III, The Christology of Jesus (Minneapolis: Fortress, 1990).

A. Winn

SON OF MAN

According to the Gospels, "Son of Man" is Jesus' favorite self-designation. It is used eighty-six times in the NT (Synoptics 69x, John 13x, elsewhere 4x). In the NT it is never presented as a confessional term from someone in the early church. However, Jesus does use it alongside confessional titles, such as "Messiah," that others raise (e.g., Mk 8:29-31; 14:61-62). The phrase in its various lexical constructions is almost exclusively confined to the Gospels, except at Acts 7:56; Hebrews 2:6 (where Ps 8:4 is cited); Revelation 1:13; 14:14. In the Gospels only Jesus uses the term, except at John 12:34, where what he has said is cited by others. The term is written in Greek as "the son of the man" (ho huios tou anthrōpou), except for John 5:27; Hebrews 2:6; Revelation 1:13; 14:14 (huios anthrōpou). The phrase in a few Gospel passages (Mt 24:30 // Mk 13:26 // Lk 21:27; Mt 26:64 // Mk 14:62 // Lk 22:69) is related directly to language from Daniel 7:13-14 and, as was noted above, is associated in Hebrews 2:6 with Psalm 8, where it carries its common meaning of "human being," as a "son of man" is a descendant of a man and thus a human.

The expression also has a rich background in the Scripture of Second Temple Judaism as well as in traditions derived from it. So we proceed by examining its usage and background in this Jewish context before considering its NT use.

Finally, the expression in Aramaic is idiomatic (bar ʾēnāš). It is not a title, just as it is not a title but rather a description ("one like a son of man") in its original use in Daniel 7:13-14. This means that it can function as an expression on its own without evoking any biblical associations, although the power of the description makes it a candidate to become a title or at least a clear designation of a distinct figure. This type of usage feeds into its development in Second Temple Judaism and in the NT.

So we begin by looking at the phrase's linguistic character. The specific nature of the usage tied to Jesus makes this phrase an important NT expression. Where did it come from, and how was it used in the Gospels?

1. Linguistic Meaning
2. Usage in Second Temple Judaism
3. Jesus' Usage in the Gospels
4. Son of Man in Each Gospel
5. Conclusion

1. Linguistic Meaning.

It is often not sufficiently appreciated that the phrase "son of man" is not a title in Aramaic, but instead an idiom. In fact, for some, such as M. Casey, understanding this and working with this idea is the key to sorting out all the uses of the phrase in the NT, even determining what is authentic to Jesus or not. In its most basic sense, "son of man" simply refers to a human being. It could refer to humankind in general (everyone) or to a more restricted group (some). It also could refer to an individual human referred to in effect as "someone." With respect to Jesus' usage in the Gospels, it appears that we are dealing with an indirect self-reference, since the expression uses the third person to speak of the self. In Jesus' use it could be equal to this or that son of man, referring to a specific type of human. What other idiomatic force it can possess has been hotly debated. G. Vermes claimed that the term could be a circumlocution for “I,” but Casey rejects such a meaning as established by usage at the time of Jesus. Casey preferred a reference to a subgroup of people, not just to a single individual, a use considered too confining by J. Collins (1995), who sees its Second Temple usage pointing in the direction of a specific kind of figure.

Regardless of the debate over idiom, the linguistic evidence shows that the term need not be a title and can make sense standing alone with an idiomatic force. Certain texts certainly have this feel to them (Mk 2:10, 28). There is no need to invoke Daniel 7 in order to make sense of the usage in these passages. Nor should such a background be assumed. In such idiomatic uses Jesus simply presents himself as a human with certain rights and authority. The fact that forgiveness of sins is invoked or that authority over the Sabbath is claimed suggests that this human is not like all others. In the Gospels’ portrayal Jesus’ repeated use with this sense would mean that he is using the image consistently to create a category of reference, making the expression into a type of title, not by appealing explicitly to Daniel 7 but rather by discussing the kind of authority that this figure exercises. Many NT uses do fall into this idiomatic category as Jesus repeatedly uses this expression to describe this kind of activity. However, in a few key passages there is direct appeal to scriptural language from Daniel 7, which by Jesus’ time had developed into an image of transcendent authority (Mt 24:30 // Mk 13:26 // Lk 21:27; Mt 26:64 // Mk 14:62 // Lk 22:69). It is the reference to riding the clouds that is key in these direct references. To this Second Temple Jewish background we come next.

2. Usage in Second Temple Judaism.

Besides a linguistic context for the use of “son of man,” there also is a tradition rooted in Scripture and reflected on in Second Temple Judaism that is sometimes reflected in this phrase. Two texts are of great significance, while others show the context in which such hope operated. The idea of the vindicated, rejected righteous has roots in the Psalter (Pss 22; 69) and is presented in the picture of vindicated, rejected wisdom in Wisdom 2 and 5. The influence of the latter passage on some “son of man” passages is traced by G. Nickelsburg. These set a context that Daniel 7 also reflects: the vindication of the righteous. This Danielic text is by far the most important scriptural context for the expression “son of man” when it is linked to Scripture.

2.1. Daniel 7. This text is an overview of the historical movement toward God’s deliverance of his people. It moves through four world dynasties pictured as aberrant animals (lion with eagle’s wings, bear with a human mind, leopard with four birdlike wings, dreadful beast with two rows of iron teeth). In contrast comes “one like a son of man,” a human, who rides the clouds to the Ancient of Days to receive ruling authority (Dan 7:13-14). In Daniel 7:27 this authority and the identification of the figure are tied to the saints of the Most High. But the dynasties of Daniel 7 are also tied to kings who lead them. So, although Daniel’s interpretation points to the corporate beneficiaries of this new thing that God will do, the idea of a figure to lead it is not far away. This idea is suggested by the statement in Daniel 7:27 that all will serve and obey him. The term translated as “serve” (plh) here carries the meaning of “worship” (Dan 3:12, 14, 18, 28; 6:17, 21; 7:14, 27 [parallel to sgd in Dan 3:18]), something not done of a nation. The Son of Man is pictured as a singular human figure with transcendent qualities, as his riding of the clouds indicates. In the OT it is deity that rides the clouds (Ex 14:20; 34:5; Num 10:34; Ps 104:3; Is 19:1). So this image is of a human being who also has heavenly qualities. The emphasis in the text is that he receives authority in response to the suffering of God’s people. It is the feature of human-heavenly elements and authority that are important in the usage picked up in the NT. The interpretation of this figure in Daniel is disputed as being either corporate for Israel, an angelic figure (perhaps Michael or Gabriel), or involving an eschatological figure (either a messiah or another eschatological deliverer). What is indisputable is that in Second Temple Judaism an individual with authority to deliver and judge developed from this image, as our two other key Second Temple texts show.

2.2. 1 Enoch 37–71. The book of 1 Enoch is a composite Jewish book, probably made up of five parts stitched together over time. The earliest part comes from two centuries before the time of Jesus. The last section added includes material that refers to the Son of Man. These key chapters probably go back to the Herodian era of the late first century B.C. and early first century A.D., since they contain allusions to the Parthian conflict in the forties B.C. (Bock and Charlesworth). This date is likely despite the fact this section was missing from Enoch texts found at Qumran (Esther too was not found there, and we know it predates the community) (see Dead Sea Scrolls). The book of 1 Enoch has an eschatological hero in Enoch, and this would counter the hero of Qumran, the Teacher of Righteousness. This important section 1 Enoch 37–71 is known as the Simili-tudes or Parables of Enoch. In it there is a key figure who goes by a variety of names: “righteous one,” “chosen one,” “anointed one,” and this or that “son of man.” He functions as a judge and is preexistent (1 En. 46; 62–63). Nickelsburg speaks of a conflation of images in this portrait, drawing on Wisdom 2; 5 (preexistent like wisdom) and the one who vindicates in Isaiah 52–53. Some discount any connections between Jesus as the Son of Man and the ideas expressed in 1 Enoch because of the preexistence of the Enoch figure, which is not like the NT usage, and because there is no mention of the Son of Man “coming” as in the NT (Burkett). Others argue in response that the point is the function of this figure as judge and his transcendent quality. In any case, 1 Enoch shows that imagery associated with a Son of Man figure was in play and under development in the Second Temple period.

2.3. 4 Ezra 11–13. This text is the least important of the three, in part because this material postdates our period. However, its picture of an eschatological judge who has royal characteristics while appealing to the imagery of Daniel 7 confirms that imagery associated with a Son of Man concept was current during the period.

As a group, these texts show that a transcendent judge-deliverer was associated with a figure who was called Son of Man. The notion that a “Son of Man” title existed in this period is sometimes challenged, but the presence of a specific title is not the key point. Rather, the point is that there existed in some Jewish thought a figure associated with heaven who judges. The portrait occurs in various forms, but this figure is called, among other names, Son of Man.

3. Jesus’ Usage in the Gospels.

3.1. Usage, Classes of Sayings and Initial Observations on Authenticity. The appeal to the Son of Man is well distributed across the NT and its sources. The term appears thirty times in Matthew, fourteen times in Mark, twenty-five times in Luke, thirteen times in John, once in Acts and Hebrews, twice in Revelation. Apparently, there are fifty-one different sayings of Jesus involved in this number within the Synoptics, with fourteen of them rooted in Mark, ten involving Matthean-Lukan teaching material (often called *Q material), eight peculiar to Matthew, seven peculiar to Luke, and thirteen found in John. We say “apparently” because there is debate in a few cases about which sayings are parallel and which are unique. Here is the list of texts where “Son of Man” appears in the Gospels: Matthew 8:20; 9:6; 10:23; 11:19; 12:8, 32, 40; 13:37, 41; 16:13, 27, 28; 17:9, 12, 22; 19:28; 20:18, 28; 24:27, 30 (2x), 37, 39, 44; 25:31; 26:2, 24 (2x), 45, 64; Mark 2:10, 28; 8:31, 38; 9:9, 12, 31; 10:33, 45; 13:26; 14:21 (2x), 41, 62; Luke 5:24; 6:5, 22; 7:34; 9:22, 26, 44, 58; 11:30; 12:8, 10, 40; 17:22, 24, 26, 30; 18:8, 31; 19:10; 21:27, 36; 22:22, 48, 69; 24:6–7; John 1:51; 3:13, 14; 5:27; 6:27, 53, 62; 8:28; 9:35; 12:23, 34 (2x); 13:31. Matthew has several texts of his own (Mt 10:23; 13:37, 41; 16:28; 24:30, 39; 25:31; 26:2), as does Luke (Lk 12:8; 17:22; 18:8; 19:10; 21:36; 22:48; 24:6–7). All of John’s thirteen sayings are unique to his Gospel, and John’s subdivisions are different in terms of topic. John has four sayings that speak of the coming and going of the Son of Man, six associated with his crucifixion and exaltation, one that names him as judge, and two as bringer of *salvation. In this survey of the use of the expression, we can only highlight some of the more important uses of the term, showing the emphasis of each category of saying and noting a few central examples.

These sayings in the Synoptics have been divided up into three subclasses: (1) sayings about Jesus’ present ministry (seventeen passages); (2) sayings about his suffering (twenty-six passages); (3) sayings about his role in the end, or *apocalyptic sayings (twenty-seven passages). Each type is well distributed across each Gospel, but with varying emphases, depending on the Gospel. The expression also gives evidence of multiple attestation across its usage categories in the Synoptics, making a case for the authenticity of each class of saying. Matthew has seven present-ministry sayings, ten suffering sayings and thirteen apocalyptic sayings. Mark, known for emphasizing Jesus’ suffering, has three present-ministry sayings, nine suffering sayings and three apocalyptic sayings. Luke has seven present-ministry sayings, seven suffering sayings, and eleven apocalyptic sayings. Working with specific sayings units, not counting total references, G. E. Ladd presents a useful chart of the Synoptic Son of Man sayings (Ladd, 148–49). His count sees ten earthly sayings (two Markan; three Q [= material common to Matthew and Luke]; two M [= material unique to Matthew]; three L [= material unique to Luke]); nine suffering sayings (three Markan; one Q; one Mark-Luke; four Mark-Matthew); eighteen apocalyptic sayings (three Markan; three Q; seven M; five L). John’s usage is independent of the Synoptics, as noted above, but the Johannine usage also focuses on this figure’s authority.

It is no exaggeration to say that this expression is rooted deeply in the Gospel tradition. Nevertheless, the case for its authenticity, as well as the authenticity of each subclass of expression, is debated for a variety of reasons that we will note as we proceed through each sayings type. However, one stubborn set of facts cautions against rejecting the phrase's ultimate connection to Jesus. The consistency of the term's use only by Jesus and the lack of its use as a confessional term of the early church elsewhere in the NT makes it extremely unlikely to have been the creation of the church. If the expression can be put on the lips of Jesus, as those who argue for an early church origin claim, then why is it not found on the lips of those who followed him as well? It seems more likely that the textual memory of the exclusiveness of its use by Jesus tells us that the expression held a special place for Jesus that the church both recalled and honored.

3.2. Jesus' Unique Usage. Jesus seems to have chosen the term Son of Man because of the way it could simultaneously represent humanity and the transcendent character of his work. Either authority or suffering are attached to most of his uses of Son of Man. With Daniel 7 and the associated tradition that it represents in the background, the attachment to authority is not surprising, even in places where Daniel 7 is not specifically evoked. In other contexts, such as the use with the healing of the paralytic in Mark 2 and parallels, Jesus as the chosen human appears to be the point where the idiom carries the apparent force of "a unique man like me," since he is the only one making a claim to forgive sins. Other than to note that Jesus' consistent usage with reference to himself is a prominent feature in the portrayal of Jesus' usage, scholars often say little about the uniqueness this expression implies about Jesus' identity. J. Collins comes close in pointing to the individual thrust of the term, but even more than Jesus as an individual is the idea that Son of Man refers to some kind of unique individual. J. Nolland, in his commentary on Matthew, speaks of "an important Somebody," but with Jesus' consistent usage, that somebody is a self-reference. J. Green, in his commentary on Luke, says that the title "draws attention to [Jesus'] extraordinary, unique qualities."

3.3. Idiomatic Uses and Earthly-Ministry Sayings. The idiomatic force is most evident in a text such as Mark 2:10 and its parallels. The tension in this scene involves Jesus "forgiving the sin of the paralytic when only God is supposed to forgive sin. Nevertheless, Jesus, as a human, makes such a claim. When Jesus says, "But in order that you might know that the Son of Man has authority on earth to forgive sin," and then goes on to tell the paralytic to walk, he is showing that a divine act that cannot be seen (forgiveness of sins) is validated by a divine act that is publically demonstrated (the lame walk). In saying that the Son of Man (a human) has this authority, he is not saying that all humans have the authority to forgive sin (contra a generic meaning), but rather that this particular human, who is now speaking and acting, possesses such a capability. Similar in force is Mark 2:28, where Jesus claims that the Son of Man is "Lord of the Sabbath." This is not a claim that humankind is lord of the Sabbath, since the Sabbath was created as a day for humans to rest, not to rule. But such rule is what Jesus claims for himself here. It is Jesus as this particular human who has such authority to make a judgment about the scope of the Sabbath. Again, in Luke 9:58 Jesus warns a prospective disciple that his ministry promises a future of homelessness. Foxes and birds have places to reside, but the Son of Man has nowhere to place his head. Again, this is not true of humans in general, but rather of this one who is encountering rejection from many of those who hear him. In these texts there is no direct allusion to Daniel 7, nor is it clear that there need be (although some interpreters suspect that the theme of authority in Daniel 7 might lie in the background). The point, however, is that the text makes sense simply as an idiomatic appeal to Jesus as a special human. His repeated use of the expression for things that only he is doing underlines the uniqueness of his humanity and the unique authority that his powerful actions reveal.

3.4. Suffering Sayings and Passion Predictions. Jesus also uses "son of man" as a means of communicating the type of eschatological figure he understands himself to be. At Caesarea Philippi, after Peter's confession that Jesus is the "Christ," Jesus commands the disciples not to reveal this identity to anyone. Rather, Jesus immediately transitions into a discussion of the Son of Man's approaching suffering in rejection (Mk 8:26-33) (see Predictions of Jesus' Passion and Resurrection). Many of the suffering Son of Man sayings have Jesus predicting his passion, something the disciples are very slow to grasp but the tradition presents as central to the understanding of both the Son of Man figure and the work of the Christ. Their lack of appreciation for the suffering of the sent one from God may explain why Jesus was hesitant to have the disciples present him as the Christ. They did not yet fully appreciate the kind of deliverer Jesus was going to be. So this category of sayings is particularly important, even unique, as part of teaching about the Son of Man and his mission.

The authenticity of this class of sayings sometimes is doubted, but the experience of John the Baptist had shown Jesus something important. Claiming to be associated with the promised and approaching kingdom of God in a way that challenged authorities might well lead to death. It is hard to know if Daniel 7 is behind such usage. While the context does have the saints rejected and vindicated, it is not clear that Daniel's Son of Man suffers other than in his solidarity with the saints of the Most High. The theme of vindication found in Daniel 7 might be in view, if not the influence of Isaiah 52–53 (see Servant of Yahweh). In a more idiomatic sense, the expression would simply mean that this human is called to and destined for rejection followed by vindication.

3.5. A Debated Link: The Juxtaposition of Son of Man and Messiah. The ease with which Jesus juxtaposes Son of Man and Messiah (see Christ) in the passage considered above shows that the terms had a relationship for him. The juxtaposition of Messiah and Son of Man also occurs at another important juncture in Jesus' ministry: Jesus' trial before the Jewish leadership. In Mark 14:61–62 Jesus evokes Daniel 7 and its apocalyptic force when the high priest queries whether Jesus might be the Christ. Jesus, in turn, answers that the Son of Man will be seated at God's right hand and will come on the clouds. It is often said that the Son of Man and kingdom are never juxtaposed in the sayings of Jesus. This distinction is often used in arguing that kingdom teaching is authentic, while Son of Man teaching is not (Vielhauer). However, such a claim reads these categories too narrowly in requiring the use of explicit terminology. In the trial scene Caiaphas is probing the eschatological claims of Jesus to be the promised Messiah. Jesus walks right into the topic, evoking the Son of Man in eschatological-apocalyptic, kingdom terms, since Daniel 7 is essentially an elaboration on the kingdom "not made with hands" found in Daniel 2. Just as Jesus' death has everything to do with the kingdom program that God has given the Son of Man, so the vindication to come moves Jesus into the visible role of one who rides the clouds with the prospect of one day serving as judge. Since the kingdom involves the rule of God, the claim to receive dominion from the One above also is a kingdom claim. "Son of man" in a Daniel 7 context presents this authority in a stronger light than some Second Temple anticipations of Messiah, making "son of man" a better summary term for the kind of transcendent authority God has given Jesus. This link leads us naturally into the third Son of Man sayings category, apocalyptic sayings.

3.6. Apocalyptic Sayings. This class of sayings deals with Jesus' return and is most explicitly tied to Daniel 7 (Mt 24:30 // Mk 13:26 // Lk 21:27; Mt 26:64 // Mk 14:62 // Lk 22:69 [without reference to the clouds]). There is much scholarly discussion about direction in the reference, since in Daniel 7 the Son of Man figure comes to the Ancient of Days, while in Mark 13 and seemingly in Mark 14 the direction is to earth from heaven (Glasson). Some have challenged the authenticity of this class of sayings based on this difference. However, Mark 14 is far more ambiguous than many suggest. Jesus is really predicting his vindication here as a premise for his future judging authority. This makes the direction more comprehensive than a simple coming to earth. Jesus' point in Mark 14 is that he will be operating from heaven at the side of God, sharing in the divine task. This kind of authority fits with the background to the image in Second Temple Judaism, even though the details were fluid. Such sayings of Jesus, multiply attested, likely have their roots in Jesus' anticipation of what was yet to come.

3.7. A Multiply Attested Son of Man in the Synoptic Sources. It is enlightening to view in summary the Son of Man sayings as they occur in the Synoptic sources (see Synoptic Problem). We observe that the subcategories of these sayings are multiply and widely attested.

3.7.1. Q. The *Q material (texts shared by Matthew and Luke) contains apocalyptic sayings of the sudden coming of judgment, as in the days of Noah (Mt 24:26–27, 37–39 = Lk 17:22–37), and the image of his coming like a thief (Mt 24:43–44 = Lk 12:39–40), a theme found more broadly in the NT as well (Paul's writings, 2 Peter, Revelation). Jesus as Son of Man also appears in earthly-ministry terms as having no place to reside (Mt 8:20 = Lk 9:58).

3.7.2. Mark. In Mark we find all three sayings strands, with the suffering Son of Man receiving special attention (nine of Mark's sixteen Son of Man sayings—e.g., Mk 8:31; 9:9–12, 31; 10:33–34, 45). Jesus' present authority is also noted in Mark 2:10, 2:28.

3.7.3. M. In the material unique to Matthew, suffering and apocalyptic sayings comprise the bulk of the usage (seven of eighteen apocalyptic Son of Man sayings are unique to Matthew).

3.7.4. L. Earthly-ministry and apocalyptic sayings are also prominent in material unique to Luke, who has no unique suffering sayings but does have three unique earthly-ministry sayings and five unique apocalyptic sayings. Among the unique sayings in Luke are those about coming to save the lost (Lk 19:10), Judas's betrayal with a kiss (Lk 22:48), promise of *resurrection (Lk 24:7) and some key sayings about future coming (Lk 17:22; 18:8; 21:36).

3.7.5. Markan Tradition. The Markan core tradition runs throughout the other two Synoptic Gospels. Thirteen of Matthew's thirty Son of Man sayings are shared with Mark, and nine of Luke's twenty-five Son of Man sayings are shared with Mark.

4. Son of Man in Each Gospel.

4.1. Matthew. Matthew uses all the Son of Man sayings of his sources. Depending on what redactional judgments we make, some seven or eight sayings are found only in Matthew, the bulk of which point to Jesus' coming as judge (Mt 13:41; 16:28; 24:30a; 25:31; 19:28 [possibly]). M. Pamment claims that for Matthew, the title Son of Man has a less than unique reference to Jesus, meaning something like "every righteous man," with Jesus as a representative figure. This proposal confuses the path that Jesus invites disciples to follow—the path that he takes—with the authority that he brings to that journey, an authority that he will share but derives uniquely from him (Mt 13:41; 19:28; 24:27, 37, 39, 44). U. Luz correctly points out that some things the Son of Man does do not apply to the disciples (only Jesus rises after three days [Mt 12:40]; only he is at the right hand of God [Mt 26:64]). What Matthew does emphasize is the authority that Jesus brings and that the disciples have a share in it, even as the Son of Man meets with rejection. As he is homeless, they will be homeless (Mt 8:20). As he suffers and serves, they will suffer and serve (Mt 20:17–28). As he judges, they will share in judgment (Mt 19:28). As he forgives sin, they will forgive sin (Mt 16:13–19, 27–28). J. Kingsbury is more to the point when he argues that for Matthew, the term son of man applies to Jesus as to no other human being, showing he is "the man" in the midst of conflict and vindication. It does not identify who Jesus is, as the term never appears as part of a predication formula. Rather, the title functions as a public title and points to this man Jesus operating as *Son of God with divine authority in the face of opposition. D. Hill objects, mainly on linguistic grounds, that the title cannot bear a force of "this man." This objection ignores that although Jesus speaks of himself as a "human," it is only he who can bear this title with these actions. Luz observes that the history of Jesus makes clear who the Son of Man is for Matthew. However, the term may have more apocalyptic nuance than Luz is inclined to allow in Matthew's use, as Matthew's emphasis on the coming judgment suggests.

4.2. Mark. This Gospel highlights Jesus as the suffering and rejected Son of Man. With nine such passages, Mark has three times the number of suffering sayings as he does of the other two categories of sayings. Mark opens his use of the title by pointing to Jesus' *authority to forgive sin and his authority over the Sabbath (Mk 2:10, 28). However, the bulk of his references in the core of his Gospel involve the prediction of the Son of Man's suffering (Mk 8:31; 9:9, 12, 31; 10:33, 45; 14:21 [2x], 41). Mark concludes his references with a stress on the Son of Man as judge, and appealing directly to Daniel 7:13–14 and Psalm 110:1 reminds readers that the authority of his ministry will extend to the end. This wrapping of authority around suffering tells the core story of Jesus as Son of Man, from suffering to vindication.

4.3. Luke. Luke inherits much of what he says about the Son of Man from the tradition, using nine sayings of Mark from his twenty-five total. Another ten texts are shared with Q. So six sayings are unique to Luke (Lk 17:22; 18:8; 19:10; 21:36; 22:48; 24:7). These additional sayings fall into all three of our core categories (present ministry: to save the lost, betrayed by Judas; suffering: reminder of his having predicted this by the angel at the empty tomb; coming: days of the Son of Man, his finding faith when he returns, standing before the Son of Man). Luke's handling of the title differs little from Matthew's.

4.4. John. John's use of the expression is unique, appearing in thirteen sayings. The range includes references to the Son of Man being lifted up (which parallels the passion and resurrection sayings of the Synoptics) (Jn 3:14; 8:28; 12:34 [2x]), the glorification of the Son of Man (Jn 12:23; 13:31), the authority to judge (Jn 5:27), the power to grant life (Jn 6:27), the one to be believed on (Jn 9:35), the one whose flesh is to be eaten (Jn 6:53), the one who comes down (Jn 3:13), the one who is ascending (Jn 8:28), and the one on whom the angels are ascending and descending from an open heaven (Jn 1:51). The idea is that the Son of Man possesses an authority in the program of God, but there is no explicit Johannine tie to Daniel as in the Synoptics. This Johannine portrait has apocalyptic roots, as B. Reynolds has shown. This Son of Man is a heavenly, preexistent, messianic figure, who is judge and savior, similar to God in the way he is described, and the one who gathers the righteous. Reflecting apocalyptic background, he is a revealer of heavenly things (Jn 3:13; 8:28) and a bearer of dominion (Jn 5:27; 17:2, in language that may allude to Dan 7:14). This authority is not just awaiting a revelation in the future (Jn 5:28–29) but is present now (Jn 3:18; 5:24). Above all, the Son of Man is a giver of life (Jn 3:14–15; 6:27, 53; 9:35) who is lifted back up to heaven (Jn 3:13–14).

5. Conclusion.

The Son of Man is a key image of NT *Christology. Its unique role in the tradition is that it is strongly tied to Jesus as his favorite self-designation. Mysterious and yet ultimately clear, it was used idiomatically by Jesus to refer to himself as a special kind of human with a special kind of authority. Ultimately, he tied that association to the picture of Daniel 7, where a human with transcendent capability comes on the clouds to the Ancient of Days to share in judgment, rule and vindication. Such ideas were alive in Second Temple Judaism, as works such as 1 Enoch show. In referring to himself as Son of Man Jesus spoke of his authority to forgive sins or oversee the Sabbath, predicted his suffering, and looked forward to his own vindication and return. This title, pointing as it did to authority and exaltation, affirmed a unique proximity to God, the divine rule and God's program that saw Jesus working inseparably with God, even sharing some of God's prerogatives, while also highlighting Jesus' humanity. This may be why the expression came to be so consistently translated as "the Son of Man," the definite article being used twice in the Greek expression (ho huios tou anthrōpou). The expression as the Gospels portray Jesus using it effectively combined humanity and transcendence. It also pointed to a very unusual man, the Son of Man.

See also CHRIST; CHRISTOLOGY; LORD; SERVANT OF YAHWEH; SON OF DAVID; SON OF GOD.

BIBLIOGRAPHY. R. Bauckham, "The Son of Man: 'A Man in My Position' or 'Someone?'" JSNT 2 (1985) 23-33; D. L. Bock and J. H. Charlesworth, Parables of Enoch: A Paradigm Shift (Jewish and Christian Texts in Context and Related Studies; London: Bloomsbury, 2013); D. Burkett, The Son of Man Debate: A History and Evaluation (SNTSMS 107; Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 1999); C. C. Caragounis, The Son of Man: Vision and Interpretation (WUNT 38; Tübingen: Mohr Siebeck, 1986); M. Casey, The Solution to the "Son of Man" Problem (LNTS; Edinburgh: T & T Clark, 2009); J. Collins, The Scepter and the Star: The Messiahs of the Dead Sea Scrolls and Other Ancient Literature (New York: Doubleday, 1995) 173-94; C. Colpe, "ὁ υἱὸς τοῦ ἀνθρώπου," TDNT 8:400-477; T. F. Glasson, "Schweitzer's Influence—Blessing or Bane?" JTS 28 (1977) 289-302; J. B. Green, The Gospel of Luke (NICNT; Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1997); D. Hill, "The Figure of Jesus in Matthew's Story: A Response to Professor Kingsbury's Literary-Critical Probe," JSNT 21 (1984) 37-52; J. D. Kingsbury, "The Figure of Jesus in Matthew's Story: A Literary-Critical Probe," JSNT 21 (1984) 3-36; G. E. Ladd, A Theology of the New Testament (Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1974); B. Lindars, Jesus, Son of Man: A Fresh Examination of the Son of Man Sayings in the Gospels in the Light of Recent Research (Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1983); U. Luz, "The Son of Man in Matthew: Heavenly Judge or Human Christ?" JSNT 48 (1992) 3-21; G. W. E. Nickelsburg, "Son of Man," ABD 6:137-50; J. Nolland, The Gospel of Matthew: A Commentary on the Greek Text (NIGTC; Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 2005) 365-66; M. Pamment, "The Son of Man in the First Gospel," NTS 29 (1983) 116-29; B. E. Reynolds, The Apocalyptic Son of Man in the Gospel of John (WUNT 2/249; Tübingen: Mohr Siebeck, 2008); H. E. Tödt, The Son of Man in the Synoptic Tradition, trans. D. M. Barton (Philadelphia: Westminster, 1965); G. Vermes, "Appendix E: 'The Use of בן נשא/בן בר' in Jewish Aramaic," in An Aramaic Approach to the Gospels and Acts, by Matthew Black (3rd ed; Oxford: Clarendon Press, 1967) 310-30; P. Vielhauer, "Jesus und der Menschensohn: Zur Discussion mit Heinz Eduard Tödt und Eduard Schweizer," ZTK 60 (1963) 133-77. D. L. Bock

SONGS AND HYMNS

Singing was a part of Jewish temple worship and possibly of synagogue worship also. There is indication that Jesus and his disciples sang, and singing songs and hymns became a feature of early Christian worship, with hymnic elements arguably evidenced in NT texts. Within the Gospels, hymns have been possibly identified in Luke's Gospel and perhaps in the Fourth Gospel.

1. Songs and Hymns in the Life of Jesus
2. Identifying Hymns in the Gospels
3. Possible Hymns in Luke
4. Possible Hymn in John

1. Songs and Hymns in the Life of Jesus.

The only clear reference to songs or hymns in the Gospels is at Mark 14:26 (// Mt 26:30), where Jesus and his disciples "sang" (hymneō) after finishing their Passover meal. The incident barely makes it into the narrative: a circumstantial participle (hymnēsantes) describing what the group did just before "they went out to the Mount of Olives." Although there is no object provided to state what was sung, evidence from Philo (Spec. 2.148) and the Mishnah (m. Pesah 10:6) suggests that singing to close the Passover meal was customary. If m. Pesah 10:6 reflects first-century practice, then Jesus and his friends probably sang some or all of the Hallel (Pss 113-118) with or without a benediction. The verb hymneō means "to sing" or “to chant,” so their performance of the psalms (if that is what they did) could have been a rhythmic recital or something involving a tune.

This after-dinner hymn was unlikely to have been the only time Jesus sang. He and his disciples learned the Passover hymn that they sang from their families, with whom they had sung festal hymns all their lives. Plausibly, if not certainly, Jesus and his followers had gone to Jerusalem for a festival at least once in their lives prior to the journey that ended in Jesus’ crucifixion. On those occasions they likely sang some of the “psalms of ascent” composed for pilgrims on their way to *Jerusalem (e.g., Pss 121–122). Once at the *temple, they would have heard the Levites performing psalms (m. Tamid 7:4). At least some of these psalms were accompanied by a variety of instruments (m. ‘Arak. 2:3–4), making it likely that the psalms were sung. Various psalms include directions for the whole congregation to sing, clap their hands, shout in unison, and so forth. Plausibly, then, Jesus and his followers sang en route to festivals and during them; once again, they probably learned how to do this by imitating their families as they were growing up.

We do not know enough about first-century synagogue *worship to say whether it included singing. Indeed, some scholars doubt that prior to the destruction of the temple in A.D. 70 *synagogues in Palestine were regularly places of prayer and worship. But according to m. Ta’an. 4:2–4, groups of nonpriestly Jews gathered in their villages at the time of the daily sacrifices, timing their *prayers to coincide with those of the *priests in the temple. If this passage accurately represents pre-A.D. 70 practices, then some Jews in Galilean villages prayed together regularly in order to imitate the temple service; perhaps they also sang the prescribed psalms for the same reason.

2. Identifying Hymns in the Gospels.

Early Christian worship included singing (1 Cor 14:26; Eph 5:19; Col 3:16), but we have only hints about when, how or what they sang. “Psalm” in all three texts cited here likely indicates that they continued to use the biblical psalms, but “psalm” could also cover newly composed psalm-like poetry. Pliny’s letter to Trajan (A.D. 112), citing the testimony of lapsed Christians, states that they regularly sang an antiphonal hymn to Christ as to a god. Not surprisingly, then, some scholars have identified three psalm-like passages in Luke 1–2 and the Christ-focused, poetic prologue to John’s Gospel as possible early Christian hymns.

Since ancient writers often did not signal when a quoted passage began or ended, scholars typically argue that a passage is or contains a hymn because one or more of the following is true: (1) it is rhythmic or metrical; (2) it employs parallelisms characteristic of the psalms; (3) its vocabulary, themes or theological viewpoints are unlike the rest of the work. If the rhythm or parallelism is present, but the alleged hymn fits well in its context, it might still be a hymn, but one composed rather than quoted by the Gospel writer.

3. Possible Hymns in Luke.

Luke 1–2 contains three or four passages that may have been early Christian hymns, though their origins are debated. Because they formed part of the sung and chanted liturgy of the later church, these poems are traditionally entitled by their first words in Latin. The Magnificat (Lk 1:46–55), the Benedictus (Lk 1:68–79) and the Nunc Dimittis (Lk 2:29–32) are often identified as hymns, while the Gloria (Lk 2:14), because of its brevity, is more often identified as a doxology or an exclamation of praise. Like most who think of these first three passages as the “infancy hymns,” both R. E. Brown and S. Farris argue that they were first composed in Hebrew or Aramaic and translated into Greek; with F. Bovon, they believe that Luke redacted these preexisting texts to incorporate them into the infancy narrative. They point out that some of the vocabulary of the hymns appears nowhere else in Luke-Acts and argue that the hymns are in some respects at odds with their surrounding contexts. Others who identify these texts as hymns (Coleridge; Green; Tannehill) understand them to be integral parts of Luke’s overall design for the Gospel irrespective of their origins.

3.1. The Magnificat (Lk 1:46–55). The Magnificat is modeled on Hannah’s song (1 Sam 2:1–10) but draws on phrases from across the LXX. *Mary’s response to Gabriel’s announcement and to Elizabeth’s prophetic word is a psalm of the type normally identified as a hymn of praise. In the first stanza (Lk 1:46–50) Mary’s own circumstances are in focus: “looked with favor” (Lk 1:48) echoes Gabriel (Lk 1:30), and “all generations will call me blessed” (Lk 1:48) echoes Elizabeth (Lk 1:42, 45). In the second stanza Mary reflects on how God’s annunciation to her will be good news for some (the poor, the hungry, Abraham’s descendants) and judgment for others (the proud, the rich, the powerful). She thus previews John’s and Jesus’ ministries, and her psalm helps to characterize her as one of Luke’s ideal disciples of Jesus.

3.2. The Benedictus (Lk 1:68–79). Zechariah’s hymn is Spirit-inspired *prophecy (Lk 1:67), a berakah or praise psalm of the type that begins “blessed be the Lord” (e.g., Ps 144). Rather than using Hebrew parallelism like the Magnificat, it operates by stating a theme, then reprising and elaborating it: “horn of salvation” (Lk 1:69) is taken up by “knowledge of salvation” (Lk 1:77), “redeemed them” (Lk 1:68) by “rescued from our enemies” (Lk 1:71), and so forth. It also divides into two stanzas. Zechariah first praises God for saving Israel from its enemies (Lk 1:68-73) and then reflects on John’s part in those events as “prophet of the Most High” (Lk 1:74-79). Zechariah’s predictions of Israel’s *salvation have a tragic overtone in a Gospel that predicts the destruction of the *temple and the suffering of *Jerusalem, but it also highlights the grace and *forgiveness of sins that God is offering. Zechariah should know, for these are his first words in nine months after being silenced for doubting an angel!

3.3. The Nunc Dimittis (Lk 2:29-32). Simeon’s brief psalm of praise (Lk 2:28) identifies him as someone who, like Mary, Elizabeth, Anna and the shepherds, sees clearly and responds favorably to what God is doing through Jesus. His words echo and nuance the earlier two hymns. Like Mary, Simeon speaks of God’s salvation for a slave, but extended to all peoples, Jew and Gentile. Like Zechariah, Simeon is grateful for God’s peace, but he imagines it as a peaceful death rather than as an alternative to “the shadow of death” (Lk 1:79). Simeon’s prayer, drawing some of its vocabulary from Isaiah’s *servant songs (e.g., “light for the Gentiles” [Lxx Is 49:6]), foreshadows Jesus’ calm acceptance of his death, entrusting his spirit to God’s care (Lk 23:46).

3.4. Hymns in Luke? The three passages in question are most certainly poetical, and they use Hebrew parallelism and phrases familiar from the OT to praise God. The poems are an integral part of the first two chapters, creating resonances and contrasts: Mary looks for God’s mercy on the poor, and Zechariah for salvation for Israel generally, while Simeon predicts light to the Gentiles. Jesus’ words and deeds in the rest of Luke both amplify and confound what a first reading of the hymns might have predicted. Luke either composed them or edited preexisting hymns to render them so compatible with his purposes.

None of the three is metrical; none has lines of balanced length; the Magnificat, however, is set in traditional psalmic form. Luke 1:46 opens the poem with synonymous parallelism: the word order is verb (“magnifies,” “rejoices”), subject (“my soul,” “my spirit”), object (“the Lord,” “God of my salvation”). Luke 1:52-53, by contrast, is chiasmic in form: the Lord (A) toppled the mighty from their thrones and (B) lifted the lowly; (B’) filled the hungry with good things and (A’) dismissed the wealthy empty-handed. The structure not only contrasts “good things” with “empty,” but also identifies “thrones” with “empty.” The poem is not metrical, but neither are many psalms. Plausibly, then, Luke found an early hymn text that suited his Gospel, or (perhaps more plausibly, given how closely it fits his themes) he composed it with Hannah’s psalm as his model both to fit Mary’s situation and to serve as something that early Christians could sing.

The Benedictus and the Nunc Dimittis are poetic, but neither is metrical or regularly parallel in structure. Thus, they are less likely to have been composed to be sung or chanted, at least in the form in which we have them.

4. Possible Hymn in John.

Another Gospel passage sometimes thought to contain an early Christian hymn is the prologue to John (Jn 1:1-18). R. Bultmann, followed by many others, proposed that most of John 1:1, 3-5, 9-12b, 14, 16 were a hymn originally composed by the followers of *John the Baptist and later glossed so that it could be included in the Gospel. Many agree that a hymn underlies the prologue but disagree that it stems from a (proto-)gnostic sect of the Baptist. E. Haenchen, R. E. Brown and many others proposed a hymn based on Jewish wisdom texts and ideas; such theories typically set aside John 1:6-8, 15, 18 as exegetical comments not original to the hymn.

Whoever wrote and/or edited John 1:1-18 was reflecting on the theology and language of Genesis 1 in the manner of Proverbs 8:22-36, where creation takes place through the agency of divine Wisdom personified. Second Temple Jewish wisdom texts, such as Sirach 24 and Wisdom of Solomon 6:22-10:21, further develop the idea of a divine Wisdom present at creation and always available to righteous seekers who love God’s Torah. John’s prologue speaks of “word” rather than “wisdom,” boldly identifying the “word” as God and then, just as boldly, as Jesus. The choice of logos (“word”) rather than sophia (“wisdom”) may have been made partly because of the use of logos as an important concept in some first-century Greco-Roman philosophies. Some Stoics, for instance, conceived of the logos as a divine principle present throughout the cosmos, its first cause, and the guide to a life in accordance with nature (Diogenes Laertius, Vit. 7.134; Seneca, Ep. 76.9-10). The prologue’s use is quite different (e.g., the Stoic logos was impersonal), but the use of the term to open the Gospel was perhaps an attempt to interpret the story of Jesus in cross-culturally significant terms. Thus drawing on OT texts and Jewish interpretive traditions, but with an eye on the wider world, the author of the prologue clearly and poetically fashioned a compelling explanation for what God was doing in Jesus, and in so doing the author affected subsequent Christian theology as much as anyone else ever has.

4.1. An Earlier Hymn in the Prologue? The proposed hymn employs “stair-step” parallelism, where the last word in a line often becomes the first word in the next line: “word” (ends v. 1a, begins v. 1b), “God” (ends v. 1b, begins v. 1c [in Greek]), “life” (ends v. 4a, begins v. 4b), “light” (ends v. 4b, begins v. 5a), and so forth. Those who argue that John 1:1-18 incorporates an earlier hymn point out that some of the most important words and concepts of this passage do not appear later in the Gospel of John (e.g., “word” as a title for Jesus, grace, fullness). John 1:6-9 introduces John the Baptist as a witness to the light but not as the true light; this is largely repeated in John 1:19-22, as if the prologue were added after the pericope introducing John had already been composed. Objections to this theory point out that even when the “prose” parts are separated out and the “verse” parts arranged in stanzas, the lines are not balanced or regularly metrical, nor is the stair-step form consistently used. Some commentators, then, speak of the prologue as “a poem with commentary” (Ringe, 48) and consider John 1:1-18 as a unit.

4.2. The Prologue as a Unified Composition. R. A. Culpepper argued convincingly that the entire prologue is a chiasm that pivots on John 1:12b, “he gave power to become children of God,” and that the pivot thus highlighted is suitable thesis statement for the whole Gospel. While it is true that Jesus is called “the Word” only in the prologue, it is also true that throughout John’s Gospel Jesus frequently refers to his words as God’s, words that one must believe in order to gain life and light. Other themes in the prologue reappear later in the Gospel: for example, Jesus is the light of the world, whom the darkness can neither overcome nor comprehend; he gives life; the world knows him not. The prologue functions as a précis for the Gospel, inviting the reader to expect narratives of God’s word, God’s glory, God’s grace.

4.3. A Hymn in John? As it stands, the prologue is not a hymn, nor even all poetry. It is impossible to say whether the sections that do seem to be poetry existed separately before John’s composition, or whether the author of this Gospel composed or edited verses of a hymn for singing as well as for introducing the themes of his book. But since John 1:1-18 can be shown to be a unified composition that nicely previews the rest of the Gospel, and since the poetic sections are not consistently metrical, it seems most likely that John’s author was, like so many prophets before him, making his ideas sing without actually composing a hymn.

See also PRAYER; WORSHIP.

BIBLIOGRAPHY. F. Bovon, Luke 1: A Commentary on the Gospel of Luke 1:1-9:50, trans. C. M. Thomas (Herm; Minneapolis: Fortress, 2002); R. E. Brown, The Birth of the Messiah: A Commentary on the Infancy Narratives in Matthew and Luke (Garden City, NY: Doubleday, 1977); M. Coleridge, The Birth of the Lukan Narrative: Narrative as Christology in Luke 1-2 (JSNTSup 88; Sheffield: JSOT Press, 1993); R. A. Culpepper, “The Pivot of John’s Gospel,” NTS 27 (1980) 1-31; S. Farris, The Hymns of Luke’s Infancy Narratives: Their Origin, Meaning and Significance (JSNTSup 88; Sheffield: JSOT Press, 1985); J. B. Green, The Gospel of Luke (NICNT; Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1997); E. Haenchen, John: A Commentary on the Gospel of John, trans. R. W. Funk, vol. 1 (Philadelphia: Fortress, 1984); E. Harris, Prologue and Gospel: The Theology of the Fourth Evangelist (JSNTSup 107; Sheffield: Sheffield Academic Press, 1994); S. Ringe, Wisdom’s Friends: Community and Christology in the Fourth Gospel (Louisville: Westminster John Knox, 1999); R. C. Tannehill, The Narrative Unity of Luke-Acts: A Literary Interpretation, 1: The Gospel According to Luke (Philadelphia: Fortress, 1986); R. B. Vinson, Luke (SHBC 21; Macon, GA: Smyth & Helwys, 2008).

R. B. Vinson

SOURCE CRITICISM. See REDACTION CRITICISM.

SPIRIT OF GOD. See HOLY SPIRIT.

SUFFERING SERVANT. See SERVANT OF YAHWEH.

SWEARING. See OATHS AND SWEARING.

SYCHAR. See ARCHEOLOGY AND GEOGRAPHY.

SYNAGOGUE

Already by the first century A.D. synagogues were essential institutions for Jewish social, political and religious activities and important for the formation of Jewish identity. Evidence from the first century points to the wide distribution of these institutions in the Mediterranean world. The Gospels repeatedly refer to synagogues as they narrate the life of Jesus, indicating that the historical Jesus used them as settings for proclaiming his message of the coming kingdom.

1. First-Century Synagogues in the Land of Israel
2. Synagogues in the Gospels
3. The Historical Jesus and the Synagogue

1. First-Century Synagogues in the Land of Israel.

1.1. Terminology. Twenty-five Greek, Hebrew and Latin words were used in the first-century A.D. world to designate institutions for which today we have only the single English word “synagogue” (Runesson, Binder and Olsson). The most common terms were the Greek synagōgē (“assembly, gathering”) and proseuchē (“prayer hall”), but ekklēsia (“assembly”) was also used at this time (although later used exclusively for non-Jewish Christian institutions). These terms were used interchangeably for two basic types of institutions: a public, municipal type and a voluntary association type (Runesson 2001).

1.2. Nature and Origins. Although both the public municipal institution and the association synagogue existed in the land of Israel, only the former originated in that milieu, most likely in the city gates (Binder; Levine) of Persian-period Yehud (Runesson 2001). They existed only in areas where Jews were in charge of municipal administration (cf. m. Ned. 5:5) and were open to all (men, women, children). We have no documented restrictions regarding participation. The association synagogue, however, was a Jewish form of the Greco-Roman voluntary association and thus originated in the Diaspora. The earliest evidence for this type of institution in the land probably is Sirach 51:23 (“house of learning” [Gk. oikos paideias; Heb. bēt midraš]). These were run by specific Jewish groups such as the Essenes (Philo, Prob. 80-83). Each had their own rules for membership, just as Greco-Roman associations issued their own community rules and penal codes.

1.3. Distribution. First-century A.D. evidence supports a wide distribution of these institutions in both rural and urban areas from *Galilee and Judea to the larger Mediterranean world, extending to the northern shores of the Black Sea (see map in Runesson, Binder and Olsson). Synagogues thus were not isolated phenomena but rather were part of a wider pattern of Jewish institutional forms in the ancient world. What makes the situation in Galilee and Judea unique is the coterminous existence of the public synagogues (i.e., the town and city assemblies) and association synagogues. Literary sources along with archeological evidence show that first-century A.D. synagogues cluster in the Galilee and the coastal region (e.g., Caesarea), on the one hand, and Judea (excluding Samaria), on the other. We know of the existence of Samaritan synagogues in the Diaspora dating as early as the third or second century B.C. (Runesson, Binder and Olsson, no. 100), but the earliest remains in the land date to the fourth century A.D. (Pummer).

1.4. Activities. The activities of public synagogues included local town or city administrative matters; they functioned as courts and locations for the storage of archives. This perhaps included the manumission of slaves, although we have direct first-century A.D. evidence of this only from the Diaspora. The situation is similar regarding the synagogue’s function as a treasury (Binder). Other possible synagogue activities included the teaching of children (as required by Jewish law, according to Josephus, Ag. Ap. 2.204).

Since the ancient world did not distinguish between secular and religious, public synagogues also housed religious activities, most prominently the public reading and teaching of Torah on the Sabbath. Anyone could read and expound portions of the text. This meant that individuals and groups, such as the Jesus movement or the *Pharisees, could use public *Sabbath gatherings as a venue for proclaiming their vision of how Jewish tradition should be understood and lived (Jn 18:20). The existence of public communal prayer on such occasions is difficult to prove for this time period. However, prayer could be part of liturgies on other days for special occasions such as public fasts (Josephus, Life 295), and synagogues were open to the public for individual prayers at any time (Mt 6:5).

The activities of association synagogues in the land correlated with that association’s purpose and vision for how Jewish tradition should be lived, strengthening group cohesion and specific forms of Jewish identity. Membership of some synagogues could also be based on social identity or country of origin (Acts 6:9). As shown by the Theodotos inscription and Philo’s and Josephus’s descriptions of the Essenes, reading, expounding and teaching Torah stood at the center of activities in association synagogues. They were often regarded by their members as holy places, as in the cases of the Qumran sectarians and the Essenes (Philo, Prob. 81; cf. Josephus, J.W. 2.128-132; CD-A XI, 22-XII, 1) (see Fine). This idea of synagogue buildings as holy space was not applied to public synagogues in the land, but there are sources from the Diaspora claiming synagogues to be sacred at this time. Similarly, communal prayer is evidenced for some association synagogues in the land (4Q503) as well as for Diaspora synagogues, but not for public synagogues. Another similarity between association synagogues in the land and Diaspora synagogues (and Greco-Roman associations more generally) is the practice of communal dining, as evidenced in the Qumran community, the triclinium found in the Jericho synagogue (Runesson, Binder and Olsson, 15), and among the Therapeutai (Philo, Contempl. 64-89). Similar practices occurred in the associations of the Jesus movement (Acts 2:46; cf. 1 Cor 11:17-33).

1.5. Institutional Structures. Although different, both public and association synagogues had formal institutional structures. The latter followed the organizational pattern of Greco-Roman associations and had community rules or charters (1QS; CD; Didache; cf. Mt 18). Leadership titles used for synagogues in the land (and often in the Diaspora) include archisynagōgos ("ruler of the synagogue" [Mk 5:22]), archōn ("ruler" [Mt 9:18; Josephus, Life 278, 294; Ant. 4.214]), hypēretēs ("attendant" = Heb. hazzan [Lk 4:20]), grammateus ("scribe" [Mk 1:21-22]), presbyteros ("elder" [the Theodotos inscription; Lk 7:3-5]) and perhaps dynatos (Josephus, J.W. 287, 292). Although *priests often were synagogue leaders, hiereus ("priest") was a hereditary title related to the temple cult and did not in itself indicate a particular position in synagogues (cf. Philo, Hypoth. 7.13) (see Runesson, Binder and Olsson, 26; Levine). There is no evidence of Pharisees as leaders of public synagogues (Cohen), although they oversaw their own association synagogues (Runesson 2001).

What these titles implied in terms of responsibility is debated, but it seems certain that the archisynagōgos and the archōn enjoyed the highest status, while the grammateus was associated with teaching at public Sabbath gatherings (Mk 1:21-22) and presumably teaching children at other occasions (cf. Josephus, Ag. Ap. 2.204). In the first century A.D. *scribes also served in public synagogues as bureaucrats and judges. Reading and teaching in public synagogues were not, however, linked exclusively to an official position; anyone who could read could perform these tasks.

1.6. Architecture. Although variations existed, first-century A.D. synagogues had certain features in common. Stepped benches usually lined three or four of the walls, establishing the empty space in the middle as the focal point. The Torah was read from here. While the reader was standing, the expounding of the text after the reading was most likely done in a sitting position (Lk 4:20; cf. Mt 5:1; Philo, Prob. 81-82). Columns were placed oddly between the benches and the open floor, partly obscuring the view for some. A good example of synagogue architecture is provided by the Gamla synagogue.

The architecture of first-century A.D. synagogues matched their functions, as the focus lay on those gathered rather than beyond them, as was the case of the Greek and Roman temple with its altar and cella, or shrine (for temple architecture, see Spawforth). Synagogues were built for discussion to take place, which on Sabbaths centered on the interpretation of Scripture. First-century A.D. synagogues were not richly decorated; Jewish symbols such as the shofar, menorah, lulab, etrog and incense shovel appear only in Late-Antique synagogues. However, a richly decorated stone "table," which featured a depiction of the menorah, was found in the center of the recently discovered synagogue at Magdala/Migdal, dating to the early first century A.D., although this is still to be analyzed.

2. Synagogues in the Gospels.

The way we interpret the role of synagogues in the Gospels depends on how we understand the nature of the institutions described in the narratives. Terminologically, synagōgē dominates the texts almost exclusively (Matthew 9x; Mark 8x; Luke 15x; John 2x), but there are also two occurrences of ekklēsia (Mt 16:18; 18:17). Regarding officials, archisynagōgos is used only by Mark (four times in the same pericope) and Luke (twice); archōn, as applied to synagogue leaders specifically, is used by Matthew (twice) and Luke (once [but cf. Lk 12:58; 14:1]). Hypēretēs refers to a synagogue attendant only once, in Luke (Lk 4:20). There are no instances in the other Gospels where this term is used explicitly in conjunction with synagogues; however, Matthew 5:25 describes court proceedings (which often occurred in the synagogue) with punishment carried out by a hypēretēs, which may refer to a synagogue attendant. The title grammateus occurs in both public and association synagogue settings, with the task of teaching (Mt 13:52; Mk 1:21-22; 12:39). Although presbyteros is mentioned once in Luke 7:3-5 in a setting involving a synagogue, the other Gospels associate this title with *Jerusalem and the *temple, not with synagogues.

2.1. Matthew. Matthew's Gospel is the only one that refers to both public and association synagogues. The former are the majority (Mt 4:23; 6:2,5; 9:35; 10:17; 13:54; 23:6; 23:34); evidence of the latter is limited to a possible Pharisaic association (synagōgēn autōn ["their synagogue"] in Mt 12:9 [but cf. Mk 3:1; Lk 6:6]) and the association synagogue of the Mattheans themselves (ekklēsia [Mt 16:18; 18:17]) (Runesson 2008).

The distribution of association synagogues is limited to Galilee (but with universal outlook [cf. Mt 28:19-20]), and this is also the region where the majority of the narrative's public synagogues are located (Mt 4:23; 9:35). However, in contrast to Mark and Luke, Matthew mentions only one public synagogue in an identified town (Nazareth [Mt 13:54]). The Galilean (association) synagogue in Matthew 12:9 is also local-specific, but the name of the place is not mentioned (the parallels in Mark and Luke indicate that, in their narratives, the event occurs in the public synagogue of Capernaum). Some sayings uttered in Jerusalem imply general references to synagogues in Judea (Mt 23:6, 34), and one claim is universal (Mt 10:17 [uttered in Galilee, but note the future tense]). Samaria is explicitly avoided (cf. Mt 10:5).

The following pattern may be discerned in Matthew's references to synagogues. Identification of specific geographical locations is avoided, except for the general area of Galilee and the one instance of the hometown of Jesus. The leadership term archisynagōgos is not used. Instead, archōn (Mt 9:18, 23) is applied, but lacking the specification "of the synagogue" (contra NRSV), thus leaving the setting open for interpretation; the Synoptic parallels use the term archisynagōgos, which establishes the institutional context firmly. Further, whereas in Mark the people in Capernaum react negatively toward the scribes' teaching in direct response to Jesus' (powerful) teaching in the synagogue there (Mk 1:22), Matthew reports the same response of the crowds in reaction to an open-air sermon on an unidentified Galilean hill (Mt 5:1; 7:29). This overall "delocalizing" rhetorical strategy results in a more general picture of Jesus' encounters in synagogues, as opposed to a case-by-case report of local-specific events as favored by Mark.

This generalized institutional setting functions in different ways to convey specific messages. There is an overall movement in the portrayal of events in synagogues from positive to negative after Jesus has left Galilee and entered Jerusalem. Synagogues are places in which teaching and healing (not exorcisms as in Mark and Luke) take place, and the emphasis is on teaching (Mt 4:23; 9:35; 13:54-58 [note how the healing story in Mt 12:9-14 is transformed into a discourse on Jewish law]). As Matthew 4:23; 9:35 show, the general Galilean experience in public synagogues is positive; Jesus' hometown (Mt 13:57) and what seems to be meant to look like a Pharisaic association synagogue (Mt 12:9-14) are the exceptions. Galilean synagogues thus function positively as places where Jesus proclaims his message, and synagogue officials (scribes) may be persuaded to follow and teach the ways of the "kingdom" (Mt 8:9; 13:52), even if there is also resistance from some (Mt 9:3), and many scribes are influenced by the Pharisees (Mt 5:20 [cf. Mk 2:6; Lk 5:30, where some scribes are identified as belonging to the Pharisaic party]).

As public places, synagogues may be used with the purpose of displaying behavior not approved by the Matthean Jesus. Primarily, this concerns the "hypocrisy" of wanting to be seen doing pious deeds (almsgiving [Mt 6:2], individual prayer [Mt 6:5]). After Jesus' arrival in Jerusalem this charge of hypocrisy in synagogues is leveled directly against scribes and Pharisees (Mt 23:6). Both of these groups are now presented as influential in synagogue institutions, with power to judge and flog followers of Jesus there (Mt 23:34). In Galilee these punishments were prophesied to one day afflict the messianic Jews of Matthew's story; at that point, however, their adversaries were only generally identified as "people" (anthrōpoi [Mt 10:17]), not as scribes or Pharisees. It is to these (Judean?) synagogues, controlled by scribes allied with Pharisees (cf. Mt 23:2), that Matthew's Jesus will send messianic scribes, sages and prophets, all of whom presumably, like Jesus, come from Galilee. Their mission will, like Jesus' mission, end in suffering and death (Mt 23:34). Such common synagogue settings between Pharisees, scribes and followers of Jesus emphasize the deep involvement of Matthew in the Jewish society of his time. In addition, Matthew is the only Gospel to indicate the launch of a separate Jewish association synagogue for disciples of Jesus, a setting in which they are in control and exercise judgment themselves (the ekklēsia [Mt 16:18; 18:15-18]).

2.2. Mark. In the Markan narrative Jesus is concerned only with the public synagogues, and there is no hint of an association synagogue setting within which Jesus' followers determine their own rules. Contrary to Matthew, Mark is careful to associate events with specific, identified public synagogues (Capernaum [Mk 1:21-29; 3:1; 5:21-43]; Nazareth, "his hometown" [Mk 6:1-2]). Whereas Matthew twice refers to Jesus' proclamation of the kingdom in Galilean synagogues generally, Mark includes only one such editorial note (Mk 1:39; cf. Mk 1:15). Judean synagogues are not mentioned explicitly, but they may be implied in the two general statements involving synagogues that Jesus utters in Jerusalem (Mk 12:39; 13:9). Samaria is not mentioned at all in Mark's Gospel. The focus in Mark is on specific public synagogue settings in Galilee, with some (conflictual) statements embedded in a Judean setting.

The importance of synagogues for Mark is evidenced in the fact that this Gospel programmatically introduces Jesus' mission, consisting of teaching and exorcisms, in a synagogue (Capernaum [Mk 1:21-28]). Whereas Matthew's Gospel, which has no parallel to the Capernaum synagogue incident, relates Jesus to synagogues through general sayings, Mark presents specific events in local-specific synagogues first (Mk 1:21-28), and then he continues with a general application of such a setting to the area of Galilee. In this way, the reader is led to understand that what transpired in Capernaum occurred all over Galilee (Mk 1:39; note the repetition of teaching and exorcism from the scene of Mk 1:21-28). The activities of teaching and exorcisms in synagogues are the same as in Luke (Lk 4:15, 31-37), but they differ from Matthew's narrative, which replaces exorcisms with *healings.

For Mark, the synagogue references are a way to present Jesus as engaged in a public mission, aiming for the entire Jewish people, a mass movement, rather than targeting for salvation only a small remnant. The synagogues of Mark place Jesus firmly in a public Galilean setting. In that setting Jesus is mostly successful, and a named leader (archisynagōgos) of the Capernaum synagogue, Jairus, is said to have recognized his authority and sought his help (Mk 5:22). Local scribes who are said to teach in synagogues (Mk 1:22) are portrayed negatively, however, and Matthew's positive exceptions (Mt 8:19; 13:52; 23:34) are absent. The only scribe receiving approval is one connected to the temple administration in Jerusalem, not to synagogues (Mk 12:28-34). As shown by Mark 12:38-39, scribes, when related to synagogues, are presented as examples of how not to behave.

In addition to leadership figures, two groups with no formal roles in synagogues are mentioned as interacting on this public scene: Pharisees and *Herodians (Mk 3:6). This is the only mention of either group in relation to synagogues, which contrasts with Matthew's emphasis on Pharisaic presence there. Pharisees and Herodians are said to have left the synagogue setting in order to plot against Jesus, indicating a political agreement between them. This theme is later taken up in a temple setting by references to the chief priests and the scribes (not the Pharisees) as they sided with Roman political power in Jerusalem for the same purpose of having Jesus executed (Mk 14:1; 15:1).

The overall narrative progression in Mark is, as in Matthew, negative, beginning with largely successful synagogue interaction in Galilee and ending in Jerusalem with the warning that the disciples of Jesus will be beaten in synagogues (Mk 13:9). Such a statement, in the future tense, indicates continued involvement of the Jesus movement in Jewish public society and its administrative, political and religious institutions.

2.3. Luke. As with Mark, Luke focuses exclusively on public synagogues and puts emphasis on certain sites in Galilee (Nazareth [Lk 4:16-30]; Capernaum [Lk 4:31-38; 6:6-11; 7:5; 8:41]; an unidentified Galilean town [Lk 13:10-17]). These particular cases, with an emphasis on Capernaum, exemplify the general rule that Jesus taught in Galilean synagogues (Lk 4:15). Luke is alone among the Synoptic Gospels to explicitly claim that Jesus then also taught in synagogues in Judea, which here likely refers to the entire land (Evans), excluding Samaria (Lk 4:44). Luke is first among the Synoptics to refer positively to *Samaritans (Lk 10:25-37; 17:11-19), but he specifically notes that Jesus was rejected by them and thus carried out his ministry outside Samaria and along its border (Lk 9:51-56; 17:11; for the meaning of 17:11, see Fitzmyer). Four sayings in addition to Luke 4:44 refer generally to synagogues in the land, two of which are uttered in Galilee (Lk 11:43; 12:11), and two in the Jerusalem temple (Lk 20:46; 21:12).

Luke conflates the narrative strategies of Mark and Matthew with regard to synagogues. Like Matthew (Mt 4:23), Luke introduces Jesus' public activities in Galilee with a general reference stating that Jesus "began to teach in their synagogues and was praised by everyone" (Lk 4:15). Then, like Mark but contrary to Matthew, he immediately continues to give a detailed programmatic portrait of incidents in specific synagogues: first in Nazareth (Lk 4:16-30), then in Capernaum (Lk 4:31-37). Whereas Mark uses just one synagogue setting to introduce Jesus' teaching and exorcisms (Mk 1:21-28), Luke divides these activities between Nazareth and Capernaum respectively, the two towns most intimately related to the figure of Jesus. Further, whereas Matthew reduces Jesus' synagogue activities to teaching and healing, Luke, like Mark, includes exorcisms as well. Uniquely, Luke then completes his introduction of Jesus' public interaction in synagogues by noting that Jesus taught in the synagogues of Judea too (Lk 4:44), indicating to the reader that Jesus' aim to address the entire nation was, from the beginning, part and parcel of his message about the coming kingdom, before his journey to Jerusalem. In this way, Luke forms a bridge between the Synoptic and the Johannine perspectives on Jesus' journeys through the land, the former claiming that Jesus made only one journey to that area, and the latter suggesting repeated visits to Judea.

Regarding Jesus' interaction with synagogue leaders, Luke again conflates Mark and Matthew terminologically, as shown by the story of the healing of Jairus's daughter (Mt 9:18-26; Mk 5:21-43; Lk 8:40-56). When the synagogue leader is introduced, the term archōn ("ruler") is used, as in Matthew 9:18, but with the added explanatory specification tēs synagōgēs ("of the synagogue" [Lk 8:41]), as if Luke wished to reduce the terminological ambivalence of Matthew. Then, as the story progresses, Luke shifts to the only term used in Mark: archisynagōgos ("leader of the synagogue" [Lk 8:49; cf. Mk 5:35]). The same term, archisynagōgos, is also used by Luke in his special material, in which a leader of the synagogue complains that Jesus is healing on a Sabbath (Lk 13:14). This passage introduces negative interaction between a synagogue leader and Jesus, a phenomenon unknown to Matthew and Mark, who report only the positive healing episode. Further, Luke, like Mark and Matthew, relates the office of the scribe (grammateus) to public synagogues, but contrary to the former, he does not identify or imply their role in that institution. Like Mark, however, Luke understands scribes in synagogue settings consistently as Jesus' adversaries (Lk 6:6-7; 20:46), and here we lack Matthew's positive view of the scribal office as such, within which one may find followers of Jesus (see above). Finally, the office of "lawyer" (nomikos) is also associated with synagogue settings (Lk 11:45; cf. Lk 11:43), but it is not stated clearly what role this group had there. The nomikos should, however, be understood as a type of scribe (see 1 above).

Among Jewish groups present in synagogue settings, Luke, like Matthew, mentions only Pharisees (he knows not of Markan Herodians), and they always react negatively to Jesus in that setting; in other settings Luke can portray them positively, even as attempting to save Jesus' life (e.g., Lk 13:31). The Pharisees, Luke mentions in passing, have their own leaders, which indicates his awareness of Pharisaic association synagogues (Lk 14:1). The term used is archōn ("ruler"), a designation used for association leaders elsewhere (P.Lond. 3.1178.6; LSJ). The Pharisaic association also counted scribes among their members (grammateus [Lk 5:30; cf. Mk 2:16]; Mt 22:35 has nomikos [NRSV: "lawyer"]), just like Matthew reports that the Jesus movement included scribes (Mt 13:52; 23:34). Luke, however, does not associate scribes with institutional settings led by Jesus' followers; his narrative is void of such institutions, as are Mark's and John's.

2.4. John. Contrary to the Synoptic Gospels, which recount numerous events taking place in synagogues, John refers explicitly to synagogues only twice, and both verses concern public institutions. The first synagogue mentioned is identified by its Galilean location (Capernaum [Jn 6:59]); the other occurrence is a general reference to synagogues in the land as a whole (Jn 18:20) (see Olsson). Since the second reference is a programmatic statement that Jesus always taught publicly in synagogues, it is clear that in John's mind the synagogues were key institutions used by Jesus to spread his message: it was there—and in the temple—that Jesus' interaction with people in the public sphere took place. It is assumed that the audience understands that the synagogues and the Jerusalem temple are the places where events involving persons of importance in public Jewish society took place. Although John, contrary to the Synoptic Gospels, includes in his narrative detailed descriptions of interaction between Jesus and Samaritans (Jn 4:1-42; cf. Jn 8:48), he never mentions explicitly Samaritan synagogues as loci for such contact.

Instead of the court proceedings and punishments in synagogues described by the Synoptic Gospels (Mt 10:17; Mk 13:9; Lk 12:11), the social importance of synagogues is confirmed by John's thrice-repeated claim that followers of Jesus may be excluded from these institutions (aposynagōgos [the first three occurrences of the word in Greek literature]). Such exclusion was a punishment feared by both the Jewish "authorities" (archōn [Jn 12:42]) and the people (Jn 9:22), and the disciples were prepared by Jesus to suffer (Jn 16:2). All threats of exclusion from synagogues are connected narratively to Judea/Jerusalem, which means that Ioudaioi in John 9:22 should be translated "Judeans."

It is not clear, however, whether the aposynagōgos passages refer to public institutions or association synagogues. The interpretive choice regarding this question has major implications for how we understand John's portrayal of Jesus and the Jesus movement in relation to Jewish society. If the reference is to public synagogues, this would mean that Jews who believed that Jesus was the Messiah are said to have been excluded from public interaction in Jewish society and deprived of the possibility of taking part in decision making, basically becoming outcasts in Judea, a situation similar to losing citizenship rights. Such an interpretation would require the existence of a political, supralocal decision-making body (the chief priest and the elders in Jerusalem?) with influence in Judea generally and possibly beyond (Jn 16:2). Such a scenario would have affected both members of the elite (Jn 12:42) and the people (Jn 9:22). If the reference is to an association synagogue, the social effect would be much less severe and include only members of specific (Pharisaic? [cf. Jn 12:42]) associations. Such punishment of exclusion is known from most other voluntary associations in the Greco-Roman world, including Jewish associations such as the Qumranites (see Essenes). One of the possible consequences of such an interpretation is that Pharisaic associations were widespread and included in their membership not only some of the Jerusalem authorities but also many of Jesus' followers (cf. Acts 15:5; Phil 3:5).

Regarding synagogue officials, John has no information. The only term used that may refer to synagogue leaders, archōn, is used only in relation to the Jerusalem administration (Jn 3:1; 7:26, 48; 12:42). The single reference in the Gospel to a scribe (grammateus) is also set in a Jerusalem context and has nothing to do with synagogue administration; indeed, the pericope in which it occurs was not even part of the original Gospel of John (Jn 8:3).

Finally, whereas Mark and Luke state that Jesus taught and healed people and exorcised demons in synagogue settings, and Matthew says that Jesus just taught and healed, John reduces his report to include teaching only. It seems that John is also taking Matthew's rhetorical tendency to generalize and "de-localize" Jesus' activities in synagogues to the extreme through his sparse comment in John 18:20 and his consequent reliance upon his audience's knowledge of the social reality of Jewish public society.

3. The Historical Jesus and the Synagogue.

Recent advances in synagogue studies and archeology put us in a better position to reconstruct how Jesus related to public Jewish institutions and associations (Freyne 2006; Dunn; Twelftree). Overall, we find convergence between external evidence and the Gospels regarding synagogues. Although some have tried to find anachronisms in the Gospels' synagogue descriptions based on conjectured developments of the synagogue immediately after the fall of the temple in 70 A.D., this is untenable because such developments do not occur until centuries later, when rabbinic Judaism begins to emerge as mainstream Judaism (Runesson 2001). Furthermore, contrary to arguments that the Gospel writers' synagogue descriptions were colored by their experience with Diaspora synagogues and thus were inaccurate, their descriptions of synagogue rituals fit those that would have taken place in the land at that time. For example, Luke describes Jesus sitting down to teach the congregation after a reading of Scripture, which was the custom of synagogues in the land but not in the Diaspora, where the person expounding Scripture stands (Philo, Spec. 2.62; Acts 13:15-16). Further, all four Gospels emphasize almost exclusively the public synagogue institution, which did not exist in the Diaspora.

Considering the centrality of the public synagogues in the villages and towns of the Galilee and elsewhere (Levine), it is likely that Jesus attended Sabbath gatherings from early on, studying Torah and, possibly, learning to read (cf. Josephus, Ag. Ap. 2.204 [grammata paideuein, "to learn letters"]) (see Dunn; Twelftree). If the accounts of the Gospels are simply added to each other, Jesus is reported to have read Scripture, taught and healed people, and exorcised demons in Galilean synagogue contexts. For Judea, we have only two brief notes on Jesus' proclaiming his message there (Lk 4:44; Jn 18:20). All of these activities fit culturally within the setting of the public synagogues, in which people gathered on the Sabbath and other days of the week (cf. the criterion of contextual plausibility). Along with the temple, Jesus seems to have sought out public synagogues and used them as a platform for his message and deeds, often resulting in positive responses by the people. At the same time, however, he undermined the religio-political stability provided by the current leadership and its retainers in the capital as well as in the Galilean towns and villages. However, some of the local synagogue leadership in Galilee seems to have joined him (Mk 5:22; cf. Mt 8:19; 13:52), although his larger following consisted of "the crowds" (Mt 9:35-36; Mk 1:23, 39; Lk 4:15). Jesus' choice of teaching in public religio-political settings in Jewish society reveals an aim to create a mass movement, with both political and religious consequences.

Since Jesus aimed at public Jewish institutions, it is likely that his followers did so too, probably primarily in Galilee. Although Jesus never established an association, his followers plausibly formed them on the pattern of existing Jewish association synagogues (cf. the Qumran group [see Klinghardt]; Acts 6:9). *Oral tradition about Jesus likely was transmitted and written down in these settings. Furthermore, it is probable that community rules were also created for these associations (cf. the penal code of the Qumran group [see Weinfeld 1986]). Evidence for this is found in the Didache and the Gospel of Matthew (Mt 18). As belief in Christ spread in the Diaspora, this institutional pattern would have been familiar to non-Jews also as they gathered (see Harland 2003; cf. the community rules of the Pastoral Epistles). The public synagogue was a key institution for Jesus within which he was educated and socialized into Jewish society, and it also served as a platform from which he and his followers launched an eschatological vision for a radical transformation of that same society.

See also ELDERS; JUDAISM, COMMON; PHARISEES; SABBATH; SCRIBES; TEMPLE.

BIBLIOGRAPHY. J. Bernier, Aposynagōgos and the Historical Jesus in John: Rethinking the Historicity of the Johannine Expulsion Passages (Leiden: Brill, 2013); D. D. Binder, Into the Temple Courts: The Place of the Synagogue in the Second Temple Period (SBLDS 169; Atlanta: Society of Biblical Literature, 1999); S. K. Catto, Reconstructing the First-Century Synagogue: A Critical Analysis of Current Research (LNTS 363; London: T & T Clark, 2007); B. Chilton, Rabbi Jesus: An Intimate Biography (New York: Doubleday, 2000); S. J. D. Cohen, "Where Pharisees and Rabbis the Leaders of Communal Prayer and Torah Study in Antiquity? The Evidence of the New Testament, Josephus, and the Early Church Fathers," in Evolution of the Synagogue: Problems and Progress, ed. H. C. Kee (Harrisburg, PA: Trinity Press International, 1999) 89–105; J. D. G. Dunn, "Did Jesus Attend the Synagogue?" in Jesus and Archaeology, ed. J. H. Charlesworth (Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 2006) 206–22; C. F. Evans, Saint Luke (TPINTC; Philadelphia: Trinity Press International, 1990); S. Fine, This Holy Place: On the Sanctity of the Synagogue during the Greco-Roman Period (CJA 11; Notre Dame, IN: University of Notre Dame Press, 1997); J. A. Fitzmyer, The Gospel According to Luke X-XXIV: Introduction, Translation, and Notes (AB 28A; New York: Doubleday, 1985); S. Freyne, Jesus, a Jewish Galilean: A New Reading of the Jesus-Story (London: T & T Clark, 2004); idem, "Archaeology and the Historical Jesus," in Jesus and Archaeology, ed. J. H. Charlesworth (Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 2006) 64–83; S. Haber, "They Shall Purify Themselves": Essays on Purity in Early Judaism, ed. A. Reinhartz (SBLEJL 24; Atlanta: Society of Biblical Literature, 2008); P. Harland, Associations, Synagogues, and Congregations: Claiming a Place in Ancient Mediterranean Society (Minneapolis: Fortress, 2003); H. C. Kee, "The Transformation of the Synagogue after 70 C.E.: Its Importance for Early Christianity," NTS 36 (1990): 1–24; M. Klinghardt, "The Manual of Discipline in the Light of Statutes of Hellenistic Associations," in Methods of

Investigation of the Dead Sea Scrolls and the Khirbet Qumran Site: Present Realities and Future Prospects (New York: New York Academy of Sciences, 1994) 251–67; L. I. Levine, The Ancient Synagogue: The First Thousand Years (2nd ed.; New Haven, CT: Yale University Press, 2005); B. Olsson, "All My Teaching Was Done in Synagogues . . ." (John 18,20)," in Theology and Christology in the Fourth Gospel: Essays by the Members of the SNTS Johannine Writings Seminar, ed. G. van Belle, J. G. van der Watt and P. Maritz (BETL 184; Leuven: Leuven University Press, 2005) 203–24; B. Olsson and M. Zetterholm, eds., The Ancient Synagogue: From Its Origins Until 200 C.E.; Papers Presented at an International Conference at Lund University, October 14–17, 2001 (ConBNT 39; Stockholm: Almqvist & Wiksell, 2003); A. J. Overman, Matthew's Gospel and Formative Judaism: The Social World of the Matthean Community (Minneapolis: Fortress, 1990); R. Pummer, "Samaritan Synagogues and Jewish Synagogues: Similarities and Differences," in Jews, Christians, and Polytheists in the Ancient Synagogue: Cultural Interaction During the Greco-Roman Period, ed. S. Fine (New York: Routledge, 1999) 105–42; J. L. Reed, Archaeology and the Galilean Jesus: A Re-examination of the Evidence (Harrisburg, PA: Trinity Press International, 2000); P. Richardson, Building Jewish in the Roman East (Waco, TX: Baylor University Press, 2004); A. Runesson, The Origins of the Synagogue: A Socio-Historical Study (ConBNT 37; Stockholm: Almqvist & Wiksell, 2001); idem, "Architecture, Conflict, and Identity Formation: Jews and Christians in Capernaum From the 1st to the 6th Century," in Religion, Ethnicity and Identity in Ancient Galilee: A Region in Transition, ed. J. Zangenberg, H. W. Attridge and D. Martin (WUNT 210; Tübingen: Mohr Siebeck, 2007) 231–57; idem, "Rethinking Early Jewish-Christian Relations: Matthean Community History as Pharisaic Intragroup Conflict," JBL 127 (2008) 95–132; idem, "Building Matthean Communities: The Politics of Textualization," in Mark and Matthew I: Comparative Readings; Understanding the Earliest Gospels in Their First-Century Settings, ed. E.-M. Becker and A. Runesson (WUNT 271; Tübingen: Mohr Siebeck, 2011) 379–408; A. Runesson, D. D. Binder and B. Olsson, The Ancient Synagogue from Its Origins to 200 C.E.: A Source Book (AJEC 72; Leiden: E. J. Brill, 2008); A. J. Saldarini, "The Gospel of Matthew and Jewish-Christian Conflict," in The Galilee in Late Antiquity, ed. Lee I. Levine (New York: Jewish Theological Seminary of America, 1992) 23–38; idem, Pharisees, Scribes, and Sadducees in Palestinian Society: A Sociological Approach (Grand Rapids: Eerdmans 2001); T. Spawforth, The Complete Greek Temples (London: Thames & Hudson, 2006); J. F. Strange, "Archaeology and Ancient Synagogues up to About 200 C.E.," in The Ancient Synagogue: From Its Origins Until 200 C.E.; Papers Presented at an International Conference at Lund University, October 14-17, 2001 (ConBNT 39; Stockholm: Almqvist & Wiksell, 2003) 37-62; G. Theissen and A. Merz, The Historical Jesus: A Comprehensive Guide (Minneapolis: Fortress, 1998); G. Twelftree, "Jesus and the Synagogue," in Handbook for the Study of the Historical Jesus, 4: Individual Studies, ed. T. Holmén and S. E. Porter (Leiden: E. J. Brill, 2011) 3105-34; D. Urman and P. V. M. Flesher, eds., Ancient Synagogues: Historical Analysis and Archaeological Discovery (2 vols.; StPB 47; Leiden: E. J. Brill, 1995); H. van de Sandt and J. Zangenberg, eds., Matthew, James, and Didache: Three Related Documents in Their Jewish and Christian Settings (SBLSymS 45; Atlanta: Society of Biblical Literature, 2008); M. Weinfeld, The Organizational Pattern and the Penal Code of the Qumran Sect: A Comparison with Guilds and Religious Associations of the Hellenistic-Roman Period (NTOA 2; Göttingen: Vandenhoeck & Ruprecht, 1986).

A. Runesson

SYNOPTIC PROBLEM

The Synoptic Problem deals with the interrelationship of the Synoptic Gospels (*Matthew, *Mark, *Luke) and addresses a foundational question: What is the best explanation for the textual similarities and differences between Matthew, Mark, and Luke? Based on the Synoptic evidence, this question can be split into a number of subquestions, which can be formulated on the basis of the most commonly accepted solution, the two-source hypothesis (see 2.6 below).

1. The Synoptic Evidence
2. The Proposed Explanations
3. Insights from Cognitive Psychology
4. Conclusion

1. The Synoptic Evidence.

1.1. Similarities and Differences in Content.

1.1.1. The Synoptic Parallel Traditions. The "triple tradition" (TT) refers to material shared by all three Synoptic Gospels. There are also three different kinds of "double tradition" (DT), in which only two of the three Synoptic Gospels overlap. Taken together, the triple tradition and the double tradition of two Synoptic Gospels may be called their "common material" (CM). In addition, each of the Synoptic Gospels has its own special material (Sondergut) that is without parallel in the two other books. The triple tradition amounts to approximately three-fourths of Mark's Gospel and one-third of the Gospels of Matthew and Luke respectively. The most important double tradition contains the sections where only Matthew and Luke run parallel to each other. It amounts to approximately one-fifth of these Gospels.

1.1.2. The Detailed Nature of Mark. Although the Gospel of Mark is overall much shorter than the Gospels of Matthew and Luke, Mark's single pericopes usually are longer than the parallel pericopes offered by Matthew and Luke. In the material that Mark has in common with Matthew, Mark's text is about 2,000 words longer. In the material that Mark has in common with Luke, Luke's text is about 1,500 words shorter. As a rule, Mark's reports about the same incidents are more detailed than the accounts offered by Matthew and Luke.

1.2. Similarities and Differences in Order. The order of sentences, pericopes and words in the common material of the Synoptic Gospels is generally identical. This, however, is not the case with the double tradition of Matthew and Luke. Only about two-fifths (40%) of the pericopes that only Matthew and Luke have in common are presented in the same order.

1.3. Similarities and Differences in Wording.

1.3.1. The Average Verbal Agreement. While the content of the common material of the Synoptic Gospels is very similar, the average verbal agreement between the Synoptic parallel texts amounts to only 40-50%. While the common material of Matthew and Mark amounts to about 8,600 words for Matthew or 10,500 words for Mark, only about 4,200 words of their common material are identical—that is, 50% for Matthew and 40% for Mark (see fig. 1).

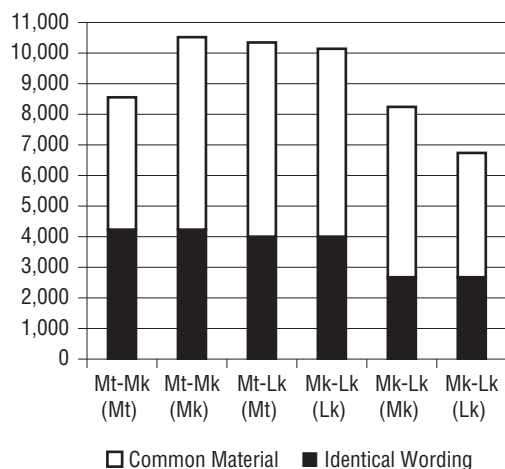

Figure 1. Verbal agreement between two Synoptic Gospels at a time (in words)

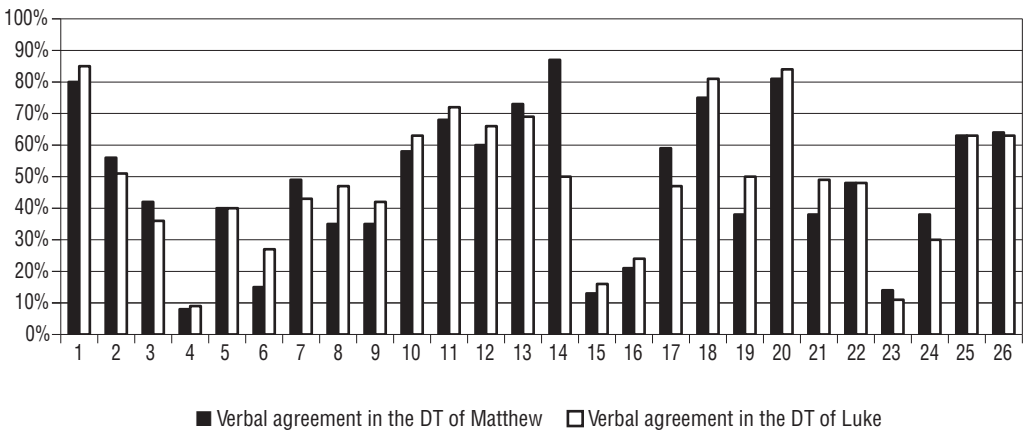

Figure 2. Verbal agreement in the double tradition of Matthew and Luke (Q material)

At the same time, the stylistic improvements of Matthew and Luke over Mark's Gospel are very moderate and far from consistent. As a result, many of the differences between the Synoptic Gospels are unrelated either to content or to style. If Mark was written first, and if Matthew and Luke changed the content and improved the style of their written sources only slightly, what caused them to revise about 50% of their wording?

1.3.2. The Inconsistency of the Verbal Agreement. The amount of verbal agreement in the different parallel pericopes varies dramatically. The figures for verbal agreement in the parallel pericopes average around 40-50%. In some parallel texts only 10% or 20% of the wording is identical, while in other Synoptic pericopes the verbal agreement amounts to 80% or even 90%. This is particularly evident in the double tradition of Matthew and Luke (see fig. 2).

If, therefore, Matthew and Luke copied a written source, why did they not paraphrase their source text more consistently? What motivated them to change their rewriting style from pericope to pericope?

1.3.3. The Above-Average Verbal Agreement in the Words of Jesus. The average verbal agreement in the common material of Matthew and Mark is 49% (in relation to Matthew). Yet whereas Mark verbally agrees with Matthew only 43% of the time in narrative material, the verbal agreement in the speech material amounts to 59%. If calculated in relation to Mark, the figures are 50% for the verbal agreement in the speech material in contrast to 34% for the verbal agreement in the narrative material. The results for the verbal agreement between Mark and Luke are similar. If Matthew and Luke copied a written source, why did they not copy the text of their written source more consistently? In addition, why did they not copy the wording of the statements of Jesus by more than 40-60% (see fig. 3)?

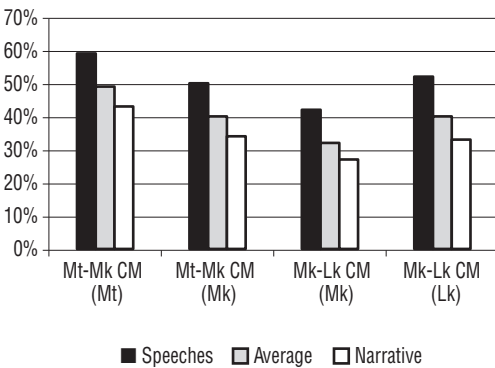

Figure 3. Verbal agreement in the common Synoptic speech material

1.3.4. The Minor Agreements. In the triple tradition Matthew and Luke share about 1,850 words with each other and with Mark (the triple agreements). At the same time, Matthew and Luke have in common against Mark nearly 650 words (the so-called minor agreements). If Matthew and Luke copied Mark's Gospel independently of each other, why do they agree verbally against his text in more than 600 words?

2. The Proposed Explanations.

The explanations of the Synoptic evidence can be divided into two major groups. The explanations in the first group suppose that the Synoptic Gospels can independently from each other be derived from a common source (2.1-2.3 below). The explanations in the second group assume that the Synoptic Gospels are literarily dependent on each other (2.4-2.7 below).

2.1. The Hypothesis of a Written Ur-Gospel.

2.1.1. Lessing. According to G. E. Lessing's Neue Hypothese über die Evangelisten als blos menschliche Geschichtschreiber betrachtet (1878), the Jewish Christians of Palestine (the "Nazarenes") must have possessed a written Ur-Gospel in Hebrew already in the 30s of the first century. In this Hebrew Ur-Gospel an unknown author had recorded the oral reports of apostolic and nonapostolic eyewitnesses about the words and deeds of Jesus. Since the many copyists of this Ur-Gospel freely shortened, expanded and changed their source text, it circulated in many different versions. According to Papias, Matthew was the first who translated the Hebrew Ur-Gospel into Greek, probably when the Gentile mission began. Moreover, as Luke's prologue indicates, the other two Synoptic Gospels were Greek translations of the same Hebrew Ur-Gospel. Therefore, Matthew, Mark and Luke are nothing but similar and dissimilar translations of the so-called Hebrew document of Matthew (Lessing, §50).

2.1.2. Eichhorn. Similarly, J. G. Eichhorn, in his Einleitung in das Neue Testament (1804), assumed that when the gospel crossed the borders of Palestine, the disciples of the apostles needed a written basis for their preaching activity. Such an Aramaic document would have contained in condensed format the main events of the life of Christ between his *baptism and his *ascension. As a comparison of the Synoptic Gospels reveals, these stories constitute the triple tradition. Eichhorn reconstructed the Ur-Gospel over more than one hundred pages of his book. This Aramaic Ur-Gospel was soon translated into Greek. Our Synoptic Gospels display a complex blend of agreements and differences because independently of each other they made use of this Greek Ur-Gospel. Therefore, "the Chaldean-Syrian Ur-Gospel was received in different versions into the three first catholic Gospels and survived in them in three different translations" (Eichhorn, 179 [my translation]) (see fig. 4).

2.1.3. A Traditional Narrative Framework. S. Hultgren argues that before the canonical Gospels were written, there existed a common, coherent and primitive narrative framework of the life of Jesus. This (historically rather reliable) narrative framework was a common source of Matthew, Mark and Luke. "Matthew and Luke were not dependent primarily on Mark for their narrative framework but had independent access to the same framework on which Mark built" (Hultgren, 311). Matthew and Luke filled out this framework with additional material taken from the Gospel of Mark (Hultgren, 327-28). The double tradition of Matthew and Luke, with its narrative elements, does not go back to a sayings source *Q but rather to the same coherent narrative Gospel framework as the triple tradition (Hultgren, 310-25). In this context, Hultgren expresses sympathy for Lessing's Ur-Gospel hypothesis as well as for the oral-Gospel hypothesis (Hultgren, 340-51).

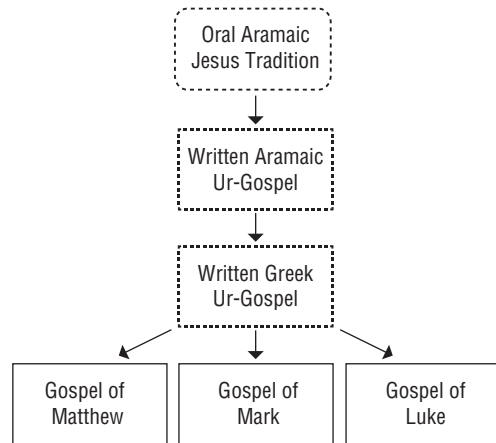

Figure 4. Eichhorn's written Ur-Gospel (dashed lines = hypothetical sources)

2.1.4. A Written Ur-Gospel and Markan Priority. On the basis of a thorough analysis of the Semitic elements contained in the Greek text of the Synoptic Gospels, G. Baltes combines a modified Ur-Gospel hypothesis with Markan priority: Matthew, Mark and Luke used two presynoptic written sources (Proto-Matthew and Proto-Luke), which existed in Hebrew and Greek versions. Beyond that Matthew used Mark as a written source (Baltes, 592).

2.2. The Fragmentary Hypothesis.

2.2.1. Schleiermacher. F. D. E. Schleiermacher developed the fragmentary hypothesis in his book Ueber die Schriften des Lukas (1817), and he further developed it in his NT hermeneutic (1838) and in his NT introduction (1845). He assumed that the eyewitnesses of the life of Jesus began to write down their oral reports of single events from the life of Jesus early on. Only in a second step did they make collections of thematically or historically related reports. When Luke wrote his Gospel, he was "from beginning to end just a collector and arranger of already existent documents, which he used without changing them" (Schleiermacher 1817, 301 [my translation]). All three Synoptic Gospels draw from earlier oral and particularly written reports about the life of Christ and are not literary dependent on each other.

2.2.2. The French Multiple-Stage Hypothesis. In their Synopse des quatre Évangiles en français (1965–1972) M.-É. Boismard and A. Lamouille identified a large number of written sources, intermediate documents and pre-stages of the Synoptic Gospels that have been lost. Their model is very complex. Figure 5 is a simplification of their multiple-stage hypothesis.

2.2.3. A New Multiple-Stage Hypothesis. D. Burkett has presented “a new multiple source theory.” He assumes that none of the three Synoptic Gospels served as a source for either of the other two, but rather that “all three Synoptics drew on a set of earlier written sources that have been lost” (Burkett 2004, 1:5–6). Mark shared a Proto-Mark A with Matthew and a Proto-Mark B with Luke and additional source texts with either both of the other Gospel authors or only one of them (Burkett 2004, 224). The Q hypothesis (see 2.6 below) is indispensable. The inconsistency of the verbal agreement between Matthew and Luke in their parallel tradition is due to the fact that the evangelists also used parallels to Q from various overlapping sources (Burkett 2009, 2:213–14). According to Burkett, oral tradition did not play a major role in the development of the Synoptic Gospels.

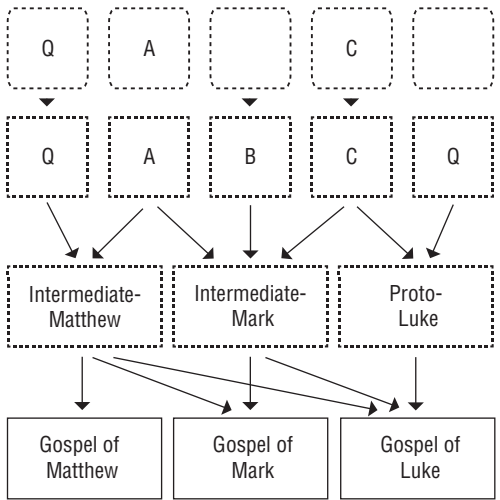

Figure 5. French multiple-stage hypothesis

2.3. The Hypothesis of an Oral Ur-Gospel (Oral-Tradition Hypothesis).

2.3.1. Gieseler. In 1818, J. C. L. Gieseler provided the first elaborate explanation of the oral-tradition hypothesis in his book Historisch-kritischer Versuch über die Entstehung und die frühesten Schicksale der schriftlichen Evangelien. His starting point was that the apostles preached the gospel orally and regarded the written recording as less important. By constant repetition of the same oral reports about Jesus in their teaching and preaching for many years, the apostles unintentionally created an oral Ur-Gospel. Because of its orality, this Aramaic Ur-Gospel was rather fixed in some parts and relatively fluid in others. For the Hellenistic church members in Jerusalem, the apostles produced an oral Greek translation of their oral Aramaic Ur-Gospel, the basis of the Synoptic Gospels. “The Gospel writers used the same oral source” (Gieseler, 82 [my translation]). Based on Luke’s prologue, Gieseler assumed that the authors of the Synoptic Gospels received the Greek oral Ur-Gospel not immediately from the apostles but rather from their disciples. Paul may have been Luke’s main source of information.

2.3.2. Westcott. Half a century later, B. F. Westcott adopted Gieseler’s hypothesis: The internal character of the Synoptic Gospels favors the belief that they arose from a common oral source (Westcott, 174–216). Since the church of Jerusalem was bilingual, the reports about the life of Jesus were available in Aramaic and in Greek from the beginning. The verbal agreement between the Synoptic Gospels is on average much lower than sometimes assumed, and it is particularly high in the speech material. Therefore, a literary dependence between Matthew, Mark and Luke is rather improbable, whereas the evidence can easily be explained as the natural result of oral transmission. Mark was the first to write down the oral Ur-Gospel, followed by Luke and finally by Matthew. Yet, independent of their date of composition, the later Gospels also may contain pieces of the tradition in their earliest available form (see fig. 6).

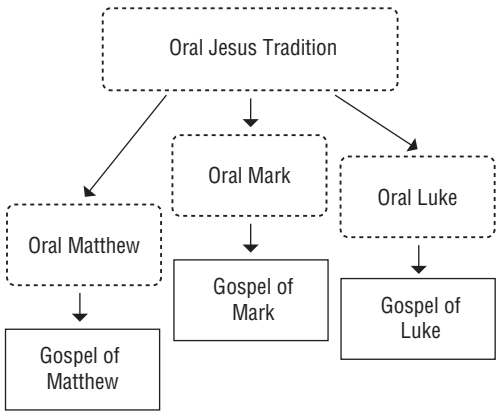

Figure 6. Westcott’s oral Ur-Gospel

2.3.3. Oral Tradition and Personal Contact. B. Reicke argues for a pure oral-tradition hypothesis. The internal evidence excludes a literary relationship between the Synoptic Gospels. Rather, the best explanation for the complex mix of agreements and differences between the Synoptic Gospels is their dependence on common oral traditions of the early church in conjunction with a variety of personal contacts between the evangelists as well as between their various informants (Reicke, 150-89).

2.3.4. Tradition Hypothesis and Two-Source Hypothesis. More recently, J. D. G. Dunn merged the oral-tradition hypothesis and the two-source hypothesis (Dunn, 173-254). Matthew and Luke copied sections of the Synoptic common material with a high verbal agreement from Mark and Q, whereas common sections with a low verbal agreement go back to a common oral tradition. While it is undeniable that often Matthew and Luke used Mark as a written source, in a good number of cases “the more natural explanation for the evidence is not Matthew’s or Luke’s literary dependence on Mark, but rather their own knowledge of oral retellings of the same stories (or, alternatively, their own oral retelling of the Markan stories)” (Dunn, 222). Dunn’s approach was adopted by R. McIver and by T. Mournet, particularly for Q (see 2.6.7 below).

2.3.5. Oral Tradition and Human Memory. A. Baum compares the Synoptic evidence of the NT with analogous Synoptic texts from ancient literature, oral poetry and cognitive psychology. On the basis of this comparison, he concludes that the most probable explanation for the low-average verbal agreement, its inconsistency, the above-average verbal agreement in the speech material, the poetic passages, and the OT quotations, as well as the minor agreements is a common oral source in different versions and the transmitting activity of human memory. (Written sources and literary dependence may have played a secondary role.)

2.3.6. Stemmatic Approach. K. Jaroš and U. Victor apply a stemmatic approach (which was developed by K. Lachmann for the reconstruction of the genetical relationship between manuscripts) to the Synoptic Problem. They observed that in some pericopes Matthew and Mark agree against Luke, in others Mark and Luke agree against Matthew, and so on. They conclude that three Synoptic Gospels must independently have used common sources that were probably oral (Jaroš and Victor, 13-22).

2.4. The Griesbach Hypothesis.

2.4.1. Griesbach. In 1789-1790, J. J. Griesbach published his Commentatio quae Marci Evangelium totum e Matthaei et Lucae commentariis decerptum esse. His answer to the Synoptic question was evident from his book’s title: “The whole Gospel of Mark was taken from the records of Matthew and Luke.” Griesbach’s explanation for the fact that Mark’s accounts are in many cases longer than the parallel accounts of Matthew and Luke was that Mark had supplemented his sources with reminiscences from his home in Jerusalem. (Griesbach regarded Papias’s statement that Mark depended on the teaching of the apostle Peter as a fabrication.) Further, Matthew’s Gospel had been the source not only for Mark but also for Luke, who had made use of additional eyewitness reports (see fig. 7).

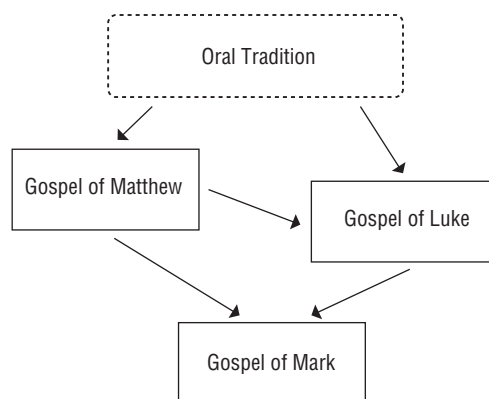

Figure 7. The Griesbach hypothesis

2.4.2. The Two-Gospel Hypothesis. In the second half of the twentieth century, W. Farmer, D. L. Dungan, B. Orchard and T. R. W. Longstaff renewed the Griesbach hypothesis. Farmer, who had been an adherent of the two-source hypothesis, changed allegiance and became a fervent defender of the Griesbach hypothesis. He called it the “two-Gospel hypothesis” in order to challenge the two-source hypothesis not only in terms of content but also in terms of terminology. Farmer claimed that the order of the pericopes and the minor agreements could best be explained by his two-Gospel hypothesis. That Mark had been written after Matthew and Luke was supported by the testimony of Clement from Alexandria. Moreover, Luke’s use of Matthew agreed with the claim of Luke’s prologue that he wanted to improve the order of an earlier “narrative” (Farmer 1964, 199-232). Farmer claimed that his answer to the Synoptic question “allows Christians a greater confidence as believing readers that the character and message of Jesus Christ has been faithfully transmitted to them” (Farmer 1994, 189).

2.5. The Hypothesis of Markan Priority (Without Q).

2.5.1. Wilke. In 1838, C. Wilke developed the thesis that “Mark is the Ur-Gospel. His book forms the basis of the other two Gospels by Matthew and Luke. Mark is not the copy of an oral Ur-Gospel but is rather an artificial composition” (Wilke, 656 [my translation]). The double tradition of Matthew and Luke is the result of Matthew’s use of Luke (Wilke, 685-92). Wilke explicitly excluded the possibility that human memory had played a part in the handling of Mark’s material by Matthew and Luke (Wilke, 692-93).

2.5.2. Markan Priority and Luke’s Use of Matthew. M. Goulder accepted Luke’s dependence on Mark but rejected the hypothetical source Q and therefore the two-source hypothesis. He regarded Q as “the grandfather of all Synoptic errors” (Goulder, 1:27). Goulder assumed that Matthew used Mark as his main source but created his Q and his special material more or less freely. Luke took his Synoptic material from Mark and Matthew and created his own special material as well (see fig. 8).

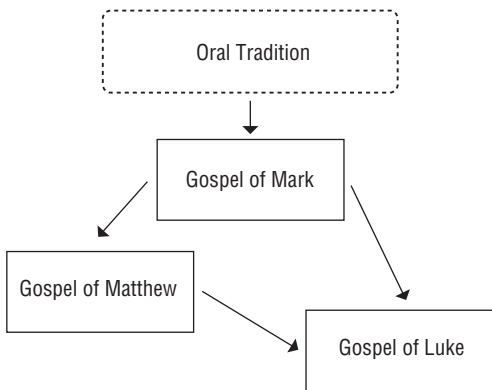

Figure 8. Goulder’s hypothesis

M. Goodacre followed in Goulder’s steps and developed his solution further. According to his model, oral tradition was a rather influential factor. Oral traditions of the Jesus story did not die out as soon as each evangelist committed them to writing. Luke did not merely copy his triple and his double tradition from Mark and Matthew, but drew from oral sources as well. He rewrote his written source texts “in line with the versions more familiar to him from frequent recitation in his own tradition” (Goodacre, 64). Accordingly, Luke mentions both written and oral sources in his prologue. Goodacre insists further that the literary priority of a Gospel and the relative age of a piece of tradition must not be confused (Goodacre, 64-66).

2.5.3. Markan Priority and the Hebrew Gospel. According to J. Edwards, the many and widespread witnesses to a Hebrew Gospel must not be dismissed. Patristic quotations (Edwards, 112-18) and the high number of Semitisms in the special material of Luke (Edwards, 125-48) suggest that the Hebrew Gospel was the primary source for special Luke. Therefore, the Hebrew Gospel would have been one of the eyewitness sources mentioned in Luke’s prologue. Mark was only a secondary source of Luke’s Gospel. Whether the double tradition of Matthew and Luke derives from the Hebrew Gospel, or from a common source of Matthew, Mark and Luke, or from a common source of Matthew and Luke (similar to Q) is impossible to decide (Edwards, 233-40).

2.6. The Two-Source Hypothesis (Markan Priority with Q).

In an article written in 1832, Schleiermacher developed a new interpretation of Papias’s statement about Matthew: Papias spoke not about the canonical Gospel of Matthew, but rather about a source of the first Gospel, an Aramaic sayings collection assembled by the apostle Matthew. According to Schleiermacher, Luke made no use of this newly discovered source.

2.6.1. Weisse. C. Weisse’s main contribution to the solution of the Synoptic Problem was his combination of Markan priority with Schleiermacher’s hypothesis of a sayings collection (Q). In 1838 Weisse suggested that both Matthew and Luke had used Mark independently from each other as their first source and the Greek or Aramaic sayings collection (Q) as their second source. “Not just Mark is their common source but, according to our firmest conviction, also the sayings collection of Matthew” (Weisse, 1:83 [my translation]) (see fig. 9).

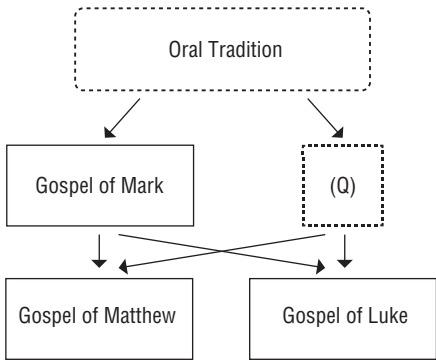

Figure 9. Two-source hypothesis

2.6.2. Holtzmann and Streeter. The two-source hypothesis was made popular by H. Holtzmann in his book Die synoptischen Evangelien (1863). As an explanation for the minor agreements between Matthew and Luke against Mark, Holtzmann postulated a Proto-Mark as the common source of Matthew and Luke. According to Holtzmann, one piece of evidence that speaks for the two-source hypothesis is its simplicity (Holtzmann, 169). Some sixty years later, B. H. Streeter, in his book The Four Gospels (1924), made the two-source hypothesis popular in the English-speaking world. While Streeter refrained from Proto-Mark, he introduced a Proto-Luke.

2.6.3. Harnack. In 1907 A. von Harnack reconstructed the sayings source Q (Harnack, 175-88). In his judgment, Q was originally written in Palestine in Aramaic. Due to the statement of Papias, the author of Q probably was Matthew. Since Q is free from Paulinisms, it is older than Mark. Q indicates that the teaching of Jesus was less apocalyptic and eschatological and more religiously and morally oriented. The sayings source guarantees that the knowledge of God as well as repentance and faith had been the essence of Jesus' message (Harnack, 170-74). Thus, the priority of Q supported the liberal interpretation of Jesus, with its focus on the unfolding of the kingdom of God in believers' hearts.

2.6.4. Deutero-Mark. Since 1971, A. Fuchs has developed a revision of the two-source hypothesis, and since then he has constantly repeated and improved his arguments, most recently in Defizite der Zweiquellentheorie (2009). His model includes not only a second sayings source, but also a Deutero-Mark. This hypothetical source, which is needed to explain the minor agreements, was a second and improved edition of the canonical Mark (Fuchs, 7-9).

2.6.5. Additional Written Sources Alongside Q. T. Bergemann uses the degree of verbal agreement in the double tradition of Matthew and Luke as the main criterion for his reconstruction of Q (Bergemann, 61-73). Pericopes with a low verbal agreement that cannot be explained by the redactional tendencies of Matthew and Luke (such as Lk 6:20b-49 and its Matthean parallels with a verbal agreement of only about 30%) may not be regarded as parts of the written sayings source Q. These sections should be ascribed to a distinct written source that originally was written in Aramaic and was used by Matthew and Luke in different versions (Bergemann, 229-36).

2.6.6. The International Q Project. In recent years, the International Q Project (IQP) has reconstructed the content, order and words of a written sayings source Q. In 2000 J. Kloppenborg, codirector of the IQP, published an important book, Excavating Q. The reconstructed text of Q contains about 260 verses, or 4,500 words. The relevant arguments from the scholarly literature since 1838 are collected in the series Documenta Q (published by Peeters). (1) The content of Q is reconstructed on the basis of the parallel tradition of Matthew and Luke. Sections from the triple tradition where Matthew and Luke together differ strongly from Mark are also taken into account. Thus, Matthew (Mt 4:1-11) and Luke (Lk 4:1-13) appear to have merged a Markan version of the temptation story (Mk 1:12-13) with a lost version of the temptation from the sayings source (Q 4:1-13). (2) Based on the assumption that the original order of the material has been better preserved in Luke's Gospel, the Q texts are quoted according to the Lukan verse numbers (e.g., Mt 5:3 // Lk 6:20b is called "Q 6:20b"). (3) Since Matthew and Luke agree in about 50% of the wording of their double tradition, the IQP had to recover the other 50% of Q's wording. The scholars who were involved classified their suggestions for the original wording of Q with the labels {A}, {B}, {C}, {D}. In addition, they put less probable reconstructions of the text in brackets, thus: ([and])). At least some of the IQP scholars are very skeptical about the historical value of Q. Whereas Harnack thought that Q provided access to the historical Jesus, Kloppenborg believes that "Q, once reconstructed, provides only a perspectival glimpse on the Jesus tradition treasured and transmitted by a particular group of Galilean followers" (Kloppenborg, 343-52). These followers knew and developed a Jesus tradition that did not find it necessary to account for his death (and resurrection) in soteriological terms (Kloppenborg, 363-79).

2.6.7. Q as Written and Oral Tradition. According to T. Mournet, "It is difficult to envisage a strictly editorial compositional situation where an isolated author would be able to collect the various manuscripts of 'Jesus traditions,' sit down at a large work area, open up the various codices and scrolls containing source material, and work without the benefit and input of oral tradition" (Mournet, 148). Mournet does not abandon the two-source hypothesis and assumes that Q was a written document. On the other hand, he is convinced that Matthew and Luke did not copy all their common material from Q, but rather took some of it from a common oral source.

2.7. The Three-Source Hypothesis.

2.7.1. Morgenthaler. On the basis of his comprehensive survey of the Synoptic evidence, R. Morgenthaler arrives at a three-source hypothesis. This is a two-source hypothesis plus an additional source of Luke's Gospel: when Luke wrote his book, his primary sources were Mark and Q, but at times he also took Matthew's Gospel into account. The dependence of Luke on Matthew explains the minor agreements (Morgenthaler, 301).

2.7.2. Hengel. M. Hengel concludes that, apart from the priority of Mark (and Mark's dependence on Peter), the Synoptic Problem "seems to be insoluble" (Hengel, 185). Hengel does not dispute the existence of Q per se, but merely the possibility of reconstructing it, and he assumes that Matthew also used Luke. In cases of word-for-word agreement, the later Matthew used the earlier Luke, whereas in cases of great differences in wording, Matthew and Luke used common logia sources. Thus, Matthew used three main sources: Mark, Luke and several sayings sources (Hengel, 169-207).

2.8. Conclusion. Irrespective of the many different opinions about chronological order and the mutual relationships among the Synoptic Gospels, there exists a broad variety of views about the relative amount of literary dependence and oral tradition involved in the composition of the Gospels. The explanation of the Synoptic evidence in terms of a more or less exclusively literary dependence is widespread (cf. Wilke; Farmer; Goulder; Burkett) but contested. A second approach combines literary dependence with the influence of oral tradition and/or human memory and appears in two variants. Some parts of the Synoptic parallels are explained by literary dependence, while other parallel sections are explained as the result of oral tradition (Dunn; Mournet). Alternatively, one ascribes the Synoptic parallels to a concurrence of literary dependence and human memory activity (Goodacre). Third, a clear alternative to the theory of literary dependence is the oral-tradition hypothesis originally put forward by Westcott (Reicke; Baum).

3. Insights from Cognitive Psychology.

Cognitive psychologists have done much research that is relevant for the interpretation of texts that are rooted in oral tradition (note especially the seminal work of F. Bartlett [1932], the volume edited by U. Neisser [1982] and the comprehensive books by D. Rubin [1995] and J. Small [1997]). A number of their observations support the hypothesis that oral tradition and human memory were the major (or at least important) factors in the production of the Synoptic Gospels.

3.1. The Capacity of Human Memory. The Synoptic tradition as a whole contains about 30,000 words. The Synoptic speeches of Jesus amount to about 15,000 words. The Gospel of Mark is about 11,000 words long. In the ancient Jewish world it was not an extraordinary achievement to learn such a large number of words by heart. The rabbis knew not only their sacred Scriptures (containing about 300,000 words) by heart, but also substantial parts of the oral Torah. It has been proven experimentally that some modern Jewish scholars committed the Babylonian Talmud (with its nearly two million words) to memory word by word. It is admittedly very improbable that the disciples of Jesus, who had not received any formal theological training, were able to memorize such large blocks of text. According to the NT, however, Jesus taught and trained his disciples for a period of two or three years (see Teacher). In that period of time, an average Jew certainly would have been able to commit all the Synoptic words of Jesus to memory, or at least a considerable part of them. In the cultural setting of first-century A.D. Palestine it would not have been an exceptional feat to reproduce the content of the Gospel of Mark by heart (Baum, 162-79).

3.2. The Tendency to Abbreviation. Psychological experiments have demonstrated that human memory is inclined to shorten the remembered material. This throws light on the observation that usually Mark's version of the common Synoptic material is longer than Luke's and Matthew's versions (see 1.1.2 above). Experimental research supports Markan priority, although not necessarily in the sense of literary dependence (Baum, 244-54).

3.3. The Effect of Motivation. As can be shown from cognitive psychology, human memory usually stores material that it regards as very important much better than material that it regards as less important (Baum, 185-88). If the disciples of Jesus showed a particularly high respect for the words of their master, they may have committed their teacher's own statements more exactly to memory than the stories of others about him. This difference is still detectable in the written versions of the New Testament synoptic pericopes in question with their above-average verbal agreement in the words of Jesus (see 1.3.3 above).

4. Conclusion.

As the long history of research demonstrates, it is not impossible to explain the Synoptic evidence of the NT as the exclusive result of a literal copying process. An approach that takes the results of experimental cognitive psychology into account leads to a more natural explanation: while Markan priority can be confirmed, Matthew, Mark and Luke may have used an oral Ur-Gospel as their main source. Therefore, in the Synoptic Gospels the traces of memory activity are ubiquitous. (Correspondingly, the results of cognitive memory research might also be relevant for the interpretation of parallel texts from rabbinic literature.) Further research on the relevance of the results offered by cognitive psychology for the Synoptic Problem would be very welcome.

See also GOSPEL: GENRE; LUKE, GOSPEL OF; MARK, GOSPEL OF; MATTHEW, GOSPEL OF; ORALITY AND ORAL TRANSMISSION; Q; SYNOPTICS AND JOHN.

BIBLIOGRAPHY. G. Baltes, Hebräisches Evangelium und synoptische Überlieferung: Untersuchung zum hebräischen Hintergrund der Evangelien (WUNT 2/312; Tübingen: Mohr, 2011); F. C. Bartlett, Remembering: A Study in Experimental and Social Psychology (Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 1932); A. D. Baum, Der mündliche Faktor und die synoptische Frage: Analogien aus der antiken Literatur, der Experimentalpsychologie, der Oral Poetry-Forschung und dem rabbinischen Traditionswesen (TANZ 49; Tübingen: Francke, 2008); T. Bergemann, Q auf dem Prüfstand: Die Zuordnung des Mt/Lk-Stoffes zu Q am Beispiel der Bergpredigt (FRLANT 158; Göttingen: Vandenhoeck & Ruprecht, 1993); D. Burkett, Rethinking the Gospel Sources, 1: From Proto-Mark to Mark (New York: T & T Clark, 2004); idem, Rethinking the Gospel Sources, 2: The Unity or Plurality of Q (SBLECL 1; Atlanta: Society of Biblical Literature, 2009); S. J. D. Cohen, ed., The Synoptic Problem in Rabbinic Literature (BJS 326; Providence: Brown University Press, 2000); R. A. Derrenbacher, Ancient Compositional Practices and the Synoptic Problem (BETL 186; Leuven: Leuven University Press, 2005); F. G. Downing, "Redaction Criticism: Josephus' Antiquities and the Synoptic Gospels," in New Testament Interpretation and Methods, ed. S. E. Porter et al. (BibSem 45; Sheffield: Sheffield Academic Press, 1997) 161-99; J. D. G. Dunn, Jesus Remembered (Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 2003); J. R. Edwards, The Hebrew Gospel and the Development of the Synoptic Tradition (Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 2009); J. G. Eichhorn, Einleitung in das Neue Testament (vol. 1; Leipzig: Weidmann, 1804); W. R. Farmer, The Synoptic Problem: A Critical Analysis (New York: Macmillan, 1964); idem, The Gospel of Jesus: The Pastoral Relevance of the Synoptic Problem (Louisville: Westminster John Knox, 1994); A. Fuchs, Defizite der Zweiquellentheorie (Frankfurt: Lang, 2009); J. C. L. Gieseler, Historisch-kritischer Versuch über die Entstehung und die frühesten Schicksale der schriftlichen Evangelien (Leipzig: Engelmann, 1818); M. Goodacre, The Case Against Q:

Studies in Markan Priority and the Synoptic Problem (Harrisburg, PA: Trinity Press International, 2002); M. D. Goulder, Luke: A New Paradigm (2 vols.; JSNTSup 20; Sheffield: JSOT Press, 1989); M. Hengel, The Four Gospels and the One Gospel of Jesus Christ: An Investigation of the Collection and Origin of the Canonical Gospels (Harrisburg, PA: Trinity Press International, 2000); H. J. Holtzmann, Die synoptischen Evangelien: Ihr Ursprung und geschichtlicher Charakter (Leipzig: Engelmann, 1863); S. Hultgren, Narrative Elements in the Double Tradition: A Study of Their Place Within the Framework of the Gospel Narratives (BZNW 113; Berlin: de Gruyter, 2002); K. Jaroš and U. Victor, Die synoptische Tradition: Die literarischen Beziehungen der drei ersten Evangelien und ihre Quellen (Köln: Böhlau, 2010); J. S. Kloppenborg, Excavating Q: The History and Setting of the Sayings Gospel (Minneapolis: Fortress, 2000); G. E. Lessing, "Neue Hypothese über die Evangelisten als bloß menschliche Geschichtschreiber betrachtet" (1778), in Theologiekritische Schriften I und II (Gotthold Ephraim Lessing, Werke 7; ed. H. G. Göpfert; München: Hanser, 1976), 614-36; R. K. McIver and M. Carroll, "Experiments to Develop Criteria for Determining the Existence of Written Sources, and Their Potential Implications for the Synoptic Problem," JBL 121 (2002) 667-87; R. Morgenthaler, Statistische Synopse (Zürich: Gotthelf-Verlag, 1971); T. C. Mournet, Oral Tradition and Literary Dependency: Variability and Stability in the Synoptic Tradition and Q (WUNT 2/195; Tübingen: Mohr Siebeck, 2005); U. Neisser, ed., Memory Observed: Remembering in Natural Contexts (San Francisco: Freeman, 1982); B. Reicke, The Roots of the Synoptic Gospels (Philadelphia: Fortress, 1986); D. C. Rubin, Memory and Oral Tradition: The Cognitive Psychology of Epic, Ballads, and Counting-out Rhymes (Oxford: Oxford University Press, 1995); F. D. E. Schleiermacher, Ueber die Schriften des Lukas, ein kritischer Versuch: Erster Theil (Berlin: Reimer, 1817); J. P. Small, Wax Tablets of the Mind: Cognitive Studies of Memory and Literacy in Classical Antiquity (London: Routledge, 1997); A. von Harnack, Sprüche und Reden Jesu: Die zweite Quelle des Matthäus und Lukas (Leipzig: Hinrichs, 1907); C. H. Weisse, Die evangelische Geschichte kritisch und philosophisch bearbeitet (2 vols.; Leipzig: Breitkopf & Härtel, 1838); B. F. Westcott, Introduction to the Study of the Gospels (London: Macmillan, 1881); C. G. Wilke, Der Urevangelist oder exegetisch kritische Untersuchung über das Verwandtschafts-verhältniss der drei ersten Evangelien (Dresden: Fleischer, 1838).

A. D. Baum

SYNOPTICS AND JOHN

The relationship between the Gospel of John and the Synoptic Gospels has been discussed since the second century. In the course of study, three major areas have been considered: (1) historical differences between John and the Synoptics in their respective accounts of Jesus' ministry; (2) theological and literary divergences about the nature and style Jesus' ministry; (3) the nature of the literary relationship between John and the Synoptics. These questions are important ones, as they determine the value of John as a source for the historical Jesus, they allow us to see the literary and theological texture of John in its own right, and we can gauge the compatibility of the message of John with the message of the Synoptics as witnesses to the one *gospel of Jesus Christ.

1. Historical Differences
2. Theological Differences
3. Literary Relationship
4. Commonalities

1. Historical Differences.

John exhibits several features that appear to diverge from accounts in the Synoptic accounts concerning key events in Jesus' ministry.

1.1. Beginning and Duration of Jesus' Ministry.

While the Synoptic Gospels present the beginning of Jesus' ministry as subsequent to the arrest of *John the Baptist and place it in *Galilee (Mt 4:12; Mk 1:14; Lk 3:20), in the Fourth Gospel Jesus' ministry overlaps for a time with that of John the Baptist, Jesus' circle even competes with John for adherents, and it begins in Judea (Jn 1:28-37; 3:23-36; 4:1-2). Also, the actual length of Jesus' ministry in the Synoptic Gospels is never clearly stated, and it is possible to fit the whole sequence into a one-year period with a single visit to *Jerusalem. In contrast, John presumably makes reference to three different Passovers (Jn 2:13; 6:4; 12:1), implying that Jesus' ministry could have lasted for three years.

1.2. Jesus' Visits to Jerusalem. The Synoptic Gospels recount Jesus ministering in Galilee and Judea and then making a final and dramatic visit to Jerusalem that climaxed in his arrest and execution in the city (though Luke's Gospel recounts Jesus being dedicated in Jerusalem and visiting the city as a young child [Lk 2:22-52]). In contrast, in the Fourth Gospel Jesus spends most of his time in Judea and Jerusalem and spends relatively little time in Galilee (Jn 2:1-11; 4:43-54; 6:1; 7:1-9) and Samaria (Jn 4:1-42). Jesus attends several *feasts in Jerusalem, including Passover (Jn 2:13; 12-19), Pentecost (Jn 5), Tabernacles (Jn 7-8) and Dedication (Jn 10). Jesus' ministry in Jerusalem provides the occasion for several "signs," discourses about the nature of his relationship to the Father that define his messianic role, and teaching about the importance of faith as what God demands of his people. It is during this period in Jerusalem that John describes the mounting opposition of the Judean leadership against Jesus.

1.3. Chronology of Individual Events. John and the Synoptics sometimes present a different ordering of events, not least in connection with the *temple action and the *Last Supper (see Chronology). The temple action in the Synoptics occurs at the end of Jesus' ministry (Mt 21:12-13; Mk 11:15-18; Lk 19:45-46), whereas in John it appears at the beginning of his ministry (Jn 2:1-12). Origen noted the clear chronological discrepancy and commented, "I conceive it to be impossible for those who admit nothing more than the history in their interpretation to show that these discrepant statements are in harmony with each other" (Comm. Jo. 10.15). Origen's solution is to posit the Johannine account as a "spiritual" or "symbolic" message about how Jesus cleanses the church of love of possessions, and indicating how a time would come when the law would no longer be observed (Comm. Jo. 10.15). Several scholars infer from this that Jesus in fact demonstrated in the temple twice during his prophetic career (e.g., Carson, 177-78; Blomberg, 87-91). However, a dramatic and incendiary act such as the temple episode is more readily understandable as taking place at the climax of Jesus' ministry and constitutes the provocative action that made the Judean leaders move against him. John probably has moved the story of the temple action to an earlier phase in Jesus' ministry in order to underscore Jesus as the performer of a messianic sign that intimates his resurrection and to identify him as the new, eschatological temple. Given that ancient biographies could be composed in thematic rather than chronological order, it is hardly a strange occurrence (see Gospel: Genre).

Another key difference is the date of the Last Supper. The Synoptics indicate that the final meal that Jesus had with his disciples was a Passover meal (Mt 26:17-19; Mk 14:12; Lk 22:15). Yet the Fourth Gospel stipulates that the meal took place on the eve of Passover (Jn 13:1; 18:28), and that Jesus died immediately prior to Passover (Jn 19:31). The Johannine account is supported by a Jewish tradition that Jesus was stoned and hanged on the eve of Passover (b. Sanh. 43a). What is more, it is possible that Jesus held a quasi-Passover meal with his disciples because he knew that he would not live long enough to see the next one. It has also been proposed that Jesus followed the Essenic calendar (a solar calendar rather than a lunar calendar), meaning that some Jews celebrated the Passover earlier than the Judean authorities. The gravity of this ordering was felt in the ancient church, where Asian Christians in the second century, who celebrated the Pascha, or Christian Passover, synchronized the remembrance of the passion with the Day of Preparation in the Jewish calendar, according to the chronology of John's Gospel (Eusebius, Hist. eccl. 5.24.16).

2. Theological Differences.

John possesses a distinctive theological and narrative quality that is naturally contrasted with the Synoptics.

2.1. Self-Conscious Divinity. The Synoptic Gospels clearly identify Jesus as a divine agent, someone sent by God, and at certain points the lines between the sender and the sent are blurred. For example, in Matthew's Gospel Jesus is called "Immanuel," meaning "God with us" (Mt 1:21), and at the very end all authority in heaven and earth is invested him (Mt 28:18), something that normally would be predicated of Israel's *God. However, the Fourth Gospel is the only place where Jesus is explicitly identified as the *incarnation of the God of Israel (Jn 1:1, 14; 8:58; 20:28), and he claims equality with God (Jn 5:18). Jesus' character in John is more aware of his preexistence and divine personhood than in the Synoptics (see Christology).

2.2. Eternal Life over Kingdom. Reference to God's *kingdom or the heavenly kingdom is ubiquitous in the Synoptic Gospels (e.g., Mk 1:15; Lk 4:43), while mention of "eternal life" is relatively infrequent (Mt 19:16 // Mk 10:17 // Lk 18:18 [cf. Lk 10:25]; Mt 19:29 // Mk 10:30 // Lk 18:30; Mt 25:46; see also Mt 18:8). In contrast, in John references to eternal life are abundant, but mention of the kingdom is limited to a few isolated instances (Jn 3:3, 5; 18:36). The terms "kingdom" and "eternal life" are used somewhat interchangeably at points in both Mark (Mk 10:15-17) and John (Jn 3:3-5, 15-16). While these terms conceptually overlap, nonetheless John chooses to focus on the personal and veridical experience of salvation.

2.3. Discourses over Parables. A common feature of Jesus' ministry according to the Synoptics is that he taught in *parables (e.g., Mk 4:34). Yet the word "parable" (parabolē) does not occur in John's Gospel. In places in the Fourth Gospel Jesus' teaching is parabolic and figurative (signified by the word paroimía [Jn 10:6; 16:25, 29]), but it lacks the more explicit eschatological narrative and social polemics of the Synoptic parables. The Gospel of John contains instead several significant discourses that elucidate Jesus' relationship to the Father and the nature of his mission.

2.4. Reason for Opposition to Jesus. In the Synoptic Gospels the opposition to Jesus gradually builds throughout the narrative (e.g., Mk 3:6) and then reaches its climax after Jesus' action in the temple (e.g., Mt 26:3-5; Mk 11:18; Lk 19:47). John's Gospel also contains a progressive building of opposition to Jesus among the Judean leaders, but their determination to kill him is driven by the raising of *Lazarus from the dead (Jn 11:47-53).

2.5. Omissions and Material Unique to John. John's Gospel possesses different contents, vocabulary, narrative sequence, geographical focus and major themes. John has no parables, exorcisms, tax collectors, temptation account, transfiguration story, and no institution of the Lord's Supper. The unique material in John includes the "I am" sayings, dialogues with Nicodemus and the Samaritan woman, stories of female disciples, *healing stories such as the crippled man at the Pool of Siloam and the man born blind, *miracle stories such as turning the water into wine in Cana and the raising of Lazarus, the foot-washing episode, the promise of the coming of the Paraclete, and Jesus' high priestly *prayer. There are distinctive themes, such as truth, *witness, *world, *love, *abiding, *faith, *light/darkness and the Father-Son relationship. John prefers the reference to "signs" (sēmeia) over "miracles" (dynamis).

There are several proposals as to why the Fourth Gospel is different from the Synoptics: (1) John writes with a largely missionary purpose and parades a variety of figures and signs in his Gospel to prove that Jesus is the Messiah (see Christ); (2) John drew on traditions not available to the Synoptic writers or else not in accordance with their outlines; and (3) John's mode of presentation is more dramatic than that of the Synoptics and contains midrashic reflections on the words of Jesus (see Witherington, 36-37).

3. Literary Relationship.

The question of the literary relationship between the Gospels has been raised since the time of the church fathers. The traditional view since Clement of Alexandria is that John wrote as a supplement for the Synoptics. Critical scholarship beginning in the nineteenth century contended that John wrote to supplant the Synoptics. However, this consensus changed very dramatically in the mid-twentieth century due to two major works by P. Gardner-Smith and C. H. Dodd, who turned the tide of scholarship by arguing that John was entirely independent from the Synoptics. Despite a few dissenters (such as C. K. Barrett, who argued for dependence on the Synoptics), the large majority of commentators followed Dodd's conclusion. Yet the pendulum is starting to shift back the other direction in recent scholarship in favor of a mediating proposal that John may have at least known Mark and Luke but did not utilize them directly. We could plot the options as follows (MacKay, 9-54):

- John wrote a spiritual Gospel to interpret or harmonize the other Gospels (Clement of Alexandria, Eusebius).
- John intended to displace the Synoptics (H. Windisch).
- John is essentially independent of the Synoptics (C. H. Dodd, P. Gardner-Smith).
- John had access to Synoptic-like material (R. Bultmann).
- John had Synoptic and non-Synoptic sources (F. Neirynck).
- John knew Mark and had to cater to public knowledge of Mark (R. Bauckham).
- John rewrote the Synoptics along the lines of midrash, or reinterpretation (T. H. Brodie).
- John had oral access to the Synoptic tradition or knew of oral performances of the Synoptics (I. Mackay).
- John developed at the oral and literary level, and there was a degree of mutual influence between John and the Synoptics at these various levels (U. C. von Wahlde).

The unique material in John represents either an independent tradition or his own creative sphere of theological design. However, there are also several "interlocking connections" between John and the Synoptics that contain partial parallels with subtle differences that mutually reinforce and explain each other, though without implying strict literary dependence (Carson, 51-58). It is this material that needs to be explained (see table 1).

There also appears to be a degree of assumed knowledge between John and the Synoptic (see Table 2) that is indicative of some kind of literary knowledge of one or more of the Synoptics by John (see Bauckham).

In light of the apparent interlocking traditions and John's possible knowledge of the Synoptic tradition, John possibly had read Mark or heard Mark performed (and perhaps Luke too). On such a proposed scheme, John might be indirectly dependent upon Synoptic tradition, but he writes mainly from his own independent tradition, which ultimately derives from a Judean disciple of Jesus. In this case, John could be understood as transposing the Synoptic pattern of presentation in order to interpret, develop and supplement the Synoptic material (Köstenberger, 555-63).

4. Commonalities.

For all the differences between John and the Synoptics, whether theological, narrative or historical, there is a surprising congruence between them as well. They share a similar genre; they tell an identical story of a Jewish prophet sent by God who preaches to crowds, performs miraculous signs, attracts disciples, antagonizes the Pharisees, confronts the Judean leaders, is crucified by Romans and resurrected by God; they identify Jesus as the Messiah, *Son of God and *Son of Man. They regard him as the fulfillment of Israel's Scriptures and yet significant for the non-Jewish world. They portray Jesus as aware of God as his Father; and they jointly emphasize the necessity of faith in him and following him. Ultimately, John is narrating the same basic story, but he takes it along a different theological trajectory in his effort to prove by signs and witnesses that Jesus is the Messiah of Israel (Jn 20:30-31).

The distinctive character of John need not be a source of historical or theological embarrassment; nor should we consider the tensions between John and Synoptics as necessarily problematic. A crucial interpretive move that one should make is to allow the respective characters of John and of the Synoptics to stand side by side. We should simply let John be John (see Dunn). The Fourth Gospel adds a rich-

Table 1. Examples of Interlocking Parallels

Contrast between the Baptist's water baptism and the baptism of the Messiah	Mark 1:7-8 // John 1:33
Spirit's anointing of Jesus as testified by John the Baptist	Mark 1:10 // John 1:32
Feeding of the five thousand	Mark 6:32-44 // John 6:1-15
Jesus walking on the water	Mark 6:45-52 // John 6:16-21
A prophet is without honor in his hometown	Mark 6:4 // John 4:44

Table 2. Examples of Possible Knowledge of Synoptic Tradition by John (Quotations from TNIV)

John 1:32 Then John gave this testimony: "I saw the Spirit come down from heaven as a dove and remain on him."	Mark 1:9-10 At that time Jesus came from Nazareth in Galilee and was baptized by John in the Jordan. Just as Jesus was coming up out of the water, he saw heaven being torn open and the Spirit descending on him like a dove.	In John 1:32 we find a reference to the baptismal story as narrated in Mark 1:9-10, and yet the baptismal story does not occur in John's Gospel.
John 2:19-21 Jesus answered them, "Destroy this temple, and I will raise it again in three days." They replied, "It has taken forty-six years to build this temple, and you are going to raise it in three days?" But the temple he had spoken of was his body.	Mark 14:58 "We heard him say, 'I will destroy this temple made with human hands and in three days will build another, not made with hands.'"	Jesus is accused at his trial of threatening to destroy the temple and to replace it with another temple (Mk 14:58), yet this saying occurs only in John (Jn 2:19). Has John taken a false accusation and made it true, or has John attempted to fill in the gaps in Mark's account?
John 3:24 (This was before John was put in prison.)	Mark 6:17 For Herod himself had given orders to have John arrested, and he had him bound and put in prison. He did this because of Herodias, his brother Philip's wife, whom he had married.	John the Baptist's imprisonment is not mentioned anywhere in John's Gospel, but here it is referred to in passing. Does John's parenthetical remark require his knowledge of John's imprisonment from the Synoptics? Or was this merely a piece of well-known knowledge that John can refer to in an aside?
John 6:70 Then Jesus replied, "Have I not chosen you, the Twelve? Yet one of you is a devil!"	Mark 3:13-15 Jesus went up on a mountainside and called to him those he wanted, and they came to him. He appointed twelve that they might be with him and that he might send them out to preach and to have authority to drive out demons.	A parallel to the calling and appointment of the twelve disciples as contained in Mark 3:13-15 is nowhere found in John's Gospel, but such a calling is presupposed in John 6:70.

ness and diversity to the fourfold Gospel testimony to Jesus Christ that enhances its appeal and its impact. As Clement of Alexandria noted, John possesses a unique spiritual depth, and as Calvin commented, John shows us not only the body of Jesus but also his soul.

See also CANONICAL CRITICISM; CHRISTOLOGY; JOHN, GOSPEL OF; ORALITY AND ORAL TRANSMISSION; SYNOPTIC PROBLEM; TEMPLE ACT.

BIBLIOGRAPHY. C. K. Barrett, "John and the Synoptic Gospels," ExpTim 85 (1974) 228-33; R. Bauckham, "John for Readers of Mark," in The Gospels for All Christians: Rethinking the Gospel Audiences, ed. R. Bauckham (Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1998) 147-71; C. Blomberg, The Historical Reliability of John's Gospel: Issues and Commentary (Downers Grove, IL: InterVarsity Press, 2001); D. A. Carson, The Gospel According to John (PNTC; Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1991); C. H. Dodd, Historical Tradition in the Fourth Gospel (Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 1963); J. D. G. Dunn, "Let John Be John: A Gospel for Its Time," in The Gospel and the Gospels, ed. P. Stuhlmacher (Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1991) 293-322; J. Dvořák, "The Relationship Between John and the Synoptic Gospels," JETS 41 (1998) 201-13; J. Frey, "Das Vierte Evangelium auf dem Hintergrund der älteren Evangelientradition: Zum Problem: Johannes und die Synoptiker," in Johannesevangelium, Mitte oder Rand des Kanons? Neue Standortbestimmungen, ed. T. Söding (QD 203; Freiburg: Herder, 2003) 60-118; P. Gardner-Smith, Saint John and the Synoptic Gospels (Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 1938); A. Köstenberger, A Theology of John's Gospel and Letters (Grand Rapids: Zondervan, 2009); I. D. MacKay, John's Relationship with Mark: An Analysis of John 6 in Light of Mark 6-8 (WUNT 2/128; Tübingen: Mohr Siebeck, 2004); T. Rasimus, ed., The Legacy of John:

The Second Century Reception of the Fourth Gospel (NovTSup 132; Leiden: E. J. Brill, 2009); D. M. Smith, John Among the Gospels: The Relationship in Twentieth-Century Research (Philadelphia: Fortress, 1992); B. Witherington III, John's Wisdom: A Commentary on the Fourth Gospel (Louisville: Westminster John Knox, 1995).

M. F. Bird

T, U, V

TABLE FELLOWSHIP

The term “table fellowship” does not occur in the Bible as such, but it has come to be used in religious studies to refer to the practice of people eating together in a context that implies more than just physical sustenance or the satisfaction of appetite. The Gospels contain numerous accounts of Jesus sharing meals with other people. They also record parables and sayings of Jesus that utilize banquets, meals and related motifs in distinctive ways. All of these texts have captured the interest of NT scholars, who seek to interpret them in light of both Jewish themes derived from the OT and Greco-Roman motifs influential in Hellenistic contexts. Biblical references to Jesus eating with tax collectors and *sinners have received particular attention in studies of Jesus’ life and ministry, and the implications of that practice have been construed differently.

1. Background
2. Table Fellowship in the Gospels
3. Table Fellowship with Sinners as an Aspect of Jesus’ Ministry
4. Conclusion

1. Background.

1.1. Jewish Literature. The OT contains a number of stories that suggest that the sharing of meals could be invested with social or religious significance. In particular, eating together could symbolize the ratification of a covenant (Gen 26:26-31; cf. 2 Sam 3:20). Ritual banquets also marked important transitional points in a person’s life—for example, Isaac’s weaning day (Gen 21:8); the weddings of Jacob (Gen 29:22) and Samson (Judg 14:10); and the birthday of Pharaoh (Gen 40:20). The book of Esther mentions a number of banquets associated with members of the royal court in which the political implications of behavior at such feasts become apparent (Esther 1:3, 9; 5:4-8; 6:14—7:10). Amos 6:4-6 pictures banquets as ostentatious affairs at which the wealthy recline on ivory beds, drink wine from bowls, and anoint themselves with fine oils while listening to musical entertainment. Such decadence may provide some background for understanding Herod’s feast in Mark 6:21-28.

Israel’s appointed festivals also tended to involve ceremonial meals at which the community’s solidarity was confirmed and defined, often with reference to shared history (see Feasts). Three of these festivals (Passover, Weeks, Booths) were prescribed by Torah (Ex 23:14, 17; 34:23; Deut 16:16-17). In addition, two more festivals had been instituted by NT times: Dedication (Hanukkah) (1 Macc 4:36-59; 2 Macc 10:6-8; cf. Jn 10:22) and Purim (Esther 9:19-28).

The Israelites also understood certain meals as occasions for fellowship with God as well as with one another. The aforementioned festivals could be construed in this manner, and such an understanding probably informs Psalm 23:5 (“You prepare a table before me”). The exodus tradition was particularly significant in this regard due to the stories that recall how God fed Israel in the wilderness with manna (Ex 16) and quail (Num 11:31-34), and with water from a rock (Ex 17; cf. 1 Cor 10:3-4). Furthermore, Exodus 24:9-11 says that the elders of Israel ate and drank in God’s presence prior to the giving of Torah. Ultimately, this motif would assume eschatological significance, as is evident in Isaiah 25:6-8 (God will host a feast on Mount Zion for all nations). The communal meals at Qumran anticipated a banquet of the new age at which two messiahs, priestly and royal, would be present (1QS VI, 2-5; 1Q28a II, 11-22). Jesus also expected the arrival of the future kingdom to be marked by a banquet (Mt 8:11; cf. Mk 14:25).

In all of the preceding examples of meals involving divine-human fellowship, God is clearly presented as the provider of the food. Israel’s sacrificial tradition seems to have allowed for a reversal of that concept, but unlike most societies in the ancient Near East, Israel never developed the notion of sacrifice as a ritual of feeding their God, who did not require sustenance (Ps 50:12-13 [but see Lev 21:6, a rare reference to sacrifices as “the food of God”]). In Genesis 18:1-15, however, Abraham prepares a lavish meal for three heavenly visitors (often understood in tradition as God and two angels). This text would become a prototype for meals involving human-divine fellowship in a sense that allows the human participant to be the provider: the significant factor may be that the divine presence is incognito (Abraham thinks that the divine figures are simply other humans). This notion of human-divine fellowship being hidden in what appears to be a human-human encounter resurfaces in a number of NT texts (Mt 25:31-46; Lk 16:22; Heb 13:2).

1.2. The Greco-Roman World. Within the Hellenistic context of the Roman Empire, the sharing of meals often could be fraught with symbolic or ritualistic meaning. Dining together was assumed to create a bond between participants that implied social and ethical obligations. The template for such meals was the formal banquet known as a symposium. A number of Greek and Roman documents discuss elaborate rules for etiquette and hospitality at such occasions (see esp. Plutarch, Quaest. Conv. 614 A-B; Plato, Leg. 2.671C-72A). Various Greek and Latin inscriptions also reveal that less formal or highbrow occasions could be characterized by many of the features associated with the symposium (IG II 1368.107-10; ILS 7212.2.25-28).

Indeed, it appears that virtually all social organizations (e.g., craft guilds, trade associations, funerary societies, religious groups) hosted regular or occasional community meals paid for out of a common purse. Such meals became public markers of a group's identity, and thus social boundaries could be more or less defined in terms of inclusion or exclusion from the table fellowship associated with these events. It is difficult to know the extent to which such practices informed the context of Jesus, but Sirach 31:12—32:13 does indicate that an analogous concern for etiquette associated with table fellowship was prominent among Jews who had resettled in Israel after the deportation to Babylon. Similar topics come up in the teaching of Jesus himself (Lk 14:7-11).

If one allows that the Greco-Roman symposium may have exerted (indirect) influence on the Palestinian context of Jesus, three features of those meals become noteworthy. First, dinner guests at a symposium normally reclined while eating. Such a practice is also indicated in many Gospel references to table fellowship (e.g., Jn 13:23), though this can be obscured in English translations: in Luke 14:8 Jesus literally says, “Do not lie down [kataklinō] in the place of honor”; in Luke 22:27 he refers to “the one who reclines [anakeimai].”

Second, according to the writings of Plutarch and Plato cited above, the symposium often was an occasion for instruction. In John 13:3-30 Jesus instructs his disciples within the setting of a meal in a manner analogous to a typical Greek symposium (note the repeated references to being at a table [Jn 13:4, 12, 28]). Meals also serve as settings for instruction in the Gospel of Luke (Lk 7:36-50; 11:37-52; 14:7-33), but in those cases the tenor of the teaching is much more polemical than would normally have been considered appropriate for a symposium.

Third, social etiquette demanded that participants in a symposium appear humble and even deferential. For example, Sirach 31:15 counsels participants at a banquet to “judge your neighbor's feelings by your own, and in every matter be thoughtful.” Such advice provides a rough parallel to Jesus' golden rule (Mt 7:12) and, more specifically, coheres with his advice regarding humility at banquets (Lk 14:7-11).

2. Table Fellowship in the Gospels.

2.1. Stories of Table Fellowship in the Gospels.

The Synoptic Gospels report two instances of table fellowship involving Jesus that seem to be paradigmatic of meals that were repeated on a regular basis: (1) the meal with tax collectors and sinners hosted by Levi (Matthew), a tax collector whom Jesus had called to follow him (Mt 9:9-13; Mk 2:14-17; Lk 5:27-32); (2) a final meal with his disciples eaten in celebration of the Passover the night he was arrested (Mt 26:19-30; Mk 14:16-31; Lk 22:13-38). With regard to the first of these, Jesus is elsewhere maligned as one who “welcomes sinners and eats with them” (Lk 15:2), implying that he did this repeatedly (cf. Mt 11:19; Lk 7:34). With regard to the second, Jesus is said to have instructed his followers to reenact his final supper with them as a meal observed in remembrance of him (1 Cor 11:24; cf. Lk 22:19).

The account of the meal hosted by Levi (called “Matthew” in the Gospel of Matthew) indicates that Jesus partook in table fellowship with “many tax collectors and sinners.” Exactly who would be included among the generic designation “sinners” is not absolutely clear, but the context suggests that the reference is to people who, like tax collectors, could be denigrated on the basis of their vocation: they engaged in a profession that was deemed sinful. One obvious example of such sinners is prostitutes. Indeed, the phrase “the tax collectors and the prostitutes” is used elsewhere (Mt 21:31-32) in a manner that seems virtually synonymous with references to “tax collectors and sinners” (Mt 9:10-11; 11:19). Thus, it seems likely that Jesus shared table fellowship with prostitutes as well as with tax collectors on this or other occasions (on this, see also Lk 7:36-50, though in that instance the prostitute is not invited to the meal but rather comes at her own initiative).

In any event, such table fellowship is deemed scandalous because it appears to imply acceptance and/or approval of the sinners (though, of course, not necessarily of their behavior). Thus, Jesus’ opponents believe that eating with sinners is tantamount to welcoming (Lk 15:2) or befriending them (Mt 11:19; Lk 7:34). Jesus defends his action through the analogy of a physician whose primary attention must be devoted to the sick. In Luke’s Gospel the point of this analogy is clearly that through table fellowship with sinners Jesus hopes to bring sinners to repentance (Lk 5:32). In Matthew 9:13 // Mark 2:17 the same goal could be implied, but that is not certain or obvious. Some interpreters hold that in the latter texts the point is simply that Jesus is calling those who have been excluded from Israel back into communion with God and with God’s people (for discussion of how this point has played out in recent studies of Jesus, see 3 below).

As indicated, the second paradigmatic instance of table fellowship in the Synoptic Gospels is that of the final supper that Jesus shares with his disciples (see Last Supper). John’s Gospel also mentions a supper on the night of Jesus’ arrest (Jn 13:3), but the report of what transpires at that supper is notably different. The meal becomes an occasion for Jesus to wash his disciples’ feet and to tell them that henceforth they should wash one another’s feet (Jn 13:1-15). According to Luke 22:19, however, the meal itself is to be repeated, and table fellowship per se is to mark the new community. Specifically, the believers will commune with one another in a manner that involves them in some sort of corporate communion with the risen Christ (partaking of his body and blood). In the book of Acts Luke probably means to indicate that this was fulfilled when early believers gathered for what he calls “the breaking of bread” (Acts 2:42; cf. Acts 2:46; 20:7, 11; 27:35). Elsewhere, Paul refers to a ritual meal called “the Lord’s supper” (1 Cor 11:20). He maintains that the observance of this meal was commanded by Jesus himself to mark the institution of a new covenant (1 Cor 11:23-26), and he says that the “sharing” (koinōnia) of the bread and wine is to be done in a way that conveys unity of the believers (1 Cor 10:16-17).

The Gospels also mention numerous instances of people eating together on occasions that do not become paradigms for recurrent events. The feeding of the five thousand deserves special mention as one of the only stories of Jesus reported in all four Gospels (Mt 14:13-21; Mk 6:30-44; Lk 9:10-17; Jn 6:1-13). Mark’s version of this story presents the feeding as a symposium: Jesus tells his disciples to make the people “recline” (anaklinō) in “groups” (symposia), employing language that clearly reflects the Greco-Roman meals (Mk 6:39). This usually is thought to bring out the festive character of the event, a point consistent with Jesus’ comment elsewhere in Mark that fasting is inappropriate for his followers as long as the bridegroom was with them (Mk 2:18-19; cf. Mt 9:14-15; Lk 5:33-34).

In the Synoptic Gospels the feeding *miracle seems to be told in a way that highlights connections with the Last Supper (cf. Mt 14:19 with Mt 26:26; Mk 6:41 with Mk 14:22; Lk 9:16 with Lk 22:19). Even in John’s Gospel, which contains no narrative of the final supper, eucharistic language is explicitly employed in the context of the feeding miracle (Jn 6:51-57). Luke and John also seem interested in connecting the meal to postresurrection encounters with Jesus (Lk 24:30-31; Jn 21:13), and in all four Gospels there are implicit connections to the giving of manna in the wilderness (explicit in Jn 6:31-32) and to the eschatological banquet that awaits the faithful at the end of time.

The Gospels of Matthew and Mark contain two accounts of miraculous feedings: first, five thousand people are fed with five loaves, and twelve baskets of fragments are collected (Mt 14:13-21; Mk 6:30-44); later, four thousand people are fed with seven loaves, and seven baskets of fragments are collected (Mt 15:32-39; Mk 8:1-10). In Mark’s Gospel Jesus later calls attention to the numbers involved, as though they have special significance for understanding his ministry (Mk 8:19-21; cf. Mk 6:52). The usual explanation is that the first feeding is meant to symbolize God’s provision for Israel (“five” recalls the five books of Torah; “twelve” recalls the twelve tribes), and the second feeding is intended to represent God’s provision for the whole world (“four” recalls the four cardinal directions [or corners of the earth]; “seven” signifies completeness [as in seven days of the week]). A similar motif perhaps informs Matthew 16:9-10, though it would be less obvious in that instance.

The Gospel of Luke is unique in that it also mentions three meals that Jesus shares with Pharisees (Lk 7:36-50; 11:37-54; 14:1-24). The “fellowship” element, however, seems muted in these instances in that Jesus is clearly at odds with his hosts and disparages them. Some scholars also credit Luke with implying that Jesus shares table fellowship with Mary and Martha (Lk 10:38-42) and with Zacchaeus (Lk 19:1-10), though no meal is explicitly mentioned in those narratives. Thus, Luke's Gospel is generally recognized as displaying a special penchant for describing encounters with Jesus that take place at meals or at least in homes where meals likely would have been shared. This tendency usually is explained in light of Luke's assumption that his Gospel will be read in house churches where believers gather for meals, *worship and fellowship. Thus, Luke's reader may be expected to draw correlations between what happens at meals (or at least in homes) and what happens "in church": sins are *forgiven (Lk 7:48), the haughty are rebuked (Lk 7:40-47; 14:7-11), the word is taught (Lk 10:38-42), the penitent are restored (Lk 19:8-10), and so forth. The motif may find its fullest expression in the account of Jesus' *resurrection appearance at Emmaus: his companions are able to recognize him only when he shares bread with them in a manner reminiscent of both the feeding miracle and the Last Supper (Lk 24:30-31; cf. Lk 9:16; 22:19); they later testify to others that he was "made known to them in the breaking of the bread" (Lk 24:35). Thus, the presence of Jesus in the post-Easter community may be understood as a phenomenon realized within the context of table fellowship. Further, this depiction of meals as a primary indicator of Christian community should be understood in light of Luke's particular interest in the eschatological banquet (referred to explicitly in Lk 13:29; 14:15-24).

John's Gospel also speaks of a meal in Bethany at which Mary, Martha and Lazarus dine with Jesus and his disciples (Jn 12:1-8). John also depicts the risen Jesus as sharing food with his followers (Jn 21:9-14); here, the specific reference to bread and fish clearly recalls the feeding miracle (Jn 21:13; cf. Jn 6:11). The mere fact that the risen Jesus can consume food also serves to establish the legitimacy of his bodily resurrection (a point made even more clearly in Lk 24:37-42; cf. Acts 10:41).

2.2. Table Fellowship in the Teaching of Jesus.

The teaching of Jesus recorded in the Gospels often employs motifs of table fellowship. The most prominent example may be his teaching on social etiquette for guests and hosts in Luke 14:7-14. Here, Jesus gives explicit directions for choosing a seat at a wedding banquet: pick the lowest place, and hope to be elevated. Then he offers advice for how to prepare a guest list when hosting a luncheon or dinner: invite those who cannot repay you (the destitute and disabled) rather than those who can (family and friends). In keeping with what was said above, most scholars assume that Luke intended these words to be read as advice for the church. People should not only literally seek the lowest place at a banquet; they should also volunteer for the lowliest positions of service in God's church. Likewise, the church should be deliberate in seeking to minister to those who will benefit from its ministry even if they do not appear to have anything to offer the church in return.

Elsewhere, Jesus upbraids scribes for loving the places of honor at banquets (Mt 23:6; Mk 12:38-39; Lk 20:46); in this manner, they seek to put themselves first, and they behave in the opposite manner that he recommends in Luke 14:7-11. In consideration of Sirach 31:12-32:13 and the ethical teaching associated with symposia in general, we probably can assume that Jesus' words in this instance accorded with the conventional wisdom of his day. Presumption was universally denounced. What is insightful about Jesus' comment is his specific identification of what is wrong with such presumptuous behavior. The scribes err not in wanting to be exalted, but rather in seeking to exalt themselves instead of waiting for someone else (another person or God) to exalt them. Further, their desire for exaltation leads them to pretense: they do good deeds simply "to be seen by others" (Mt 23:5) and say prayers "for the sake of appearance" (Mk 12:40).

Jesus also tells parables in which banquets appear to serve as symbols of the *kingdom of God. In Matthew 22:2-14 the people who are invited to a king's banquet snub their host by "making light of it"; in a parallel account in Luke 14:16-24 the invited guests offer what ostensibly could be regarded as valid excuses, but the host is angry nevertheless. The original readers of these Gospels (and the original audience of Jesus) would have understood that to decline an invitation to such a meal was an implicit rejection of the person who issued it.

3. Table Fellowship with Sinners as an Aspect of Jesus' Ministry.

The biblical material that describes Jesus as engaging in table fellowship with sinners has been deemed particularly significant for scholarly reconstructions of his life and ministry. For one thing, this is a feature of Jesus' biography that is regarded as historical fact by virtually all scholars, regardless of the level of confidence that they typically place in the historical accuracy of biblical material. This is partly because the tradition has widespread and early attribution: it is attested by Mark 2:14-17 as well as in material that source critics ascribe to *Q (Mt 11:19 // Lk 7:34) and L (Lk 15:1-2; 19:1-10). Even more to the point, however, this tradition passes what historians call the criterion of “embarrassment” or “dissimilarity”: there is no evidence that the early Christian church continued the practice of including questionable persons in communal meals in ways that scandalized the general community. Thus, the Christian authors of the NT would not have been motivated to invent or embellish traditions about Jesus doing such a thing; instead, the activity is presented as something that must be acknowledged and then explained.

Most Jesus scholars have commented on the significance of his table fellowship with sinners, but three have offered particularly influential commentary on this aspect of Jesus’ ministry. J. Crossan proposes that Jesus’ practice of “open commensality” (i.e., indiscriminately eating with anyone, including those regarded as social or religious outcasts) was one of the two primary activities that marked his career; the other was the offer of free healing through performance of exorcisms and the working of miracles (or what Crossan regards as folk magic). Basically, Jesus and his disciples traveled from village to village, healing the sick and being offered meals in exchange for those services. But these meals became more than just a means of supporting his mission; they became occasions for actualizing what the mission was really about. Jesus insisted that no one be excluded, and his own generosity with spiritual aid inspired villagers to generosity with physical sustenance.

Together, the activities of free healing and open table fellowship provided a vision of “shared egalitarianism” that challenged what was normal for both Jewish religion and Roman society. First, Jesus’ practice of table fellowship challenged Jewish notions of privilege and favoritism by ignoring the boundaries between slave and free, male and female, pure and impure, patron and client, rich and poor. Thus, the meals became “acted *parables” that illustrated in practice what Jesus taught elsewhere (e.g., in the parable that compares God to a person who goes into the streets to invite the poor, the crippled, the blind and the lame to his banquet [Lk 14:21-23]). Second, by demonstrating that people could receive things such as healing and nourishment directly from God and from each other, Jesus struck at the very heart of the Roman social system, which was based on patronage and brokerage and inevitably privileged a few and left many more on the margins. Thus, Crossan maintains, Jesus’ practice of table fellowship was part of a social program that presented a political threat to Roman society. It was no less than “a strategy for building or rebuilding peasant community on radically different principles than those of honor and shame, patronage and clientage” (Crossan, 344).

Like Crossan, N. T. Wright argues that Jesus’ practice of table fellowship must be understood against the background of Roman domination, but Wright does not follow Crossan in seeing that practice as the paradigm for resistance to such oppression. Rather, the motivation for Jesus’ policies of table fellowship lay in his eschatological confidence that God’s kingdom was dawning in a manner that would soon bring Israel’s oppression to an end. More specifically, Jesus’ practice of open table fellowship was a critique of voices that maintained that the response to Roman oppression should be a continuation of what marked Israel’s experience of exile in Babylon: a defensive emphasis on those elements of tradition that marked Israel as distinct from Gentiles and that, accordingly, marginalized Israelites who were less observant (e.g., with regard to Sabbath laws or purity regulations). It was within this context that Jesus deliberately shared meals with those who were thought to be excluded from *Israel. By so doing, he presented an alternative response to Israel’s situation: hope in the imminent reality of God’s deliverance called not for defensive withdrawal but rather for radical inclusivity.

E. P. Sanders treats Jesus’ offer of table fellowship to tax collectors and sinners as a deliberate prophetic act that accompanied and illustrated his claims regarding God’s extravagant *mercy. Sanders plays down the notion that the “tax collectors and sinners” referred to in the Gospels should be identified with marginalized people and insists instead that they be identified as the “truly wicked.” The point is not that they were simply regarded as sinners by narrow-minded Pharisees; their identification as sinners is disputed neither by Jesus (Mk 2:17; Lk 7:47) nor by the Gospel writers (Mk 2:15; Lk 7:37; 15:1). Thus, Jesus’ scandalous table companions should be regarded not merely as so-called sinners (social outcasts or victims of prejudice) but rather as actual sinners (immoral, unrighteous people who did not keep Torah or live in a manner pleasing to God).

Sanders also suggests that the reason why Jesus’ table fellowship with wicked persons was scandalous was that Jesus was, in effect, claiming that such people would be included in the coming kingdom of God even though they had not repented in any traditional sense (made restitution, offered temple sacrifices, abandoned their immoral professions or otherwise amended their lives). Sanders must conclude that the words “to repentance” in Luke 5:32 (“I have come to call sinners to repentance”) are an editorial addition by the evangelist, who hopes to domesticate the more shocking original statement of Jesus in Mark 2:17 ("I have come to call sinners"). According to Sanders, if Jesus actually had been convincing tax collectors, prostitutes or other sinners to repent and amend their lives, Pharisees and others would have regarded him as a hero. The table fellowship was scandalous because it symbolized the inclusion of current sinners (not former sinners) in the coming kingdom of God.

This proposal by Sanders has not fared well with other scholars, largely because it seems out of sync with Jesus' high expectations of moral conduct (e.g., Mk 9:43-48; Mt 5:17-20) and strong insistence on *repentance (e.g., Mt 4:17; 11:20-21; Lk 13:1-5) expressed elsewhere. Sanders's critics, however, have not been able to explain just why Jesus would be maligned for eating with sinners (Mk 2:16; Lk 15:2), welcoming sinners (Lk 15:2) or being a friend of sinners (Mt 11:19) if indeed he was facilitating the repentance of those sinners. Some scholars have decided that the fellowship meals probably were not all that controversial, and that the Gospels' portrayal of them as such derives from anti-Jewish polemic that seeks to present Jesus' opponents as petty and mean.

Sanders's proposal might, however, gain more support if certain caveats or modifications are allowed. Social-historical analysis of the ancient Near East has indicated that the great majority of tax collectors and prostitutes in Palestine at the time of Jesus probably were *slaves (Fleming; Glancy, 54-57; Powell, forthcoming; Schottroff and Stegemann, 8-13). Thus, it is possible that a call to abandon one's (sinful) profession made sense only in select, exceptional cases.

In broad or general terms, the Gospels indicate that "many tax collectors and sinners" ate with Jesus (Mk 2:13), and indeed that "all the tax collectors and sinners" listened to him. It might be reasonable, then, to assume that some of these persons were slaves, who were not free to abandon their profession (as Levi/Matthew did) or to decide the terms under which their profession should be practiced (as Zacchaeus did). In keeping with Sanders's proposal, then, it could be that Jesus promised inclusion in God's kingdom to enslaved tax collectors or prostitutes who believed in him regardless of the fact that they were unable to assume lives in conformity with Torah. Surely, this would have been regarded as scandalous, and yet it would not be wholly inconsistent with the stringent ethical demands articulated by Jesus elsewhere.

Against this suggestion, we must grant that John the Baptist seems to assume that the tax collectors who come to him for baptism are also able, if willing, to do what is right (Lk 3:12-13). In Luke 18:9-14, however, Jesus promises justification to a tax collector who does no more than beat his breast and cry, "God be merciful to me, a sinner" (i.e., he offers no sign of repentance or promise of amendment of life). In Luke 7:36-50 Jesus also encounters a prostitute who loves him greatly even though apparently she has not abandoned her profession: she is identified as a sinner, not as a former sinner (cf. Lk 7:37, 39). Jesus' only words to her are "Your sins are forgiven" (Lk 7:48) and "Your faith has saved you; go in peace" (Lk 7:50). Noticeably missing are the words "Go and sin no more," counsel that certainly would be appropriate for an adulteress (cf. Jn 8:11) but could have been cruelly irrelevant for a slave forced into prostitution.

4. Conclusion.

Throughout the Gospels meals function as occasions that symbolize (or actualize) a spiritual fellowship that human beings may enjoy with each other and with God. Feasting is more appropriate than fasting as an expression of the rule of God that Jesus proclaims and embodies. The feeding miracles that Jesus performs demonstrate the generosity of God, and Jesus' open fellowship with sinners demonstrates God's scandalous grace. His parables and teaching often utilize banquet themes to reflect on the appropriate human response to such generosity and grace. The last meal that he shares with his disciples draws all of these motifs together in a manner that simultaneously connects the community to Israel's history and identifies them as the eschatological people who will share the great banquet at the end of the age.

See also CLEAN AND UNCLEAN; FASTING; FEASTS; FORGIVENESS OF SINS; LAST SUPPER; MERCY; REPENTANCE; SIN, SINNERS.

BIBLIOGRAPHY. C. L. Blomberg, Contagious Holiness: Jesus' Meals with Sinners (Downers Grove, IL: InterVarsity Press, 2005); G. Carey, Sinners: Jesus and His Earliest Followers (Waco, TX: Baylor University Press, 2009); K. E. Corley, Private Women, Public Meals: Social Conflict in the Synoptic Tradition (Peabody, MA: Hendrickson, 1993); J. D. Crossan, The Historical Jesus: The Life of a Mediterranean Peasant (San Francisco: HarperSanFrancisco, 1991); R. Fleming, "Quae Corore Quaestrum Facit: The Sexual Economy of Female Prostitution in the Roman Empire," JRS 89 (1999) 38-61; J. A. Glancy, Slavery in Early Christianity (Oxford: Oxford University Press, 2002); J. A. Grassi, Loaves and Fishes: The Gospel Feeding Narratives (ZS; Collegeville, MN: Liturgical Press, 1991); R. J. Karris, Eating Your Way Through Luke's Gospel (Collegeville, MN: Liturgical Press, 2006); J. Koehnig, The Feast of the World's Redemption: Eucharistic Origins and Christian Mission (Harrisburg, PA: Trinity Press International, 2000); I. H. Marshall, Last Supper and Lord's Supper (Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 2000); M. A. Powell, "Was Jesus a Friend of Unrepentant Sinners? A Fresh Appraisal of Sanders's Controversial Proposal," JSHJ 7 (2009) 286-310; idem, "Jesus and the Pathetic Wicked: Re-visiting Sanders' View of Jesus and the Sinners," in Jesus as Restoration Prophet: Engaging the Work of E. P. Sanders, ed. R. S. Webb and M. S. Goodacre (LNTS 372; London: T & T Clark, forthcoming); E. P. Sanders, Jesus and Judaism (Philadelphia: Fortress, 1985); idem, The Historical Figure of Jesus (London: Penguin, 1993); L. Schottroff and W. Stegemann, Jesus and the Hope of the Poor, trans. M. O'Connell (Maryknoll, NY: Orbis, 1986); D. E. Smith, "Table Fellowship as a Literary Motif in the Gospel of Luke," JBL 106 (1987) 613-38; J. S. Webster, Ingesting Jesus: Eating and Drinking in the Gospel of John (SBLAB 6; Atlanta: Society of Biblical Literature, 2003); N. T. Wright, Jesus and the Victory of God (Minneapolis: Fortress, 1996).

M. A. Powell

TALMUD. See RABBINIC TRADITIONS AND WRITINGS.

TARGUMS

The Aramaic term "targum" means "translation" (Ezra 4:7), but the ancient Aramaic renderings of the Hebrew Bible to which rabbinic usage refers are not translations in the ordinary sense. Targums feature a unique combination of translation and commentary and provide important insight into the early history of biblical interpretation. This article briefly introduces the Targums and then addresses their relationship to Jesus and the Gospels.

1. Survey of the Targums
2. Literature of the Targums
3. Relationship of the Targums to Jesus and the Gospels

1. Survey of the Targums.

Rabbinic literature finds scriptural justification for the Targum in Nehemiah 8:8: "So they read from the book, from the law of God, with interpretation. They gave the sense, so that the people understood the reading" (NRSV; see y. Meg. 74d; b. Meg. 3a). But this text mentions only oral explanation of the biblical text. It does not speak of translation or commentary written in the Aramaic language. The earliest extant Targums are the fragmentary Aramaic translations of Leviticus and Job from the *Dead Sea Scrolls (see b. Šabb. 115a). These Targums are pre-Christian in origin and nonexpansive in their method of translation. The Genesis Apocryphon is another early text from the DSS. It is not a Targum per se, but it is a rewritten version of Genesis in the Aramaic language.

The two primary groups of Targums are those of the Palestinian and Babylonian traditions. Palestinian tradition has its main representation in the following Targums of the Pentateuch: Targum Neofiti, a manuscript from the sixteenth century A.D.; Targum Pseudo-Jonathan, a mixture of traditions that reached its final form around the seventh century A.D.; the Fragmentary Targum, a selection of targumic material; and the medieval Cairo Geniza fragments.

Targum Onqelos (Pentateuch) and Targum Jonathan (Prophets) are the official rabbinic Targums of Babylonian tradition (b. Qidd. 49a; y. Meg. 71c; b. Meg. 3a). Targum Onqelos is less expansive than the Targums of the Palestinian tradition. Comparison with ancient sources indicates that the extant Palestinian and Babylonian Targums contain early and late elements from the pre-Christian period to the Middle Ages. This feature requires dating the origins of individual passages on a case-by-case basis.

The Targums of the Writings have early and late material as well. They fall into three groups. The Targums of Psalms and Job share the tendency to combine different renderings of the same text (e.g., Ps 110). Proverbs and, to a lesser extent, Chronicles have connections to the Syriac (an Aramaic dialect) Peshitta. Targums of the Megilloth are among the latest and most expansive of all the Targums. No Targums exist for Daniel or Ezra-Nehemiah, books in which extensive portions of Aramaic occur.

The Samaritan community also produced a Targum during the first few centuries A.D. to correspond to its version of the Pentateuch, but the total number of extant manuscripts of this Targum is only eight, the oldest dating to the twelfth century A.D. The Samaritan Targum is less expansive than the Jewish Targums, especially those of the Palestinian tradition. The Syriac Peshitta of the Pentateuch is a relatively early (ca. first century B.C. or A.D.) Jewish or Jewish Christian translation of the Hebrew text. It employs methods of exegesis similar to those of the Targums.

2. Literature of the Targums.

The language of the earlier Targums, with variation in dialect, is Middle Aramaic, a stage of the language not too far removed from the Official Aramaic of the Bible (Ezra 4:8—6:18; 7:12–26; Jer 10:11; Dan 2:4b—7:28). Written Targums often presuppose knowledge of the Hebrew text, revealing the fact that the use of Aramaic was not for the purpose of mere translation into the vernacular of the people. The role of Aramaic was to set apart the commentary of the Targum so as to avoid confusion with the biblical text. Rabbinic protocol for the synagogue requires an oral, nonwritten Targum by a separate translator after the reading of the Hebrew text in order to distinguish Scripture from its translation/explanation (m. Meg. 4:4; b. Meg. 21b; 32a; b. Soṭah 39b; b. Yoma 69b; Pesiq. Rab. 5; Tanh. Gen 18:17; cf. Lk 4:16–30; Acts 13:13–52). Every translation involves interpretation, but the interpretive element in the Targums is much more prominent. A Targum often tracks along with the Hebrew text, giving the impression of a translation, until it is necessary to provide an exposition of the text in the form of expansion or paraphrase. This manner of commentary is obviously distinct from other forms such as that of the Pesher to Habakkuk from the DSS or that of the rabbinic midrashim. The Targum appears in the form of the Bible itself and yet is not to have a life of its own apart from the Hebrew original or take its place (see b. Ber. 8a).

Three basic types of commentary occur within the Targums: (1) translation/interpretation of the biblical text; (2) addition to the translation of the biblical text; (3) paraphrase in which the translation of the biblical text is not discernible. Commentary of the first type appears in Genesis 3:8 of Targum Onqelos: “And they heard the sound of the word of the LORD God walking in the garden at the resting of the day. And Adam and his wife hid from the LORD God in the trees of the garden.” This translation does not involve substantial addition or paraphrase, but it does include a circumlocution for the divine name (“word of the LORD God”), an interpretation of the phrase “at the wind of the day” (“at the resting of the day”), and a rendering of “the man” as “Adam.”

Commentary of the second type occurs in the Targum of Ecclesiastes 1:2, which tells of a time when Solomon foresaw by the Holy Spirit the imminent division of the kingdom between Rehoboam and Jeroboam, the destruction of *Jerusalem and the *temple, and the *exile of the people. Only then does the Targum introduce the famous motto of Qoheleth, adding Solomon’s comment that his work and the work of his father David had come to naught. This type of commentary is not uncommon. Commentary of the third type, however, is relatively rare.

The Hebrew text of Genesis 49:2 consists of the discourse of Jacob in which he gathers his sons to listen to him, but it is not possible to recover this from Targum Neofiti. The Targum narrates the assembly of the sons and then includes a discourse from Jacob in which he expresses his concern that one of his sons might become an idolater like Ishmael or Esau. The sons then reassure Jacob with a recitation of the Shema (Deut 6:4; see Gen. Rab. 98:3).

Anyone who reads the Targums notices very quickly the effort to revere God. The Targums try to avoid expressions in which God acts like a human or has the form of a human. Such an attempt is evident in the Targum of Isaiah 6:1, where it specifies that Isaiah saw only the Lord’s glory dwelling on his throne, steering clear of the possible impression from the Hebrew text that Isaiah actually saw the Lord himself sitting on his throne. The Targum also makes no mention of the Lord’s royal garment and prefers instead to speak of the splendor of his glory.

It is also apparent that the Targums share the concern of other exegetical sources from antiquity to demonstrate the theological relevance of the biblical text with regard to legal matters, moral issues and prophecy. Thus, they employ contemporary biblical characters in the frame of Torah piety (Tg. Ps.-J. Gen 24:62; 37:2; Tg. Neof. Gen 25:27; Gen. Rab. 63:10; cf. Gen 26:5; 2 Chron 6:16). They also reveal their eschatological interest in the fate of the righteous and the wicked, the days of the Messiah, and the world to come (e.g., Tg. Neof. Num 11:26 adds prophecies from Eldad and Medad and borrows from Ezek 38:16; 39:9–10 [cf. Targum Pseudo-Jonathan; b. Sanh. 17a]).

3. Relationship of the Targums to Jesus and the Gospels.

The primary place of the Targums in studies of Jesus and the Gospels is not in reconstruction of the original *language of Jesus—an enterprise that remains quite dubious, given the problems of dating, variation in dialect, and the gap between literary and spoken forms of the language. The more productive undertaking is the analysis of verbal linkage and exegetical convergence between the texts of the Gospels and those of the Targums. Since any later renderings of the Targums would not have been dependent upon the Gospels, targumic passages with a unique relationship to the Gospels are likely to have been prior to them (or contemporaneous) in either oral or written form.

The quotation of Psalm 118:25–26 with reference to the *triumphal entry of Jesus is an example of possible dependence upon targumic tradition (Mt 21:9; Mk 11:9-10; Lk 19:38; Jn 12:13). The Targum of Psalm 118:22-29 sets its translation within the context of the anointing of David (1 Sam 16:1-13) and assigns the content of the psalm to various speakers from that scene (cf. Ps 118:2-4): the sons of Jesse, the builders, Jesse and his wife, David, the tribes of the house of Judah, and Samuel. Matthew and Mark have additions to their quotations of Psalm 118:25-26 that mention David: "Hosanna to the son of David" and "Blessed is the coming kingdom of our father David." Matthew and John combine their quotations from Psalm 118 with Zechariah 9:9, which speaks of the ideal Davidic king (Mt 21:5; Jn 12:15).

In a clever wordplay the Targum interprets the "stone" of Psalm 118:22 as the "son" who was forsaken. It is thus noteworthy that the quotation of this verse in the Gospels serves as the conclusion to the parable of the vineyard and the tenants, in which the tenants kill the son (Mt 21:37-39, 42; Mk 12:6-8, 10-11; Lk 20:13-15, 17). The ambiguous statement attributed to David in the Targum of Psalm 118:26b is also significant: "They will bless you from the sanctuary of the LORD." To whom do the pronouns "they" and "you" (pl.) refer if, according to the Targum, David is the one making the entry? It appears that David is joining in the celebration of the entry of another, but why the plural "you"? The context of the Targum might suggest that "you" refers to the builders who speak in Psalm 118:26a or to the people in general, but this makes little sense, given the fact that these are the candidates for the antecedent of "they" (contra those who suddenly see the voice of priests here). Another possibility is that the mēm of the second-person masculine plural pronoun in the Hebrew text ("we bless you") is a case of ditto-graphy (the next word begins with a mēm prefix). Its omission would leave a second-person masculine singular pronoun. If so, then the Targum is simply following its source text, but its meaning is the same as the original: "you" refers to the one who comes in the name of the Lord, perhaps the son of David in accordance with Matthew 21:9 (see Tg. Ps.-J. Exod 12:42).

The programmatic passage Luke 4:16-30 is another instance of possible influence from targumic tradition, especially in view of the setting. Jesus enters the synagogue in Nazareth and stands to read a portion of text from Isaiah 61:1-2. After reading, he sits and tells the people, "Today this Scripture is fulfilled in your hearing" (Lk 4:21). This causes an initial commotion, but the scene becomes violent when Jesus identifies himself as a prophet like *Elijah or Elisha who is unwelcome in Israel but received by *Gentiles (Lk 4:24-30). The Targum begins Isaiah 61 as follows: "The prophet says, 'The Spirit of prophecy from before the LORD God is upon me.'" Thus, Jesus' designation of himself as a prophet makes explicit what is only implied in Luke 4:21 (i.e., Jesus is the fulfillment of the Scripture). This would explain the shift from amazement in Luke 4:22 to fury in Luke 4:28. Luke then develops this theme of Jesus' role as a *prophet over the course of the book (Lk 6:22-23; 7:16; 10:13-16; 11:47-51; 13:33; 24:19).

The background of John's prologue (Jn 1:1-18) remains a subject of considerable debate, including the matter of whether or not the targumic "word" (see Gen 3:8 above) has anything to do with John's "Word" (see Lord). But the language of the first five verses has undeniable connections to the opening verses of Genesis, in particular the first verse of Targum Neofiti: "In the beginning, with wisdom, the Son of the LORD finished the sky and the land." Many scholars have rejected this reading and followed a suggestion by A. Díez Macho: "In the beginning, with wisdom, [the word] of the LORD created and finished the sky and the land."

Díez Macho noted the erased wāw conjunction before the word "finished," which would force "the Son" to be the verb "created" (same consonants). Díez Macho saw the erasure of the wāw as a later attempt to introduce Christian theology (Díez Macho discovered Targum Neofiti miscataloged in the Vatican Library). But such Christian tampering is not characteristic of the manuscript elsewhere. It has been suggested on the basis of the small space in the manuscript for the erased wāw that the wāw was introduced secondarily and then subsequently erased to restore the original reading. The text as it now stands is similar to Proverbs 8:22-31; 30:4; John 1:3 (cf. Jer 10:12; Col 1:9-20).

John furnishes another example in his quotation of Zechariah 12:10: "They will look at him whom they pierced" (Jn 19:37 [cf. Rev 1:7]). Besides the change of pronoun from "me" to "him," this text is notable in that it sees a suffering messianic figure in the Zechariah passage. Targum Jonathan does not interpret Zechariah 12 messianically (see Tg. Jon. Zech 3:8; 4:7; 6:12; 10:4), but the following marginal reading to the Targum in Codex Reuchlinianus (A.D. 1105) belongs to a no longer extant Palestinian Targum of the Prophets: "And I will let rest upon the house of David and upon the inhabitants of Jerusalem the Spirit of prophecy and true prayer. Afterwards Messiah son of Ephraim will go out to wage war with Gog, and Gog will kill him before the gate of Jerusalem. And they will look at me and ask why the peoples pierced Messiah son of Ephraim, and they will mourn over him." It is difficult to date with certainty this interpretation of Zechariah 12:10 and the theory of two Messiahs (of Ephraim/Joseph and David; see Tg. Ps.-J. Ex 40:9-11; Tg. Song 4:5; b. Sukkah 52a; b. Sanh. 98a; cf. b. Pesah. 118a; 4 Ezra 7:28-29), but a different theory of two Messiahs (Aaron and Israel) did exist among the Qumran community (4QD^a 10 I, 12; 1QS IX, 11; 1Q28a II, 11-22; cf. Zech 6:13; Ps 110).

These examples illustrate the rich exegetical heritage shared by the Targums and the Gospels. Obviously, the two sources diverge in many ways, but this makes their points of contact all the more remarkable. The Targums thus are factors not only in textual criticism of the Hebrew Bible, but also in understanding early Jewish and Christian interpretation of the Hebrew Bible, not to mention Jewish interpretation and thought beyond the first century A.D.

See also DEAD SEA SCROLLS; OLD TESTAMENT IN THE GOSPELS; RABBINIC TRADITIONS & WRITINGS.

BIBLIOGRAPHY. D. R. G. Beattie and M. J. McNamara, eds., The Aramaic Bible: Targums in Their Historical Context (JSOTSup 166; Sheffield: JSOT Press, 1994); B. D. Chilton, Targumic Approaches to the Gospels: Essays in the Mutual Definition of Judaism and Christianity (Lanham, MD: University Press of America, 1986); E. G. Clarke, ed., Targum Pseudo-Jonathan of the Pentateuch: Text and Concordance (Hoboken, NJ: Ktav, 1984); A. Díez Macho, ed., Neophyti 1: Targum Palestinense MS. de la Biblioteca Vaticana (6 vols.; Madrid: Consejo Superior de Investigaciones Científicas, 1968-1979); C. A. Evans, "The Aramaic Psalter and the New Testament: Praising the Lord in History and Prophecy," in From Prophecy to Testament: The Function of the Old Testament in the New, ed. C. A. Evans (Peabody, MA: Hendrickson, 2004) 44-91; Paul V. M. Flesher and Bruce Chilton, The Targums: A Critical Introduction (Leiden: Brill, 2011); S. A. Kaufman, "The Dating of Targumic Literature," JSJ 5 (1974) 49-62; R. Le Déaut, The Message of the New Testament and the Aramaic Bible (Targum), trans. S. Miletic (SubBi 5; Rome: Biblical Institute Press, 1982); S. H. Levey, The Messiah: An Aramaic Interpretation; The Messianic Exegesis of the Targum (HUCM 2; Cincinnati: Hebrew Union College Press, 1974); E. Lévine, "The Biography of the Aramaic Bible," ZAW 94 (1982) 353-79; M. J. McNamara, Targum and Testament Revisited: Aramaic Paraphrases of the Hebrew Bible, 2nd ed. (Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 2010); M. B. Shep- herd, "Targums, the New Testament, and Biblical Theology of the Messiah," JETS 51 (2008) 45-58; A. Sperber, The Bible in Aramaic: Based on Old Manuscripts and Printed Texts (5 vols.; Leiden: E. J. Brill, 1959-1968); M. G. Steinhauser, "The Targums and the New Testament," TJT 2 (1986) 262-78.

M. B. Shepherd

TAXES. See ECONOMICS.

TEACHER

Jesus' authority as a teacher is a recurring theme in the Gospels. He is often addressed as "teacher" and sometimes even designates himself as "teacher." Viewed against the backdrop of Judaism, and with careful attention to the settings and forms of Jesus' teaching, Jesus' role as teacher sheds light on the nature of his authority as well as the process by which his teachings were transmitted as reliable tradition.

1. Teacher as a Form of Address for Jesus
2. Teacher as Jesus' Self-Designation
3. Teacher as a Christological Title of Exaltation?
4. The Teaching Authority of Jesus
5. Teaching Settings
6. Forms of Teaching
7. Jesus as Teacher and the Tradition of the Gospels

1. Teacher As a Form of Address for Jesus.

1.1. The Forms of Address Used. In all four Gospels Jesus is addressed as didaskalos. The parallelism in Matthew 23:8 shows that the vocative didaskale normally translates the Hebrew/Aramaic rabbī ("my great one"). John 1:38 makes this equation explicit, and it is further supported by some epigraphic evidence from Jerusalem in NT times (CIJ II.1266, 1268-69). In the first century rabbī was not yet a fixed title for academically schooled, ordained *scribes as was later the case; it was, however, the form of address most of all for teachers. The Gospels reflect the usage of the word at this earlier stage in its development. Rabbūnī is a more exalted sounding Aramaic variant of rabbī. In Jewish literature the title ribbôn is reserved for *God except in the *targums.

1.2. Luke. The Evangelist who wrote for non-Jews omitted the term rabbī, which would have been meaningless to his readers. Didaskale also never appears as the form of address used by the disciples for Jesus. Here Luke prefers his own word epistatēs, a more general term for a supervisory or official person. Luke uses it once instead of rabbī (Lk 9:33) and twice in place of didaskale (Lk 8:24, 9:49), which occur in the parallel incidents found in the other two Synoptics. This word is also used as a term of address (epistata) twice by *disciples (Lk 5:5; 8:45) and once by those seeking help (Lk 17:13). It has been assumed that with this special expression Luke sought to heighten Jesus' authority. Since epistatēs, however, occurs not only in material unique to Luke (Lk 5:5; 17:13) but also in pericopes showing strong influence of non-Markan textual variants (Lk 8:24, 45; 9:33, 49), it could just as well be due to the usage in Luke's sources. Luke has also preserved the use of didaskale as a term of address for Jesus by outsiders (Lk 7:40; [8:49]; 9:38; 10:25; 11:45; 12:13; 18:18; 19:39; 20:21, 28, 39; 21:7). The Third Evangelist thus makes it clear that while Jesus appeared to be a teacher, this function did not exhaust the significance he held for his disciples.

1.3. Matthew. In Matthew, as in Luke, didaskale is never used by the disciples to address Jesus. Twice Matthew, in contrast to Mark, has replaced the term with the more exalted kyrie (Mt 8:25; 17:15; see Lord). Where Mark uses the rabbi title twice, Matthew omits it in one instance (Mt 21:20) and replaces it with kyrie in another (Mt 17:4). Perhaps one cannot fully exclude the possibility that Matthew found māri once in a semitic source where other exemplars read rabbi. It is more likely, however, that intentional replacement is going on. According to Matthew Jesus is more than simply a teacher for his followers; he is the Lord. This is confirmed by the apparent exception in the choice of titles of address: it is a disciple of Jesus, but also the betrayer Judas, who greets Jesus with the normal designation for a teacher, rabbi (Mt 26:25, 49). In Matthew it is also outsiders who use didaskale (Mt 19:16; 22:16, 24, 36), occasionally more so than in the Lukan parallels (see also Mt 8:19; 12:38).

1.4. Mark. In Mark rabbi is used only by disciples (Mk 9:5; 11:21; 14:45); in lieu of this a blind beggar calls Jesus rabbouni (Mk 10:51). Both Jesus' disciples (Mk 4:38; 9:38; 10:35; 13:1) and outsiders (Mk 9:17; 10:17, 20; 12:14, 19, 32) say didaskale.

1.5. John. The Fourth Evangelist, like Mark, presents an unredacted picture of the terms of address for "teacher." Didaskale is used by followers (Jn 1:38; 20:16). Disciples say rabbi (Jn 1:38, 49; 4:31; 9:2; 11:8), as do outsiders (Jn 3:2; 6:25). One female follower uses rabbouni (Jn 20:16).

2. Teacher as Jesus' Self-Designation.

In the pericope of the preparation for the Last Supper, which Luke knew both in a Markan and in an additional, strongly semiticized tradition, Jesus speaks of himself in the third person as ho didaskalos (Mt 26:18; Mk 14:14; Lk 22:13). The proverb-like logion of Matthew 10:24-25 and Luke 6:40 implies a teacher-pupil relationship of Jesus to his followers. In contrast to the assumption that Matthew 23:10 is a hellenized variant of Matthew 23:8-9, formal analysis suggests the division of Matthew 23:8 into a three-part logion and Matthew 23:9-10 into a four-part logion. Probably in conjunction with the pre-Easter sending out of the disciples (cf. Mk 6:30), Jesus forbade his disciples to let themselves be called rabbi, because he is their only authoritative teacher (didaskalos, Mt 23:8). Matthew 23:9-10 forbids the disciples to submit themselves to other teaching authorities ("fathers") or to assume such a position themselves. Perhaps the semitic equivalent to kathegetēs in Matthew 23:10 is the term môreh found in the Qumran writings (see Dead Sea Scrolls).

3. Teacher as a Christological

Title of Exaltation?

The total absence of "teacher" as a title for Jesus outside the Gospels speaks against seeing in it an early Christian title of exaltation. Prior to Justin only Ignatius of Antioch (Eph. 15.1; Magn. 9.1) uses the designation didaskalos. Both the frequency of the titles for teacher and their apparent christological suppression in Matthew and Luke show that we are dealing with an authentic feature of the life of Jesus. Josephus, too, called Jesus a didaskalos (Ant. 18.63). The Hebrew/Aramaic rabbi points most overtly to ancient tradition; outside of Palestine there are hardly any epigraphic instances of it. Furthermore, aside from the canonical Gospels, in the entire corpus of early Christian literature the concept is attested only in one apocryphon (PBerol. 11710). The designation of Jesus as teacher in the Gospels serves, not to express his exalted status, but to describe the outward form of his ministry.

4. The Teaching Authority of Jesus.

If the respectful title rabbi placed Jesus on a level with other scribes, his own claim went much farther. This was sensed by his own contemporaries (Mk 1:21-22 par.). Jesus laid claim not merely to prophetic (see Prophet and Prophecy) but to messianic (see Christ) authority, first in a hidden fashion and then quite openly within the inner circle of his disciples (Mk 8:27-30). Various Jewish groups expected that the messiah would teach in the fullness of God's wisdom. This is borne out both in the targums (Tg. Gen. 49:10-11; Tg. Isa. 53:5, 11) and in apocalyptic (1 Enoch 46:3; 49:3-4; 51.3), Essene (CD VI, 11; VII, 18; 4Q174 1

I, 11; 4Q534; 4Q541; 11Q13 18-20, cf. T. Jud. [A] 21:1-4; T. Levi 18:2-6), *Samaritan (Memar Marqa 4:12, cf. Jn 4:25) and rabbinic (e.g., Midr. Ps 21:90a) writings (see Rabbinic Traditions and Writings). Such a claim becomes clear also in various words of Jesus (Mt 11:16-19, 25-26; 12:42; 23:37-39 par.; Mt 11:28-30). Thus he did not view his words on the same level as those of other Jewish teachers but rather ascribed to them eschatological validity (Mt 7:26-29; 24:35; Mk 8:38 par.). This was an inducement for Jesus' followers, already at the pre-Easter stage, to take the most important of his statements deeply into their minds.

5. Teaching Settings.

5.1. Teaching in the Synagogues. The establishment of *synagogues facilitated the instruction of broader masses of the people in the Law. It also furnished a setting for them to be involved in *Sabbath worship (GBL 3.1507-12). In Jesus' day every adult Jewish male could take part in the worship service by leading in *prayer and Scripture reading as well as by giving an interpretation of the Scripture. Training for this was provided by an elementary school system, unique for its time (GBL 3.1410-14), in which youth were taught reading and writing from the holy Scriptures, usually by the person who oversaw synagogue activities (m. Šabb. 1:3-4; cf. Lk 4:20). Knowledge of reading and writing in Second Temple Judaism was not a question of belonging to the upper class but of being pious. Jesus' frequent question "Have you not read [i.e., in the Scriptures]?" (Mk 2:25; Mt 12:5; Lk 10:26 etc.), the incident with the woman caught in adultery and his writing in the sand (Jn 8:6, 8), and his reading from the prophet Isaiah in the synagogue of Nazareth (Lk 4:16) show that Jesus was literate. In the synagogues adult males had access to at least the most important scrolls of Scripture (Pentateuch, Isaiah, Psalms) for making preparations for the worship service. It was natural for Jesus to teach in the framework of the synagogue, both through the interpretation of Sabbath readings from the *Law and Prophets (Lk 4:16-21) and in conjunction with preparation for the worship service.

5.2. Scribal Debates. There is no evidence that Jesus, like Paul (Acts 22:3), studied under a scribe, although he would have heard the teachings of some rabbis in the synagogues or in the temple courts. Neither was Jesus a pupil of John the Baptist. Although he had received no formal academic training, Jesus was accepted as a discussion partner by other scribes, who at the time were by no means all members of the sect of the *Pharisees (e.g., Mk 12:13-34 par.). The everyday language in *Galilee was probably Aramaic, whereas in *Jerusalem and Judea Middle-Hebrew was also a spoken language. It seems probable that scribal debates were conducted in the so-called holy language of Hebrew. There were also pious Jews living in Jerusalem who spoke Greek (Acts 9:29, hellēnistai). It is accordingly possible that Jesus himself sometimes debated and taught in Greek. In any case, translating his teaching presented no particular problem in a Palestine that was strongly bilingual if not indeed trilingual (see Languages of Palestine).

5.3. Proclamation to the Masses. While the leading rabbis taught in fixed locations and as a rule devoted themselves only to a chosen circle of pupils, Jesus resembled *John the Baptist and other prophetic preachers in directing his proclamation to the general populace (e.g., Mk 3:7-8 par.). In order to address people Jesus also taught in the open air in heavily traveled locations such as the northwest shore of the Sea of Galilee. Nevertheless, that does not exclude temporary stays in Capernaum and making a building belonging to Peter's family estate into a sort of teaching center (Mt 4:13; 9:1; Mk 1:29; 2:1-2). Jesus distinguished himself fundamentally from the Zealot preachers of revolution (see Revolutionary Movements) by directing his call for *repentance and discipleship not to the masses but to individuals from among the masses (Mk 1:16-20; Lk 9:57-62 par.). Chief among the themes of Jesus' public proclamation was the message of God's *love and the imminent manifestation of his sovereign reign (see Kingdom of God/Heaven).

5.4. The Instruction of the Disciples. From among a larger number of followers, Jesus called a circle of men who accompanied him constantly and learned from him by both word and example (Mk 3:13-19 par.). For this reason these followers were designated "disciples" (Heb. talmidim, Gk. mathētai). In contrast to early forms of rabbinic schools, the initiative for membership lay entirely with Jesus himself. The bond to him was so absolute that connection with another teacher was out of the question (Mt 23:9-10). Jesus instilled in his *disciples rules for their common life and for dealing with those outside their circle. He also sent them out on their own preaching mission, preparing them for this with special instruction (Mt 10; Mk 6:6-11; Lk 9:1-5; cf. Lk 10:1-12). Those who listened to Jesus' messengers (Heb. šēlūhīm, Gk. apostoloi; Mk 3:14 [Ⲛ, B], Lk 6:13; cf. Mt 10:16; Lk 10:3) expected them to be capable of passing on the basic features of their master's teaching in his own words. After rejection of his call to repentance in Galilee, Jesus (reminiscent of Is 8:16-

17) withdrew into the inner circle of the Twelve (Jn 6:66-69) (see Apostle). He disclosed to them his messiahship and the way of substitutionary suffering for sin (Mk 8:27-32 par.; 10:35-45 par.). In this manner the Twelve came to be especially qualified transmitters of Jesus' teaching in the aftermath of the first Easter (cf. Acts 1:21-26; 2:42; 6:4). If one asks which ancient didactic school Jesus' band of disciples most closely resembles, the best answer is probably those circles of followers attached to the OT prophets. There are also similarities with the early rabbinic schools. On the other hand, only remote comparisons are possible with the circles that formed around the peripatetic *Cynic philosophers. On the whole, however, Jesus' band of followers in its entirely distinctive orientation must be traced back to Jesus' messianic *authority (see Messiah).

6. Forms of Teaching.

6.1. Interpretation of Scripture. Apart from the abbreviated account of a synagogue sermon in Luke 4:21-27, the Synoptics preserve no extended examples of Jesus' interpretations of Scripture. Entire sermons were not well suited for polished oral reproduction, and the Synoptic writers declined to create any on their own. Nevertheless, quite apart from direct citations, Jesus' words are pervaded by allusions to Scripture (see Old Testament in the Gospels; Typology). Through school and synagogue he must have learned large sections of the OT by heart. This was a virtual necessity in part because the vowelless Hebrew texts could be recited error-free and with the right emphasis only through memorization. Occasionally one encounters interpretive methods (like the inference from the lesser to the greater, e.g., Mt 10:29-31) found in rabbinic exegesis as well; other passages remind one of the Qumran-Essene exegesis (Mt 11:2-6 // Lk 7:18-23; cf. 4Q521). Apparently the extended family of Jesus belonged neither to the Pharisees nor to the Essenes but to circles of the older hasidim, standing behind writings like the Testaments of the Twelve Patriarchs and parts of the Enochic tradition (cf. Jud 14).

6.2. Summaries of Teaching. In order to impress the basic tenets of his teaching on both outsiders and his disciples, Jesus made use of another technique already developed by the OT prophets. He summarized pithy sayings in short, poetically constructed utterances (Heb. māšāl, Gk. parabolē). In so doing he made use of parallelism (parallelismus membrorum) or chiasm. But translating his sayings back into Aramaic or Hebrew indicates that he also took advantage of such mnemonic helps as rhythm and rhyme or alliteration and assonance. Jesus often called attention to the importance of such summaries through the introductory *"amen" formula typical of him or through admonitions to "listen." Jesus' words were also easily remembered because of their vividness and his frequent use of rhetorical devices such as paradox, hyperbole, riddles, contrast, irony or emphasis.

6.3. Parables. While Jesus formulated many utterances as summaries of a sermon or debate, he set others before his hearers for their contemplation (cf. Mt 13:24, 31). Most worthy of mention here are those pericopes commonly known as *parables. Even these were not blurted out ad hoc but show every indication, like other forms above, of being very deliberate and condensed formations. The boundless allegorization of Jesus' parables was without doubt a mistake. Comparison with Jewish parables shows, however, that metaphorical depictions of spiritual matters enjoyed wide circulation. It presented no difficulties in a religious context (e.g.) to relate the mention of servants to prophets (Mk 12:1-11 par.). Jesus' parables are such densely formulated oral texts that it is legitimate to interpret them by paying close attention to each individual detail. Sayings of Jesus that we call parables are normally longer than the summaries of teaching mentioned in the previous section. This helps explain why there is rather more divergence in wording in the transmission of these parables.

6.4. Parabolic Acts. Following prophetic precedent, Jesus also often taught in this memorable manner. An example would be the *temple act (Mk 11:13-17 par.) or the cursing of the fig tree (Mk 11:12-14). A number of miracles (e.g., the Sabbath healings) need to be seen not only as merciful acts of assistance but also as acted out parables. When they were sent out, the disciples are sure to have told of such deeds, as well as incidents illustrative of Jesus' exemplary deportment. It is therefore highly likely that prior to the first Easter not only words of Jesus but also the beginnings of a historical tradition were already being passed on. Instruction through exemplary stories was an established custom both in Hellenistic schools in the form of chreiai and later with the rabbis (ma'āšim) (see Chreia/Aphorism).

6.5. Memorization and the First Oral and Written Tradition. The summaries of teaching and parables were forms deliberately shaped to preserve memoirs; they were easily remembered oral texts. About eighty percent of Jesus' sayings take the form of parallelismus membrorum. As an itinerant preacher, Jesus repeated them many times. They would have quite naturally embedded themselves in the hearers' minds. In addition, as the example of the Lord's Prayer shows (Lk 11:1-4), one may even assume that Jesus' disciples learned some material from him by heart in rather direct fashion. Learning through memorization was a basic pedagogical method in first-century *Judaism (Philo, Som. 1.105; Josephus, Ant. 4.210; Ag. Ap. 2.178) as well as in antiquity as a whole, whether at the elementary or advanced academic level. Most of Jesus' devotees maintained their residence where they heard him, not traveling with him. For them the need was all the more pressing for a body of teaching that could be easily remembered in the absence of the master. In the circle of resident sympathizers it is possible that words of Jesus were already fixed in written form prior to Easter (Ellis, 242-47).

7. Jesus as Teacher and the Tradition of the Gospels.

Classic form criticism (M. Dibelius, R. Bultmann) assessed the Synoptic tradition using the analogy of uncontrolled folk traditions. At the beginning of the Gospel tradition, however, stood Jesus as the messianic teacher of his disciples. In other respects as well there is every indication that the Jesus tradition will not admit of being treated as a fluctuating tradition of folklore. It was passed on within the early church in the form of a school tradition, a body of information taught and learned (1 Cor 11:23-26; 15:1-8). In both the popular and scientific mind today there is a widespread romantic notion that regards Jesus and his disciples as uneducated country folk. This appraisal overlooks the role that teaching and learning played among pious Jews already at that time. Acts 4:13 expresses the haughty point of view of the Jerusalem ruling class. It says nothing about the competence of Jesus' disciples—some of whom had already been pupils of John the Baptist (Jn 1:35-39; cf. Acts 1:21-22)—to pass on tradition. From the contemporary standpoint early Christianity, like Judaism, functioned rather more like a philosophy than a religion. For this reason teachers played an important role in the early church (Acts 13:1; 1 Cor 12:28-29; Eph 4:11; Jas 3:1). This holds especially true for the passing along of traditions. Perhaps Matthew had such Christian teachers in mind when he recorded words of Jesus like those found in Matthew 13:52; 23:8-10, 34-36.

Attempts have been made to minimize the significance of teaching and learning by referring to the prophetic-eschatological consciousness that reigned among Jesus' disciples and the early church. But the example of Qumran shows how little an end-times orientation excludes methodical handling of Scripture and cultivated transmission of texts. Oral tradition can accomplish a great deal when it is passed along (1) by a group of limited size using (2) mnemonically effective techniques. Both of these qualifications were fulfilled by the Gospel tradition through the form of Jesus' words and the existence of the circle of disciples. Not only against older form criticism but also against some more recent social memory theories, we must stress that especially in the Synoptic Gospels we not hear only the disciples of Jesus but the voice of the master himself.

See also CHREIA/APHORISM; FORM CRITICISM; HISTORICISMS AND HISTORIOGRAPHY; ORALITY AND ORAL TRANSMISSION; RABBINIC TRADITIONS AND WRITINGS; SCRIBES.

BIBLIOGRAPHY. G. Baltes, Hebräisches Evangelium und synoptische Überlieferung (WUNT II/312; Tübingen: Mohr Siebeck, 2011); D. L. Bock, "The Words of Jesus in the Gospels," in Jesus Under Fire, ed. M. J. Wilkins and J. P. Moreland (Grand Rapids: Zondervan, 1995) 73-100; S. Byrskog, Jesus the Only Teacher (ConBNT 24; Stockholm: Almqvist & Wiksell, 1994); D. M. Carr, Writing on the Tablet of the Heart (Oxford: Oxford University Press, 2005); D. A. deSilva, The Jewish Teachers of Jesus, James, and Jude (Oxford: Oxford University Press, 2012); J. T. Dillon, Jesus as a Teacher (Bethesda: International Scholars Publications, 1995); E. E. Ellis, Prophecy and Hermeneutic (Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1979); P. Foster, "Educating Jesus," JSHJ 4 (2006) 7-33; B. Gerhardsson, The Reliability of the Gospel Tradition (Peabody, MA: Hendrickson, 2001); J. A. Grassi, Teaching the Way (Washington, D.C.: University of America, 1982); M. Hengel, The Charismatic Leader and His Followers (New York: Crossroad, 1981); C. Hezser, Jewish Literacy in Roman Palestine (TSAJ 81; Tübingen: Mohr Siebeck, 2001); M. S. Jaffee, Torah in the Mouth (Oxford: Oxford University, 2001); J. Jeremias, New Testament Theology, Vol. 1 (London: SCM, 1971); J. P. Kealy, Jesus the Teacher (Denville, NJ: Dimension Books, 1978); C. Keith, Jesus' Literacy (LNTS 413; New York: T & T Clark, 2011); R. K. McIver, Memory, Jesus, and the Synoptic Gospels (SBLRBS 59; Atlanta: Society of Biblical Literature, 2011); A. Millard, Reading and Writing in the Time of Jesus (Sheffield: Sheffield Academic, 2000); G. Mussies, "Jesus' Idiolect," TD 26 (1978) 254-58; R. Riesner, Jesus als Lehrer (3rd ed; WUNT II/7; Tübingen: Mohr Siebeck, 1988); idem, "From the Messianic Teacher to the Gospels of Jesus Christ," in Handbook for the Study of the Historical Jesus, Vol. 1, ed. T. Holmén and S. E. Porter, Vol. One (4 vols.; Leiden: Brill, 2011) 405-46; H. Schürmann, Jesus-Gestalt und Geheimnis (Paderborn: Bonifatius, 1994); R. H. Stein, The Method and Message of Jesus' Teachings (rev. ed.; Louisville: Westminster John Knox, 1994); M. J. Wilkins, Diciple-ship in the Ancient World and Matthew's Gospel (2nd ed.; Grand Rapids: Baker, 1995); A. Zimmerman, Die urchristlichen Lehrer (2d ed.; WUNT II/12; Tübingen: Mohr Siebeck, 1988).

R. Riesner

TEMPLE

Many agree that for all its diversity, *Judaism was unified by three central components: Scripture, *Sabbath and the temple. The temple in first-century A.D. Palestine was central to Jewish life and practice; it was the centerpiece of not only Israelite religious practices, but also societal structures and political conflicts for the environment in which Jesus lived, ministered and died. It was the setting for political controversy and strife, both among Jews themselves and with respect to the Roman overlords. Finally, the temple provides the setting for some significant scenes in the life of Jesus and is the topic of some controversial discussion in the Gospels. Prior to examining its place in the Gospels themselves, there is merit in exploring its history and function, in addition to how it was viewed by Jews contemporary with Jesus.

1. Background to the Temple
2. Perspectives on the Temple in First-Century A.D. Judaism
3. The Temple in the Gospels
4. The Temple in Contemporary Historical Jesus Research

1. Background to the Temple.

1.1. The Temple of Solomon. From the account of the exodus to the monarchy, Israelites worshiped in the tabernacle until King David sought to construct what he viewed as a more suitable dwelling for Israel's God (2 Sam 7:2). God announced to David (through Nathan the prophet) that it was to be David's son Solomon who would build the temple (2 Sam 7:13; 1 Chron 22:10; cf. 1 Kings 5:5). The edifice was constructed on Mount Moriah (2 Chron 3:1) or Mount Zion, specifically identified as the place where a certain Araunah had his threshing floor (1 Chron 21:22-23). Solomon solicited the participation of Hiram, king of Tyre, who aided him by supplying skilled craftsmanship.

The structure was largely stone (limestone?). The interior was lined with cedar overlaid with gold, graven with cherubim, palms and flowers (1 Kings 6:15-29). It was divided into two main sections, the holy place (hēkal) and the "most holy place" or "holy of holies" (dēbīr) (1 Kings 6:16-18). The building, 60 cubits long, 20 wide and 30 high (1 Kings 6:2; cf. 1 Kings 6:20), was long and narrow, facing east. The holy place was 40 cubits by 20 cubits, and the most holy place 20 cubits in length, width and height. Within the porch were two bronze pillars, named "Jakin" and "Boaz," which are described in some detail (1 Kings 7:15-22; 2 Chron 3:15-17; 4:11-13; cf. Jer 52:20-23) but whose function remains obscure. Within the most holy place stood the ark of the covenant, with its two golden cherubim stationed atop its lid, wings outstretched so as to reach the walls of the room (1 Kings 6:23-28; 2 Chron 3:10-13). Within the holy place there were more temple furnishings, including the altar of incense, built of cedar and overlaid with gold (1 Kings 6:20-22; 7:48; 2 Chron 4:19). There were also ten candlesticks (1 Kings 7:49; 2 Chron 4:7) and a table for the showbread (1 Kings 7:48; cf. 2 Chron 4:8), all made of gold. Further courts contained an altar for burnt offerings (1 Kings 7:40, 45; 2 Chron 4:1, 11, 16), a bronze laver (1 Kings 7:23-26; 2 Chron 4:2-5, 10) and other cultic furnishings.

Once the structure was completed, the ark of the covenant was brought into it and deposited in the most holy place (1 Kings 8:1-21; 2 Chron 5; 6:1-11). The temple was dedicated by Solomon (1 Kings 8:22-61; 2 Chron 6:12-42), and the glory of the Lord dwelled within it (1 Kings 8:10-11; 2 Chron 5:13-14). Religious decline began in Solomon's lifetime (1 Kings 11:1-8) and continued thereafter. Eventually, Nebuchadnezzar of Babylon looted the temple and palace (cf. 2 Chron 36:7) and carried the king and a significant part of the population into captivity (2 Kings 24:1-17). The ruination was completed after an eighteen-month siege in 586 B.C. (2 Kings 25:1) with the destruction of Jerusalem and its temple, with only a few left behind (2 Kings 25:11-12).

1.2. The Temple of Zerubbabel. Putting an end to this captivity, Cyrus, king of Persia, permitted Jews to return to Jerusalem and rebuild their temple (2 Chron 36:23; Ezra 1:1-4). The return began in 538 B.C., and the ensuing temple was similar to that of Solomon, though apparently lacking its adornment (Ezra 3:12-13; Hag 2:3). The temple was known as that of Zerubbabel, governor during that period. He restored the sacred vessels and provided for further building (Ezra 1:6-11; 6:3-8:36). Despite his ongoing efforts (Ezra 3:7-13), the building project faced opposition and was suspended until 520 B.C. (Ezra 4). At the exhortation of the prophets Haggai and Zechariah, building resumed and was completed with celebration in 516 B.C. (Ezra 5—6). As was the case with the earlier temple, the temple grounds were also divided into a holy place and a most holy place, though the latter did not contain the ark (m. Yoma 5:2), and the contents of both rooms were more modest than that of its predecessor (cf. 1 Macc 1:21-22). Subsequent history of the temple is found in 1 Maccabees and Josephus, though details are scant.

1.3. The Temple of Herod. Sources for the Herodian temple are somewhat conflicted, with Mishnah Middot probably presenting an idealization rather than historical reconstruction, and further information provided by Josephus's Jewish War and Jewish Antiquities, which are inconsistent (Ant. 15.380-402; J.W. 5.184-227; see also Let. Arist. 83-90). Nevertheless, we can still know some important things about the temple. Herod began his work on the temple in 20-19 B.C. (cf. Josephus, Ant. 15.380-87; J.W. 1.401-2). To allay fears of his intent, he gathered materials for the new temple before the dismantling of the old. He trained one thousand *priests in the skilled labor required for the sanctuary (ten thousand skilled workmen were used altogether). The temple proper (naos) was finished in about eighteen months, although eight years were required for the courts and considerably longer for the entire complex (Jn 2:20 records forty-six years). It was not completed until A.D. 64. Its white marble and gold plating resembled a snow-covered mountain (Josephus, J.W. 5.222-27).

The Herodian structure was nearly double that of the Solomonic temple (Josephus, J.W. 1.401-2), though exact measurements, at least of the court of Gentiles, differ in the sources (cf. m. Mid. 2:1; Josephus, Ant. 15.391-403). It was an irregular structure, more broad on the north than south, surrounded by a stone wall with several gates (Josephus, Ant. 15.410-20; cf. m. Mid. 1:3), a porch on the east side (Jn 10:23; Acts 3:11) and open spaces where some commerce occurred (Mt 21:12 par.; Jn 2:14-16). Here was the location where Jesus ministered to the blind and lame (Mt 21:14) and overturned the money tables (Mt 21:12 par.). Increasing the size required extensive topographic reconfigurations, including filling in the valleys to the west and north, and part of the Kidron Valley to the south. Modern archeological analysis suggests that the retaining wall for the Temple Mount was 1,590 feet (west) by 1,035 feet (north), by 1,536 feet (east) by 912 feet (south).

The "sanctuary" (Josephus, J.W. 5.190-200) contained the court of women, the court of Israel and the court of the priests, as well as the temple itself (Josephus, Ant. 15.410-20). The court of women admitted Jewish women (and men), but not Gentiles. It was about 135 cubits square (m. Mid. 2:5). It also contained receptacles for financial offerings (cf. Mk 12:41; Lk 21:1; Jn 8:20). This is where the reader of Scripture meets Anna (Lk 2:36-37) and the widow who offers her mites (Luke 21:1-4). This court gave way to the inner courts: the court of Israel and that of the priests (cf. m. Mid. 2:5). The entire portion of the structure was about 187 cubits long (east to west) by 135 cubits wide (m. Mid. 2:6; 5:1), split in half (cf. Josephus, Ant. 13.372-76).

Within the court of priests stood an altar for burnt offerings and other cultic articles (cf. Josephus, J.W. 5.222-27). The temple itself was built on blocks of white marble, decorated with gold, 100 cubits high and 60 wide (though cf. Josephus, Ant. 15.391-402). The temple's interior was divided into the holy place (hēkal) and the most holy place (dēbīr). The holy place, as with Solomon's temple, was 40 cubits long by 20 cubits wide, and 60 cubits high (J.W. 5.215-21; though cf. m. Mid. 4:6, which says 40 cubits). Between the two chambers hung a veil (or two veils [m. Mid. 4:7]). According to Josephus, the veil symbolized "a panorama of the heavens, excluding the signs of the zodiac" (J.W. 5.214). The holy of holies was empty (cf. m. Yoma 5:2), and the holy place was richly ornamented (Josephus, Ant. 15.391-402; J.W. 5.212-14). According to Josephus, the outside of the temple was adorned with so much gold that when the sun shone upon it, it virtually blinded those who looked at it. Other sources concur: "No one has seen a truly beautiful building unless he has seen the Temple" (b. Sukkah 51b). Indeed, the structure was praised by Josephus as a building with a "magnificence never surpassed" (J.W. 1.401), seemingly comparable to that of Solomon (J.W. 5.137, 185), whom he attempted to outdo, or at least outspend (cf. Josephus, Ant. 15.385-87, 396).

2. Perspectives on the Temple in First-Century A.D. Judaism.

Daniel's vision (Dan 7—12) anticipates a renewal of the temple as part of God's eschatological triumph (Dan 12:11-12). Other biblical prophets similarly look to the establishment of an enormous eschatological temple (cf. Ezek 40—47), despite misgivings about cultic practices of the time (Ezek 8—10). God would one day restore the fortunes of Jerusalem (Zech 1:16-17; cf. Is 2:1-4). Its location, Zion, was the mountain of God (cf. Ps 68:16; Is 40:9). Such tension between dissatisfaction and corruption, on the one hand, and hope of restoration and promise, on the other, continues into the Second Temple period. The destruction of the temple was anticipated prior to the time of Jesus (cf. T. Levi 10:3; 14:1–15:3; 16:1–5; T. Jud. 23:1–5), likely in reaction to the Hasmonean priesthood of the second century B.C. (although Christian interpolations into the Testaments of the Twelve Patriarchs render such observations tenuous; cf. Liv. Pro. 12:11). Even Josephus foresaw its end (J.W. 3.400–402; cf. Tacitus, Hist. 1.10; 5.13).

Apocalyptic traditions of the Second Temple period, likely drawing from Ezekiel's vision of a new temple, similarly looked to a future sanctuary (cf. 1 En. 90:28–29). Initially, it was widely held that Zerubbabel's structure paled in comparison to that of Solomon (cf. Hag 2:9; Zech 14:8–11; 1 En. 90:29) and was even considered ritually impure (1 En. 89:72–74; cf. T. Levi 15:1; T. Mos. 5:3–4). An earlier portion of 1 Enoch (the so-called Apocalypse of Weeks [1 En. 91; 93], dating from ca. 200 B.C.) asserts that ever since the *exile all of Israel was apostate, apparently because of its inability to rightly engage in cultic worship (1 En. 93:9). Others viewed any human structure as inferior to that which God showed Moses at Sinai (Ex 25:8) and therefore anticipated the establishment of that heavenly sanctuary on earth (cf. 2 Bar. 4:5; T. Levi 5:1; 18:6; Jub. 1:16, 27–28; 25:21; 49:18). Shortly after the destruction of the Herodian temple in A.D. 70, 2 Baruch anticipates a heavenly sanctuary (2 Bar. 32:2) that will “be renewed in glory and perfected forever” (2 Bar. 32:4; cf. 2 Bar. 32:5; 68:5). Some of the cultic articles are said to have been removed prior to its destruction (2 Bar. 6:7) in anticipation of their restoration in an eschatological cultic structure (2 Bar. 6:8; cf. 2 Bar. 10:19; 80:2; 2 Macc 2:5). Similarly, even the Herodian cult's most ardent critics anticipated a renewal for the house of the Lord (T. Levi 17:10).

The members of the Qumran sect seem to have separated themselves from the Jerusalem temple, but whether they rejected it entirely or instead hoped for restorations of its conservative practices of ritual purity is debated (see Dead Sea Scrolls). Qumran documents are, of course, replete with condemnations of the cultic practices in Jerusalem, with their frequent references to the high priest as the “wicked priest” (1QpHab I, 13; VIII, 8–9; IX, 9; XI, 4–5) who has defiled God's sanctuary (1QpHab XII, 8–9), robbed the poor (1QpHab VIII, 12; IX, 5; X, 1; XII, 10) and accumulated personal wealth (cf. 1QpHab XII, 9; 4Q169 I, 11). Building on the vision of Ezekiel 40–48, the Qumran New Jerusalem document (5Q15) provides an angelic tour of the heavenly city and its eschatological temple that provides a description and some variances from that described by Ezekiel. The Temple Scroll (11Q19) reads as revelation to Moses like the one he received for the fashioning of the tabernacle. The text describes in considerable detail, not unlike the tabernacle texts of Exodus, specifications for its dimensions and fabrication. Further Qumran texts discuss the temple in a variety of contexts, either as the “house of the Lord” or “house of God” (4Q522 9 II, 5; 11Q19 XXIX, 3; XXX, 4; cf. 11Q19 III, 4) or, more commonly, the “sanctuary” (miqdāš). Frequently, such language conceives of a heavenly sanctuary (4Q201 1 IV, 7) where Sabbath sacrifices are offered by an angelic priesthood (Songs of the Sabbath Sacrifice [4Q400–407]). Yet the centrality of worship in Zion (cf. 11Q5 XXII, 1–15) and its sanctuary (11Q5 XXIV, 4) are presumed. The temple took on cosmological symbolism, with its earthly practices thought to reflect that of its heavenly counterpart. In that sense, priests are sometimes thought of in terms of angelic beings (cf. Mal 2:7; Eccles 5:6; Jub. 31:14; Philo, Spec. 1.114–16; 4Q511 35; 4Q286 2, 2).

Some documents (CD-A I, 3) speak of God's anger toward the temple where improper services are conducted (CD-A IV, 1, 18–19; 4Q394 8 III, 5; 4Q396 I, 1; II, 1, 6, 8, 10; cf. CD-A III, 18–19), cultic orders are changed (CD III, 6; 1Q22 I, 8–10; 4Q390 1) and forbidden marriages take place (CD-A V, 6; cf. Jub. 30.15–17), causing its contamination and rendering the cult ineffective (CD-A VI, 12–13; cf. CD-A VI, 16; CD-B XX, 23; 4Q390 2, I; 1 En. 89:73). To compensate, the yahad (community) seems to have considered its practices a necessary, sufficient and temporary substitute for the cultic practices of the Jerusalem temple (1QS IV, V, 6; VIII, 11; cf. 4Q258 1 I, 4; 4Q258; 2 II, 6–7; 1Q34 + 1Q34bis 3 II, 1–8; 4Q511 35, 3). Similarly, Josephus says, “God himself . . . turned away from our city . . . because he deemed the temple to be no longer a clean dwelling place for Him” (Ant. 20.166 [cf. Josephus, J.W. 5.19]).

3. The Temple in the Gospels.

3.1. Temple in Matthew. The temple first appears in Matthew's Gospel in the *temptation narrative (Mt 4:1–11), where the devil places Jesus “on the pinnacle of the temple” (Mt 4:5). At times, Matthew depicts temple cult in such a way that participation in it seems to be presumed (Mt 5:23–24; 8:4). Yet even cultic worship is put in perspective, such as in Matthew 9:13, where the Matthean Jesus states that he desires “mercy, not sacrifice” (also Mt 12:7; cf. Hos 6:6). The expression is a Hebraic idiom meaning that God desires mercy more than sacrifice, and it indicates a priority over the temple and its cult. This is similar to Jesus' assertion that "something greater than the temple is here" (Mt 12:6; cf. Mt 12:41-42).

Jesus' entry into Jerusalem (Mt 21:1-11) and his cleansing of the temple (see Temple Act) are interpreted by many as a demonstration of the completion of the necessity of the temple's sacrificial system. Jesus now replaces the temple, and he is the location where God's presence and atonement were experienced. Others recognize that Jesus' insistence on the temple being a house of prayer, accompanied by his actions, looks for it to retain some legitimate function, which was being frustrated by corruption and exploitation within the temple precincts. On this view, Jesus, as messianic king, comes to the temple to purge it of practices that mocked its divinely intended purpose.

Immediately upon entering Jerusalem (Mt 21:12-13), Jesus goes into the temple (Mt 21:12) and heals the "blind and lame" (Mt 21:14), even though they are explicitly forbidden entrance to the house of the Lord (2 Sam 5:8; cf. Lev 21:17-19; 1QSa II, 5-22; CD-A XV, 15-17). The reader perhaps is intended to recall Jesus' claim to superiority over the temple, but it seems more likely that Jesus is in fact upholding the law by removing the quality that forbade them entrance in the first place: he "heals their disabilities so that they may then enter (cf. Mt 8:4). Questions about Jesus' authority later arise, likewise in the temple courts (Mt 21:23; cf. Mt 21:33-46; 22:1-14).

The temple is a prominent feature in Matthew's unique "seven woes" section (Mt 23), where Jesus chastises the "blind guides" for thinking that swearing by the temple means nothing, but swearing by the gold of the temple is binding (Mt 23:16). Jesus insists that swearing by this temple (and its gold) is the same as swearing by the one who dwells in it (Mt 23:21-22). Matthew seems to presume God is still present within the temple (Mt 23:21). In the same chapter Matthew records the curious murder of Zechariah, son of Berechiah, between the temple and the altar (Mt 23:35; cf. 2 Chron 24:20-22), where Jesus' point of contention, in typical prophetic fashion (Jer 7:11), is misuse of the temple (Mt 21:13; cf. Is 56:7). In the same chapter the Matthean Jesus declares, "Look, your house is left to you desolate" (Mt 23:38). Traditionally, scholars have seen this as a reference to God's abandonment of his own temple, reminiscent of divine abandonment of the first temple just prior to its destruction (Ezek 8:6, 12; 9:3, 9; 11:23; cf. Josephus, J.W. 5.412-13; 6.295-300; Tacitus, Hist. 5.13; 2 Bar. 4:12, 8:2; 64:6-7), when the Shekinah departed the temple (cf. 1 Kings 9:6-9; Is 64:10-11). (The destruction of the temple was seen as subsequent to God's departure, both of which were inescapably the result of the sins of God's people.) This is apparent in a similar use of Matthew's "desolation" (cf. T. Levi 15:1), perhaps underscored by the departure of Jesus' presence (Mt 18:20; cf. m. 'Abot 3:2) from the temple and in prophetic fashion going toward the Mount of Olives (Mt 24:1-2; cf. Zech 14:4). Subsequently, Jesus' disciples marvel at the structure, yet Jesus emphatically predicts that "not one stone will be left here upon another; all will be thrown down" (Mt 24:2 NRSV), likely a characteristic of divine judgment (Mt 23:39 [citing Ps 118:26]; 24:3-25:46; cf. Zech 14:4).

Among the signs of the end of the age (Mt 24) is "desolating sacrilege standing in the holy place" (Mt 24:15). The citation is taken from Daniel (Dan 9:27; 11:31; 12:11), by which Matthew seems to identify the defilement of the temple with God's judgment on rebellious Israel. Later, Jesus is falsely accused of claiming to destroy the temple (Mt 26:59-61). Matthew seems to emphasize Jesus' ability, while identifying the temple as God's (cf. Mt 26:61). Finally, at the cross a passer-by refers to the false accusations pertaining to the temple against Jesus by mocking him (Mt 27:40). The temple is largely seen as a legitimate institution established by the Hebrew Scriptures, yet the corruption of the priests and others (Mt 21:13; 23:35) and the rejection of Jesus (Mt 21:42-43; cf. 22:5-7) bring divinely ordained destruction.

3.2. Temple in Mark. Discussion of the temple in Mark's Gospel, though relatively concise, is not insignificant. There are some references to the temple and its cult early on (Mk 1:40-45; cf. Mk 5:43; 7:36), but the temple becomes more significant in Mark 11-15. Mark's view of the temple seems to be largely negative. On his entry into Jerusalem, Jesus enters the temple, only to leave it again (Mk 11:11). Prior to his return the next day, he symbolically curses the fig tree for having borne no fruit (Mk 11:12-14), often taken as symbolic of the fruitlessness of the temple cult enacted under a corrupted priesthood. Upon his return to the temple (Mk 11:15), Jesus drives out those selling and buying, overturns the tables of the moneychangers and allows no one to carry anything through the temple (Mk 11:16). Mark says that Jesus was "teaching" (Mk 11:17) about the "house" being called a "house of prayer for all nations," which they have made into a "den of robbers" (NRSV). Here Jesus' language refers to the condemning prophecy of Jeremiah (Jer 7) in which the prophet announces doom for the Solomonic temple. In response, the chief priests and scribes look for a way to kill Jesus (Mk 11:18), but he and his disciples leave the city for the night (Mk 11:19). The next morning (Mk 11:20-21) the fig tree is withered away “to its roots” (NRSV), and his cursing is largely taken as a proleptic sign prefiguring the destruction of the temple cultus (Telford) to symbolize the fruitlessness of the temple, which faces a similar fate. It is ripe for eschatological judgment.

Later in the same pericope Jesus and his disciples come to Jerusalem, where Jesus is walking in the temple (Mk 11:27). He is confronted by chief priests, scribes and elders who question his authority to do “these things” (Mk 11:28), presumably in reference to his overturning tables, if not also his teaching. Although Jesus refuses to answer (Mk 11:33), he seems to remain in the temple when he speaks in parables (Mk 12). He begins with the parable of the vineyard (Mk 12:1-11), which is directed against the Jewish leaders (Mk 12:12), who, for fear of the crowds, left him alone and sent some Pharisees and Herodians “to trap him in what he said” (Mk 12:13 NRSV [similarly, Mk 12:14-34]). Later, the Markan Jesus discusses the Davidic identity of the Messiah (Mk 12:35-37) within its precincts, which may suggest that his identity is in some sense tied with the temple (see Son of David).

Mark 13 is a complicated and debated text. It begins with Jesus’ departure from the temple and his disciples’ statement of admiration of it (Mk 13:1). Immediately Jesus anticipates its destruction: “Not one stone will be left here upon another; all will be thrown down” (Mk 13:2 NRSV); and he prophetically leaves the temple for the Mount of Olives (Mk 13:3), where he discusses the sign that all these things will be accomplished (Mk 13:4-31). Jesus warns against misleading (false) signs (Mk 13:5-13) but points to a seemingly more secure sign regarding seeing “the desolating sacrilege set up where it ought not to be” (Mk 13:14 NRSV [cf. Dan 9:27; 11:30]) and gives instructions for their flight. Again, eschatological *judgment for the temple is likely in view (see Apocalypticism and Apocalyptic Teaching).

Later, Jesus is brought to the courtyard of the high priest (Mk 14:53), where the accusations are made against him to put him to death (Mk 14:55-56). Some explicitly false testimonies (Mk 14:57) claim to have heard him say, “I will destroy this temple that is made with hands, and in three days I will build another, not made with hands” (Mk 14:58 NRSV). The high priest associates such questions with Jesus’ messianic identity (Mk 14:60-61). Surely statements about the destruction of the temple and Jesus’ messiahship (Mk 14:57-62) belong together, misunderstood even at the cross (Mk 15:29-32) where passers-by scoff at him for the aforementioned false testimony (Mk 15:29-30). Some scholars see Mark’s presentation of Jesus’ messianism as one in which the end of the present temple foresees the establishment of a new one, the *church. Some have contended that the temple theme is a means of restoration, with Jesus presented as a new eschatological temple.

3.3. Temple in Luke. Luke’s interest in the temple is found in its opening verses. In recounting the story of Zechariah, the narrative introduces his service as priest before God to serve in the sanctuary (Lk 1:8-10). The *angel of the Lord appears to him there and announces the coming of *John the Baptist (Lk 1:12-18). When Zechariah doubts this, he is made mute (Lk 1:19-20) for a time. The people are concerned about his delay in the sanctuary and soon realize that he had seen a vision there (Lk 1:21-22). Later, John is circumcised (Lk 1:59), presumably at the temple. Similarly, when Jesus is born, his parents bring him to Jerusalem “to present him to the Lord” (Lk 2:22) and to offer the sacrifices required by the law (Lk 2:24, 27). There, at the temple, they met Simeon, who was led by the Spirit into the temple (Lk 2:27) and who takes the child in his arm and praises God (Lk 2:28-32) for bringing in the child “a light for revelation to the Gentiles and for glory to your people Israel” (Lk 2:32 NRSV). Similarly, the elderly prophetess Anna, who “never left the temple but worshiped there with fasting and prayer night and day” (Lk 2:37), praised God and spoke about Jesus “to all who were looking for the redemption of Jerusalem” (Lk 2:38 NRSV). Jesus and his family leave Jerusalem, only to return every year for the Passover (Lk 2:41). There, at the age of twelve, Jesus was found in the temple, “sitting among the teachers, listening to them and asking them questions” (Lk 2:46). When questioned about this, Jesus informs his parents, “I must be in my Father’s house” (Lk 2:49).

Later, we find the temple in the third of Luke’s temptation encounters (Lk 4:1-12). Here the devil takes Jesus to Jerusalem and places him on the pinnacle of the temple, imploring him to throw himself down (Lk 4:9). When Jesus refuses, the devil leaves him (Lk 4:12-13). Later, Jesus heals a man with leprosy (Lk 5:12-15) and commands him to show himself “to the priest, and, as Moses commanded, make an offering for your cleansing, for a testimony to them” (Lk 5:14 NRSV). Luke also makes cryptic reference to the blood of Zechariah, “who perished between the altar and the sanctuary” (Lk 11:51 NRSV), likewise without explanation. In anticipation of his death in Jerusalem (Lk 13:33-35), Jesus announces to the people of the city that their “house” is left to them, but the language of its desolation found in the other Synoptics seems muted (Lk 13:35). Similarly, Jesus enters the temple (Lk 19:45) and drives out the vendors. He quotes, as in the other Synoptics, about God's house being a house of *prayer (Lk 19:46), and the narrator mentions the Jesus was teaching every day in the temple (Lk 19:47). One such incident is described in Luke 20, where Jesus is teaching people in the temple and telling the good news (Lk 20:1). On that occasion Jesus' authority is questioned by his opponents. Perhaps it is not incidental that questions of authority arise there, of all places, implying Jesus' divine authority (Lk 20:3-8). Likewise in the temple Jesus is questioned regarding the payment of taxes to Caesar (Lk 20:21-26) and the resurrection (Lk 20:27-38). His answer raises questions about his identity, again within the temple as the messianic son of David (Lk 20:41).

In Luke 21 Jesus is still in the temple, where he observes a poor widow putting her two "mites" into the treasury (Lk 21:1-4). While some present spoke of its beauty, Jesus announces that "the days will come when not one stone will be left upon another; all will be thrown down" (Lk 21:6 NRSV). This general observation is then followed by more specific announcements about armies surrounding Jerusalem (Lk 21:20) and other such eschatological calamities when "Jerusalem will be trampled on by the Gentiles" (Lk 21:24 NRSV). Jesus' presence in the temple was not an isolated incident, according to Luke's account. Luke records that "every day [Jesus] was teaching in the temple" (Lk 21:37 [cf. Lk 22:53]), yet he would spend the night on the Mount of Olives only to return to the temple in the morning and teach (Lk 21:38). At the end of Luke's Gospel, after Jesus' *death, *resurrection and *ascension, his followers "were continually in the temple blessing God" (Lk 24:53 NRSV).

Luke's portrayal of the temple, then, is largely positive. For Luke, along with Acts, the temple is a (legitimate) place of worship, service and sacrifice to God. It is a place where divine revelations are received (Lk 1:18-23), and it is identified by Jesus as his house (Lk 2:49; cf. Is 56:7). Jerusalem and its temple are the locus of God's presence. Yet some scholars see that as a symbol of Jewish election, it is a barrier. Luke's concern is the gospel for all people—Jew, Samaritan, *Gentile. Therefore it becomes, in Luke, a place of departure for missions to all peoples rather than a gathering place for all peoples.

3.4. Temple in John. Scholars have often suggested that in John's Gospel Jesus not only reveals divine presence but also replaces the temple as the location of that presence. Much of the temple's centrality is confined to John 1—12 (the prologue and the so-called Book of Signs), where it is the setting for Jesus' interaction with Jews. It is debated whether the Johannine Jesus replaces and fulfills the Jerusalem temple and its cultic activity, or whether the temple remains the continuing manifestation of divine presence.

From the outset of the Fourth Gospel readers recognize Jesus dwelling among people (Jn 1:14) in a manner recalling God's travels with his people in the tabernacle of the Hebrew Scriptures (Ex 26—27; 1 Kings 6:13). Jesus' cleansing of the temple occurs much earlier in John's narrative (Jn 2:14-22) than in its Synoptic counterparts, perhaps foreshadowing the temple's destruction. Jesus' concern, in this reading, is the restoration of pure worship (cf. Zech 14:21; Mal 3:1, 3). Strikingly, as Jesus is driving out those who are making God's house a "marketplace" (Jn 2:16), the disciples recall Psalm 69:9: "Zeal for your house will consume me" (Jn 2:17 NRSV). When asked by the Jewish leaders for a sign to justify his actions (Jn 2:18), Jesus responds, "Destroy this temple, and in three days I will raise it up" (Jn 2:19). When his opponents object (Jn 2:20), the narrator reveals that he was speaking of "the temple of his body" (Jn 2:21 NRSV). Jesus speaks of a "temple" being destroyed and raised within the temple itself. Moreover, it is significant that this event occurs during the Passover (Jn 2:13, 23) and is recounted some time after the destruction of Jerusalem's temple. Cumulatively, these factors seem to suggest Jesus' supplanting the Jerusalem temple as the center of worship for God's people.

The next reference to the temple comes with Jesus' discussion with the Samaritan woman (Jn 4:19-24). Here the woman recognizes Jesus as a *prophet and indicates her recognition that as such, he would see worship as properly done in Jerusalem (Jn 4:19-20). Strikingly, Jesus announces that the "hour is coming" when she "will worship the Father neither on this mountain nor in Jerusalem" (Jn 4:21 NRSV). Indeed, the hour is coming, and is present, "when the true worshipers will worship the Father in spirit and truth" (Jn 4:23 NRSV). Later, speaking with his disciples, Jesus indicates that he himself is "the truth" (Jn 14:6) and the climactic revelation of the Father (Jn 14:9-11). Again, John makes the connection subtly, but his readers could hardly miss it, particularly through the lenses of historical hindsight with respect to the destruction of Jerusalem in A.D. 70.

Later, Jesus returns to Jerusalem and its temple for the Jewish festivals of Tabernacles (Jn 7:1—8:59) and Dedication (Jn 10:22-39) (see Feasts). The former recalls Moses' producing water from the rock in the wilderness (Ex 17:1-7; Num 20:8-13), which itself anticipates the flowing of water "from below the threshold of the temple" (Ezek 47:1; cf. Ezek 47:2-12; Zech 14:8). On the last day of that festival Jesus cries out, "Let anyone who is thirsty come to me, and let the one who believes in me drink" (Jn 7:37-38). John adds that this was in recognition of the Scriptures: "As the scripture has said, 'Out of the believer's heart shall flow rivers of living water'" (NRSV [citing Is 58:11]). It seems that whereas in the prophetic tradition it flows from the temple, in John it flows from Jesus, who is the fulfillment of all the Feast of Tabernacles anticipated. Later, at the Feast of Dedication (Jn 10:22-39), Jesus is again in the temple, where he is questioned about his identity as the Christ (Jn 10:24). Jesus both affirms the claim and identifies himself with God (Jn 10:30, 33). That the question of his identity occurs in this location may suggest further connection with his identity as the new center of worship.

The centrality of the temple to Jewish national identity is seen in John 11:48-52, where the chief priests and the Pharisees raise the concern about how the Romans may respond to belief in Jesus. Specifically, they fear that the Romans "will come and destroy both our holy place and our nation" (Jn 11:48 NRSV), after which the high priest Caiaphas "prophe-sied that Jesus was about to die for the nation" (Jn 11:51 NRSV). Yet, although Jesus does indeed die, he will rise again, whereas the temple, which his death was intended to protect, falls. Further explicit references to the temple are wanting. However, with John's suggestion thus far of Jesus' replacement of the temple, it is possible that statements about Jesus providing access to the Father (Jn 14:6-11; 16:16-27) may well suggest that although "temple" language has faded, Jesus' temple function endures. [D. M. Gurtner]

4. The Temple in Contemporary Historical Jesus Research.

It is beyond question that the temple occupies a central role in the plot line and theology of each of the four Gospels. Granting this, however, does not entail that the evangelists' shared interest in the temple cult was also at the heart of the historical Jesus' program. After all, the evangelists had their own interests, and it is possible that the cultic emphasis in each Gospel has more to do with post-Easter concerns than any historical reality in the setting of the historical Jesus. While much of twentieth-century Jesus scholarship would argue that Jesus' interest in the temple cultus was modest at best, all this began to change when, in a wave of research commonly known as the Third Quest, scholars began to attend much more closely to Jesus' Jewishness and, therewith, the temple. If we take the available data at face value, Jesus' relationship to the temple was one of mutual opposition. But what was the nature of this conflict? To this question, historical Jesus scholars have suggested a variety of answers.

One of the earlier conversation partners in the more recent discussion is B. Meyer. In The Aims of Jesus (1979) Meyer argues that Jesus was a self-proclaimed messianic figure who sought to usher in the reign of God through his teaching and symbolic acts. The goal of his ministry was the restoration of Israel, and an important gesture toward accomplishing that goal was the temple action (Mk 11:15-17). Jesus was well aware of the explosive implications of this enacted parable, and through it he betokened both the necessity of reform and the imminence of the eschaton (Meyer, 170). At the same time, the sayings regarding Jesus' intention to rebuild the temple, which are historically secure, seal his messianic self-consciousness (Meyer, 180-81). It also speaks to the totalizing nature of Jesus' agenda vis-à-vis the temple. As Meyer puts it, "To evoke, even conditionally, the destruction of 'this temple' was to touch not just stone and gold and not only the general well being but history and hope, national identity, self-understanding, and pride" (Meyer, 183). Thus, according to Meyer, the temple becomes a kind of foil of self-understanding and template by which Jesus understood the scope of his own program.

A rather different route is taken up five years later in M. Borg's Conflict, Holiness, and Politics in the Teachings of Jesus (1984). Borg argues that Jesus took exception to the temple not so much on account of the holiness codes bound up in temple worship (a classic position of older liberal Jesus scholarship) as on account of the exclusivity with which such holiness normally was associated (Borg, 164). Moreover, according to Borg, inasmuch as the temple also functioned as a kind of catalyst for national resistance to foreign powers, Jesus' criticism of the temple was aimed not at the cult itself but at the violent resistance that the cult had come to symbolize (Borg, 195-99).

Published around the same time as Borg's book, E. P. Sanders's Jesus and Judaism (1985) exhibits similarities with Meyer's outline. Like Meyer, Sanders is concerned to present Jesus as a prophet who saw himself as instrumental in the restoration of *Israel (see Exile and Restoration). Within this restoration the key event is the temple action: "The conflict over the temple seems deeply implanted in the tradition, and that there was such a conflict would seem to be indisputable" (Sanders 1985, 61). Rejecting the commonly touted interpretation that Jesus' temple action was a reforming gesture, Sanders maintains that the act of overturning the moneychangers' tables was purely a "symbolic demonstration" (Sanders 1985, 69), signifying the imminent destruction of the temple. Jesus' anticipation of the temple's destruction was in turn driven by his expectation of the new eschatological order, which included the long-awaited heavenly temple as a central fixture within the eschatological scenario. For Sanders, as for many scholars, the temple action was a catalyst for his death. A similar approach to the temple is taken nearly two decades later by S. Bryan in Jesus and Israel's Traditions of Judgement and Restoration (2002).

In Jesus and the Victory of God (1996) N. T. Wright depicts Jesus as a deeply Jewish figure who appropriates traditional Jewish categories and reshapes them, substantively at points, according to his own unique vision of Israel. It was a vision that included, as it did for John the Baptizer, a replacement of existing cultic structures (Wright, 160-61). Displaying a scandalous failure to link *repentance with going to the temple, Jesus acts "as if he is simply bypassing the Temple system altogether" (Wright, 130 [cf. 257]). Although John and Jesus occupied different moments in the unfolding course of redemptive events, for both figures, as for their contemporary observers, the dispensation of forgiveness outside of the temple system signified a reconstitution of the cultus, which in turn implied the end of exile and the coming of the messiah (Wright, 128, 335). Agreeing with Sanders's eschatological focus, on the one side, Wright also agrees with Borg, on the other side, that Jesus objects to the temple precisely as a symbol of malignant nationalism.

Recently, in Jesus the Temple (2010), N. Perrin builds on Wright's overall proposal by examining the ways in which the Jesus movement, much like other countertemple movements of the day, functioned as a substitute temple. As such, it both leveled a critique of the existing temple leadership and embodied Israel's long-awaited eschatological temple breaking in through Jesus's life and ministry. The self-identity of the Jesus movement as a temple movement helps explain the origins of temple theology, implicit and explicit, discernible within the NT corpus and other early church writings. Perrin's work was anticipated by C. Fletcher-Louis's two-part study on "Jesus and the High Priestly Messiah" (2006; 2007), arguing that Jesus' aims fundamentally revolved around the categories of temple and priesthood.

A number of other scholars (e.g., J. Milgrom, J. Neusner, J. Klawans, B. Chilton) have been particularly interested in the connection between the temple and Jesus' purity program (see Clean and Unclean). Of these, B. Chilton is perhaps the most prolific if not the most influential. In his view (Chilton 1992; 1996), Jesus' critique was fundamentally a critique of the temple's purity practices. This critique takes only thinly veiled form in the parable of the wicked tenants, and then finally results in Jesus' attempt, in the *Last Supper, to establish a new sacrificial meal that would in effect constitute a new temple for his followers.

Shifts in scholarship indicate that the temple occupies a far more central role in the historical Jesus' thinking than heretofore recognized. This shift is likely a reflection of closer readings of the Gospels and increased sensitivity to the manifold significance of Judaism's cult. If the temple was, from the time of the early monarchy, the veritable backbone of Jewish life, there is hint that such significance had in any sense decreased by the time we reach the first century A.D. On the contrary, with steadily rising expectations that Yahweh would finally usher in a temple "not made with human hands," one might say that Jesus' world and the world of the evangelists was one in which focus on the cultus was at its peak. [N. Perrin]

See also APOCALYPTICISM AND APOCALYPTIC TEACHING; CLEAN AND UNCLEAR; ESCHATOLOGY; EXILE AND RESTORATION; JERUSALEM; JUDGMENT; PRIESTS AND PRIESTHOOD; SYNAGOGUE; TEMPLE ACT; TRIUMPHAL ENTRY; WORSHIP.

BIBLIOGRAPHY. J. Ådna, Jesu Stellung zum Tempel: Die Tempelaktion und das Tempelwort als Ausdruck seiner messianischen Sendung (WUNT 2/119; Tübingen: Mohr Siebeck, 2000); T. D. Alexander and S. Gathercole, eds., Heaven on Earth: The Temple in Biblical Theology (Carlisle: Paternoster, 2004); R. Bauckham, "Jesus' Demonstration in the Temple," in Law and Religion: Essays on the Place of the Law in Israel and Early Christianity, ed. B. Lindars (Cambridge: James Clarke, 1988) 72-89; M. J. Borg, Conflict, Holiness, and Politics in the Teachings of Jesus (Lewiston, NY: Edwin Mellen, 1984); S. M. Bryan, Jesus and Israel's Traditions of Judgement and Restoration (SNTSMS 117; Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 2002); T. A. Busink, Der Tempel von Jerusalem, von Salomo bis Herodes: Eine archäologisch-historische Studie unter Berücksichtigung des westsemitischen Tempelbaus (2 vols.; SFSMD 3; Leiden: E. J. Brill, 1979-

1980); J. B. Chance, Jerusalem, the Temple, and the New Age in Luke-Acts (Macon, GA: Mercer University Press, 1988); B. Chilton, The Temple of Jesus: His Sacrificial Program within a Cultural History of Sacrifice (University Park: Pennsylvania State University Press, 1992); idem, Pure Kingdom: Jesus' Vision of God (SHJ; Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1996); M. L. Coloe, God Dwells with Us: Temple Symbolism in the Fourth Gospel (Collegeville, MN: Liturgical Press, 2001); B. Ego, A. Lange and P. Pilhofer, eds., Gemeinde ohne Tempel: Zur Substituierung und Transformation des Jerusalemer Tempels und seines Kults im Alten Testament, antiken Judentum und frühen Christentum (WUNT 118; Tübingen: Mohr Siebeck, 1999); C. A. Evans, "Predictions of the Destruction of the Herodian Temple in the Pseudepigrapha, Qumran Scrolls, and Related Texts," JSP 10 (1992) 89-147; C. H. T. Fletcher-Louis, "Jesus and the High Priestly Messiah, Part 1," JSHJ 4 (2006) 155-75; idem, "Jesus and the High Priestly Messiah, Part 2," JSHJ 5 (2007) 57-79; J. Klawans, Impurity and Sin in Ancient Judaism (Oxford: Oxford University Press, 2000); K. Fuglseth, Johannine Sectarianism in Perspective: A Sociological, Historical, and Comparative Analysis of Temple and Social Relationships in the Gospel of John, Philo, and Qumran (NovTSup 119; Leiden: E. J. Brill, 2005); B. Gärtner, The Temple and the Community in Qumran and the New Testament: A Comparative Study in the Temple Symbolism of Qumran Texts and the New Testament (SNTSMS 1; Cambridge: University Press, 1965); L. Gaston, No Stone on Another: Studies in the Significance of the Fall of Jerusalem in the Synoptic Gospels (NovTSup 23; Leiden: E. J. Brill, 1970); T. C. Gray, The Temple in the Gospel of Mark: A Study in Its Narrative Role (Grand Rapids: Baker Academic, 2008); J. B. Green, "The Demise of the Temple as 'Culture Center' in Luke-Acts: An Exploration of the Rending of the Temple Veil (Luke 23.44-49)," RB 101 (1994) 495-515; D. M. Gurtner, "Matthew's Temple and the 'Parting of the Ways,'" in Built upon the Rock: Studies in the Gospel of Matthew, ed. D. M. Gurtner and J. Nolland (Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 2008) 128-53; M. Haran, Temples and Temple Service in Ancient Israel: An Inquiry into Biblical Phenomena and the Historical Setting of the Priestly School (Oxford: Clarendon, 1977); C. T. R. Hayward, The Jewish Temple: A Non-Biblical Sourcebook (London: Routledge, 1996); J. P. Heil, "The Narrative Strategy and Pragmatics of the Temple Theme in Mark," CBQ 59 (1997) 76-100; D. Juell, Messiah and Temple: The Trial of Jesus in the Gospel of Mark (SBLDS 31; Missoula, MT: Scholars Press, 1977); A. R. Kerr, The Temple of Jesus' Body: The Temple Theme in the Gospel of John (JSNTSup 220; Sheffield: Sheffield Academic Press, 2002); G. Klinz- ing, Die Umdeutung des Kultus in der Qumrangemeinde und im Neuen Testament (SUNT 7; Göttingen: Vandenhoeck & Ruprecht, 1971); L. I. Levine, "Josephus' Description of the Jerusalem Temple: War, Antiquities, and Other Sources," in Josephus and the History of the Greco-Roman Period: Essays in Memory of Morton Smith, ed. F. Parente and J. Sievers (StPB 41; Leiden: E. J. Brill, 1994) 233-46; J. Lieu, "Temple and Synagogue in John," NTS 45 (1999) 51-69; J. Maier, "The Architectural History of the Temple in Jerusalem in the Light of the Temple Scroll," in Temple Scroll Studies: Papers Presented at the International Symposium on the Temple Scroll, Manchester, December 1987, ed. G. Brooke (JSPSup 7; Sheffield: Sheffield Academic Press, 1989) 23-62; B. F. Meyer, The Aims of Jesus (London: SCM, 1979); J. Milgrom, Leviticus (3 vols; AYB 3, 3A, 3B; New Haven, CT: Yale University Press, 1991-2001); E. Netzer, with R. Laureys-Chachy, The Architecture of Herod, the Great Builder (TSAJ 117; Tübingen: Mohr Siebeck, 2006); J. Neusner, "The Idea of Purity in Ancient Judaism," JAAR 43 (1975) 15-26; N. Perrin, Jesus the Temple (London: SPCK; Grand Rapids: Baker Academic, 2010); K. Ritmeyer and L. Ritmeyer, "Reconstructing Herod's Temple Mount in Jerusalem," BAR 15 (1989) 23-43; W. Salier, "The Temple in the Gospel According to John," in Heaven on Earth: The Temple in Biblical Theology, ed. T. D. Alexander and S. Gathercole (Carlisle: Paternoster, 2004) 121-34; E. P. Sanders, Jesus and Judaism (Philadelphia: Fortress, 1985); idem, Judaism: Practice and Belief, 63 BCE-66 CE (London: SCM, 1992); N. H. Taylor, "Luke-Acts and the Temple," in The Unity of Luke-Acts, ed. J. Verheyden (BETL 142; Leuven: Leuven University Press, 1999) 709-21; W. R. Telford, The Barren Temple and the Withered Tree: A Redaction-Critical Analysis of the Cursing of the Fig-Tree Pericope in Mark's Gospel and Its Relation to the Cleansing of the Temple Tradition (JSNTSup 1; Sheffield: JSOT Press, 1980); N. T. Wright, Jesus and the Victory of God (COQG 2; Minneapolis: Fortress, 1996); G. A. Yee, Jewish Feasts and the Gospel of John (ZS; Wilmington, DE: Michael Glazier, 1989).

D. M. Gurtner and N. Perrin

TEMPLE ACT

Jesus' temple act is recounted in all four Gospels (Mt 21:12-17; Mk 11:15-19; Lk 19:45-48; Jn 2:13-22). There are some striking variations between the four versions. Despite the differences, the Matthean and Lukan versions clearly appear to be dependent on Mark, whereas the Johannine variant seems to be independent of the Synoptic branch of the tradition.

Hence, the texts of Mark and John will serve as our point of departure in the search for the temple act as an incident in the ministry of Jesus.

Any viable interpretation of the temple act must cohere with other materials in the Gospels on Jesus' relationship to the *temple. Most significant in this respect are the recorded sayings on the destruction (Mk 13:2 par.) and renewal of the temple (Mt 26:61; Mk 14:58; Jn 2:19).

1. The Temple Act Within the Context of the Ministry of Jesus
2. The Temple Act in the Four Gospels

1. The Temple Act Within the Context of the Ministry of Jesus.

1.1. Historical Reconstruction. After Herod the Great expanded and reconstructed the temple in Jerusalem, it reached the impressive size of a complex measuring approximately 450 x 300 m. There was a clear architectural distinction between the temple's blocked-off inner part and the outer court, the former containing the sanctuary proper, the altar for burnt offerings and further equipment for the sacrificial cult, and the latter surrounded by porticoes along all four retaining walls. The market where temple visitors could buy items needed for sacrifices was located in the hall to the south, known as the Royal Portico.

The Johannine version of the incident in the temple, in John 2:14-16, contains some dramatizing features, picturing Jesus as driving out of the temple sheep and cattle with a whip of cords. The rest of what is related in these verses coheres neatly with Mark 11:15b-16. By an analysis of these two texts, a plausible common origin can be inferred on whose basis a historical reconstruction can be formulated: Jesus poured out the coins of some moneychangers and overturned their tables; he reacted against those who sold doves by overturning their seats and ordering them to take away the baskets or cages in which they kept the birds; and he did not allow vessels to be carried through the temple.

1.2. The Targets of Jesus' Act: Dove Sellers, Moneychangers and Transport Vessels.

1.2.1. Doves. Turtledoves or pigeons are legitimate sacrificial victims for burnt offerings and sin offerings for poor people who cannot afford more expensive victims, such as lambs or goats (see Lev 5:7; 12:8; 14:21-23; Lk 2:24). It was permitted to bring one's own doves for individual sacrifices, but there was always a risk that the birds would suffer some minor damage during transport and thus not pass the strict priestly inspection demanding absolutely unblemished victims. Hence, the provision of doves for sale at the market in the temple was definitely an offer appreciated by many pilgrims. Conspicuously, in his actions Jesus disturbed this very activity to the disadvantage of temple visitors in need of doves to offer as their sacrificial victims.

1.2.2. Money Regulations and Temple Tax. With pilgrims coming from all of the vast Jewish Diaspora, bringing with them a wide range of different coins, there was a need of regular exchange and bank services in Jerusalem. In addition to providing such general operations, the moneychangers in the Royal Portico also took care of the specific task of collecting the temple tax. The tax for the temple was annually collected in all Diaspora communities and brought to Jerusalem. However, when individuals or families traveled on pilgrimage to Jerusalem on the occasion of the Passover festival, they could deliver their tax contribution themselves at the very site of the temple. Due to inflationary instability of the value of most currencies at the time, the temple authorities had decided that money transactions in the temple preferentially were to be operated in the exceptionally value-stable silver drachms of the Phoenician town Tyre (t. Ketub. 12:6). The temple tax had to be paid with such coins alone: one Tyrian drachm per capita, corresponding to the amount of half a shekel mentioned in Exodus 30:13 (cf. Josephus, Ant. 3.194-195; 18.312). Hence, the moneychangers provided an indispensable service in offering people the possibility to exchange their money into the required Tyrian drachms and in collecting the temple tax (m. Šeqal. 1:3). Once again, in overturning the tables of the moneychangers Jesus interfered with an activity highly valued by all Jewish visitors to the temple.

1.2.3. Vessels. A third action by Jesus was that "he did not allow anyone to carry any vessel through the temple." This prohibition often is understood as an expression of concern for the temple's holiness: Jesus did not accept that people casually were carrying things with them that might be impure into the temple area, or that they abused this area by using it as a shortcut on their way through town (for an analogous concern, see m. Ber. 9:5). However, the clear distinction between the inner part of the temple complex, protected by severe purity regulations, and the Herodian expanded platform, on the one hand, and the Royal Portico as the scene of Jesus' action, on the other hand, makes another interpretation of this enigmatic note in Mark 11:16 more likely. The word rendered "vessel," skeuos, can denote a wide range of utensils produced of different materials. Within the context of the temple market it most probably refers to a clay or stone vessel used for storing and transporting either money or vegetable products of some kind. In line with his disturbance of the activities of the dove sellers and the money-changers, Jesus also hindered the transport of either the collected money or flour, oil and wine between the market situated at the southernmost end of the temple complex and the inner precincts, where money was stored and vegetable products were used as ingredients of the sacrifices.

1.3. Interpretation of Jesus' Temple Act. Partly depending on whether or not they accept the recorded sayings by Jesus in Mark 11:17 and John 2:16b as authentic, scholars interpret the incident within the ministry of the historical Jesus either in accordance with what is stated in these sayings or independently of them. There is a crucial difference whether one understands Jesus' concern in his temple act to be the reestablishment of some lost or endangered condition or to signify a fundamental change and break of some kind. Accordingly, it is appropriate to distinguish between noneschatological and eschatological interpretations.

1.3.1. Noneschatological Interpretations. There are different ways of connecting the targets of Jesus' act (see 1.2 above) and the charges made by Jesus in Mark 11:17: "Is it not written, 'My house shall be called a house of prayer for all the nations'? But you have made it a den of robbers" (NRSV). For example, some scholars have related the accusation that the temple has been made a den of robbers to alleged deplorable conditions of mismanagement in the temple; the reason why Jesus attacked the dove sellers and the moneychangers is supposed to be exploitative prices and charges to the detriment of poor people in particular. Another link assumed is that Jesus reacted against the usage of Tyrian coins, with images of the head of Melkart on the obverse and of an eagle on the reverse, as a desecration of the holy temple. A third proposal is that the metaphor "den of robbers" refers to the Herodian remodeling of the temple in accordance with international Hellenistic standards regarded as compromising the sanctuary of God in making it an instrument for promoting the king's honor and glory and in allowing commercialism. These three proposals have in common that whatever is assumed as the referent of Jesus' "den of robbers" accusation, this intruding factor caused the temple to be alienated from its true purpose of being a place for worship.

1.3.2. Eschatological Interpretations.

1.3.2.1. Preparing Zion for the Pilgrimage of the Peoples. At the time of Jesus, Isaiah 56:3-8, from which the phrase "My house shall be called a house of prayer for all peoples" (Is 56:7b NRSV) is quoted in Mark 11:17, was understood as a prophetic oracle about the new temple to be established on Mount Zion at the end of time (see also Is 2:2-4). On this background, scholars have suggested that Jesus' act was intended as a symbolic preparation for this imminent event. Such an interpretation implies or takes for granted that the presence of a temple market contradicted the conditions applying to the eschatological temple and sees a casual link between Jesus' protest against the market and his aim to prepare Zion for the pilgrimage of the nations (cf. Jer 3:17; Zech 8:20-23).

1.3.2.2. Establishing the Holiness of the Temple. Scholars who take John 2:16b, "Stop making my Father's house a marketplace" (NRSV), to be the authentic saying on the occasion of the temple act predominantly regard this utterance by Jesus as being inspired by Zechariah 14:21b: "And there shall no longer be traders in the house of the LORD of hosts on that day" (NRSV). This prophetic oracle refers to the prevailing circumstances of complete purity in Jerusalem and Judah in the eschatological era, when there no longer will be neither any need nor any legitimate room for traders in the temple.

Either combined with Zechariah 14 or not, the interpretation of the temple act as an attempt to establish the holiness of the temple or as a symbolic reference to the abolition of the market in the future eschatological temple is sometimes given a messianic stamp. In the line of Davidic kings, undertaking cleansing purifications of the temple when needed (cf. 2 Chron 29—31; 34—35), there were some who expected the Messiah to perform a sanctifying cleansing of the temple. Such a messianic interpretation is further substantiated if Jesus' entry into Jerusalem, as recounted by the evangelists (Mk 11:1-10 par.) (see Triumphal Entry), is accepted as historical and the two episodes are regarded as two consciously interlinked steps in fulfilling the royal enthronement of Jesus as the Messiah.

1.3.2.3. Symbol of Destruction or Eschatological Renewal. As such, the action of overturning tables has a negative sting to it, but it is too vague to give a clear hint of what meaning is intended. However, in combination with sayings by Jesus about the destruction of the temple—"Not one stone will be left here upon another; all will be thrown down" (Mk 13:2b NRSV)—the demonstrative action might take on the unambiguous meaning of symbolizing destruction.

Unless one considers the temple to be an entity that, according to Jesus, is completely contradictory to his message or superfluous in the eschatological kingdom, a symbol of destruction appears to be an unconvincing and too limited meaning of the temple act. For this reason, and under due consideration of those sayings by Jesus that are not restricted to a threat or prophecy of the destruction but rather include the renewal or the replacement of the old temple (see Mt 26:61; 27:40; Mk 14:58; 15:29), most scholars suppose an intent on the part of Jesus going beyond a mere negative symbolism. Hence, destruction is not a goal of its own, but only the necessary precondition for bringing about the renewal of the temple that by far will surpass even the most glorious moments in the history of the passed temple.

1.3.2.4. An Urgent Call for Repentance. Jesus' central message was the imminent coming of the *kingdom of God. As the harbinger or exclusive mediator of eschatological *salvation, Jesus called people to repent and become his disciples (see Repentance). It is easily conceivable that Jesus' proclamation of the kingdom could turn out to be in rivalry with the temple service. To cling to the traditional sacrificial cult as the basis of atonement and salvation, ignoring or rejecting God's call in the ministry of Jesus, is deceptive. On this background, Jesus' attack on services and functions of the temple market vital to a smoothly functioning incessant sacrificial cult appears as a dramatic call to the priestly authorities in particular to wake up and realize that God is about to bring his kingdom through the work of his messenger Jesus of Nazareth.

1.3.2.5. Signifying the End of the Old Temple Cult and the Coming of the New Temple. With the actions and saying transmitted in Mark 11:15-17 taken into due consideration, the interpretation above (in 1.3.2.4) can be specified and developed further. The aim of disturbing the selling of doves, collection of the temple tax and transport from the market to the inner precincts of the temple was to symbolically stop the sacrificial cult. Through his act, Jesus expressed his conviction that the end of the traditional temple cult had come, both individual offerings, exemplified by the doves, and the collective cult on behalf of the whole Jewish people, financed by the temple tax. If we take into account that the daily burnt offerings of two, unblemished one-year-old male lambs, the so-called tāmīd (Ex 29:38-42; Num 28:3-8; m. Tamid), were classified as atonement sacrifices (Jub. 6:14; 50:11; t. Šeqal. 1:6), and that for this reason it was firmly regulated that Jews were obliged to pay the temple tax, whereas *Gentiles and *Samaritans were forbidden to do so (m. Šeqal. 1:3, 5), the scope of Jesus' intervention becomes clear. Through the temple tax each Jew, regardless of place or residence, had a share in the collective sacrificial cult and in its atoning effect, and the tax is correspondingly called a "ransom" (see Philo, Spec. 1.77; Her. 186; b. B.Bat. 9a). The disturbance of the collection of the temple tax hit the sacrificial apparatus in its theologically most crucial function.

Jesus' charge in the accompanying saying that they have made the temple a den of robbers is an allusion to the corresponding accusation by the prophet Jeremiah to his contemporaries in a speech held at the entrance to the temple in Jerusalem approximately in the year 609 B.C. (Jer 7:1-15, cf. Jer 26): "Has this house, which is called by my name, become a den of robbers in your sight? Also I look upon it this way, says the LORD" (Jer 7:11). In his speech Jeremiah blames the people for combining a most outrageous transgression of the commandments of the Lord with a seemingly high esteem for the temple as the house of God. However, when they consider the temple to be an impregnable refuge thanks to God's presence on Zion, they act the same way as robbers. Robbers seek their den as a safe haven between their operations. When the Judeans who sin and violate God's will think that his holy site is the place of perfect protection, they have defined the role of the temple to be like a den of robbers. In the quoted oracle God says that from now on he will share the Judeans' view of the temple, but the consequence that he will draw is quite contrary to theirs. Unless the people repent to a life in harmony with God's commandments, the temple in Jerusalem will share the destiny of destruction with the previous sanctuary in Shiloh. Some twenty years later the temple in Jerusalem was destroyed. Those listening to Jesus definitely recognized the allusion to Jeremiah 7:11 and the implied threat in his saying. To cling stubbornly to the sacrificial cult and seek security in its atoning effect at this hour of eschatological fulfillment brought by Jesus in messianic authority is as deceptive as the schizophrenic conduct of Jeremiah's contemporaries.

In his saying, recounted in Mark 14:58, probably uttered shortly after the arrival in Jerusalem, Jesus stated his intention to substitute a new sanctuary, one "not made with hands," for the present temple, which was built by human hands. The epithet "not made with hands" alludes to an apocalyptic tradition that God will not leave it to humans to establish the end-time temple on Mount Zion, but instead will do it himself (cf. Ex 15:17 applied to the eschatological temple, and 4Q174 1 I, 1-5; 11Q19 XXIX, 9-10; 1 En. 90:29; 91:13; Jub. 1:17, 29; Tob 14:5; 4 Ezra 13:36). Boldly, Jesus claims for himself the divine prerogative of establishing the eschatological temple, and in the citation of Isaiah 56:7b in Mark 11:17, contrasting the “den of robbers” accusation, he states what will be the legitimate function of this future temple. In the kingdom of God there will be no need for an atonement cult in the temple, but the temple in Zion will be the place where all nations assemble to pray and worship the Lord.

The reaction of the Jewish authorities to the temple act was negative: “They kept looking for a way to kill him” (Mk 11:18 NRSV). Within a short time they were successful, managing to arrest him and convincing the Romans to execute him. Also with this outcome of Jesus’ provocative demonstration there is a positive message inherent in the symbolic temple act. The outdated cultic system will be replaced also in spite of a rejection of Jesus. Paradoxically, in his violent death Jesus becomes the ransom (Mk 10:45), and his body is given and his blood is poured out for many as the definite atonement sacrifice (Mk 14:22, 24).

2. The Temple Act in the Four Gospels.

2.1. Mark. The evangelist Mark sets a striking compositional mark in framing the temple act with the cursing of a fig tree and, as a result, its withering (Mk 11:12-14, 20-25). This clearly is a symbol of judgment. As the fig tree is a traditional image of Israel (Is 28:3-4; Jer 8:13), and the curse of the tree and its withering as an inclusio frame Jesus’ act and the negative response to it, the judgment applies to the Jewish leaders and the temple, which has deteriorated to a den of robbers. The temple will be completely destroyed (Mk 13:2). Instead of being elevated at the end of time, as expected (cf. Is 2:2; Mic 4:1), the temple will be cast down (cf. Mk 11:23).

The transition from the old temple, built by human hands, and its cult to a new and different sanctuary is dramatically expressed in the tearing of the curtain between the temple hall and the holy of holies (Mk 15:38; cf. Ex 26:31-33) at the death of Jesus. This is a symbol that his death once for all opens the access to God. The new temple, not made with hands (Mk 14:58), takes shape in the community of believers, Jews and Gentiles, who gather for prayer in this house of the Lord (Mk 11:17, 24-25).

2.2. Matthew. Compared to Mark, Matthew omits the ban on carrying vessels and the phrase “for all the nations” in the saying about the temple as a house of prayer (Mt 21:12-13), and further, he places the cursing of the fig tree as one uninterrupted scene after the temple act (Mt 21:18-22). Following Mark also in the prophecy of the temple’s destruction (Mt 24:2) and the tearing of the curtain (Mt 27:51), Matthew shares the Markan view of judgment and abolition of the temple cult.

Matthew’s unique contribution to the events in the temple is his insertion of a second scene, following immediately after the market controversy: Jesus heals blind and lame persons coming to him in the temple; enthusiastic children praise him; chief priests and scribes object to this, but Jesus justifies the behavior of the children in citing a warrant for it in the Scriptures (Mt 21:14-16). Within this textual structure, the temple act proper is reduced to an introductory episode, establishing the circumstances needed for the scene of *healings that carries the emphasis in the Matthean account. Matthew describes Jesus as the merciful “Son of David caring for the sick (Mt 9:27-30, 35; 15:22, 28-31; 20:30-34), and in control of the temple Jesus can now perform his messianic healing ministry there. There probably is an element of dubious legitimacy for bodily disabled persons being present in the temple (cf. LXX 2 Sam 5:8; 11Q19 XLV, 12-14) presupposed in the account; on an earlier occasion Jesus had provoked opposition by healing on the holy Sabbath (Mt 12:9-14), and now he challenges by healing the disabled on the holy site of the temple. However, the sharpest point of controversy is not the healings but rather the children’s praise: “Hosanna to the Son of David.” When the chief priests and scribes object to it, Jesus justifies the ongoing acclamation with a reference to LXX Psalm 8:3 (ET 8:2): “Out of the mouths of infants and nursing babies you have prepared praise for yourself” (Mt 21:16 NRSV). The psalmist addresses the Lord, and in applying this utterance to the present scene the Matthean Jesus claims for himself a role corresponding to that of God in bringing the small *children to praise him. Hence, not only is God to be glorified for Jesus’ healings (Mt 15:31), but also Jesus himself, as “Emmanuel” (Mt 1:23), the merciful Son of David and messianic doctor, is worthy of worship.

2.3. Luke. Luke reduces the incident in the temple to the short notice that Jesus “began to drive out those who were selling” (NRSV) and omits the phrase “for all the nations” in the accompanying saying (Lk 19:45-46). He immediately continues, “Every day he was teaching in the temple” (Lk 19:47a NRSV). In this way, Jesus’ interruption of the market activities merely appears as his authoritative takeover of the temple in order to make it the scene for his messianic teaching continuing for a long period (Lk 21:37-38). Correspondingly, what the Jewish authorities react against in the Lukan narrative is Jesus’ teaching (cf. Lk 19:47—20:2) (see Teacher). The role of the temple as the house of God for prayer and teaching found, according to Luke's description, its consistent correspondence in the practice of the early community of believers (Lk 24:53; Acts 3:1; 5:20-21, 42).

2.4. John. The most conspicuous differences in John compared to the Synoptic Gospels are the compositional placement of the temple act at the beginning of Jesus' ministry (Jn 2:13-17) and the immediate application of the saying about destruction and renewal of the temple to the incident (Jn 2:18-22). In pulling the clash in the temple act to this initial position, John manages to set the stage for the conflict between Jesus and the Jews that pervades his Gospel. Only superficially is this a controversy about the legitimacy of a market in the temple. What really is at stake is that Jesus' zeal for his Father's house finally will lead to his violent death, as indeed his disciples realized when they were reminded of the psalmist's words "Zeal for your house will consume me" (Jn 2:17 NRSV, citing Ps 69:9). To the request for a sign to prove his authority to act as boldly as he has done, Jesus answers, "Destroy this temple, and in three days I will raise it up" (Jn 2:19 NRSV). Whereas his interlocutors take this to be a presumptuous and absurd statement, the evangelist comments to his readers that Jesus actually was speaking of the temple of his body. This reference to Jesus explains the changed rendering of the temple saying in John 2:19 compared to Mark 14:58. Not Jesus, but rather the Jewish leaders, will destroy the temple (cf. Jn 11:47-53; 18:30, 40; 19:6-7, 12), but after three days Jesus will raise it up, and here he employs the verb egeirō, which most frequently is used about resurrection from the dead (Jn 2:22; 5:21; 12:1; 21:14). Hence, according to John, Jesus' body is the true temple that has replaced the temple of former times, and therefore the graceful divine presence has moved from the temple in Jerusalem to Jesus (cf. Jn 1:14; 4:19-24).

See also JERUSALEM; TEMPLE; TRIUMPHAL ENTRY; WORSHIP.

BIBLIOGRAPHY. J. Ådna, Jesu Stellung zum Tempel: Die Tempelaktion und das Tempelwort als Ausdruck seiner messianischen Sendung (WUNT 2/119; Tübingen: Mohr Siebeck, 2000); idem, "Jesus and the Temple," in Handbook for the Study of the Historical Jesus, ed. T. Holmén and S. T. Porter (4 vols.; Leiden: E. J. Brill, 2011) 3:2635-75; H. D. Betz, "Jesus and the Purity of the Temple (Mark 11:15-18): A Comparative Religion Approach," JBL 116 (1997) 455-72; P. M. Casey, "Culture and Historicity: The Cleansing of the Temple," CBQ 59 (1997) 306-32; J. Chanikuzhy, Jesus, the Eschatological Temple: An Exegetical Study of Jn 2:13-22 in the Light of the Pre 70 C.E. Eschatological Temple Hopes and the Synoptic Temple Action (Leuven, Belgium: Peeters, forthcoming); A. Y. Collins, "Jesus' Action in Herod's Temple," in Antiquity and Humanity: Essays on Ancient Religion and Philosophy Presented to Hans Dieter Betz on His 70th Birthday, ed. A. Y. Collins and M. M. Mitchell (Tübingen: Mohr Siebeck, 2001) 45-61; C. A. Evans, "Jesus' Action in the Temple and Evidence of Corruption in the First-Century Temple," SBLSP 28 (1989) 522-39; idem, "Jesus and the 'Cave of Robbers': Towards a Jewish Context for the Temple Action," BBR 3 (1993) 93-110; idem, "From 'House of Prayer' to 'Cave of Robbers': Jesus' Prophetic Criticism of the Temple Establishment," in The Quest for Context and Meaning: Studies in Intertextuality in Honor of James A. Sanders, ed. C. A. Evans and S. Talmon (BIS 28; Leiden: E. J. Brill, 1997) 417-42; T. C. Gray, The Temple in the Gospel of Mark: A Study in Its Narrative Role (WUNT 2/242; Tübingen: Mohr Siebeck, 2008); S. Hon-fai Wong, The Temple Incident in Mark 11,15-19: The Disclosure of Jesus and the Marcan Faction (NTSCE 5; Frankfurt: Peter Lang, 2009); A. R. Kerr, The Temple of Jesus' Body: The Temple Theme in the Gospel of John (JSNTSup 220; London: Sheffield Academic Press, 2002); C. Metzendorf, Die Tempelaktion Jesu: Patristische und historisch-kritische Exegese im Vergleich (WUNT 2/168; Tübingen: Mohr Siebeck, 2003); B. F. Meyer, The Aims of Jesus (London: SCM Press, 1979); idem, Christus Faber: The Master Builder and the House of God (Allison Park, PA: Pickwick, 1992); P. Richardson, "Why Turn the Tables? Jesus' Protest in the Temple Precincts," SBLSP 31 (1992) 507-23; E. P. Sanders, Jesus and Judaism (Philadelphia: Fortress, 1985); K. R. Snodgrass, "The Temple Incident," in Key Events in the Life of the Historical Jesus: A Collaborative Exploration of Context and Coherence, ed. D. L. Bock and R. L. Webb (WUNT 247; Tübingen: Mohr Siebeck, 2009) 429-80; T. Söding, "Die Tempelaktion Jesu: Redaktionskritik—Überlieferungsgeschichte—historische Rückfrage (Mk 11,15-19; Mt 21,12-17; Lk 19,45-48; Joh 2,13-22)," TTZ 101 (1992) 36-64; A. J. M. Wedderburn, "Jesus' Action in the Temple: A Key or a Puzzle?" ZNW 97 (2006) 1-22; N. T. Wright, Jesus and the Victory of God (London: SPCK; Minneapolis: Fortress, 1996).

J. Ådna

TEMPLE TAX. See ECONOMICS.

TEMPTATION OF JESUS

A striking theme in the Gospel narratives is Jesus experiencing temptations, which leads us to recognize the cosmic conflict that he underwent as he brought the *kingdom of God to invade the kingdom of this world. The ways he battled temptations were unique to his person and role, but also become examples for his followers.

1. Temptation Terminology and Concepts
2. Temptations of Jesus
3. Temptation of Jesus in the Wilderness
4. The Emphases of the Gospel Writers
5. Conclusion

1. Temptation Terminology and Concepts.

The Greek and Hebrew words behind the concept of temptation are fairly limited, but they reflect a broad range of meaning. The Greek noun peirasmos and verb peirazō can be used in the NT in either a negative or positive sense. In a negative sense, the terms are rendered “temptation” and “tempt” (e.g., Mk 14:38; Lk 4:13; cf. Mt 4:1, 3), indicating a hostile enticement intended to lead a person to a deliberate act of evil against God or one’s neighbor. In a positive sense, the terms are rendered “test” (Gal 4:14; cf. Jn 6:6), indicating the endeavor to prove or approve one’s faithfulness, truthfulness or character (e.g., Heb 11:17). The objective of positive testing is ultimately to ascertain and intensify a believer’s faith, commitment and devotion to God (see BDAG 646). The Greek adjective dokimos and verb dokimazō can be used interchangeably with peirasmos and peirazō, but generally they imply a positive sense of a testing that will have positive results (e.g., Jas 1:12), as a believer who is “approved” by God (2 Tim 2:15) and as the transformed believer “proves” what is the will of God (Rom 12:2; cf. 1 Cor 11:28) (BDAG 255-56).

In the LXX peirasmos is used to translate the equivalent Hebrew noun massā (e.g., Ex 17:7; Deut 6:16), and peirazō regularly translates the verb nāsā (e.g., Gen 22:1; Ex 16:4). The Hebrew verb bāḥan corresponds to the Greek verb dokimazō. It is used with a secular sense to indicate the testing of gold to determine its purity (Zech 13:9), which leads to the spiritual sense of the testing of persons to determine the purity of their life, heart and mind (e.g., Job 7:18; Ps 7:9; 26:2; 139:23) (Seesemann).

Negatively, these terms are used in a distinct way to denote humans undertaking to put God to a test (Deut 6:16). Such a test challenges God’s plans or purposes (e.g., Ps 78:41 [nāsā] = LXX 77:41 [peirazō]) or seeks to manipulate God (e.g., Ps 95:9 [bāḥan] = LXX 94:9 [dokimazō]). This is an expression of unbelief, doubt, disobedience and rebellion.

Positively, God gave manna to the people of Israel, which they were to gather every day so that he would test (nāsā) them, whether they will walk in his law or not (Ex 16:4). God tested (nāsā) Abraham’s faithfulness by instructing him to sacrifice his son Isaac but provided a ram when Abraham proved obedient (Gen 22:1-14). Although these terms are rare in the book of Job (e.g., in a neutral sense: nāsā [Job 4:2]; peiratērion [LXX Job 7:1; 10:17]), it is clear that God gave permission to Satan to test Job with the severest afflictions (Job 1:12; 2:6). Both Abraham and Job demonstrate their faithfulness to God and are rewarded (Gen 22:15-18; Job 42:11-17).

Later Jewish writings understood the reality of temptations to evil and also that divine testings have a positive pedagogical purpose. An evil bent within human beings leads them to put God to the test (peirazō [Jdt 8:12]). Wisdom recognizes that the discipline of God’s people leads to great good, because God tested (peirazō) them and he found them worthy of himself (Wis 3:5). God tests his people in order to discipline, admonish and benefit them (Jdt 8:25; cf. Sir 4:17; 33:1). Ben Sira insists on the goodness of God in the midst of testing (Sir 15:11-12; cf. Sir 15:20). The rabbis likewise understood that God tests and disciplines those whom he loves (b. Ber. 5a), but there is also a clear recognition that there is within humans an evil inclination that is a temptation to sin and iniquity (b. Ber. 60b).

The NT writers make it clear that God does not tempt humans to do evil (e.g., Jas 1:12-15), but rather that he uses circumstances to test a person’s character or resolve with the intended purpose of promoting good ends (e.g., Heb 11:17). Additionally, Paul stresses that God makes available the resources necessary to resist temptation (e.g., 1 Cor 10:13) (see Himes). The familiar petition in the Lord’s Prayer—“Do not lead us into temptation [peirasmos], but deliver us from evil [or, ‘the evil one’]” (Mt 6:13)—indicates that the *disciples should pray either that God remove tests of their faith (e.g., Ex 16:4; Deut 8:16; 1 Pet 1:7) or that their testing not become an occasion for temptation (see Fitzmyer, 271-72).

2. Temptations of Jesus.

According to the Gospels, Jesus’ life was one of continual temptations. At the *Last Supper, Jesus describes the whole of his ministry as one of temptations as he established the kingdom of God that had been given to him by the Father (Lk 22:28-29).

The overt source of Jesus’ temptations came in large part from the religious leaders of Israel. The *Pharisees and *Sadducees “tested” Jesus by asking him to show them a sign from heaven (Mt 16:1; Mk 8:11). Some had accused Jesus of performing exorcisms through the power of Satan (Mt 9:34; 12:24), so they wanted Jesus to perform a spectacular display of power that would demonstrate that his power was from God, not Satan (Mt 12:38-42) (see Demon, Devil, Satan). Although the request appears innocent enough, their testing of Jesus was seen by him as representative of the *scribes and Pharisees speaking for their generation in its unbelief by asking for a sign (Mt 12:39-42) (Nolland, 510). The motive behind a test can be insidious or innocent, depending on the one doing the testing.

Underlying all temptations in Jesus' ministry is Satan, who is regarded as the prime initiator to the degree that he is referred to as "the tempter" (ho peirazōn [Mt 4:3]). His prime target is Jesus and Jesus' mission of establishing the kingdom of God and providing salvation through the cross. He attacks Jesus directly, as in the temptations in the wilderness (see Mountain and Wilderness), but also indirectly, even by using Jesus' closest companions. After Jesus' first prediction of his death Peter attempts to dissuade him. But Jesus saw Peter as a tool of temptation from Satan, as he says to him, "Get behind me, Satan!" (Mk 8:33). When Jesus predicted that Peter would deny him, he revealed that Satan was the instigator who demanded to sift Peter like wheat (Lk 22:31-32). Jesus calls Judas Iscariot "the devil" for betraying him (Jn 6:70-71), since Satan put it in his heart (Jn 13:2) and entered him to direct the betrayal (Lk 22:3; Jn 13:27). When Jesus needed his closest companions—Peter, James and John—to support him at *Gethsemane, he reveals that they are being tempted to succumb to their human weakness and not watch with him (Mt 26:41; Mk 14:38; Lk 22:46). In Gethsemane Jesus experienced temptation in his own human struggle of obedience to the Father's will to go to *death in the crucifixion. Jesus refers to the "power of darkness" at his arrest (Lk 22:53), which is his identification of Satan's continuing activity in his betrayal, arrest and crucifixion (McKinley, 27-31).

3. Temptation of Jesus in the Wilderness.

A primary temptation incident in Jesus' earthly life is when Satan tempts him following his *baptism in the Jordan River by *John the Baptist. Mark gives a succinct report (Mk 1:12-13), while Matthew and Luke narrate a more extensive temptation with three confrontations: in the wilderness, on the *temple and on the mountain (Mt 4:1-11; Lk 4:1-13). This temptation narrative does not occur in John's Gospel.

3.1. The Origin of the Temptation Narrative. The prominent place of Jesus' temptations at the outset of the Synoptic narratives signals the importance in their stories. Although some suggest that the Matthean and Lukan versions are such stylized and polished literary pieces that they must have originated in the early church (e.g., Taylor), other factors point to the temptations as having occurred in Jesus' lifetime and expressing his historical experience.

First, Jesus' initial victory over Satan in these temptations signals the beginning of Satan's defeat. Later in his ministry Jesus alludes to his binding of Beelzubul and plundering his goods (Mk 3:27) and also speaks of seeing Satan fall from heaven (Lk 10:18). Jesus' initial victory over Satan in the wilderness temptations provides a fitting historical origin for those later sayings and would have become a significant part of the developing tradition surrounding Jesus' ministry (Davies and Allison, 1:357).

Second, the initial battle with Satan in the wilderness fits with Jesus' self-perception. He understood that his mission to establish the kingdom of God and encounter the cross would include temptations from Satan that were intended to deter him (Lk 22:28-30). The narrative of the wilderness temptations coheres with this self-perception (Wright, 457-59).

Third, the temptation in the wilderness is an experience private to Jesus. But Jesus' struggle against Satan's temptations as he establishes the kingdom of God is part of a larger *apocalyptic story that he would have recounted later to his disciples in the light of their own trials and temptations (Matthewson). The disciples passed on the story of Jesus' temptation as something unique to his messianic role as the *Son of God (cf. Mt 3:17; 4:3, 6; Mk 1:1, 11), but they found help in Jesus' story for understanding their own temptations (see Heb 2:17-18; 4:15).

The development of the Jesus tradition to include such diverse temptation accounts as found in Mark and Matthew // Luke indicates at the least a historical nucleus circulating in the church that the evangelists drew upon. It is likely that Mark draws upon a pre-Markan tradition, and Matthew and Luke drew upon a separate tradition, perhaps the so-called *Q source. A drastic abbreviation by Mark of the Matthew-Luke source is difficult to explain, and the Markan and Matthew-Luke sources are quite different in content; for example, Matthew and Luke do not mention the animals, and Mark does not mention fasting (see Marcus, 168-71; Davies and Allison, 1:350-51).

Therefore, while the evangelists offered unique perspectives on the temptations that accomplished their theological and literary purposes, it is probable that the material for their narratives originated in the early stage of the mission of the historical Jesus as he initiated the kingdom of God that threatened to overthrow Satan's kingdom.

3.2. The Order of the Temptations. Matthew and

Luke differ in their order of the second and third temptations. The majority of scholars conclude that Matthew preserves the original order with the purpose of narrating chronological sequence, while Luke reverses the second and third in order to emphasize Jerusalem as the place of the climactic temple test, in accord with the temple theme of Luke-Acts (Taylor). Matthew uses the sequential adverbs “then” (tote [Mt 4:5]) to connect the first and second temptations, and “again” (palin [Mt 4:8]) to connect the second and third, which he elsewhere uses to note chronological progression (e.g., tote [Mt 3:13; 4:1]; palin [Mt 22:42-44]). Luke uses simple connectors, “and” (kai [Lk 4:5], de [Lk 4:9]), which do not imply chronological progression. We follow Matthew’s order below.

3.3. The Setting of the Temptations. The Synoptics agree that the place of the temptation was in the wilderness or desert (erēmos [Mt 4:1; Mk 1:12; Lk 4:2]), probably referring to the empty Judean highlands west of the Jordan River and the Dead Sea. This is quite likely the same wilderness in which John the Baptist appeared (cf. Mk 1:4). But unlike John, Jesus will not first preach. He will fast for forty days and nights (Mt 4:2; Lk 4:2). The period of forty days of hardship often indicated preparation for a particularly significant involvement in God’s activities (e.g., Moses [Ex 24:18; Deut 9:25], Elijah [1 Kings 19:8], Ezekiel [Ezek 4:6]). Fasting often was used as a means of focusing one’s attention in *prayer, disciplining oneself to unite body and soul in a concerted effort. Jesus was readying himself for his public ministry.

Early Christian tradition placed Jesus’ forty-day fast on the peak Jebel Quarantal. Looking west to the Judean wilderness from the Jordan River in the Jericho area, it is one of the nearest mountains. It is also near Ein Qelt, the freshwater spring that runs through the Wadi Qelt. Fasting did not prohibit drinking water. Emperor Justinian erected a church in the sixth century A.D. on the summit to commemorate Jesus’ vigil. It is possible that this is the actual site, but one cannot be certain.

Several points are important for understanding the temptations. First, the four Gospels emphasize that the Spirit came upon Jesus at his baptism, and the Synoptics emphasize that following the baptism the Spirit led Jesus to the wilderness to engage the enemy. This indicates the role that the Spirit will play throughout Jesus’ ministry. Second, the Synoptics introduce the antagonist of the temptation accounts in different ways: “the tempter” (ho peirazōn [Mt 4:3]), “the Satan” (ho satan [Mk 1:13]), “the devil” (ho diabolos [Lk 4:2; Mt 4:2]).

Third, parallels between Adam’s and Jesus’ temptations have been noted by many since the early church fathers (e.g., Theodore of Mopsuestia, Fragment 17; John Chrysostom, Hom. Matt. 13.1-4). What Adam, the first “son” of God in the creation, failed to accomplish, Jesus as the incarnate Son of God will fulfill. The first Adam failed in idyllic conditions; the last Adam succeeds in the wilderness. Death was the result of Adam’s sin, but Jesus’ suffering and temptation will enable him to make atonement for his people’s sin and bring life.

Fourth, Jesus’ early life at places fulfills the history of *Israel (e.g., Mt 2:15, 17), and his victorious encounter in the temptations surpasses the experience of Israel/Moses in the forty years of wandering in the wilderness. Although Israel had been endowed with the Spirit (see Num 11:17, 25, 29; 24:2), Jesus will be fully obedient to the Spirit’s leading where the nation was not. The temptations reenact Israel’s history, but victoriously. Neither the nation Israel nor *Moses the leader of the nation successfully passed the tests in the wilderness. Jesus now fulfills where they failed.

Fifth, Jesus’ victory in the encounter confirms his identity and mission as the unique Son of God (cf. Mt 3:17; Lk 3:22) (see Garlington). The allusions to the fall of Adam and the failures of Israel in the wilderness call for God’s new beginning, and Jesus is called upon as the unique Son of God to rectify the previous failures. But further, the obedient Son becomes the prototype of victory over temptation for all who follow him (cf. Heb 4:14-16). Satan tries to foil God’s plan for humanity’s redemption by disqualifying Jesus as the sinless Savior and obedient Son, but he will be unsuccessful.

3.4. The First Temptation (Mt 4:3-4; Lk 4:3-4). A pattern can be observed in the first temptation that is repeated at least partially in all three of them. The nature of the temptations is expressed in the tempter’s first words: “If you are the Son of God.” This key phrase, repeated in the second temptation (Mt 4:6; cf. Lk 4:9), is, in Greek syntax, the protasis of a first-class conditional statement that reflects the tempter’s overall intent to manipulate Jesus: “If [or, ‘since’] you are the Son of God, command these stones to become bread.” Satan does not doubt Jesus’ identity as the Son of God, nor is he trying to get Jesus to doubt it, but rather he is trying to get Jesus to misuse his prerogatives as the Son of God. Jesus had it within his powers to perform such a miracle, because later he will miraculously multiply loaves and fishes to feed five thousand and then four thousand people. But it was not the Father’s will for him to acquire food miraculously here. For Jesus to have turned the stones into bread would have led him outside of the will of the Father for the Son's incarnational experience.

Jesus does not pit his powers as Son of God against Satan's power. Instead, he uses the truth of Scripture to guide his perception of reality. By quoting a passage from Deuteronomy, as he does in the following two temptations, a link is established between Jesus' temptations and Israel's experience in the wilderness (see Old Testament in the Gospels). In Deuteronomy 8:2 Moses reminded the people of Israel that God had led them those forty years in the wilderness in order to humble and to test them. One of the tests was through hunger and God's miraculous provision of manna. Moses states that the purpose of the test was to teach them "One does not live on bread only, but upon every word that comes from the mouth of the LORD" (Deut 8:3). This lesson Jesus quotes in his response to Satan's temptation (Mt 4:4; Lk 4:4). Jesus does not need to turn stones into bread in order to confirm his identity or to supply his needs.

3.5. The Second Temptation (Mt 4:5-7; Lk 4:9-12). According to Matthew, the devil next takes Jesus to Jerusalem, the holy city, and sets him on the highest point of the temple. The identification of "the pinnacle" (to pterygion) is debated, but it may refer to the southeast corner of the temple area, where it looms some 450 feet high over the Kidron Valley (cf. Josephus, Ant. 15:411-413). Satan approaches Jesus again with the words "If you are the Son of God," but this time Satan quotes from Psalm 91, where the psalmist asserts God's protecting care for the faithful in Israel (Ps 91:11-12). The devil urges Jesus to throw himself down from that high place so that God will send angels to rescue him (Mt 4:6; Lk 4:10). Jesus had the ability to do what the devil tempts him to do. Just prior to his arrest and crucifixion, Jesus states that if he wanted to do so, he could call on his Father to rescue him by sending more than twelve legions of *angels (Mt 26:53).

The devil's quotation is a misuse of Scripture to try to manipulate Jesus (Kähler). The OT context does not imply that God will send protecting care for any and every harmful situation. Jesus sees through the devil's Scripture-twisting to the motivation behind it, and he replies again with a quotation from the book of Deuteronomy: "Again it is written, 'You shall not tempt the Lord your God'" (Mt 4:7; Lk 4:10-11).

By taking Jesus to the temple, the devil may also be tempting Jesus to test the Father's will for his messianic reception and gain the following of the nation

Israel by a spectacular display at the central place of Israel's religion, the temple. But Jesus is not to gain a following in that way. His following will come by proclaiming the *gospel of the kingdom of God, and he will suffer whatever consequences may come.

3.6. The Third Temptation (Mt 4:8-10; Lk 4:5-8). The devil then takes Jesus to a very high mountain and shows him all the kingdoms of the world and their splendor (Mt 4:8). Luke does not mention a mountain, only that the devil "took him up" (anagagōn auton [Lk 4:5]). This may indicate that this temptation came through some type of visionary experience, since no mountain could make visible all of the kingdoms on the earth's sphere.

The devil then makes an offer: "All this I will give to you, if you fall down and worship me" (Mt 4:9; Lk 4:7). Jesus' ultimate purpose is to gather the nations into the kingdom of God (cf. Mt 25:31-34), but first he must suffer execution (Mt 16:21-23; cf. Mt 26:39-46). So the devil offers a shortcut to bypass the suffering. But taking the shortcut requires an immense condition: he must give up the will of his Father in heaven to worship the devil on earth.

Worship is to be given only to God (see Deut 6:13-14; 10:20), but Satan calls for Jesus to value the creature more than the Creator, to value the kingdoms of the world more than the kingdom of God. Satan's call for Jesus to worship him is an indication of his overall objective and is, indeed, the essence of sin itself—Satan desires to supplant God. Jesus counters the devil's temptation with a final quotation from Deuteronomy: "You shall worship the Lord your God and serve him only" (Mt 4:10 // Lk 4:8 [cf. Deut 6:13]).

3.7. The Outcome of the Temptations. Matthew states that after the temptations the devil leaves Jesus (Mt 4:11), but Luke indicates that Satan would return (Lk 4:13) throughout Jesus' ministry to attempt to sidetrack him from his messianic mission. Rejecting the role of a wonder-worker, commander of angels and ruler of kingdoms, Jesus demonstrates that he has not adopted many of Israel's messianic expectations of God's deliverance from economic, spiritual and military oppression (Wright, 458). Jesus succeeds where his precursors Adam and Israel failed, and this marks the beginning of his messianic mission to bring the eschatological *salvation that will renew the fallen created order (McKinley, 22-23).

4. The Emphases of the Gospel Writers.

The Synoptics agree that the place of Jesus' temptation was in the wilderness or desert, that the Spirit played an active role in Jesus' ordeal, and that the duration of Jesus in the wilderness was forty days. From there, they have different emphases.

4.1. Matthew. Matthew uses an infinitive of purpose, peirasthēnai (“to be tempted” [Mt 4:1]), to indicate why the Spirit led Jesus to the wilderness—the temptation was part of a divine plan. Matthew alone emphasizes that the temptations come after a fast of forty days and forty nights, which comports with the same period of time that Moses was on Mount Sinai neither eating nor drinking (Ex 34:28). This has been understood by some to indicate that Jesus is the new Moses, but a more comprehensive perspective recognizes that Jesus actualizes the promise of redemption to the nation Israel through Moses that was initiated with the Passover and the exodus (e.g., Mt 2:13, 16–18, 19–21).

The conditional clause “If you are the Son of God” (Mt 4:3, 6) takes the reader back to the voice from heaven in the baptism: “This is my beloved Son” (Mt 3:17). Matthew’s arrangement reproduces Jesus’ quotations of Deuteronomy 8:3; 6:16, 13, pointing to the sequence of events experienced by the people of Israel in the wilderness: provision of manna (Ex 16), testing at Massah (Ex 17) and worship of the golden calf (Ex 32). Matthew contrasts Jesus’ obedient response as God’s Son with the disobedience of Israel as God’s son (Mt 2:15; cf. Hos 11:1–2).

Matthew alone has a commanding ending to the temptations when Jesus declares, “Away from me, Satan!” (Mt 4:10). The one called “the devil” (Mt 4:1, 5, 8) is now called “Satan”—the “Adversary.” In this response Jesus exerts his rightful authority over Satan by issuing his first command (cf. Mt 16:23). As powerful as Satan may be, and as frail as Jesus must be because of the extended fasting and the intensity of the temptations, Jesus vanquishes him with a word, and as Matthew states simply, “Then the devil left him” (Mt 4:11). This is only the first of many attacks from Satan that Jesus will experience throughout his ministry. But Jesus’ victory here establishes the precedent for his, and all, spiritual warfare: resisting the devil’s onslaught through standing firm on the truth of God will cause Satan to flee (cf. Jas 4:7; 1 Pet 5:8–9).

Matthew, like Mark, adds a final comforting comment: “Angels came and were serving him” (Mt 4:11). The angels attended to Jesus’ physical needs after the long period of fasting, but more importantly, this indicates the cosmic significance of the scene. The Son has begun the invasion of Satan’s domain. This has been a momentous initial victory in the cosmic battle. Heaven knows the significance, and angels serve the Son who advances the kingdom (cf. Mt 4:12–17).

4.2. Mark. Mark’s account of Jesus’ temptation in the wilderness has a graphic simplicity. In four brief statements, each joined by the simple conjunction “and” (kai), Mark highlights the operation of the Spirit, and forty days enduring the hostility of Satan, and the presence of wild animals, and the service of angels. There is no mention of fasting and no identification of specific temptations.

Although Mark provides no details of the temptations, he will highlight how Jesus later endured testing or temptation from the religious opposition at three critical points in his ministry (Mk 8:11; 10:2; 12:13). Mark emphasizes that the enemies of Jesus, like Satan, are the epitome of duplicity and hypocrisy in their quest to deny Jesus his messianic mission (Garrett 1998, 61–62).

Mark, like Matthew, links the temptation story with Jesus’ baptism, the introduction of the Spirit, and the voice from heaven: “You are my beloved Son” (Mk 1:1). Mark has a unique perspective of the activity of the Spirit. Matthew and Luke narrate that Jesus was “led” (variants of agō) by the Spirit, whereas in Mark the Spirit “impelled” or “drove out” (ekballō) Jesus to the wilderness (Mk 1:12). Mark emphasizes the controlling power of the Spirit in Jesus’ ministry, even in his temptations.

Mark does not state explicitly the outcome of the temptations, but instead states only that Jesus was “with the wild animals and the angels served him” (Mk 1:13). The imagery has been interpreted quite differently. Some understand the imagery of the wild animals as simply a descriptive aside that comports with the loneliness of the wilderness scene. Others contend that Mark associates the wild beasts with demonic forces that are Satan’s allies against Jesus, so that the wilderness motif evokes the image of an eschatological battleground where Jesus wins an initial and decisive victory (Gibson, 64–79). Others have understood the imagery as intended to evoke impressions of Adam and the garden, whether idyllic (Bauckham) or hostile (Marcus, 167–71), signifying the restoration of the fallen paradise: the eschatological Adam resisted Satan and did not yield to temptation as did the first Adam (Bauckham). Still others emphasize that Mark intends to evoke the image of Israel’s forty-year wanderings and testings in the wilderness, with Jesus victorious where Israel failed (Caneday; McKinley [22–23] links both Adam and Israel imagery).

While the imagery of the wild beasts is enigmatic, the concluding image of angels serving Jesus clearly signifies that he has been victorious in the temptations from Satan. As God’s Son, who is beloved and pleasing to the Father (Mk 1:11), Jesus' victory over Satan and his faithfulness to the Father finds him worthy of service from God's ministering angels.

4.3. Luke. Like Matthew and Mark, Luke's narration of John the Baptist's ministry culminates in Jesus' baptism, in which the Spirit descended on Jesus and the voice from heaven declared him to be "my beloved Son" (Lk 3:21-22). Luke then uniquely inserts the genealogy of Jesus that begins with Jesus as "the son, as was thought [hōs enomizeto] of Joseph" (Lk 3:23) but climaxes with Jesus as the descendent of Adam, who is identified as "son of God" (Lk 3:38). The dual declaration of the baptism and *genealogy that Jesus is the Son of God ushers in the temptation narrative, where Jesus is tested as God's Son (Lk 4:3, 9). Adam as God's son and Israel as God's son (Ex 4:22-23) prepare for Jesus as God's Son. But where both Adam and Israel were unfaithful, Jesus will be faithful to the Father's mission as the agent of God's redemptive program (Green, 190-93).

With a more pronounced emphasis upon the Spirit than Matthew or Mark, Luke states that at the beginning of the temptation scene Jesus was "full of the Holy Spirit," and that he "was led [ēgeto, imperfect passive] by the Spirit" (Lk 4:1) (see Holy Spirit). Luke alone remarks that at the end of the temptations Jesus returns to Galilee "in the power of the Spirit" (Lk 4:14). The Spirit leading Jesus into the wilderness demonstrates that while Satan intends these as temptations, God intends them as tests to strengthen Jesus for his messianic mission. The confrontation in the wilderness is not only between Jesus and the devil, but simultaneously a confrontation between the Spirit and the devil. The battle of cosmic forces sets the stage for Luke's narration of Jesus' incursions into Satan's domain throughout his mission (Garrett 1989, 37-43).

Luke's account includes the devil's claim that he will give to Jesus the *"authority" (exousia) of the kingdoms of the world, which had been given to him, and the devil can give it to whomever he wishes (Lk 4:5-6). Luke elsewhere refers to the "authority" of political and military powers (e.g., Lk 7:8; 12:11; 19:17; 20:20; 23:7), but his more typical usage points to the spiritual authority of Jesus' teaching (e.g., Lk 4:32, 36) and *forgiving sins (Lk 5:24), and the authority that Jesus gave to the Twelve to cast out demons, walk on snakes and scorpions, and over all the power of the enemy (Lk 9:1; 10:19). The range of the devil's powers is immense, and he does have significant influence over the people and powers of this world (cf. 2 Cor 4:4; Eph 2:1-2; Rev 13:1-2). But Satan's influence is limited. Jesus counters that God alone is to be worshiped and served, indicating that God alone has all authority and *glory.

Both Matthew and Mark end their temptation narratives on a comforting note, with angels ministering to Jesus. But Luke concludes his temptation narrative on an ominous note: when the devil finished every temptation, he left Jesus "until a favorable time" (achri kairou). Jesus has been victorious in these temptations, but it is not the end of his battle with Satan (cf. Lk 11:18; 13:16).

5. Conclusion.

The temptations of Jesus have a unique aspect in that they are Satan's attempt to sidetrack Jesus from his unique messianic ministry. But Jesus' temptations also have commonalities to the experience of believers today. Jesus succeeded where Adam and Israel/Moses failed. And the way that he succeeded becomes the example for the way that his followers can succeed under similar types of temptations. Jesus' example includes resisting the devil in the power of the Spirit through the guidance of the word of God to accomplish the will of God.

See also DEMON, DEVIL, SATAN; GETHSEMANE; MOUNTAIN AND WILDERNESS; SON OF GOD.

BIBLIOGRAPHY. R. J. Bauckham, "Jesus and the Wild Animals (Mark 1:13): A Christological Image for an Ecological Age," in Jesus of Nazareth: Lord and Christ; Essays on the Historical Jesus and New Testament Christology, ed. J. B. Green and M. Turner (Grand Rapids: Eerdmans; Carlisle: Paternoster, 1994) 3-21; A. B. Caneday, "Mark's Provocative Use of Scripture in Narration: 'He Was with the Wild Animals and Angels Ministered to Him,'" BBR 9 (1999) 19-36; W. D. Davies and D. C. Allison Jr., A Critical and Exegetical Commentary on the Gospel According to Saint Matthew (3 vols; ICC; Edinburgh: T & T Clark, 1988-1997); J. A. Fitzmyer, "And Lead Us Not into Temptation," Bib 84 (2003) 259-73; D. B. Garlington, "Jesus, The Unique Son of God: Tested and Faithful," BSac 151 (1994) 284-308; S. R. Garrett, The Demise of the Devil: Magic and the Demonic in Luke's Writings (Minneapolis: Fortress, 1989); idem, Temptations of Jesus in Mark's Gospel (Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1998); B. Gerhardsson, The Testing of God's Son (Matt 4:1-11 & Par.): An Analysis of an Early Christian Midrash (ConBNT 2; Lund: Gleerup, 1996); J. B. Gibson, The Temptations of Jesus in Early Christianity (JSNTSup 112; Sheffield: Sheffield Academic Press, 1995); J. B. Green, The Gospel of Luke (NICNT; Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1997); P. A. Himes, "When a Christian Sins: 1 Corinthians 10:13 and the Power of Contrary Choice in Relation to the Compatibilist-Libertarian Debate,” JETS 54 (2011) 329-44; C. Kähler, “Satanischer Schriftgebrauch: Zur Hermeneutik von Mt 4, 1-11/Lk 4, 1-13,” TLZ 119 (1994) 857-68; G. A. Koch, “Jesus’ Baptism and Temptation Accounts in Mark’s Gospel,” in A Multiform Heritage: Studies on Early Judaism and Christianity in Honor of Robert A. Kraft, ed. B. G. Wright (SPHS 24; Atlanta: Scholars, 1999) 41-48; J. Marcus, Mark 1-8 (AB 27; New York: Doubleday, 2000); D. Mathewson, “The Apocalyptic Vision of Jesus According to the Gospel of Matthew: Reading Matthew 3:16—4:11,” TynBul 62 (2011) 89-108; J. E. McKinley, Tempted for Us: Theological Models and the Practical Relevance of Christ’s Impeccability and Temptation (PTM; Milton Keynes: Paternoster, 2009); R. D. Moore, Tempted and Tried: Temptation and the Triumph of Christ (Wheaton, IL: Crossway, 2011); J. Nolland, The Gospel of Matthew: A Commentary on the Greek Text (NIGTC; Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 2005); L. Schiavo, “The Temptation of Jesus: The Eschatological Battle and the New Ethic of the First Followers of Jesus in Q,” JSNT 25 (2002) 141-64; H. Seesemann, “πειρα, κτλ.,” TDNT 6:23-36; N. H. Taylor, “The Temptation of Jesus on the Mountain: A Palestinian Christian Polemic against Agrippa I,” JSNT 83 (2001) 27-49; M. J. Wilkins, Matthew (NIVAC; Grand Rapids: Zondervan, 2004); N. T. Wright, Jesus and the Victory of God (COQG 2; Minneapolis: Fortress, 1996).

M. J. Wilkins

TESTIMONY. See WITNESS.

TEXTUAL CRITICISM

The text-critical study of the Gospels has undergone a fundamental overhaul in recent years. The discovery of new manuscripts, the redefinition of the nature and goal of the task(s), and the continued march of scholarship have altered the text-critical landscape in significant ways. The prevailing concern over the “original” form of the text has been replaced with a more nuanced perspective, and the value placed on the recovered Greek “text” has been reassessed. The printed text in the United Bible Societies Greek New Testament (4th ed.) and the Nestle-Aland Novum Testamentum Graece (28th ed.) is no longer equated with the “original,” and later textual variants are no longer dismissed as unimportant. Diplomatic editions of the Gospels (i.e., editions belonging to a particular textual tradition) are published alongside critically reconstructed ones, and the text-critical canons have been reevaluated. Individual manuscripts are valued irrespective of age, material or classification, even if their role in reconstructing the text is minimal.

Textual criticism traditionally has been concerned with the recovery of the earliest form of the text—in this case, the individual texts of the four Gospels. Every available manuscript is compared in an attempt to trace the history of changes and recover the “original.” Today, the “initial text” has displaced the “original text” as the goal (and phrase) of choice, signaling a shift in how the reconstructed text is understood. The initial text, as currently conceived, is the hypothetical witness that stands at the beginning of the extant textual tradition. The distinction underscores the fact that our printed texts may not be exactly what the ancient authors penned. Some editorial intervention may have occurred between the writing of the authorial text(s) and the extant manuscript tradition. The relationship between the authorial text(s) and the initial text must therefore be argued rather than assumed at each variation unit.

1. Rationale for Textual Criticism
2. Text-Critical Methods
3. Textual Harmonization Within the Gospels
4. The Western Non-Interpolations
5. Conclusion

1. Rationale for Textual Criticism.

A number of early papyrus manuscripts have surfaced over the last few years. These include papyrus fragments from Egypt (Oxyrhynchus) of Matthew (P⁷⁷, 101-104, 110), Luke (P¹¹¹) and John (P¹⁰⁶⁻¹⁰⁹, 119-122). Mark, however, continues to lag in early attestation. No early manuscripts of Mark’s Gospel have been recovered from the site. The Gospel of Thomas is actually better attested, with three early manuscript fragments preserving the work (P.Oxy. 1, 654, 655). The newly discovered papyri, however, have not altered our reconstructed texts. The readings of these papyri either are attested elsewhere or are unique but clear corruptions. Their discovery nonetheless underscores the need for continued text-critical research. The original writings of the NT have perished and are no longer available for inspection. Further, the legacy of a millennium and a half of manual copying has been a textual tradition riddled with every conceivable scribal error. Finally, of the over 5,800 Greek manuscripts of the NT currently extant (nearly 2,400 of them Gospels), no two witnesses are exactly alike. Textual critics therefore must sift through the available data, compare witnesses, identify changes, and select the readings that most likely reflect the initial text of the Gospels.

Equally important is the attention granted to the textual history of the Gospels and the hermeneutical implications of their varied transmission. Although the discovery of the early papyri has not affected our reconstructed texts, they have confirmed known variants, offered new readings, contributed to the grouping of manuscript families, and, in the case of P⁷⁵, debunked the idea of an early Alexandrian recension. The data provided by these early manuscripts have also enhanced our understanding of scribal copying practices, the use of the codex, and the grouping of Gospels into collections.

2. Text-Critical Methods.

A number of text-critical methods are used to establish the initial text. Each involves a measure of selectivity and judgment, and final decisions often pivot on the “balance of probabilities.” That balance, however, tips in a given direction depending on the chosen method and individual text-critical judgments. Reasoned eclecticism, the predominant text-critical practice today, attempts to chart a path between internal and external evidence to establish the text. Thoroughgoing eclecticism sides with the internal evidence, while Byzantine eclecticism selects readings from the majority of Byzantine manuscripts. The Coherence-Based Genealogical Method (CBGM) is also used alongside internal and external criteria to determine the tradition’s textual flow and establish the text. Every approach must nonetheless weigh both internal and external data (even if each does so differently). The external evidence consists of NT manuscripts, patristic citations, the translations and lectionary material. The internal evidence is comprised of transcriptional and intrinsic probabilities. Transcriptional probabilities are determined on the basis of scribal copying habits and practices. Intrinsic probabilities arise from an assessment of the NT author’s vocabulary and style.

2.1. External Evidence. The external evidence is assessed in relation to particular variation units. A unit of variation is a section of the manuscript tradition in which at least two variant forms of a word, phrase or clause(s) exist, each of which is supported by at least two Greek witnesses. Once a variation unit has been isolated, the external evidence for each variant can be identified and weighed. The age of manuscripts, the geographical distribution of witnesses and the genealogical relationship of texts and families are considered in identifying the earliest readings in circulation. A reading supported by all three categories has nearly unassailable external support. More important than a manuscript’s age is the age of the text that it preserves. Later manuscripts may preserve early readings. Readings once considered Byzantine, for example, were subsequently found among the early papyri; P⁴⁵ preserves a number of distinctively Byzantine readings in Mark. The usefulness of the third category (genealogical relationships of texts and families), however, is disputed. The use of “text-types” to identify textual affinities is considered by some textual critics an inadequate characterization of the manuscript tradition. Other means of identifying and categorizing textual relationships continue to be explored.

The importance of the external evidence for establishing the initial text is manifest in the account of the adulterous woman in John 7:53–8:11. The earliest and best Greek manuscripts do not preserve the story. Neither do the early Greek church fathers regard the story as part of the John’s Gospel. The fifth-century Codex Bezae, joined by several Old Latin manuscripts, is the earliest Greek witness to contain the story. The account’s poor external support among early Greek manuscripts, coupled with differences in the story’s style and vocabulary against the rest of John’s Gospel, decreases the likelihood that it was ever part of the initial text of John.

2.2. Transcriptional Probabilities. The recovery of the initial text is aided by a consideration of transcriptional probabilities. Transcriptional probabilities allude to what a scribe is most likely to have written and derive from recognizable patterns of copying habits. The observation that scribes have a tendency to harmonize parallel passages, ease difficult readings, add words and phrases where necessary, and replace ungrammatical, unfamiliar or inelegant expressions led to the formulation of criteria designed to identify and invert the dynamics of scribal corruption. These text-critical canons tend to privilege readings that are shorter, more difficult or grammatically and stylistically infelicitous. The “less perfect” reading is generally identified as the likely cause for subsequent textual improvements and is believed to lie nearer to the initial text. A textual variant in John 7:8 offers a case in point. Did the author write, “I am not [ouk] going up to the feast,” or “I am not yet [oude] going up to the feast”? The fact that Jesus does go up to the feast in John 7:10 makes “not” the more difficult reading and explains the appearance of “not yet.” The scribal correction, however, appears to miss a word play. Jesus’ brothers call for him to literally “go up” to the feast. Jesus replied that he would not “go up” in the ultimate (Johannine) sense.

The text-critical canons are being reassessed today. The shorter-reading canon, for example, has been called into question in recent years due in large measure to a proliferation of studies on scribal habits. The scribes responsible for transcribing P⁴⁵, P⁴⁶, P⁴⁷, P⁶⁶, P⁷² and P⁷⁵, for example, appear to have omitted more often than they added to their texts, leading textual critics to reconsider the viability of the shorter reading canon.

2.3. Intrinsic Probabilities. Intrinsic probabilities concern what an ancient author is most likely to have written. The author's vocabulary, style and theology in a given document are weighed in making textual decisions. The immediate literary context, the Aramaic background of Jesus's teachings, the presumption of Markan priority and consistency with the author's attested usage elsewhere are also considered. Intrinsic probabilities may tip the scales where the evidence is divided. The consideration of intrinsic probabilities, however, is the criterion most susceptible to circularity. The author's putative tendencies, upon which text-critical judgments partly rest, must themselves be established. The process between the reconstruction of the text and that of the author is not always easily differentiated. Caution therefore must be exercised in applying this criterion. All things being equal, the reading that best explains the rise of the others is most likely the initial text.

3. Textual Harmonization Within the Gospels.

Establishing the initial text of the Gospels is complicated by textual harmonization. The complexity occurs at two levels. First, the interdependence of the Gospels means that traces of harmonization are already present in the earliest recoverable text. Irrespective of the paradigm chosen to explain the literary interdependence of the Gospels, the writers appeared to use the text of one (or two) of the others in varying degrees for the construction of their own Gospels. A family resemblance is therefore unavoidable, particularly among the Synoptics. Second, copyists possessed a clear and demonstrable tendency to harmonize parallel passages. Additional precautions are thus necessary in assessing textual harmonization.

First, not every form of harmonization is the same. Harmonization may occur between or among the Gospels, within a single Gospel, in the direction of the LXX, or, in the direction of a known phrase or idea unrelated to a particular parallel. The addition of "for bread, will give him a stone" in Luke 11:11 is a harmonization to Matthew 8:9. The addition in Mark 9:44, 46 of "where the worm does not die and the fire is not quenched" is harmonization to Mark 9:48. And the addition of "and lamentation" in Matthew 2:18 is a harmonization to the LXX version of Jeremiah 31:15 (LXX 38:15). Two or more of these forms of harmonization may also occur within a single variation unit. Decisions thus often hang on the balance of probabilities.

Second, the location of the harmonization matters. The close verbal correspondence of the Synoptic Gospels, for example, cautions against unwarranted assumptions about what an author or scribe might have done. The double tradition (tradition common to Matthew and Luke) is telling in this regard, where the wording of parallel passages can be identical. Textual harmonization may therefore stem from the author rather than scribal activity. As for scribes, a measure of selectivity attends their harmonizing. The sayings of Jesus are more susceptible to harmonization than are larger narratives. Significant words or major additions and omissions are also more likely to undergo harmonizing than the alternative. Knowledge of what material is most prone to harmonization will therefore aid textual decisions. The availability of Gospel synopses also means that more harmonization will be detected than probably was the case. The modern ability to identify every jot and tittle from parallel passages cannot be imposed upon the ancient scribe.

The dynamics of scribal harmonizing will also differ from Gospel to Gospel. The manuscript tradition bears witness to varying degrees of popularity among individual Gospels. The early and widespread use of Matthew, for example, means that the manuscript traditions of Mark and Luke will exhibit a greater degree of assimilation toward Matthew than the reverse. Mark probably will outpace Luke in this regard. The impact of Matthew's popularity is thus a key consideration in the analysis of scribal harmonizing.

Degrees of harmonization will also differ within the broader streams of the textual tradition as well. Harmonization is present in every tradition. And yet, certain textual streams preserve greater degrees of harmonizing than others. The Western and Byzantine traditions, for example, surpass the Alexandrian in harmonizing tendencies. Even here, however, caution must be exercised. The Western tradition is as early as the Alexandrian, and later Byzantine readings have been known to contain early readings. Scribes may also disharmonize readings. The initial text might well preserve a harmonization.

Finally, decisions regarding textual harmonization are invariably informed by one's approach to the *Synoptic Problem. Judgments regarding harmonization are inseparable from presumptions of Gospel priority. The fact that our text-critical tools cannot be constructed without a preliminary solution to the problem is a further complication. K. Aland's Synopsis of the Four Gospels, for example, does not claim to espouse a particular source theory; yet, the placement of its pericopes reflects a presumption of Markan priority and a subscription to the two-source theory. Moreover, what appears to be a harmonization in a critically reconstructed text may look differently against the backdrop of the entire textual tradition.

4. The Western Non-Interpolations.

A handful of textual variants confound traditional considerations. The origin and authenticity of the so-called Western Non-Interpolations, for example, remain an intractable problem for the textual history of the Gospels. These are a collection of readings omitted from the Western tradition (Mt 27:49; Lk 22:19b-20; 24:3, 6, 12, 36, 40; 24:51c-52). Their absence, however, defies every expectation of a tradition characterized by harmonization, paraphrase and interpolation. F. J. A. Hort considered the shorter readings (i.e., the omissions) authentic; the longer, non-Western readings would have otherwise surfaced in such an early and "full" tradition. The odd designation "Western Non-Interpolations" reflects Hort's inability to acknowledge that the Alexandrian tradition had interpolated in these locations; the status of the Alexandrian tradition, as a witness to the "Neutral" text (i.e., the "original"), would have been compromised. Today, largely on the basis of the external evidence (i.e., *P*⁷⁵), all but one of the longer readings (Mt 27:49) have been readmitted into UBS⁴ and NA²⁸. The recently published Society of Biblical Literature Greek New Testament, however, includes two (Lk 24:6, 12), omits three (Mt 27:49; Lk 24:3, 36), and leaves four undecided, as indicated by brackets (Lk 22:19b-20; 24:40; 24:51; 24:52). The debate over their authenticity thus continues, with a variety of reasons, theological and otherwise, marshaled for their rejection or acceptance.

5. Conclusion.

The recovery of the initial text remains an integral part of the text-critical task. The fact that our texts may not represent the very wording of the author in every respect, however, does not imply textual chaos. The textual tradition is stable en masse. Even the well-known exceptions, however, are no longer dismissed as merely inauthentic. Contested episodes—for example, the story of the adulterous woman (Jn 7:53–8:11) and the multiple endings of Mark (the shorter addition to Mk 16:8, the longer in Mk 16:9-20, or the two combined)—are valued as witnesses to the church's ongoing engagement with its traditions. Even the later Byzantine tradition is now represented by a diplomatic edition of the Greek NT for the Orthodox Church (The Gospel of John in the Byzantine Tradition). Textual variation, in other words, is the hallmark of a living tradition. Establishing the initial text is an essential but by no means final step in the textual criticism of the Gospels.

See also CANON; CRITERIA OF AUTHENTICITY; SYNOPTIC PROBLEM.

BIBLIOGRAPHY. J. Chapa, "The Early Text of John," in The Early Text of the New Testament, ed. C. E. Hill and M. J. Kruger (Oxford: Oxford University Press, 2012) 140-56; D. L. Dungan, "Theory of Synopsis Construction," Bib 61 (1980) 305-29; B. D. Ehrman, The Orthodox Corruption of Scripture: The Effect of Early Christological Controversies on the Text of the New Testament (rev. ed.; Oxford: Oxford University Press, 2011); B. D. Ehrman and M. W. Holmes, The Text of the New Testament in Contemporary Research: Essays on the Status Quaestionis (2nd ed.; NTTSD 42; Leiden: E. J. Brill, 2013); J. K. Elliott, "Recent Oxyrhynchus Papyri," in New Testament Textual Criticism: The Application of Thoroughgoing Principles: Essays on Manuscripts and Textual Variation (NovTSup 137; Leiden: E. J. Brill, 2010) 157-74; idem, "Recent Trends in the Textual Criticism of the New Testament: A New Millennium, a New Beginning?" BABELAO 1 (2012) 117-36; G. D. Fee, "Modern Textual Criticism and the Synoptic Problem," in J. J. Griesbach: Synoptic and Text-Critical Studies, 1776-1976, ed. B. Orchard and T. R. W. Longstaff (SNTSMS 34; Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 1979); P. M. Head, "The Early Text of Mark," in The Early Text of the New Testament, ed. C. E. Hill and M. J. Kruger (Oxford: Oxford University Press, 2012) 108-20; idem, "Textual Criticism and the Synoptic Problem," in New Studies in the Synoptic Problem: Oxford Conference, April 2008; Essays in Honour of Christopher M. Tuckett, ed. P. Foster et al. (BETL 239; Leuven: Peeters, 2011) 115-56; J. Hernández Jr., "The Early Text of Luke," in The Early Text of the New Testament, ed. C. E. Hill and M. J. Kruger (Oxford: Oxford University Press, 2012) 121-39; idem, review of Two Gospels from One: A Comprehensive Text-Critical Analysis of the Synoptic Gospels, by M. C. Williams, TC 12 (2007); M. W. Holmes, "The Text of the Matthean Divorce Passages: A Comment on the Appeal to Harmonization in Textual Decisions,” JBL 109 (1990) 651-64; C. Keith, The Pericopae Adulterae, the Gospel of John, and the Literacy of Jesus (NTTSD 38; Leiden: E. J. Brill, 2009); J. A. Kelhoffer, Miracle and Mission: The Authentication of Missionaries and their Message in Mark (WUNT 2/112; Tübingen: Mohr Siebeck, 2000); B. M. Metzger, A Textual Commentary on the Greek New Testament: A Companion Volume to the United Bible Societies' Greek New Testament (4th ed.; Stuttgart: Deutsch Bibelgesellschaft, 2006); B. M. Metzger and B. D. Ehrman, The Text of the New Testament: Its Transmission, Corruption, and Restoration (4th ed.; Oxford: Oxford University Press, 2005); D. C. Parker, The Living Text of the Gospels (Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 1997); idem, An Introduction to the New Testament Manuscripts and Their Texts (Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 2008); J. R. Royse, Scribal Habits in Early Greek New Testament Manuscripts (NTTSD 36; Leiden: E. J. Brill, 2008); K. Wachtel and M. W. Holmes, The Textual History of the Greek New Testament: Changing Views in Contemporary Research (SBLTCS 8; Atlanta: Society of Biblical Literature, 2011); T. Wasserman, “The Early Text of Matthew,” in The Early Text of the New Testament, ed. C. E. Hill and M. J. Kruger (Oxford: Oxford University Press, 2012) 83-107. J. Hernández Jr.

THEOLOGICAL INTERPRETATION OF THE GOSPELS

This article focuses on the present attempt to recover the practice of reading Scripture theologically, particularly as it relates to the Gospels. As with theological interpretation of Scripture in general (Green, 1-9; Hays, 5-15), what constitutes a theological interpretation of the Gospels is not always obvious and cannot be demarcated by methodological boundaries. Interpreting the Gospels theologically is characterized more by a particular orientation toward them in which interpreters self-consciously locate themselves and their interpretations within an ecclesial framework characterized by a commitment to the Christian canon(s), the creeds (i.e., the Apostles' and Nicene-Constantinopolitan creeds), and a variety of ecclesial practices. They assume that canonical considerations, doctrinal commitments and concerns, and ecclesial practices might clarify and deepen understanding of the Gospels, and that the Gospels might clarify and deepen understanding of the church's doctrine and practices. Hence, the aim of interpreting the Gospels theologically is to stimulate critical reflection on the church's beliefs and practices in order to facilitate its ongoing formation into the visible body of the cruciform, living Christ, to whom the Gospels bear witness.

1. Basic Assumptions
2. Expressions of Theological Interpretation of the Gospels
3. Conclusion

1. Basic Assumptions.

Theological interpretation of the Gospels focuses on the four canonical *Gospels in their literary wholeness (rather than various aspects of their composition history), affirming that they are already theology in narrative form (see Canon). They are theologically driven narrative representations of past events, early church testimonies calling their hearers to reorient their lives on the basis of their depictions of Jesus' identity and significance (Green, 43-56; Placher, 2-5). Theological interpretation maintains that together the four diverse Gospels constitute the fourfold gospel, four witnesses to the one gospel. Hence, theological interpreters are less interested in historical reconstructions of the “life of Jesus” in which the historian offers essentially a fifth narrative depicting the significance of Jesus. They are not, however, uninterested in historical information. Familiarity with basic sociocultural and political assumptions taken for granted in the ancient Mediterranean milieu is important for understanding how the Gospels utilize, represent, critique and transform such assumptions in attempting to shape their audiences (Green, 53-56).

Theological interpretation does not assume that each of the Gospels, or passages within them, has a single meaning limited to the intention of the human author. Rather, it assumes that the triune God is Scripture's ultimate author, who has been active before, during and after the writing of the Gospels, also generating a wider interpretive framework for their interpretation. That interpretive framework is constituted by the church's canon(s) of Scripture, its doctrinal confessions, and its ecclesial practices. The primary intention of that author is to form a people who reflect God's holy character as they witness to his mission to redeem creation. Within this wider interpretive framework, Gospel passages may have multiple senses that go beyond the purview of their original writers and hearers (Hauerwas, 25n2).

2. Expressions of Theological Interpretation of the Gospels.

Theological interpretation may draw on an array of methods that facilitate a full engagement with the Gospels. Hence, describing every sort of endeavor that might count as theological interpretation of the Gospels is unfeasible. What follows here, then, is an effort to describe and illustrate some expressions of reading the Gospels theologically under the headings of the particular commitments that undergird them.

2.1. Commitment to the Christian Canon(s) as an Interpretive Framework. Discerning typological correspondences between events in Israel's story and Jesus' story is an ancient form of interpreting the Gospels theologically (see Gonzalez, 24-25) (see Old Testament in the Gospels). For example, interpreters have long recognized that Luke, leading into the *temptation scene in Luke 4:1-13, invokes typological correspondences between Jesus and Adam (via Lk 3:22, 38) and follows that by establishing a typological correspondence between Israel's and Jesus' testing in the wilderness. The effect is to draw parallels (and contrasts) between Adam's temptation in the garden, Israel's testing in the wilderness, and Jesus' own testing, making the former two a matrix of meaning within which to discern the significance of the latter.

Even those who do not claim to be interpreting the Gospels theologically might recognize these connections. But theological interpreters will explicate their significance in explicitly theological terms. For instance, a theological interpreter might argue that such scriptural connections indicate that Jesus' testing is a part of an overarching scriptural story in which God, by calling *Israel to be his obedient son (e.g., Hos 11:1), attempted to undo the evil that Adam's trespass/disobedience did to creation. Whereas Israel ultimately failed in their calling, Luke's narrative typology effectively depicts Jesus as the true Son/human through whom God intends to redeem creation from the consequences of Adam's trespass (see Gonzalez, 56-62). Given a commitment to the Christian canon(s) as an interpretive framework for interpreting Luke, such an interpretation is plausible whether or not Luke's human author intended to suggest it.

In calling attention to a variety of OT Scriptures to which Jesus either quotes or alludes and then demonstrating how they prefigure his actions and teachings in ways that create theologically significant patterns of meaning, the work of R. B. Hays on the Gospels is particularly noteworthy (see Hays, 16-21). The work of Hays and others invites critical reflection on the fact that the creeds move directly to Jesus in their second articles with no explicit reference to Israel in their first articles. Such interpretive work insists that the church cannot ignore the fuller story of Israel that is missing between the creeds' first two articles.

With the Christian canon(s) as an interpretive framework for the Gospels, portions of other NT documents might be useful theological "commentaries" on them (Hauerwas, 21). For example, the fact that both Luke and Paul evoke typological correspondences between Jesus and Adam raises the possibility of using Romans 5:12-21 as a commentary on Luke's temptation scene and subsequent narrative of Jesus' suffering and death. When an audience influenced by Romans 5:12-21 hears Luke's centurion pronounce Jesus "righteous" (dikaïos) in Luke 23:47, they may make the theological judgment that Luke's narration of Jesus' obedience (in contrast to Adam's trespass) from the temptation scene through the moment of death is indeed that "righteous act [dikaiōma] of the one" that "leads to justification [dikaiōsis] characterized by life for all" (Rom 5:18). If so, this frame of reference might bring to light aspects of Luke's narrative related to the saving significance of Jesus' life and *death that the audience might not have noticed otherwise. For extended examples of this sort of endeavor, see A. Johnson (who uses Pauline conceptuality as commentary on portions of Mark) and R. W. L. Moberly (who brings Matthew into conversation with Phil 2:5-11 [Moberly, 220-24]).

2.2. Commitment to the Nicene Tradition and Doctrinal Discussions as Clarifying Lenses. Most modern NT scholarship has assumed that doctrinal commitments and concerns obscure Scripture. In contrast, theological interpretation assumes that a commitment to the rule of faith as represented by the Nicene tradition, as well as doctrinal discussions carried on within its bounds, potentially clarifies the lenses through which the Gospels are interpreted (see the series preface in Hauerwas, 12-13). This happens in an ongoing dialogical process between creedal/doctrinal commitments and the Gospel texts to which these commitments orient the interpreter. The former form the most basic convictions that theological interpreters bring to their interpretive endeavors (Jenson, 47-51). While these creedal/doctrinal commitments and concerns remain (in some way) subject to the Gospel texts, they shape the primary questions theological interpreters bring to them.

For example, rather than focusing on issues such as its authenticity or tradition history, the primary questions that J. Gonzalez brings to Luke's temptation scene (Lk 4:1-13) are shaped by doctrinal concerns surrounding the nature of sin and temptation (Gonzalez, 56-62). He, therefore, rightly recognizes that the typological connection with Adam raises the issue of how to understand the nature of sin and temptation itself, and he initiates a dialogue between this text and those doctrinal discussions. Starting from the perspective of the powerless and considering the movement of Luke's narrative with Genesis in the background, he argues that Augustine's conception of *sin as pride is too limited, thereby attempting to clarify and deepen the church's understanding of the nature of sin and temptation (Gonzalez, 59-61).

At the same time, theological interpretation of the Gospels insists that the bare framework of the creeds' three articles need to be filled out and explicated with close readings of the Gospels. Such readings become, in essence, commentary on the creeds. For example, one might read John 11, on the raising of *Lazarus, within the framework of the creed in a way that attempts to fill in gaps between its three articles, explicating not only the link between Father, Son and Spirit, but also between creation, salvation and final redemption (Thompson, 236-44). Or one might intentionally read Matthew within the context of the Nicene tradition, insisting, however, that Jesus' death and *resurrection cannot be abstracted from his life and teaching, which the creeds' gap in moving directly from birth to crucifixion has the potential to encourage (Hauerwas, esp. 237-49). Recognizing that Matthew's Jesus is none other than the Jesus of the second article might indeed clarify and deepen Christian understanding of Matthew. But Matthew's narrative of Jesus' life and teaching in turn clarifies and deepens our understanding of the one "born of the virgin, Mary" and "crucified under Pontius Pilate."

Prior to the last couple of decades, NT scholars routinely characterized the *Christology of the Synoptic Gospels as "merely functional" as opposed to "ontological." Such readings leave a ditch between these Gospels' depictions of Jesus and the pattern of judgments about Jesus in the creeds. Using the category of "identity," some theological interpreters challenge such accounts (Bauckham; Rowe). They do not necessarily start by appealing to creedal commitments, but they refuse to rule them out. They argue that "identity" should not be understood in static terms but rather as constructed via story/narrative; that is, the question of who someone was is answered by telling what that person did. For example, paying close attention to the pattern of judgments in the movement of Luke's narrative, K. Rowe shows how Luke sews together Jesus and Israel's God in a shared identity as Lord, which reflects a similar pattern of judgments made about Jesus in the creeds. Hence, a reading of Luke that refuses to rule out creedal commitments at the start might not only coincide with creedal judgments but might also clarify implicit claims made by that Gospel.

2.3. Commitment to Christian Formation/Church Practices as Clarifying Lenses. The aim of theological interpretation of the Gospels is to facilitate Christian formation (Green). Hence, theological interpretation of the Gospels is best carried out in communities open to being shaped by them whose aim is to live in ways analogous to that of Jesus (Hauerwas, 29-30). The practices of such communities might fit interpreters within them with lenses that sensitize them to particular aspects of the Gospels. For example, a community that regularly practices the Eucharist might readily discern eucharistic overtones in Luke's feeding of the multitude (Lk 9:10-17), given that the sequence of verbs describing what Jesus does with the bread there parallels his actions at the *Last Supper (Lk 22:19) (see Table Fellowship). When that passage is heard in a eucharistic service where the church is fed, it connects the Eucharist table with the physical hunger on display in the world. As such, it reminds the church of God's rich resources and that God's call on the church to be the body of Christ for the world necessitates addressing such hunger (Gonzalez, 115-18). Hence, regularly practicing the Eucharist provides a clarifying lens that helps interpreters better understand Luke's feeding of the multitude as related to what happens at the table. This, in turn, helps the church better understand the implications of its own eucharistic practice.

3. Conclusion.

The present effort to recover the practice of interpreting the Gospels theologically is not a methodologically monolithic movement. Within an ecclesial framework characterized by canon, creeds and ecclesial practices, theological interpreters make use of a variety of approaches to the Gospels. No doubt, there will be interpretive disagreements among its practitioners. But if their churches take on a more cruciform character, thereby giving public testimony to the living Christ, to whom the Gospels witness, theological interpreters of the Gospels will have achieved their interpretive aim.

See also CANONICAL CRITICISM; GOSPELS: HISTORY OF INTERPRETATION.

BIBLIOGRAPHY. R. Bauckham, Jesus and the God of Israel: God Crucified and Other Studies on the New Testament's Christology of Divine Identity (Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 2008); J. Gonzalez, Luke (Belief; Louisville: Westminster John Knox, 2010); J. B. Green, Practicing Theological Interpretation of Scripture: Engaging Biblical Texts for Faith and Formation (Grand Rapids: Baker Academic, 2011); S. Hauerwas, Matthew (BTCB; Grand Rapids: Brazos, 2006); R. B. Hays, "Reading the Bible with Eyes of Faith: The Practice of Theological Exegesis," JTI 1 (2007) 5-21; R. W. Jenson, "Identity, Jesus, and Exegesis," in Seeking the Identity of Jesus: A Pilgrimage, ed. B. R. Gaventa and R. B. Hays (Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 2008) 43-59; A. Johnson, "The 'New Creation,' the Crucified and Risen Christ, and the Temple: A Pauline Audience for Mark," JTI 1 (2007) 171-91; R. W. L. Moberly, The Bible, Theology, and Faith: A Study of Abraham and Jesus (CSCD; Cambridge: University Press, 2000); W. C. Placher, Mark (Belief; Louisville: Westminster John Knox, 2010); K. Rowe, Early Narrative Christology: The Lord in the Gospel of Luke (Grand Rapids: Baker Academic, 2006); M. M. Thompson, "The Raising of Lazarus in John 11: A Theological Reading," in The Gospel of John and Christian Theology, ed. R. Bauckham and C. Mosser (Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 2008) 233-44.

A. Johnson

THIRD QUEST. See QUEST OF THE HISTORICAL JESUS.

THREE-SOURCE HYPOTHESIS. See SYNOPTIC PROBLEM.

TIBERIAS. See ARCHEOLOGY AND GEOGRAPHY.

TITHES. See ECONOMICS; LAW.

TOMB OF JESUS. See BURIAL OF JESUS.

TORAH. See JUDAISM, COMMON; LAW.

TRADITION. See ORALITY AND ORAL TRANSMISSION; RABBINIC TRADITIONS AND WRITINGS.

TRANSFIGURATION

Although they vary on details, all three Synoptic Gospels recount an event in which Jesus ascends a *mountain with three of his *disciples, after which he is transformed (or transfigured) in their presence. The reports include the presence of *Moses and *Elijah, Peter's proposal to construct three tents, the overshadowing cloud, and the divine voice with its acclamation of Jesus; also the subsequent descent of the disciples and Jesus down the mountain, together with a note about the disciples' ensuing silence about this experience (Mt 17:1-9; Mk 9:2-10; Lk 9:28-36). In all three Synoptic Gospels the transfiguration appears in the immediate context of questions about Jesus' identity (Mt 16:13-20; Mk 8:27-30; Lk 9:7-9, 18-21), an issue addressed here directly by Jesus' Father. In all three Synoptic Gospels this visionary experience occurs in temporal proximity to Jesus' first prediction of his pending suffering, death and resurrection (Mt 16:21-28; Mk 8:31-9:1; Lk 9:21-27) (see Predictions of Jesus' Passion and Resurrection), underscoring the significance of the divine command to the disciples to listen to Jesus (Mt 17:5; Mk 9:7; Lk 9:35). For each of the Synoptic Gospels, the transfiguration is deeply embedded in the plot line and theological development of the narrative, where it serves both to emphasize Jesus' identity and to disclose proleptically Jesus' *glory. Jesus' transfiguration is also referred to in 2 Peter 1:16-18, where it plays a similarly significant theological role.

1. Jesus' Transfiguration in Recent Study
2. Jesus' Transfiguration in Matthew
3. Jesus' Transfiguration in Mark
4. Jesus' Transfiguration in Luke
5. Jesus' Transfiguration in 2 Peter

1. Jesus' Transfiguration in Recent Study.

Until the modern era, the transfiguration generally was read as a historical event, complete with three eyewitnesses—Peter, James and John, who were with Jesus on the mountain. Early in the nineteenth century, D. F. Strauss anticipated what would later become a widespread view in claiming that the Synoptic reports of the transfiguration cannot be explained in terms of natural phenomena (e.g., a lightning storm illuminated Jesus' face, and a thunder clap was mistaken for the heavenly voice [see Spitta, 121-23]) and cannot be accepted as a supernatural event, but is better explained as a legendary account based on (while surpassing) the report of Moses' luminous countenance in Exodus 34:29-35. Thus, for example, R. Miller recently concluded, "Even on its own terms, the story does not seem plausible" (R. Miller 1994, 246), and C. Moss has argued that Mark, in his transfiguration account, has created a collage of religious motifs drawing on Jewish and Greek religious traditions.

Modern discussions of the historicity of this scene have been hobbled by a common misunderstanding of religious experiences, including a visionary experience such as the one represented by the transfiguration accounts (see Dreams and Visions), as inner, subjective experiences reducible to psychological explanation. Recent inquiry into religious experiences, including study of altered states of consciousness underlying visionary experiences, has underscored their basis in embodied activity susceptible to study and a range of explanations (e.g., Runehow). This has effectively laid aside modern prejudice against assigning historical veracity to reports of this kind in favor of focusing attention instead on their interpretation. The transfiguration scenes of the Synoptic Gospels are prime examples (among others—e.g., accounts of Jesus' *baptism and of his *prayer at *Gethsemane/on the Mount of Olives) of the absurdity of modern attempts to segregate "history" (i.e., "what really happened") from "theology" (as interpretations of "what really happened"), since the memories of such occasions are irreducible amalgams of documentary and interpretive interests (see History and Historiography).

The significance of an account such as this one is determined in part by the literary form(s) through which it is conveyed. On this point, the history of interpretation has scarcely been of one mind, identifying the transfiguration as a misplaced post-resurrection account, for example (a once-popular view now thoroughly refuted [see Dodd; Stein]), or as an *apocalyptic vision, an epiphany, an enthronement scene, or a pronouncement story, to name a few possibilities championed in recent years. Drawing on precursors in Israel's Scriptures and related Jewish traditions, and with reference to their function in the Synoptic Gospels, J. Heil refers to these accounts as "pivotal mandatory epiphanies" (Heil 2000). Although lacking in elegance, this moniker aptly identifies these accounts as epiphanic (God temporarily transforms Jesus' appearance in anticipation of his heavenly glory), in which a divine mandate is given (listen to Jesus!), and which serve as a pivot point in their respective Gospels (gathering up motifs from previous chapters and pointing to what is to come). (For surveys of related critical issues, see Reid, 3-30; Moses, 20-49; Heil 2000, 21-33; on the history of interpretation, see Bovon, 372, 380-81.)

2. Jesus' Transfiguration in Matthew.

From a source- or *redaction-critical perspective, we have little reason to imagine that Matthew had access to a transfiguration account other than what he found in Mark's Gospel.

Matthew's account is framed by Matthew 17:1, 9: the ascent up and descent down "a high mountain." Commonly identified today as Mount Hermon (though there are other candidates, especially Mount Tabor), the specific location is not as important to Matthew (or the other evangelists) as is the topographical marker itself (see Mountain and Wilderness). Mountains generally serve as places of revelation and/or divine encounter, and this is true in Matthew (e.g., Mt 5:1; 14:23; 15:29; 28:16). The closest analogy to Matthew's phrase "a high mountain" (oros hypsēlos) appears in Matthew 4:8, where the devil took Jesus to "a very high mountain" (oros hypsēlos lian)—an ironic association, since the one scene has the devil revealing to Jesus the splendor of worldly kingdoms while the other has God transforming Jesus in order to reveal his glory to his disciples. Given Matthew's wider interest in Moses' typology, it is difficult not to find here one of a series of echoes of Moses' encounter with God on the mountain (Ex 24:15-18) and the consequent transformation of Moses' countenance (Ex 34:29-35).

Matthew 17:1-2 sets the stage further with a temporal marker ("after six days"), followed by references to Jesus' companions and the transfiguration itself. The phrase "after six days" immediately recalls the preceding narrative sequence concerning the identification of Jesus by Peter as "the Messiah, the Son of the living God," followed by Jesus' *prediction of his suffering, death and resurrection and his promise that "some standing here . . . will not experience death before they see the Son of Man coming in his kingdom" (Mt 16:13-28). In the presence of other allusions to Moses, it may also recall Exodus 24:15-18. This is the first appearance of the triad of Peter, James and John in Matthew's Gospel (cf. Mt 26:37), although, together with Andrew, they are among the first disciples called and the first disciples named in Matthew 4:18-21; 10:2-4. Matthew describes Jesus' transfiguration with a passive verb, presumably a so-called divine or theological passive, metemorphōthē ("he was transformed," with God as the agent of his transformation), the result of which was that "his face shone like the sun and his clothes became as white as light." Links to Moses are again visible (Ex 34:29, 35), and we may see Daniel's heavenly figures in the background (e.g., Dan 10:6: "his face like an appearance of lightning"; cf. Rev 10:1; Apoc. Zeph. 6:11; 2 En. 1:5; 19:1), but Matthew's language also recalls Matthew 13:43, with its eschatological portrait of the righteous as those who "will shine like the sun in their Father's kingdom." "White as light" recalls the resplendent clothing of the Ancient One in Daniel 7:9: "white as snow" (cf., e.g., 1 En. 14:20-21: "white as the light"). Such texts dress Jesus in the apocalyptic and eschatological garb of heaven. That is, the effect of Jesus' transformation is that he not only shares in, but now also displays, *God's own glory.

Matthew designates three emphases through his repeated use of the interjection idou (“Look!” [though often left untranslated]) in Matthew 17:3, 5 (2x): (1) the discussion between Jesus, Moses and Elijah; (2) the appearance of the cloud; (3) the voice speaking from the cloud.

(1) Moses, the prototypical prophet (Deut 18:15-18; 34:10), has served as a type of Jesus since Matthew’s birth narrative (Mt 1–2), and Matthew identifies Elijah with *John the Baptist (Mt 11:13; cf. Mt 17:10-12). These two figures appear with Jesus, then, in their roles as those who prefigure and prepare the way of Jesus, in conformity with the pairing of Moses and Elijah in Malachi 4:4-6, a prophetic word concerning *Israel’s restoration (see Exile and Restoration). Representing the other disciples, Peter’s response to the vision (horama [Mt 17:9]) is to propose the construction of three “tents” (skēnē), recalling a constellation of images: the temporary places of dwelling in the exodus journey and, thus, the Festival of Booths (see Feasts), and perhaps even the tent of meeting (e.g., Ex 33:7-11). That Peter proposes three tents suggests his concern to honor each of these heavenly figures.

(2) The inappropriateness of Peter’s suggestion is signaled immediately by the second use of the interjection idou, drawing attention to a radiant cloud that overshadows them, interrupting Peter “while he was still speaking” (Mt 17:5). Echoing Jesus’ own transformed appearance, “like light [phōs]” (Mt 17:2), the cloud is “full of light [phōteinos]” (Mt 17:5), emphasizing the scriptural portrait of clouds as an evocation of God’s presence and as God’s means of transportation, from which God may speak (e.g., Ex 16:10-11; 19:9; 24:15-18; Pss 18:10-11; 104:3). Matthew does not clarify who is overshadowed by the cloud; his “them” could refer to the three heavenly figures and the three disciples or to some combination of them. Heil has made the intriguing suggestion that the cloud overshadows Moses and Elijah only, removing them from sight so that Jesus stands alone as God’s authorized Son (Heil 2000, 129-49). However one adjudicates the referent of “them,” the point is clear enough that the disciples’ focus must rest on Jesus.

(3) The cloud motif identifies the voice that speaks as God’s own voice, and his words echo word-for-word what was heard at Jesus’ baptism (Mt 3:17), “This is my beloved Son, with whom I am delighted,” to which is now added the command “Listen to him!” Scriptural resonances abound, from Genesis 22:2; Exodus 4:22-23; Psalm 2:7; Isaiah 42:1; and, finally, Deuteronomy 18:15, marking the transfiguration scene as one of the high points of this Gospel’s *christological development. The presence of Jesus and his disciples in Matthew 17:6-7, without Elijah and Moses (see Mt 17:8), lends support to Heil’s suggestion about the cloud. We may hear echoes of Daniel 10:9-12, with its similar sequence of events—hearing a voice, falling prostrate, being touched, being raised, being directed not to fear—with the disciples taking the role of Daniel, recipient of the vision, and Jesus the role of the heavenly figure.

Set in relation to Jesus’ passion prediction and exchange with Peter regarding the Messiah’s destiny (Mt 16:21-28), Matthew’s transfiguration account draws deeply from the wells of Israel’s scriptural tradition in order to provide an unmistakable disclosure of Jesus’ identity. This scene provides a temporary and proleptic portrait of Jesus in his heavenly glory and divine confirmation that Jesus is the prophet who speaks on God’s behalf, even when his words anticipate his ignominious treatment at the hands of the Jewish leadership in *Jerusalem.

3. Jesus’ Transfiguration in Mark.

Mark’s transfiguration scene is loosely organized by means of a series of five statements oriented especially around Peter, James and John. In keeping with Mark’s interweaving of Christology and discipleship, this scene dramatically sets forth Jesus’ identity only in relation to Jesus’ followers.

(1) Jesus took them up a high mountain, by themselves, where he was transfigured in their presence (Mk 9:2-3). The opening phrase “after six days” ties this scene to the preceding material and may recall Exodus 24:15-18, where an interval of six days is preparatory to divine discourse on a mountain. Mark sets the scene further by identifying Jesus’ inner circle of disciples (see Mk 5:37; 14:33) and locating them on a high mountain, a place of revelation and discourse with God (see Mk 3:13; 6:46). The effect of Jesus’ transfiguration is described with reference to his clothing. Radiant white clothing is associated with glory (e.g., Dan 7:9; Mk 16:5; Acts 1:10; Rev 3:4), and Mark goes out of his way to ensure that the unsurpassed glory of Jesus’ clothing cannot be explained with reference to even the most skilled of earthly launderers.

(2) “Elijah with Moses” appeared before them and spoke with Jesus (Mk 9:4). Some interpreters imagine that Mark has thus cast Moses in a subsidiary role, since he is mentioned second and in relation to Elijah (e.g., Hooker); however, Heil has demonstrated that, for Mark, the party mentioned second and introduced with the term syn (“with”) is the more notable (e.g., Mk 2:26; 4:10; 8:34; 15:27);

thus, “not only Elijah but even Moses!” (Heil 1999). Among the scriptural resonances that may have been stirred by the appearance of this pair, those prompting eschatological expectations would have been paramount: Moses, with respect to the anticipated prophet like Moses (Deut 18:15-18; cf. Jn 6:14), and Elijah, whose appearance would signal Israel’s restoration (see Mk 9:12; cf. Mal 4:4-6). (The often-repeated view that Elijah represents the “prophets” and Moses “the law” founders on the strong identification of Moses as the prototypical prophet. When coupled with the view that Jesus thus supersedes the *law and the *prophets, this view fails to take seriously Jesus’ essential continuity with Israel’s story and overlooks his role as the interpreter of, and not a replacement for, Israel’s scriptural traditions.)

(3) The disciples were afraid; failing to understand, Peter proposes to make three tents (Mk 9:5-6). Speaking as a representative of the other disciples, Peter observes that “it is good for us to be here,” but without making clear why this is good. Perhaps it is so that these three disciples can undertake the building of three tents, one each for Jesus and his conversation partners. Peter’s interjection of himself into the scene appears unwarranted, and his words seem born of bewilderment. Peter’s proposed tents may recall the Festival of Booths, but absent further connection to the festival tradition, they may refer to nothing more than an attempt to extend hospitality to or honor Jesus, Elijah and Moses.

(4) A cloud overshadowed them, and a voice from the cloud addressed them (Mk 9:7). The irrelevance of Peter’s remarks could hardly be underscored more clearly. The scene continues to unfold apart from any acknowledgement of his proposal. Mark simply narrates what happens next. In the scriptural tradition clouds can serve as divine transport and to evoke the divine presence, and thus as the place from which God speaks; for example, this is the cloud’s significance in the exodus tradition (e.g., Ex 19:9, 16; 24:15-16; cf. Ps 68:4). The divine words are similar to the words spoken to Jesus at his baptism (Mk 1:11: “You are my beloved Son, with whom I am delighted”). However, the words here are spoken to the disciples about Jesus, the phrase “with whom I am delighted” is dropped, and the command “Listen to him!” is added. At the transfiguration scene, then, these disciples receive an unambiguous and unimpeachable affirmation of Jesus’ status as God’s *Son (cf. Ps 2:7; Mk 1:1; 15:39) and an explicit directive that Jesus is God’s spokesperson, the promised prophet like Moses (Deut 18:15). The significance of this affirmation and directive must be calculated with reference to the difficult words concerning Jesus’ destiny and the concomitant character of discipleship sketched in Mark 8:31-38.

(5) They found themselves alone with Jesus (Mk 9:8). The scene ends abruptly (exapina, “suddenly” or “unexpectedly” [the term appears only here in the NT]). Moses and Elijah have disappeared. They were “by themselves” at the outset (Mk 9:2), and now “they saw no one with them anymore, except for Jesus only” (Mk 9:8).

Mark’s Gospel frames Jesus’ transfiguration with Jesus’ first prediction of his suffering, death and resurrection, including his saying about the imminent coming of God’s *kingdom (Mk 8:31—9:1), on the one hand, and, on the other, with a discussion between Jesus and his followers concerning the role of Elijah and Jesus as the suffering *Son of Man (Mk 9:11-13). As a result, Mark’s readers are challenged to grapple with the character of God’s kingdom and, especially, the role of Jesus’ suffering within it. Accordingly, those who are “standing here who will not experience death until they see God’s kingdom has come with power” (Mk 9:1) are Peter, James and John, before whom Jesus was transfigured. Such a reading is encouraged by the way the transfiguration account is told from the disciples’ perspective (e.g., “transfigured in front of them” [Mk 9:2], “appeared before them” [Mk 9:4], “no one with them” [Mk 9:8]), as well as the way the emphasis on “seeing” in Mark 9:1 is matched by what is seen in Mark 9:2-8. Accordingly, the transfiguration would provide a momentary but nonetheless significant anticipation of Jesus’ heavenly glory along with the fullness of God’s kingdom, together with God’s own legitimization of the hard words that Jesus has spoken concerning the suffering Son of Man and the character of discipleship.

4. Jesus’ Transfiguration in Luke.

Although a good case can be made for Luke’s access to Mark’s Gospel and a second source in the construction of his transfiguration scene (e.g., Schramm, 136-39; Reid, 31-94), it remains possible to explain Luke’s composition in terms of his redaction of Mark’s account (e.g., Trites; R. Miller 1998).

Luke’s transfiguration scene features the following elements: staging (Lk 9:28), Jesus’ transfiguration and glory (Lk 9:29-31), responses from the disciples (Lk 9:32-33), God’s response (Lk 9:34-35) and denouement (Lk 9:36). Two other structural features help to guide our interpretation of this scene. We find, first, a movement from an emphasis on what the disciples see—“Look!” (idou), “they appeared” (ophthentes), “they saw” (eidon) (Lk 9:30-32)—to an emphasis on what they heard (Lk 9:35-36a), with the shift made necessary by their being enveloped in the cloud. These two emphases are brought together in Luke 9:36b: the disciples did not speak about what they had seen. Here is a straightforward recognition that events do not carry within them their own interpretation but rather require God-given insight. In Luke's Gospel God-given insight, or revelation, is often correlated with times of *prayer, so it is hardly coincidental that Luke's transfiguration scene is cast as a time of prayer (Lk 9:28, 29; cf. Lk 3:21-22; 9:18-21) (cf. Crump). Second, Luke's scene juxtaposes a heightened emphasis on Jesus' "glory" (Lk 9:31-32) with the topic of Jesus' conversation with Moses and Elijah, his "exodus"—that is, his "departure" (exodos). Jesus' exalted identity is thus inseparably tied to his journey through suffering and death.

The evangelist sets the stage in Luke 9:28 by tying this event to Jesus' previous teaching ("after these sayings") about his suffering, death and resurrection, the nature of discipleship, and his promise regarding the imminent disclosure of God's kingdom (Lk 9:21-27). The reference to "about eight days" is puzzling, unless it is preparatory for an understanding of the "tents" that Peter proposes to build in relation to the Festival of Booths (cf. Lev 23:36). Peter, John and James are likewise Jesus' inner circle of disciples in Luke 8:51. In Israel's Scriptures mountains are often implicated in theophany and prayer, and this is true for Luke's Gospel as well (Lk 6:12; 22:39-46). Luke identifies Jesus' purpose in ascending the mountain with his disciples as prayer—hardly a casual remark in this setting, both because of their location on a mountain and because prayer has just been associated with revelation of Jesus' identity (Lk 19:18-20).

With the stage set, Luke proceeds to recount Jesus' transformation (Lk 9:29-31). Using an infinitive construction, en tō proseuchesthai auton ("while he was praying"), Luke actually envelops the moment of Jesus' transfiguration in prayer. Not Jesus' identity per se, but rather the "form of his face," was different. We understand, therefore, that Luke does not imagine that Jesus has become in this episode what he was not already, but rather that his exalted identity is momentarily on full display. This exalted identity is represented in part with reference to his clothes, which are "white, flashing like lightning." Elsewhere in Luke-Acts clothing signifies status, with dazzling clothes portending heavenly glory (cf. Lk 24:4; Acts 10:30), similar to what we find more broadly in the scriptural tradition. Jesus' exalted identity is represented further by the reference to "glory," portraying him as a heavenly figure, together with Moses and Elijah, who shares in God's majesty. At the same time, Jesus is differentiated from these other two, since their discussion focuses on the earthiest of realities, his mission through suffering and death. The word exodos can refer simply to "death" (e.g., Wis 3:2; 7:6; 2 Pet 1:15), but, given the many resonances of this account with Israel's departure from Egypt (e.g., Garrett; M. Strauss), it is difficult to escape the view that the topic of conversation centers on the nature of Jesus' journey through rejection and death to his exaltation, a journey with liberating consequences for God's people.

That Jesus stands on the mountain with Elijah and Moses ensures, first, that the crowds were wrong to think that Jesus was Elijah (Lk 9:7-8, 18-19). Although Jesus' ministry can be understood in terms of Elijah's career (e.g., Lk 4:25-26), Luke has actually cast John the Baptist more in this role (Lk 1:17). Second, casting all three "in glory," Luke is clearly not trying to censure Moses and Elijah in relation to Jesus, but rather demonstrates their shared exalted status and the basic continuity between their work and that of Jesus.

Luke's transfiguration scene contrasts two viewpoints: the disciples' (Lk 9:32-33) and God's (Lk 9:34-35). He describes the disciples as drowsy (bebarēmenoi hypnō . . . diagrēgorēsabtes, "heavy with sleep, but remaining awake") but nonetheless aware of what is taking place before their eyes; they are thus witnesses, though hardly alert ones, characterized instead as spiritually dull. With the vision slipping away ("as they were departing"), Peter proposes to preserve the moment by constructing three tents. Even before God's own interjection into the scene, however, Luke has already censured Peter for "not knowing what he was saying." Presumably, Peter's intent should be read against the backdrop of the Festival of Booths, which commemorated God's provision during the wilderness journey and anticipated God's restoration of his people as a new exodus.

In a rare intrusion into the narrative itself, God's response breaks in on Peter's words ("while he was saying these things"). God's presence is marked by the threefold reference to the cloud (that clouds might evoke and convey God's presence, see, e.g., Ex 13:21-22; 33:9-11; 34:5), by the language of overshadowing (cf. Lk 1:35) and by the voice from the cloud (for God's speaking from a cloud, cf., e.g., Ex 19:16-25; Deut 5:22). Jesus, Moses and Elijah already share in God's glory, and Moses and Elijah are portrayed as exiting, so it makes sense that for Luke the cloud encompasses the disciples, bringing them also into the sphere of God's presence. Their fearful response is typical of a theophany (cf. Lk 1:12), and the account shifts from what is seen (since the cloud obstructs their vision) to what is heard. The divine voice identifies Jesus in three ways: as God's Son (see Lk 1:31-35; 3:21-4:13), as Isaiah's Servant of the Lord ("my Chosen" [cf. Is 42:1; Lk 23:35]) (see Servant of Yahweh) and as the prophet like Moses ("Listen to him!" [cf. Deut 18:15-18; Acts 3:22-23]). Here we find an explicit and unassailable response to questions of Jesus' identity (raised in Lk 9:7-9, 18-20), together with an incontestable legitimization of Jesus' words regarding his own destiny and the related nature of discipleship (Lk 9:21-27).

This scene clarifies that it is not so much that the time of the law and the prophets has passed as it is that Jesus as God's Son is their authorized interpreter: "Listen to him!" However, the disciples are unable to grasp what has taken place. Their silence at the end of this scene is carried over into their lack of perception in the face of Jesus' repeated predictions of his suffering and death (Lk 9:43-45; 18:31-34); only after the resurrection will they comprehend (Lk 24).

5. Jesus' Transfiguration in 2 Peter.

In 2 Peter 1:16-18 the author initiates his offensive against the false teachers by undermining their charge that the eschatological teaching of the apostles is based on "cleverly devised myths" (2 Pet 1:16). It is grounded, instead, in the apostles' (and especially Peter's) testimony of what they had seen (Jesus' majesty) and heard (God's affirmation of Jesus). The picture that he paints obviously recalls the transfiguration scene, Matthew's rendition of that scene in particular. The emphasis in this account is twofold: (1) "on the holy mountain" God himself identified Jesus' co-regency in anticipation of Jesus' eschatological glory (2 Pet 1:17); (2) the apostles themselves witnessed this revelatory moment (2 Pet 1:16, 18). Given the numerous deviations of this report from the scenes in the synoptic Gospels, it seems likely that 2 Peter provides independent testimony to the transfiguration tradition (so, e.g., Bauckham, 205-10; contra R. Miller 1996).

See also DISCIPLES AND DISCIPLESHIP; DREAMS AND VISIONS; ELIJAH AND ELISHA; GLORY; MOSES; MOUNTAIN AND WILDERNESS; PRAYER; PREDICTIONS OF JESUS' PASSION AND RESURRECTION; RESURRECTION.

BIBLIOGRAPHY. R. J. Bauckham, Jude, 2 Peter (WBC 50; Waco, TX: Word, 1983); T. F. Best, "The Transfiguration: A Select Bibliography," JETS 24 (1981) 157-61; F. Bovon, Luke 1: A Commentary on the Gospel of Luke 1:1-9:50, trans. C. M. Thomas, ed. H. Koester (Herm; Minneapolis: Fortress, 2002); D. Crump, Jesus the Intercessor: Prayer and Christology in Luke-Acts (WUNT 2/49; Tübingen: Mohr Siebeck, 1992); A. Del Agua, "The Narrative of the Transfiguration as a Derashic Scenification of a Faith Confession (Mark 9.2-8 Par.)," NTS 39 (1993) 340-54; C. H. Dodd, "The Appearances of the Risen Christ: An Essay in Form-Criticism of the Gospels," in Studies in the Gospels: Essays in Memory of R. H. Lightfoot, ed. D. E. Nineham (Oxford: Blackwell, 1957) 9-35; J. Eapen, "Transfiguration: A Pre-Resurrection (Mt 17:1-9; Mk 9:2-10; Lk 9:28-36)," BibB 34 (2008) 189-221; S. B. Garrett, "Exodus from Bondage: Luke 9:31 and Acts 12:1-24," CBQ 52 (1990) 656-80; M. Gilbert, "Why Moses and Elijah at the Transfiguration?" RivB 57 (2009) 217-22; J. P. Heil, "A Note on 'Elijah with Moses' in Mark 9.4," Bib 80 (1999) 115; idem, The Transfiguration of Jesus: Narrative Meaning and Function of Mark 9:2-8, Matt 17:1-8 and Luke 9:28-36 (AnBib 144; Rome: Pontificio Istituto Biblico, 2000); M. D. Hooker, "What Doest Thou Here, Elijah?" A Look at St. Mark's Account of the Transfiguration," in The Glory of Christ in the New Testament: Studies in Christology, ed. L. D. Hurst and N. T. Wright (Oxford: Clarendon, 1987) 59-70; L. Joseph, "The Transfiguration of Jesus: A Pointer to Jesus' Glory or His Cross?" Vidajyoti 74.9 (2010) 648-61; P. Kariamadam, "Transfiguration and Jesus' Ascended Glory: An Explanation of Lk. 9:28-36," BibB 23 (1997) 1-13; C. Knights, "Metamorphosis and Obedience: An Interpretation of Mark's Account of the Transfiguration of Jesus," ExpTim 121 (2010) 218-22; D. Lee, "On the Holy Mountain: The Transfiguration in Scripture and Theology," Colloq 36 (2004) 143-59; S. S. Lee, Jesus' Transfiguration and the Believers' Transformation: A Study of the Transfiguration and Its Development in Early Christian Writings (WUNT 2/265; Tübingen: Mohr Siebeck, 2009); T. W. Martin, "What Makes Glory Glorious? Reading Luke's Account of the Transfiguration over against Triumphalism," JSNT 29 (2006) 3-26; D. M. Miller, "Seeing the Glory, Hearing the Son: The Function of the Wilderness Theophany Narratives in Luke 9:28-36," CBQ (2010) 498-517; R. J. Miller, "Historicizing the Trans-Historical: The Transfiguration Narrative: Mark 9:2-8, Matt 17:1-8, Luke 9:28-36," Forum 10.3-4 (1994) 219-48; idem, "Is There Independent Attestation for the Transfiguration in 2 Peter?" NTS 42 (1996) 620-25; idem, "Source Criticism and the Limits of Certainty: The Lukan Transfiguration Story as a Test Case," ETL 74 (1998) 127-44; A. D. A. Moses, Matthew's Transfigu- ration Story and Jewish-Christian Controversy (JSNTSup 122; Sheffield: Sheffield Academic Press, 1996); C. R. Moss, "The Transfiguration: An Exercise in Markan Accommodation," BibInt 12 (2004) 69-89; B. E. Reid, The Transfiguration: A Source- and Redaction-Critical Study of Luke 9:28-36 (CahRB 32; Paris: Gabalda, 1993); A. L. C. Runehow, Sacred or Neural? The Potential of Neuroscience to Explain Religious Experience (RTN 9; Göttingen: Vandenhoeck & Ruprecht, 2007); T. Schramm, Der Markus-stoff bei Lukas: Eine literarkritische und redaktionsgeschichtliche Untersuchung (SNTSMS 14; Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 1971); D. F. Spitta, "Die evangelische Geschichte von der Verklärung Jesu," ZWT 53 (1911) 97-167; R. H. Stein, "Is the Transfiguration (Mark 9:2-8) a Misplaced Resurrection Account?" JBL 95 (1976) 79-96; D. F. Strauss, The Life of Jesus Critically Examined, ed. P. C. Hodgson, trans. G. Eliot (Philadelphia: Fortress, 1972); M. L. Strauss, The Davidic Messiah in Luke-Acts: The Promise and Its Fulfillment in Lukan Christology (JSNTSup 110; Sheffield: Sheffield Academic Press, 1995); A. P. i Tärrech, "The Glory on the Mountain: The Episode of the Transfiguration of Jesus," NTS 58 (2012): 151-72; A. A. Trites, "The Transfiguration in the Theology of Luke: Some Redactional Links," in The Glory of Christ in the New Testament: Studies in Christology, ed. L. D. Hurst and N. T. Wright (Oxford: Clarendon, 1987) 71-81.

J. B. Green

TRIAL OF JESUS

Jesus' trial is told in two halves: an interrogation before the Jewish leaders, and questioning before *Pilate, the Roman governor of Judea. The events occur after Jesus' arrest on the Mount of Olives, and just prior to his crucifixion. Although scholars debate the historicity of the trial's specific details, there is general agreement that the Jewish leaders and Pilate would have worked together in handling any significant challenge to their respective authority. This article first discusses each Gospel's depiction of the trial, and then it addresses questions concerning the trial's historicity.

1. Trial in the Gospel of Matthew (Mt 26:57—27:26)
2. Trial in the Gospel of Mark (Mk 14:53—15:15)
3. Trial in the Gospel of Luke (Lk 22:54—23:25)
4. Trial in the Gospel of John (Jn 18:12-14, 19-24; 18:28—19:16)
5. Questions Concerning the Historicity of the Trial of Jesus

1. Trial in the Gospel of Matthew (Mt 26:57—27:26).

Matthew begins the narrative of Jesus' trial at Caiaphas's house, where Jewish leaders convene at night to condemn Jesus. Come morning, they take Jesus to Pilate. This basic framework of events, in which Jesus is taken first to Jewish leaders and then in the morning to Pilate, is found in all four Gospels. Matthew also includes Peter's denial and Judas's suicide, juxtaposing them to demonstrate, from his own perspective, (1) appropriate and inappropriate responses to Jesus' messianic claims; (2) fulfillment of Scripture; (3) the actors' responsibility for Jesus' *death. Finally, Matthew includes the dream of Pilate's wife (Mt 27:19) and Pilate's hand washing (Mt 27:24) as further attempts by central characters to avoid or deny their complicity in Jesus' death.

1.1. Jesus' Trial Before the Jewish Leaders (Mt 26:57-68). Awaiting interrogation, Jesus stands before the chief priests and elders in Caiaphas's house. Peter remains in the outer courtyard, as Matthew tells us, desiring to know how this will "end" (telos). Twice in Matthew's Gospel (Mt 10:22; 24:13) Jesus stated that those who endure persecution to the end for the sake of his name will be saved. Matthew raises the expectations for Peter when he reports Peter's promise to Jesus that he would never desert him (Mt 26:33). Yet the reader is not surprised that the end for Jesus is one of suffering and then death (see Mt 16:21; cf. Mt 5:12). The interrogation commences with witnesses, but only the final two corroborate each other with claims that Jesus spoke about destroying the temple (see also Mt 27:40). The reader recalls Jesus saying that something greater than the *temple is here (Mt 12:6), as well as his cleansing of the temple (Mt 21:12-13).

Jesus does not defend himself against their testimony that he spoke against the temple, thereby exasperating the high priest and leading him to demand from Jesus a response to their charges. But Jesus remains silent, and so the high priest makes another demand, asking Jesus to state whether or not he is the Messiah. In this the high priest is cutting to the chase, for only the Messiah would have spoken and acted thus in the temple. To this direct question Jesus responds obliquely ("You have said so") but affirmatively, and he goes on to quote from Psalm 110:1 and Daniel 7:13 (Mt 26:64). Yet because the Jewish leaders had already determined Jesus' guilt, his affirmative answer brings not their worship, but rather their condemnation and accusations of blasphemy. Matthew notes that they slap him and spit on him, perhaps a nod to Jesus' teaching that after being struck on one cheek, a person should offer the other (Mt 5:39). Their assault and taunts connect their judgment with the punishment of the false *prophet (see Deut 18:20).

1.2. Peter's Denial and Judas's Suicide (Mt 26:69-75; 27:3-10). Matthew recounts two stories between the trial of Jesus before the Jewish leaders and the one before Pilate. Matthew's is the only Gospel to describe Judas's death, and he places it in the wider narrative so as to highlight the fulfillment of Scripture and the establishment of responsibility for Jesus' death. The fulfillment of Scripture has been a constant theme in Matthew (five fulfillment passages are mentioned in the birth narrative alone [Mt 1:23; 2:6, 15, 17-18, 23]) (see Old Testament in the Gospels). Judas's return of the thirty pieces of silver brings to mind Zechariah 11:12-13, although Matthew points to Jeremiah in what is a very difficult and complex quotation (Mt 27:9-10). In three other places Matthew points to Zechariah or perhaps a collection of prophetic texts that included a "shepherd king" motif (Mt 21:4-5 [cf. Zech 9:9-10; 24:30 [cf. Zech 12:10-14]; 26:31 [cf. Zech 13:7]) (see France, 1045). Matthew portrays Jesus as the rejected shepherd-king. Judas's return of the silver coins set in motion cascading denials of responsibility for Jesus' death. Judas's claim to have condemned an innocent man is brushed aside by the priests (Mt 27:4), and Pilate will speak similar words to the same priests when he seeks to absolve himself of guilt (Mt 27:24). The Jewish leaders persuade the crowds to take responsibility (Mt 27:25), but Matthew shows that the Jewish leaders themselves are among the crowds, calling for Jesus' crucifixion (fulfilling Mt 23:29-36). The people declare, "His blood be on us and on our children," which likely was understood in Matthew's day to have been fulfilled with the destruction of the temple. Sadly, this verse has a horrific history of interpretation as lending justification to all manner of mistreatment of Jews. But as Matthew tells the story, both the Jewish leaders and the Romans, even Judas and the crowds—all are complicit in Jesus' death. A curious note about Pilate's wife's dream neatly articulates the sentiments of all the players. In what was likely a very uncommon act of interrupting her husband as he heard cases, she warns him that a dream the previous night about Jesus has caused her great suffering (Mt 27:19). She does not ask Pilate to release Jesus because he is innocent; in fact, his suffering is immaterial to her. It is her own suffering that she reflects upon; it is her own well-being that she desires. In this she speaks for all the characters of the trial scene.

As he did with the Jewish leaders, so to with Pilate Jesus remains silent except to answer a single question. Pilate asks, "Are you king of the Jews?" to which Jesus replies simply, "You say so." This ambiguous reply is quite similar to his response earlier to Judas's query as to whether he will betray Jesus (Mt 26:25) and to the chief priests' interrogation about his identity as Messiah (see Christ) and *Son of God (Mt 26:64). Because of the varying levels of deceit in each inquiry, and due to the inaccurate assumptions behind the titles "Messiah," "Son of God" and "King of the Jews," Jesus rejected the implications of the questions, while opening another possible understanding of those titles and his ministry. Jesus' silence amazes Pilate and stands in strong contrast to the growing unrest of the crowds who begin to call for Jesus' crucifixion. Matthew presents Pilate as fearing a riot and steadily losing control of the situation, in sharp contrast to Jesus' steady silence (perhaps an allusion to the servant in Is 53:7). To appease them, he turns Jesus over to his own soldiers for crucifixion (Mt 27:26).

2. Trial in the Gospel of Mark (Mk 14:53—15:15).

Mark's account of Jesus' trial before the Jewish council helps resolve the character of Jesus; it speaks to the "messianic secret" of Jesus' identity.

2.1. Jesus Before the Jewish Leaders (Mk 14:53-65). Jesus is brought to the high priest's house for questioning. Before the council of Jewish leaders he declares that he is the Messiah, the Son of God (Mk 14:62), and he continues with a quotation taken from Psalm 110:1 and Daniel 7:13. Mark emphasizes the significance of Jesus' earlier actions in the temple as he describes the false witnesses' statements declaring that Jesus asserted that he would destroy the temple and in three days build another (Mk 15:29; see also Mk 13:1-2). Yet Mark's account also raises several questions: (1) Were there one or two trials before the Jewish leaders? (2) What was false about the witnesses' testimony? (3) Why was Jesus charged with blasphemy? We look at each of these in turn.

That the Jewish leadership should be seeking to condemn Jesus comes as no surprise to the reader, since Jesus proclaimed as much in Mark 8:31; 9:31; 10:33-34. Mark makes clear that a night meeting took place with the chief priests, elders and scribes (Mk 14:53), then he indicates that the chief *priests, *elders, *scribes and the whole council convened on the following morning (Mk 15:1). This second meeting should not be understood as a second trial for Jesus, but rather as a finalization of their plans to take Jesus to Pilate. At issue is the translation of the term sym-boulion (Mk 15:1), which can indicate the making of a decision or the drawing together of a council. During the night meeting witnesses were brought forth to testify, but even with the Jewish leaders previously convinced of his guilt, corroborating evidence from two witnesses was not to be found. Perhaps through this detail Mark asserts Jesus' innocence (Stein, 681).

Mark alleges that the witnesses accused Jesus of saying, "I will destroy this temple made with hands and build another not made with hands" (Mk 14:58). The term used here for "temple" (naos) refers to that most holy place in the *temple (see also Mk 15:29, 38): the court of the priests, the holy place and the holy of holies. Jewish sources indicate that some Jews believed that the Messiah would build another temple (Targum Zech 6:12; Tg. Isa. 53:5), while others held that God would build a new temple (Jub. 1:17). Although Jesus predicts the temple's destruction (Mk 13:2), nowhere in Mark's Gospel does Jesus differentiate using the category "made/not made with hands." The enigmatic contrast is not unique to Mark (see Acts 7:48-50 [which quotes Is 66:2]; 17:24; see also 2 Cor 5:1; Eph 2:11; Col 2:11-12; Heb 9:11, 24). The temple built "with hands" is likely the Jerusalem temple, and the one made "without hands" could be a reference to (1) the Christian community, or (2) an eschatological temple built by God, or (3) the glorified body of Christ (Brown, 1:439-44). Mark indicates that the witnesses are "false," which invites the reader to ask what precisely is wrong with the witnesses' statement. It may be that they were relaying second- or third-hand information and thus are not witnessing from personal knowledge. That is historically possible, but it seems unlikely that Mark intends such a deduction, for it is not even hinted at in the narrative. It is also doubtful that their entire accusation is false, since the crowds that passed by Jesus hanging on the cross mock him with a similar charge, that he claimed that he would destroy the temple and build it in three days (Mk 15:29). The most likely option is that Mark rejects their claim "made/not made with hands" (Brown, 1:452-54), since that phrase on the lips of the false witnesses is an indictment of Jesus as an apocalyptic fanatic. Mark emphasizes instead that Jesus builds a new people based on his suffering and death, a community that follows the crucified Son of God.

Finally, the question of the charge of *blasphemy against Jesus invites comment. The irony of the charge is that Jesus is guilty of blasphemy only if, in fact, he is not who he says he is. It was not blasphemous to declare oneself the Messiah if indeed one was the Messiah. But since the chief priest had already determined Jesus to be guilty, Jesus' words could hardly be understood as anything but blasphemous. Mark's readers, however, know that Jesus was not speaking blasphemy (Mk 8:29; 9:41), for he can *forgive sins (Mk 2:5-7) and is the Lord of the *Sabbath (Mk 2:28). The chief priest identifies the Messiah as the son of the Blessed One, using a circumlocution to avoid saying "God." Mark's readers know Jesus as the Son of God, and Jesus has indicated as much in his parable of the vineyard (Mk 12:1-12) and his interpretation of Psalm 118:22-23 (see also Mk 1:1, 24; 3:11; 5:7; 15:39). The Jewish leaders prepare to hand Jesus over to Pilate.

2.2. Jesus' Trial Before Pilate (Mk 15:1-15). Pilate's question "Are you King of the Jews?" introduces another title, but one that the reader might expect, given Jesus' extensive teachings on the kingdom of God. Moreover, Pilate's question is juxtaposed to the chief priests' interrogation concerning Jesus as the Messiah, suggesting that the terms share similar meanings. Again, Jesus' answer to Pilate is similar to the one that he gave to the chief priest: he accepts the royal titles. Later in the story, while Jesus is on the cross, the Jewish leaders mock him as the "King of Israel" (Mk 15:32). Having answered Pilate in the affirmative, Jesus remains silent as the Jewish leaders level a myriad of charges against him before Pilate. With this detail Mark may be alluding to Isaiah 53:7, the servant's silence in the face of his oppressors (see Servant of Yahweh).

Typical of Mark, the trial scene before Pilate unfolds in sets of three. Three times Pilate queries Jesus (Mk 15:2, 4 [2x]); three times he questions the crowd (Mk 15:9, 12, 14); three times the crowd responds (Mk 15:11, 13, 14). This matches Jesus' three prayers in the garden (Mk 14:35-36, 39, 41) and Peter's three denials (Mk 14:68, 70, 71).

3. Trial in the Gospel of Luke (Lk 22:54-23:25).

Luke stresses Jesus' innocence throughout his trial and crucifixion, including testimony from the most unlikely sources such as the penitent thief (Lk 23:41) and the centurion (Lk 23:47), as well as Herod Antipas (Lk 23:15).

3.1. Peter's Denial (Lk 22:54-62). Jesus' trial scene in Luke begins not with Jesus, but with Peter. The chief priests, temple guards and elders take Jesus to the house of the high priest in Jerusalem. Luke gives no further details about this time, and for the moment Jesus steps out of the literary spotlight. Instead, Luke turns to describe Peter, who remains in the courtyard. Over the course of less than one hour he is questioned three times as to his relationship with the accused. With the third denial still on his lips, Peter hears a rooster crow. Jesus suddenly steps back onto center stage, turning and looking directly at Peter. The latter recalls Jesus' prophecy that he would deny him three times before the cock crowed. Peter's bitter weeping is sharply contrasted to the soldiers who begin to mock and beat Jesus, blindfolding him and taunting him to "prophecy" who hit him. Luke's readers already know that Jesus is able to prophesy, and also that not all will accept him as a prophet (Lk 4:24). Luke's setting for Jesus' trial is similar to that of trials presented in Acts: the accused is arrested at night and tried in the morning (Acts 4:1-5; 5:17-21; 22:30).

3.2. Jesus Before the Sanhedrin (Lk 22:66-71).

With the coming of dawn, the *Sanhedrin convened and Jesus was brought before them. Luke does not state whether the council met in the high priest's home, but there is no indication that Jesus was moved from that location (Lk 22:54). They raise two questions: "Are you the Messiah?" and "Are you the Son of God?" Jesus answers the latter question, "You say that I am" (Lk 22:70), to which the council responds that they need no more testimony. Yet Luke offers no prior testimony, leaving the reader to wonder if in fact during the hours before dawn Jesus was questioned and witnesses were brought forth (as in Matthew and Mark).

In the brief exchange with the Jewish leaders Luke focuses on the person of Jesus and the question of who speaks for God—that is, who has authority from God. Jesus makes two claims. First, he declares that he is the Son of Man, from now to be seated at the right hand of the power of God, an image from Psalm 110:1 and Daniel 7:13. In so doing, Luke presents Jesus as the judge of his accusers. Second, Jesus accepts the title "Son of God," a reference that might connect back to Jesus' temptations, where Jesus is addressed as the Son of God (Lk 4:3, 9). This is an ominous allusion, for with it Luke draws a parallel between the actions of the Jewish leaders and that of Satan, both working actively against God's plan.

The Jewish leaders' negative reaction to Jesus' declarations comes as no surprise to the reader. Luke noted that Jesus predicted such an outcome (Lk 9:22; 17:25). Moreover, after Jesus healed a man on the Sabbath (Lk 6:6-11) and leveled charges against Pharisees and scribes (Lk 11:39-54), certain Jewish leaders (scribes and Pharisees) determined to stop him. When Jesus "cleansed" the temple (see Temple Act), the chief priests, scribes and leaders of the people also determined to kill him (Lk 19:47-48).

3.3. Jesus Before Pilate (Lk 23:1-5, 13-25). Luke's brief sketch of Jesus' trial before the Jewish council serves to sum up the Jewish leaders' growing frustration and animosity toward Jesus. Luke spends the bulk of his time describing Jesus before Pilate and Herod Antipas. The charges leveled against Jesus before Pilate center on the claim that Jesus is leading Israel astray (see Deut 13:1-5; see also Acts 13:6-8), in part by claiming to be the Messiah and by calling on Jews to resist paying taxes. These charges are both religious and political. The Jewish leaders force Pilate to act, although he repeatedly resists their prodding. Luke is not trying to exonerate Pilate or the Romans. Indeed, his Gospel alone notes the violent death inflicted by Pilate on a group of Galileans (Lk 13:1). As to the claim about paying taxes, Jesus' failure to unambiguously endorse payment of taxes to Rome is cited as rebellious. A close look at Luke 20:20-26 shows that while Jesus states that Caesar should receive what is rightfully his, exactly what that might be is left unstated. Did Caesar rightfully deserve all the tax receipts placed on the people? The Jewish elite chose to interpret Jesus' words as highly negative toward Rome because it suited their overarching purpose of condemning Jesus. Luke shows Pilate's arrogance and failure to perceive the risks to Jerusalem's stability (as the Jewish leaders see it) inherent in Jesus' teachings and person. When Pilate asks Jesus directly, "Are you the King of the Jews?" the reader already knows that the answer is yes (Lk 1:33; 2:11); moreover, Mary's song prophesies that Jesus will bring down rulers from their thrones and lift up the humble (Lk 1:52). Yet both the Jewish leaders and Pilate also believe that they know the answer, and it is a strong negative. The question is meant to mock Jesus, not to discover his identity. Luke emphasizes the theme that Jesus is innocent, stressing the three times that Pilate says as much. Additionally, the centurion at the cross declares, "This man was innocent" (Lk 23:47), as does the penitent thief (Lk 23:41). So too Herod Antipas does not condemn him (Lk 23:15). Continuing the theme of the innocent accused, Acts notes that Paul is declared innocent three times (Acts 23:29; 25:25; 26:30-32).

3.4. Jesus Before Herod Antipas (Lk 23:6-12). Luke alone tells of Jesus' interrogation before Herod Antipas. Because Luke stands as a lone voice, and Pilate did not need this client king's permission to act on Jesus' charges, and the earliest Christians could not have known of this encounter, this historical veracity of this pericope has been questioned. In favor of seeing this account reflecting a historical event is the following: (1) Luke notes that Joanna was a disciple of Jesus, and she was married to Herod's chief steward, who might have been an eyewitness to this exchange (Lk 8:2-3). (2) Pilate might have desired Herod's support because his own patron, Sejanus, was either currently falling out of Tiberius's favor or had already died. Sejanus was known to be strongly anti-Jewish; perhaps Pilate believed that his own future in Rome's eyes would be more secure if he had a good word or two from the local Jewish client king. (3) Having only one account of an event is unfortunately commonplace for historians seeking to reconstruct first-century A.D. Judean history, and so this account should not be dismissed as unhistorical simply because we find it only in one source.

While the Jewish leaders continue to accuse Jesus before Herod Antipas, Jesus remains silent. Luke may be drawing on the image of the Servant of the Lord in Isaiah 53:7. Though professing a desire to see Jesus perform a sign, Herod displays only mocking contempt, fulfilling Jesus' prediction that prophets and kings longed to see what Jesus' disciples saw but would fail to appreciate it (Lk 10:24). Herod did not understand *John the Baptist's message either, and Luke links Jesus' fate with that of the Baptist's (Lk 3:19-20; 9:7-9). Moreover, Jesus was warned during his ministry that Herod plans to kill him (Lk 13:31).

4. Trial in the Gospel of John (Jn 18:12-14, 19-24; 18:28—19:16).

The Gospel of John presents the trial of Jesus primarily as a three-way exchange between the Jewish leaders (twenty-eight verses), Pilate and Jesus. John spends little time describing the interaction between Jesus and the chief priests (seven verses). This strategy allows John to emphasize the complicity of both Pilate and the Jewish leaders in Jesus' death, as well as to establish that these events serve to fulfill Jesus' words spoken earlier in the Gospel about the nature of his death. John's chronology varies from the Synoptic Gospels in several ways, including the following: (1) The cleansing of the temple occurred earlier in Jesus' ministry (Jn 2:13-22). (2) Pilate has Jesus flogged before the sentence is rendered. John presents the trial in two stages, and both stages are described in two parts. In the first stage Jesus is before the Jewish leaders, and in the second Jesus is before Pilate. The trial or interrogation before the Jewish leaders is separated into two parts by Peter's first denial. The trial before Pilate is divided by the report of the Roman soldiers flogging Jesus.

4.1. First Stage: Jesus Before the Jewish Leaders (Jn 18:12-14, 19-24). Jesus is taken for questioning first to the house of Caiaphas's father-in-law, Annas, who served as high priest in the years A.D. 6-15. Annas's five sons also served as high priests, and although Annas was no longer serving as the high priest, he held great authority among Jewish leaders. C. Keener notes, "The nature of Jesus' encounter with Annas fits the Johannine perspective on conflict with the authorities" (Keener, 2:1090). John reminds the readers that Caiaphas is the presiding high priest, the one who spoke with such irony earlier in the Gospel about Jesus' death: "It is better for one man to die for the nation, than that the whole nation perish" (Jn 11:50). For John, Caiaphas has already played his part by uttering these words, and thus Caiaphas has no speaking part in the trial. Instead, the first character to speak is Peter, who utters his first of three denials of being Jesus' disciple. John notes that a second man is with Peter, an unnamed disciple who is known to the high priest's household (Jn 18:16). This unidentified disciple vouches for Peter so that the latter may enter the courtyard. This point is not found in the Synoptic Gospels, but neither does it fit any particular theological theme in John, and thus it seems likely that John preserves a piece of historical data in this detail.

John highlights the contrast between Peter's denial and Jesus' declaration before Annas. To the latter's question about his disciples and teaching, Jesus answers boldly that he has always spoken his message publicly and openly. Jesus also asks that witnesses might be called to support his testimony. With this detail, John may be indicating that this is far from an official trial, but is better understood as an interrogation. In reaction to Jesus' challenge to Annas's questioning, a guard slaps Jesus in the face. Perhaps John is drawing an allusion to LXX Isaiah 50:6 ("I gave my back to scourges, and my cheeks to blows"); it is also possible that he is preparing the readers for a parallel between the Jewish and Roman treatment of Jesus. Interestingly, John connects Peter's denial to his testimony that he loves Jesus at the end of the Gospel in part through the detail of the charcoal fire (anthrakia) noted in the description of both Annas's courtyard (Jn 18:18) and the scene on the shores of the Sea of Galilee (Jn 21:9). John might also be making a more remote contrast between Peter's denial and the blind man's testimony to the Jewish leaders; the healed man boldly confessed that Jesus is a prophet (Jn 9:17, 24-34).

After establishing that Jesus' teachings were done in front of the people, not in secret, John informs the reader that Jesus is moved to Caiaphas's house. At this point in the action Peter denies being a disciple of Jesus for a second and then a third time. Including the sad end of this scene of Peter's life at this point in John's trial narrative allows him to note the time of day: it is the time when the cock crows. In the next verse John states that it is early in the morning when Jesus is transported to Pilate. How long did Jesus remain at Caiaphas's house? The rooster signaled dawn between 3:00 AM and 5:00 AM, so Jesus left Anna's house at some point after 3:00 AM. At day-break, clients could approach their patrons (Horace, Sat. 1.1.9-10); the cockcrow alerted the Jewish leaders that they might now approach Pilate. Interestingly, John adds that it was early in the morning (Jn 18:28), a detail that the reader could deduce from the previous mention of the rooster's call. The only other time that John mentions "early" is when Mary Magdalene hurries to the tomb (Jn 20:1). John's extensive use of irony is again active, here contrasting the Jewish leaders' eagerness to convict Jesus with Mary's desire to care for his body.

For those readers familiar with the Synoptic Gospels' telling of the trial, it is surprising that here we find no mention of charges of blasphemy, of the temple, or of a hearing before the Sanhedrin. This observation is true to a point, but John has already noted that Caiaphas with the Sanhedrin indicted Jesus (Jn 11:47-53). Moreover, John describes Jesus' cleansing of the temple earlier in the narrative and includes Jesus' statement "Destroy this temple, and in three days I will raise it up" (Jn 2:19). John notes that Jesus intended this statement to refer to his body, and after his resurrection the disciples recalled this statement and understood it (Jn 2:21-22). Finally, John presents Jesus addressing the question "Are you the Messiah?" during the Feast of Dedication (Jn 10:22-39). Jesus replies that he and the Father are one, to which the listeners respond by wanting to stone him for blaspheming. Again, in John 1:51 he tells Nathanael that he will see the heavens opened and angels ascending and descending on the *Son of Man. Therefore, although these elements of the Synoptic Gospels' trial are not discussed in John's telling of the same, the latter includes them in his general portrait of Jesus.

4.2. Second Stage: Jesus Before Pilate (Jn 18:28—19:16). The second stage of Jesus' trial takes place at Pilate's headquarters, most likely Herod the Great's old palace. The account is contained within two references to the Passover (Jn 18:28; 19:14), noting that it was the day of preparation for the Passover. Here John uses a chiasmic construction (Keener, 2:1097).

In the first pair, John presents two interviews with the Jewish leaders that stress the latter's insistence that Jesus be crucified (A = Jn 18:29-32, A' = Jn 19:12-16). In the second pair, John indicates conversations between Pilate and Jesus, first concerning kings, kingdoms and truth, and second concerning the Son of God, authority and power (B = Jn 18:33-38a, B' = Jn 19:9-11). The third pair reflects Pilate's declarations of Jesus' innocence to the Jewish leaders (C = Jn 18:38b-40, C' = 19:4-8). The central act (D) is the flogging of Jesus (Jn 19:1-3).

When the Jewish leaders bring Jesus to Pilate, they offer no specific charge, but rather insist that they would bring for Pilate's consideration only someone who was guilty of a capital offense, either dangerous criminal acts or sedition. John has already informed the readers that the leaders are unable to make sound judgments about Jesus (Jn 7:24), and he presents Jesus as warning that Moses himself will judge them (Jn 5:45). John's prologue prepared the reader that Jesus' own people would not accept him (Jn 1:11).

Pilate seems reluctant throughout to agree to the Jewish leaders' requests, stating three times that Jesus is innocent. Such a decision goes against the normal practices of Roman governors following the local aristocracy's assessments. But history shows that Pilate was in a war of wills with the local Jewish elite, and this characterization resonates with John's presentation. Pilate goads the Jewish leaders to ironic lengths inasmuch as they condemn Jesus for blasphemy because he declared himself to be the Son of God (Jn 19:7) and commit something close to blasphemy in declaring, "We have no king but Caesar" (Jn 19:15). Certainly both the first readers of John as well as the Jewish elite would have connected the label "Son of God" with Caesar, or at least with the imperial cult and the deified Augustus. John probably is writing during the reign of Domitian, son of Vespasian. This dynasty made its mark with the defeat of the Jews and the destruction of their temple in A.D. 70; moreover, Domitian emphasized his own worthiness to be part of the imperial cult. The juxtaposition of "Son of God" and Caesar, then, was a strong indictment of the Jewish leaders' confession that Caesar is their king.

The several dialogues with Pilate allow Jesus to establish or reinforce what was true during his teachings and ministry. To the question of whether he is the king of the Jews, Jesus counters by asking whether Pilate deduced that by himself or was told such by his accusers. John may be suggesting here that it is God who directs Pilate—a theme that he will reinforce again to Pilate (Jn 19:11). The reader knows that Jesus declared that he was to be lifted up (Jn 12:32–33), which points to his crucifixion. Pilate is not as autonomous as his words make him seem. Additionally, Jesus tells Pilate that he testifies to the truth, to which Pilate asks, “What is truth?” unaware of the irony so evident to the reader: truth is standing before him (cf. Jn 1:14, 17; 14:6).

By virtue of its placement, the flogging of Jesus by the Roman soldiers stands at the center of John’s trial scene. In so arranging the story, John shows that the world, played here by the guards, did not accept the one from God (Jn 1:10). Moreover, by placing the flogging here, John emphasizes as the climax of the scene the Jewish leaders’ confession of Rome’s rule. Their testimony to Rome’s authority is earlier mocked by the Roman soldiers’ farcical worship of Jesus. The soldiers want Jesus alive so as to mock him, while the Jewish elite want him dead so as to maintain their relationship with Rome. John, through his arrangement of events, shows the cruelty of Rome in demeaning its clients, including the Jewish aristocracy.

5. Questions Concerning the Historicity of the Trial of Jesus.

Recent scholarship’s questions about the trial of Jesus have focused attention on the role of the Jewish leadership, reflecting consensus that Pilate ordered the crucifixion and Roman soldiers carried it out. Whereas some scholars have called the historicity of the Gospel accounts into question because of conflicting evidence of the Sanhedrin procedures as reflected in the Mishnah, it is now widely accepted that the relevant tractate does not reflect the practices of the first century A.D.; thus, few scholars today use the tractate Sanhedrin as a backdrop to interpret the Gospels. For example, R. Stein notes that Josephus does not always agree with the details of the Mishnah, in that he says that the Sanhedrin met outside the temple (Josephus, J.W. 5.144; 6.354), whereas the Mishnah indicates that it met inside (m. Mid. 5:4; m. Sanh. 11:2) (Stein, 677n5). A. N. Sherwin-White’s work on Roman processes of justice is routinely cited as the definitive account of first-century A.D. Roman practice. He argues for the general historicity of the trial, claiming that it follows Roman patterns in which the local Roman authority worked with the local aristocracy to keep order, and the Roman authority alone had the power to execute criminals; the Jewish authorities did not have the power to put people to death.

5.1. Doubts About the Historicity of the Trial of Jesus. Recent scholarship has called into question several aspects of the trial, including (1) the role of the Pharisees, high priests and Jewish leadership in Jesus’ trial (Fredriksen 220–34); (2) the charges against Jesus; (3) the chronology of the events, including that some events occurred at night. First, looking at allegations of inconsistency in Mark’s Gospel, commentators note that throughout Mark’s Gospel the Pharisees accuse and dismiss Jesus, but at the trial it is the Jewish elders and chief priests who take part. No mention is made specifically of the Pharisees. Second, the chief priest’s question about Jesus’ identity as the Messiah comes without warning, and thus the charge of blasphemy is doubtful (Sanders, 297). Jesus has not made any statement to this effect, and if the temple action was minimal or had occurred earlier in Jesus’ ministry, then we cannot point to that action as relevant to the question. Third, the chronology seems far-fetched, in that the chief priests would leave their families after the Passover meal to commence the trial at night. More likely, they were ready for a long rest because the week of Passover was very tiring, and the day before the evening Passover meal involved the slaughter of thousands of lambs. Fourth, the priests’ alleged fear of the crowds is inconsistent with the crowd’s later call for Jesus’ death. The crowd’s vacillation concerning Jesus is understandable only as Mark’s literary creation that drives Jesus’ conviction and execution (Fredriksen, 222). Fifth, Pilate’s offer to release a convicted rebel is highly suspect; moreover, the alleged practice of releasing a prisoner at Passover is unattested outside the Gospels. If John’s Gospel is followed, other problems emerge. Most significant is that the Jewish trial would occur on the day of preparation for the Passover, which is the most exhausting day of the year for the Jewish leaders, coming on top of the most exhausting week of the year. The priests would have been required at the temple altar at dawn, but instead they are in front of Pilate.

In sum, those who dismiss the trial of Jesus before the Jewish leaders as nonhistorical suggest that it was a creation of the early church, a theological charge against Jews to bolster the emerging church’s christological claims. Rather than the result of actions by the Jewish leadership, Jesus’ crucifixion was the result of his *triumphal entry and of the subsequent impression and excitement of the crowds that Jesus might reveal himself as the Messiah. The chief priests and Pilate convened at some point after this event and determined that Jesus should be crucified so as to silence any messianic fervor (Fredriksen, 254).

5.2. Response to Doubts About the Historicity of the Trial of Jesus. Those defending the general historicity of the Jewish leaders' interrogation of Jesus hold that the questions about the Messiah arise naturally from Jesus' teachings and actions, not least from his temple "cleansing" and statements about the temple signaling Jesus' messianic convictions (Powell, 278).

Moreover, defenders accept that while the Gospels are rich in theology, they also reveal eyewitness details, and they suggest that it is from the latter that the former is drawn (note Jn 18:16 [see 4.1. above]). First, Jesus' actions during the triumphal entry and at the temple are best understood as reflecting common messianic assumptions. For example, the connection between messianic authority, the title "son of Man" and the temple is found in 4Q174 I, 10-13 in its interpretation of 2 Samuel 7:12-14 (Dunn, 633). Second, throughout his ministry Jesus was accused of being a false prophet, an accusation that might have contributed to the trial charge of blasphemy. Jesus' teaching about the "kingdom of God, a new kingdom, was rightly viewed as a challenge to the religious and political status quo (Sanders, 296). Third, in response to the assessment that the Jewish leaders would be too overwhelmed with their Passover responsibilities to handle Jesus' trial, one could counter that this supposition is based more on modern views of appropriate work and leisure hours than ancient expectations. Instead, it would be precisely these large festivals such as Passover when Jewish leaders would be on duty around the clock. The claim that the Jewish leaders would not hold a capital case at night is based on the Mishnah (m. Sanh. 4:1), but the evidence for the practice of this mishnaic law in the early first century A.D. is very weak. Indeed, if the capital laws were followed generally, the Gospels would have cited this important breach of practice in the trial of Jesus (Brown, 1:358-59). Fourth, the charges that the crowds in Mark are implausibly fickle can be countered by noting that Mark does not declare that the crowd that welcomes Jesus in his triumphal entry (Mk 11:8-10) is the same crowd that asks for Barabbas before Jesus' crucifixion (Mk 15:8-15) (see Stein, 701). Mark's silence on the Pharisees' presence at the trial need not indicate that Pharisees were not in attendance, but only that their primary identity would be as members of the Jewish ruling elite, and secondarily as Pharisees. Fifth, Pilate's action in releasing a prisoner is similar to the release of prisoners by Albinus, the governor who replaced Festus (Josephus, Ant. 20.215). Perhaps Herod Antipas had worked out an agreement with Pilate to release prisoners at Passover; their friendship is historically plausible (Fitzmyer, 2:1478-80).

See also BLASPHEMY; BURIAL OF JESUS; DEATH OF JESUS; GETHSEMANE; LAST SUPPER; PASSION NARRATIVE; PONTIUS PILATE; SANHEDRIN.

BIBLIOGRAPHY. D. Bock, Blasphemy and Exaltation in Judaism: The Charge Against Jesus in Mark 14:53-65 (repr., Grand Rapids: Baker, 2000); R. E. Brown, The Death of the Messiah (2 vols.; ABRL; New York: Doubleday, 1994); J. D. G. Dunn, Jesus Remembered (Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 2003); E. E. Ellis, "Deity-Christology in Mark 14:58," in Jesus of Nazareth, Lord and Christ: Essays on the Historical Jesus and New Testament Christology, ed. J. B. Green and M. Turner (Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1994) 192-203; J. A. Fitzmyer, The Gospel According to Luke (2 vols.; AB 28, 28A; Garden City, NY: Doubleday, 1985); R. T. France, The Gospel of Matthew (NICNT; Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 2007); P. Fredriksen, Jesus of Nazareth, King of the Jews: A Jewish Life and the Emergence of Christianity (New York: Vintage Books, 1999); J. B. Green, The Gospel of Luke (NICNT; Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1997); A. E. Harvey, Jesus and the Constraints of History (London: Duckworth, 1982); C. S. Keener, Matthew (IVPNTC; Downers Grove, IL: InterVarsity Press, 1997); idem, The Gospel of John: A Commentary (2 vols.; Peabody, MA: Hendrickson, 2003); M. A. Powell, "On Deal-Breakers and Disturbances," in John, Jesus, and History, 1: Critical Appraisals of Critical Views, ed. P. N. Anderson, F. Just and T. Thatcher (SBLSymS 44; Atlanta: Society of Biblical Literature, 2007) 277-82; E. P. Sanders, Jesus and Judaism (Philadelphia: Fortress, 1985); A. N. Sherwin-White, Roman Society and Roman Law in the New Testament (Oxford: Oxford University Press, 1963); M. L. Skinner, The Trial Narratives: Conflict, Power, and Identity in the New Testament (Louisville: Westminster John Knox, 2010); G. S. Sloyan, Jesus on Trial: A Study of the Gospels (2nd ed.; Minneapolis: Fortress, 2006); G. N. Stanton, "Jesus of Nazareth: A Magician and a False Prophet Who Deceived God's People?" in Jesus of Nazareth, Lord and Christ: Essays on the Historical Jesus and New Testament Christology, ed. J. B. Green and M. Turner (Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1994) 164-80; R. Stein, Mark (BECNT; Grand Rapids: Baker Academic, 2008); G. Theissen and A. Merz, The Historical Jesus: A Comprehensive Guide, trans. J. Bowden (Minneapolis: Fortress, 1998 [1996]); N. T. Wright, Jesus and the Victory of God (Minneapolis: Fortress, 1996). L. H. Cohick

TRIPLE TRADITION. See SYNOPTIC PROBLEM.

TRIUMPHAL ENTRY

Reported in all four Gospels (Mt 21:1-11; Mk 11:1-11; Lk 19:28-40; Jn 12:12-19), Jesus' entry into *Jerusalem has the clearest messianic connotations of all his actions up to that point. At the same time, its parallels with and striking departures from similar cultural practices and earlier scriptural accounts, particularly when read in the light of the preceding Gospel narratives, reveal profound implications not fully grasped by either Jesus' disciples or the attendant crowds, and most of all that in Jesus God himself has returned to his city and *temple. While most scholars have accepted the essential historicity of the core narrative, others have considered its messianic elements to be legendary additions. Although interpretative elaboration in the accounts is obvious (e.g., Mt 21:4-5), there is no good reason to doubt its essential historicity.

1. Analogues and Precedents
2. Jesus' Entry and Its Significance
3. Historicity
4. Distinctives of the Gospel Accounts

1. Analogues and Precedents.

Entries of great personages into cities were a well-established feature of the ancient world. Although varying depending on the guest and occasion—there were offered to a range of worthies in different settings—Greco-Roman entries, the parousia, had the following features (Kinman 1995; cf. Duff). They were (1) commonly for royal individuals who, (2) greeted prior to entry by sacerdotal and political figures accompanied by various groups, were then (3) escorted into the city, where, (4) witnessed by attending citizenry-at-large wearing ornamental clothing, including wreaths, (5) the subject was lauded in speeches expressing the city's privilege at his visitation before (6) being escorted on the same day to the local temple. It has been suggested that in this setting offering sacrifice amounted to an act of appropriation (Duff). Finally, (7) by the time of the NT period, the parousia expressed an increasingly imperial character. The famed Roman triumph was the most elite, ostentatious and rare expression of the type. Granted by the senate, it was always military, the victory had to be decisive, and the conquered, the booty and those freed were prominently displayed. The victor laureate, riding in his gilded chariot behind four white horses, was raised to the rank of "immortal," and the whole concluded with sacrifices in the temple. Recorded on various imperial coins, the event provided the basis for Paul's self-deprecating presentation in 2 Corinthians 2:14-17. More generally, the semitechnical term parousia was regularly used of Jesus' second coming (e.g., Mt 24:3, 27; 1 Cor 15:23; 1 Thess 2:19; 3:13; 4:15; Jas 5:7; 2 Pet 3:12; 1 Jn 2:28), and even of his first (2 Pet 1:16; cf. Mk 9:1).

A similar pattern obtains in contemporary Jewish accounts of the entries of Alexander the Great, Judas, Jonathan, Simon Maccabeus and other royal or military figures (Josephus, Ant. 11.325-339, 342-345; 12.312, 348-349; 13.304-306; 16.12-15; 17.194-239, 324-328; J.W. 1.73-74; 2.101-110; 1 Macc 4:19-25; 5:45-54; 10:86; 13:43-51; 2 Macc 4:21-22). According to D. Catchpole, these entries characteristically involved (1) a status already attained and a victory achieved (though not in every case [e.g., Josephus, Ant. 11:325-339; 16:12-15; 2 Macc 4:21]), (2) a formal ceremonial entry, (3) celebratory greetings and/or acclamations accompanied by divine invocations, (4) procession into the city's temple (where one exists) followed by (5) cultic activity, whether positive (offering sacrifice) or negative (expelling objectionable persons and removing ritual uncleanness, this second alternative often occurring in stage [1]). There is also the sham welcome accorded Jonathan prior to his betrayal and execution (1 Macc 12:43-50) (Kinman, 1995).

Although the evidence is sparse, entries in Israel's Scriptures lack the formal protocols noted above (Kinman, 1995). The most commonly cited primary precedents for the Gospel accounts, 1 Kings 1:32-40; Zechariah 9:9, have their own distinct concerns. In 1 Kings there is no victory. The central focus is King David's active role (1 Kings 1:33, 38; cf. 2 Sam 13:29; 18:9), notably in giving detailed instructions to agents drawn from the royal inner circle (1 Kings 1:32-35). Solomon, on the other hand, is entirely passive (in contrast to the self-promotion of insurrectionist pretenders [2 Sam 15:1; 1 Kings 1:5]). After being formally "set" (epibibazō [1 Kings 1:33]; epikathizō [1 Kings 1:38]) on the king's mule, he is escorted to Gihon for public anointing by the high priest with oil from the tent shrine (1 Kings 1:33-34, 38-39; cf. 1 Kings 2:28-30) and then led in joyful procession to the throne (1 Kings 1:35, 40).

Zechariah 9:9-10 draws on a range of earlier motifs. Summoning Jerusalem to rejoice (cf. Is 60:5; 61:10; 65:18-19; 66:10), warrior Yahweh announces its coming king (cf. Is 9:6-7; 11:1-5; Mic 5:2-4), humble, lowly and riding on a young (LXX: "new") colt (cf. Gen 49:10-11; 1 Kings 1:33), through whose universal rule Israel's peace will extend to the nations (Ps 72:7-11). At the same time, it draws on David's return from exile (2 Sam 19-20), where he retraces his earlier departure from Jerusalem on a pair of saddled donkeys given him for the journey (2 Sam 15:30; 16:1-2). The question of a prior victory is complex. While the king apparently has “been delivered” (Hiphil participle of yš' [Zech 9:9a]) by God (the speaker in Zech 9:6-8), his victories on behalf of his people come only after God cuts off chariot and warhorse from Ephraim (MT: “I,” referring to God [Zech 9:10a]; the LXX’s “he” has the king as agent). Rounding out entries of royal figures, the closest equivalent to a Roman triumph is the LXX version of the celebratory acclaim offered David on his return from defeating Goliath (LXX 1 Sam 17:54; 18:6-9). After defeating the Ammonite-Moabite coalition, Jehoshaphat similarly proceeds in joyful procession to the temple (2 Chron 20:27-30).

Given the scriptural acclamations of God’s kingship (e.g., LXX Ps 23:8 [ET Ps 24:8]; 43:5 [ET Ps 44:4]; Zeph 3:15), B. Kinman also considers Yahweh’s entry into Jerusalem, via David’s return of the ark of the presence (2 Sam 6), which could be classified as both a royal entry and a celebration of victory over the Philistines (cf. 2 Sam 5:17-25). Formally “set” (LXX: epibibazō [cf. 1 Kings 1:33]) on a “new” cart (2 Sam 6:3), the ark was accompanied to Jerusalem, in festal celebration, by David and all the house of Israel (2 Sam 6:5), an event apparently reflected in LXX Psalm 131 (ET Ps 132) (perhaps also LXX Ps 23; 46; 67 [ET Ps 24; 47; 68]). We should also include here the classic new-exodus text Isaiah 40:1-10, with its summons to prepare triumphant Yahweh’s processional way as the victorious warrior returns, shepherding the exiles, to a Zion charged with heralding his arrival. This image is taken up at the conclusion of the eschatological restoration of Zion cycle (Is 60–62), where the once-forsaken city is again called to prepare for Yahweh’s glorious parousia, with the “redeemed” exiles (cf. Is 35:8-9) returning in his train (Is 62:10-12). One might also consider Ezekiel’s visions of the divine glory departing from and returning to the temple over the Mount of Olives (Ezek 11:23; 43:1-5), and Zechariah’s prophecy of the sun-dering of same as warrior Yahweh descends (Zech 14:4) before defeating his enemies, rescuing a remnant of his people and ushering in eschatological peace (Zech 14:1-11) (Duff).

2. Jesus’ Entry and Its Significance.

Jesus’ entry is recorded in all four Gospels, with Matthew (Mt 21:1-9) and Luke (Lk 19:28-40) largely following Mark (Mk 11:1-10), while John (Jn 12:12-19) reflects an independent and much briefer tradition. In this section the focus is on the common themes and their significance. To begin, the Synoptics’ emphasis on the Mount of Olives evokes not just David’s return “from exile,” but also the eschatological hope of Zechariah 9:9’s returning Davidic king (echoing 2 Sam 19–20; cf. Josephus, Ant. 20.169; J.W. 2.262) (see Son of David). The details of the animal’s location and the bystanders’ question (absent from John), although perhaps prophetic foresight (cf. 1 Sam 10:2-10; 1 Kings 17:8-16), might reflect a prearrangement (cf. Mt 26:18 // Mk 14:12-16). The animal being “tied” (one would expect as much in a city) could be a means of identification, but also it might allude to Genesis 49:10-12, already interpreted messianically (e.g., LXX; 4Q252 V, 1-5; the Targumim) and later connected with Zechariah 9:9 (Gen. Rab. 98:9) (Blenkinsopp). Being “new” and hence “unridden” (Mk 11:2 // Lk 11:30) conforms to the tradition that no one else may ride the king’s mule (m. Sanh. 2:5; cf. 1 Kings 1:33). It also echoes requirements concerning items set aside for God’s use (cf. Num 19:2; Deut 21:3; 1 Sam 6:7; 2 Sam 6:3), which would suit the response “the Lord has need” if understood as “this is for God’s work.” Whether Jesus’ action constitutes “royal” impressment (Derrett) depends on the nature of prior arrangements, if any. In this respect, “Lord” could refer to the animal’s owner, to Jesus, or, as above, to God. The first option is unlikely, and the second is problematic because Jesus does not characteristically speak of himself as “the Lord” (but cf. Mk 2:28 par.). Because Jesus is the one through whom God’s kingdom is present and who speaks for God, the third option seems best: in initiating this “entry,” Jesus is doing the will of God. However, given the Gospels’ high Christology (see below), a deliberate blurring of the second and the third options ought not be ruled out (cf. Ps 110:1 in Mk 12:35, 37 par.).

Given that this is the only time Jesus rides an animal, and that he does so when pilgrims apparently were expected to walk (m. Hag. 1:1), his action surely is deliberate. That the *feast is Passover, during which some apparently expected a repetition of the first exodus deliverance (cf. Mek. Ex 12:42 [ca. A.D. 90]; cf. Tg. Yer. I Ex 21:42; Tg. Yer. II Ex 15:18; 12:42; and later Ex. Rab. 18:12; 51:1), and that Jesus chooses a colt surely are provocative. In contrast to the chariot and horses of treasonous pretenders (2 Sam 15:1-6; cf. 1 Kings 1:5), Jesus’ choice of the characteristic transport for Israel’s royalty (2 Sam 13:29; 18:9) constitutes his most direct claim to being God’s promised humble Davidic Messiah (Zech 9:9), whose trust is in the Lord (Ps 20:7; Is 31:1; 43:17; cf. Deut 11:4; 20:1; Pss. Sol. 17:33).

Although the disciples might simply be providing saddlecloths (Mk 11:7 par.), the crowd's casting of cloaks and branches (the latter not being waved indicates that they are not festal lûlabîm, nor is this the Feast of Tabernacles [m. Sukkah 3-4]) suggests a spontaneous royal affirmation (cf. 2 Kings 9:13; Josephus, Ant. 9.111; Ps 118:27). Hence the crowd's "Hosanna" (absent in Luke), a shortened form of Psalm 118:25, in greeting (e.g., "to the Son of David" [Mt 21:9]) rather than supplication (Fitzmyer), and invocation of Psalm 118 (cf. 1 Macc 4:24). In this apparently royal psalm thanking God for his mighty victorious intervention (Ps 118:14-18) the king, surrounded by joyful worshipers (Ps 118:15-16), requests entrance from the temple gatekeepers (Ps 118:19), who, confessing his righteousness, readily grant him entry (Ps 118:20). The last song of the Egyptian Hallel (Pss 113-118), so called because of its thoroughgoing exodus theology, and focused as it is on the temple and Zion as the goal of the new exodus, Psalm 118 was appropriately sung at Passover (m. Pesah 10:6). Although direct evidence for a messianic understanding of this psalm is late (Fitzmyer), it is widespread. This, along with the consistent prophetic vision of God's new-exodus intervention as the catalyst for the restoration of David's throne (Is 11:1-16; 55:5; Jer 30:9; 33:15-26; Ezek 34:23-24; 37:24-25; Hos 3:5; Amos 9:11; Zech 12:7-8) and the NT's unselfconscious association of the psalm with Jesus, suggests that a messianic interpretation was already current (Mt 21:9 // Mk 11:10 // Lk 19:38 // Jn 12:13; on "our father David," see Acts 2:29; 4:25; Sir 44:1; 45:21; cf. Sir 47:1-11).

However, a comparison of Jesus' entry with its relevant precedents shows several critical differences. In marked contrast to David's first son, Jesus himself takes the initiative in giving detailed instructions to his disciples (cf. 1 Kings 1:32-35). Normally the act of a usurper, Jesus' action is instead a matter of Israel's rightful king confronting "insurrectionist" temple authorities who, in contravention of Psalm 118:20 and Zechariah 9:9, refuse to rejoice or to welcome him (Jer 7:11 in Mk 11:17 par.; cf. Mk 3:22; 7:1 par.). Hence, the rejected king remains outside his city (Mt 21:17; Mk 11:11; cf. John 12:36). The absence of a chariot or any other military associations, which clearly distinguishes Jesus from current expectations (cf., e.g., 4Q285; Pss. Sol. 17:22-24; Josephus, Ant. 17.271-281), and the ambiguity as to whether the procession actually enters the city, let alone the temple (Mk 11:11; Mt 21:10 is noncommittal), together suggest that Jesus' provocative "entry" is equally provocatively an "anti-parousia" (Kinman, 1995), thoroughly reworked around his unconventional vision of the messianic kingdom (e.g., Mt 11:28-30; 12:15-21; Mk 8:31-33 par.; Jn 13:1-15). Thus, although the hearers/readers of the Gospels already know that God has declared Jesus to be David's messianic son (e.g., Ps 2:7 in Mk 1:11; 9:7 par.; Jn 1:40-49), it is not military success but rather Jesus' mighty acts of *mercy that motivate the crowds to acclaim him (Lk 19:37; Jn 12:17-18; cf. the *healing of the *blind in Mt 20:29-34 // Mk 10:46-52). Finally, Jesus' entry concludes with two equally unexpected cultic acts. As did Simon Maccabeus (1 Macc 13:49-51), Jesus "cleanses" the corrupt temple. But his cleansing implies its coming destruction (Mk 11:12-20 par.; Mk 13 par.) and its replacement with a new house of prayer for all nations, with himself as its new crowning stone (Mk 11:17; 12:10-11; 15:37-39 par.) (Watts 2007, 208-14). Even more unexpectedly, he himself is now the sacrifice being offered (Mk 14:24 par.) (Watts 2007, 229-32).

Furthermore, it is in fact not the Messiah, but Yahweh, who heals the sick (e.g., 4Q521 2 II, 5-12, citing Is 61:1) and who as warrior binds Satan and controls the sea (Is 49:24-26 in Mk 3:23-27 par.) (Watts 1997, 137-82; Grindheim, 40-59). When, as the *Son of Man, Jesus *forgives sins and assumes the role of Lord of the *Sabbath, he exercises God's sole prerogatives (Mk 2:10, 28 par.; cf., e.g., Ex 31:13; 34:9; Lev 19:3; Is 43:25; 56:4). Even after Peter's messianic confession Jesus' still responds as the divinely authoritative Son of Man (Mk 8:29-31 par.), being immediately authenticated as such in a new Sinai *transfiguration (Mk 9:2-8 par.). But this is only what Isaiah 40:3 and Malachi 3:1 (cf. Mk 1:2-3; Mt 3:3; 11:10 // Lk 3:4-6; 7:27) had already implied: Jesus embodied, in some mysterious way, the very presence of victorious Yahweh (hence, e.g., Jn 1:1, 18; 5:18; 8:56-59) come to effect his people's new exodus (Watts 1997; Wright 1996, 612-53). In this respect, the Synoptics' emphasis on Jesus' approach from the Mount of Olives suggests the inauguration of Zechariah 14 (see Duff) and the reversal of God's exilic departure (Ezek 43:1-5; cf. Ezek. 11:23). Moreover, just as God's kingly intervention was both distinct from and the necessary precursor to the Messiah's reign (as noted above; see also Grindheim, 6-39), so too Jesus as the embodied warrior Yahweh inaugurates God's kingdom (Mk 1:14-15; Lk 4:43) before coming as the Messiah to Jerusalem. Prior, then, to his messianic status, Jesus is the temple's Lord, "who comes" fresh from his uniquely authoritative victories over Satan, and for whose coming to his house in judgment John, as Malachi's Elijah, was to prepare, lest he strike the land with a curse (Mal 3:1-5; 4:1-6) (Telford). In refusing John, the temple authorities are unprepared (Mk 11:15-33 par.; Mk 11:15-16 recalls Zech 14:21) (Duff) and consequently in rejecting Jesus they refuse to welcome God their king, tragically ensuring the destruction of their rebellious house (Mt 23; Mk 13 par.).

3. Historicity.

Scholars have offered a wide range of options as to what actually happened when Jesus entered Jerusalem (see Tatum). For some, Jesus intended an explicit fulfillment of Zechariah 9:9, publically either revealing his lowly messiahship (traditional; also Dibelius) or announcing his this-worldly alternative to Roman rule (e.g., Reimarus; cf. Brandon). Others, agreeing that Jesus' action was "kingly," argue that it was less an explicit messianic demonstration than an acted parable (e.g., Sanders; Borg; cf. Dunn). Another view is that it was not Jesus, but rather the others with him who were responsible for the public acclamation (Sheehan; Bornkamm?). For R. Bultmann, although Jesus may in fact have entered Jerusalem with other pilgrims, his riding on an ass amidst cast cloaks and branches is a later messianic legend shaped by Zechariah 9:9. Finally, some regard the event as almost entirely a creative historicizing of prophecy (Crossan; cf. Catchpole).

Objections to historicity are of two kinds: (1) overt messianism is considered inconsistent with Jesus' reticence elsewhere; (2) the lack of Roman response is thought to be inconsistent with the Gospel accounts. However, real people and situations being complex, one should expect nuanced explanations. The critical question concerns instead the reasons for Jesus' reticence. If he believed himself to be the Messiah, at some point his own integrity and commitment to Israel's prophetic tradition would require a public coming to Jerusalem in that role. However, given the potentially incendiary nature of messianic expectations and his own radically different conception of messiahship, it is almost unavoidable that, in keeping with his bewildering (to his disciples) understanding of his death, he delays until the last possible moment. As to the lack of Roman response, it is difficult to believe, based on Jesus' life and teachings, especially when compared to the violence of various contemporary prophets and royal pretenders, that the Romans prior to this point considered Jesus a threat. From all accounts, the "procession," even if intense, was over almost as soon as it began (cf. the Ephesian riot in Acts 19:23-41); and even if it did attract some notice, showing no signs of violence and neither entering the city nor directly confronting Roman representatives, it was considered insufficiently dangerous to risk a truly major disturbance (cf. Mk 12:12; 14:1 par.). In addition to its unique formal characteristics, Mark and John reflect independent traditions (criterion of multiple attestation); entries being inherently highly politicized, Jesus' action stands at odds with Christian apologetic concerns not to appear seditious (criterion of embarrassment); and it best explains the possibility of a Roman governor considering political charges against Jesus just a few days later (criterion of effect) (Kinman 2009).

4. The Entry in the Gospels.

In addition to the common themes addressed above, each evangelist has highlighted various aspects or introduced new elements in keeping with his particular emphasis.

4.1. Mark. As indicated by his opening and only editorial scriptural citation (Mk 1:1-3), Mark's Gospel is primarily concerned with the long-awaited new exodus return of Yahweh to Zion (Is 40:3) and his temple (Mal 3:1, itself citing Ex 23:20). Given his emphasis on Jesus' divine authority and repetition of God's mighty new-exodus deeds, the entry is fundamentally about the Lord coming to his temple. Thus, the healing of blind Bartimaeus and his following Jesus on the way into Jerusalem (Mk 10:46-52) echoes Isaiah 35:5-10's picture of the healed and ransomed exiles returning to Zion. However, in rejecting God's preparatory messenger, Elijah/John (Mal 4:5; Mk 1:6; 9:11-13; 11:27-33), the unrepentant authorities and their temple come under God's judgment (Mal 3:5; Mk 11:12-21; 13). At the same time, Jesus is also Israel's long-awaited Messiah (Mk 1:1). Initially attested to Jesus alone during the *baptism (Mk 1:11, citing Ps 2:7), his messianic status does not really emerge until Peter's "partial" and "secret" confession (Mk 8:9-10). But this is immediately radicalized in Jesus' messianic embrace of the cross, which, though rejected by Peter, is then directly confirmed by God himself at the transfiguration (Mk 9:7, citing Ps 2:7; cf. Mk 9:12). Only after Jesus' cruciform call has been thoroughly established in his and his "blind" disciples' journey along the "way" to Jerusalem (Mk 8:31-38; 9:30-32; 10:32-45) is the first public affirmation of Jesus' messiahship recorded, and that by a blind man requesting mercy (Mk 10:46-52). From this point on, Jesus' messianic status is repeatedly confirmed, not least in the thoroughgoing appeal to three key Davidic psalms (Ps 118:25-26, 22-23 in Mk 11:9-10; 12:10-11; Ps 110:1 in Mk 12:36; 14:62; Ps 22:19, 8, 2 in Mk 15:24, 29, 34). Bartimaeus's confession is soon followed by the acclamation of the crowds. But while undoubtedly true, it is also undoubtedly a “blind” confession. Little do they realize that Jesus is not only a crucified Messiah but also a crucified God, who comes in the name of the Lord because he, however mysteriously, shares God’s identity. Not only do both God’s and David’s kingdom come through the cross, but also it means the end of the current temple and the establishment of a new one at which all nations will be welcome (Mk 15:37-39; cf. Mk 11:17).

4.2. Matthew. From the outset, Jesus is the messianic Son of David (Mt 1:1, 6, 17, 20; 2:4-6), defined not by military conquest but rather by mercy for Jews (9:27; 20:30-31) and Gentiles (Mt 15:22; cf. Is 9:1-2 in Mt 4:15-16; 8:10-12). As at the beginning his birth as king created turmoil in Jerusalem (Mt 2:3), so too at the end (Mt 21:10) as Jesus is acclaimed first by the crowd (Mt 21:9; cf. Mk’s less direct “of our ancestor David”) and then by the *children in the temple (Mt 21:15, citing Ps 8:3; cf. Mt 11:25). Matthew characteristically elucidates the entry’s significance citing a combination of Isaiah 62:11 and Zechariah 9:9 (his correction of the LXX’s “beast of burden” to the MT’s “donkey” and his dual mention of donkey in Mt 21:2, 7 strengthen the Zechariah connection). In beginning with Isaiah 62:11, Jesus’ entry is seen first as the fulfillment of God’s parousia to Zion. As the one in whom Zion’s long-awaited new-exodus redemption has come, Jesus is the city’s salvation (Is 62:10-12) (see Tan; Watts 1997, 295-310). Not only is this to be proclaimed to the ends of the earth (Is 62:11; cf. Mt 28:18-20), but also God’s “redeemed” are now those who follow Jesus. In keeping with Matthew’s “Son of David” motif, the second, and longer, Zechariah 9 citation makes the meaning of Jesus’ actions explicit. This is the eschatological return of David’s humble messianic son who will command peace to the nations (cf. again Mt 28:18-20). Hardly unaware of Hebrew parallelism (there is only one male animal in Zech 9:9), Matthew’s renowned addition of the colt’s mother underlines the youth of the as-yet-unridden colt; hence, even in his “triumph” the merciful king does not separate them (cf. Mt 12:11, 15-21; 18:12). Picking up on Mark’s compassionate healing of the blind (cf. Mt 20:29-34), Matthew further recounts how the blind and lame, normally excluded from God’s house, are welcomed and healed there by Jesus (Mt 21:14; cf. LXX 2 Kgdms 5:8, m. Hag. 1:1; 1Q28a II, 3-10). Immediately contrasting this with the temple authorities’ anger (Mt 21:15; cf. Jesus’ compassion over against the Pharisees’ severity in Mt 12:1-23), Matthew massively extends Mark’s condemnation of the present institution (Mt 23; cf. Mk 12:38-40), concluding with Jesus’ lament over the soon-to-be-desolate city, which will not see God’s deliverance until it makes the crowd’s confession its own (Mt 23:37-38).

4.3. Luke. Luke’s opening chapters present Jesus both as coming Lord (e.g., Lk 1:43, 76; 2:11; cf. Lk 3:4-6) (see Rowe, esp. 31-77) and as messianic Son of David (e.g., Lk 1:27, 32, 69; 2:11). “Anointed” by a Samuel-like *John the Baptist, Jesus is the new David, around whom the outcasts of Israel and the nations gather (Lk 1:51-55, 2:30-34), and who, like David, is destined, in spite of official opposition, to be Israel’s king (Wright 1992, 379-81). Thus, just prior to Jesus’ entry Luke adds the stories of the welcomed outcast Zacchaeus (Lk 19:1-10) and of the rejected king who nevertheless receives royal power (Lk 19:1-27). Only in Luke is Jesus the colt’s “lord” (Lk 19:31)—that is, both king and Lord (Rowe). Reflecting the *discipleship focus of Luke’s vastly lengthened “journey” section (Lk 9:51—19:48; cf. Mk 8:27—10:52), the crowd is explicitly a great multitude of disciples (“a people for the Lord” [cf. Lk 1:16-17]) whose joyful praise of God (cf. Zech 9:9) is in response to Jesus’ performance of Isaiah’s new-exodus “mighty deeds” (Lk 19:38; cf. Lk 1:51, 69; 5:17; 7:18-23 and Is 29:18-19; 35:5-6; 42:18; 61:1). Their blessing Jesus openly as “the king” and their exclamation of “peace and glory” echoing that of the angelic host (Lk 2:14; cf. Lk 19:10) together demonstrate that his entry is the climactic moment for which he was born and for which Israel was waiting (e.g., Lk 1:46-55, 68-79; 2:29-35). In stark contrast, the objection of “some of the Pharisees” (not all) as the representative voice of all those who reject Jesus’ kingship (Lk 19:39-40) leads directly into its outcome: Jesus’ sorrowful lament over Jerusalem’s failure to recognize the visitation of the one (i.e., God [cf. Jer 6:15]) who could bring it “peace” (cf. Zech 9:10), and hence its coming destruction (Lk 19:41-44; cf. Lk 13:34-35).

4.4. John. Jesus’ great victories are his defeat of death in the climactic sign of *Lazarus’s resurrection (Jn 11:1-44) and of the ruler of this world in Jesus’ sacrificial exaltation on the cross (Jn 12:28-32). Reports of Lazarus’s resurrection polarize the city, galvanizing the opposition (Jn 11:46-57) while, in what of all the Gospels most closely resembles the standard welcome, inspiring a reception party to go out to meet Jesus and openly to acclaim him “King of Israel” (Jn 12:9-13; cf. Nathaniel’s confession in Jn 1:49). Whereas Jesus’ finding and sitting on the young donkey is effectively a succinct version of the Synoptics, it also stresses his initiative in affirming his kingship in his own time (Jn 12:23; cf. Jn 6:15). John's Zechariah 9:9 reference not only underlines Jesus' messianic identity (Jn 12:15b-16; cf. Mt 21:5), but also presents John's unique account of the inquiring Greeks as the firstfruits of his messianic dominion to the ends of the earth (Jn 12:20-21; cf. Zech 9:10b). The singular reference to "palms" (Jn 12:13) recalls the Maccabean recovery and consequent purification of the temple from the idolatrous and defiling Seleucids (1 Macc 4:36; 13:51; 2 Macc 10:7). In casting the hostile authorities in a similar light, it coheres with John's beginning his citation with Zechariah 3:16's "Do not be afraid" (Jn 12:15a). There, God announced his coming—appropriately applied to Jesus, since he and the Father are one (Jn 10:30), and in him, the "I am," God's glory tabernacles among us (Jn 1:14)—to deliver a Jerusalem defiled by proud and corrupt rulers (Zeph 3:16), which for John means at least Israel's authorities but also Pilate (cf. Jn 5:44; 19:11-13). At the same time, in view of the temple cleansing occurring much earlier in the narrative of Jesus' ministry (Jn 2:13-22), it indicates the true meaning of Jesus' raising of Lazarus, which immediately preceded Jesus' anointing and his entry into the city, and his defeat of the ruler of this world in his subsequent glorious death on Passover. The first, set in the context of the Feast of Dedication, which celebrated the Maccabean purification (Jn 10:22), exemplifies the restoration of God's true temple (see Coloe), and the second, while many Jews were coming to Jerusalem to purify themselves in preparation for Passover, constitutes Jesus' sacrificial purification of all, including the nations (Jn 11:51-52; 12:19), who come to him (Jn 12:32).

See also CHRIST; EXILE AND RESTORATION; JERUSALEM; OLD TESTAMENT IN THE GOSPELS; REVOLUTIONARY MOVEMENTS; SON OF DAVID; TEMPLE; TEMPLE ACT.

BIBLIOGRAPHY. J. Blenkinsopp, "The Oracle of Judah and the Messianic Entry," JBL 80 (1961) 55-64; D. R. Catchpole, "The 'Triumphal' Entry," in Jesus and the Politics of His Day, ed. E. Bammel and C. F. D. Moule (Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 1984) 319-34; M. L. Coloe, God Dwells with Us: Temple Symbolism in the Fourth Gospel (Collegeville, MN: Liturgical Press, 2001); J. D. M. Derrett, "The Law in the New Testament: The Palm Sunday Colt," NovT 13 (1971) 241-58; P. B. Duff, "The March of the Divine Warrior and the Advent of the Greco-Roman King: Mark's Account of Jesus' Entry into Jerusalem," JBL 111 (1992) 55-71; C. A. Evans, "Jesus and Zechariah's Messianic Hope," in Authenticating the Activities of Jesus, ed. B. Chilton, and C. A. Evans (NTTS 28/2; Leiden: E. J. Brill, 1999) 374-88; J. A. Fitzmyer, "Aramaic Evidence Affecting the Interpretation of Hosanna in the New Testament," in Tradition and Interpretation in the New Testament: Essays in Honor of E. Earle Ellis for His 60th Birthday, ed. G. F. Hawthorne and O. Betz (Grand Rapids: Eerdmans; Tübingen: Mohr Siebeck, 1987) 110-18; S. Grindheim, God's Equal: What Can We Know about Jesus' Self-Understanding? (LNTS 446; London: T & T Clark, 2011); A. E. Harvey, Jesus and the Constraints of History (London: Duckworth, 1982); B. Kinman, Jesus' Entry into Jerusalem: In the Context of Lukan Theology and the Politics of His Day (AGJU 28; Leiden: E. J. Brill, 1995); idem, "Jesus' Royal Entry into Jerusalem," in Key Events in the Life of the Historical Jesus: A Collaborative Exploration of Context and Coherence, ed. D. L. Bock and R. L. Webb (Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 2009) 383-428; H. Leander, "With Homi Bhabha at the Jerusalem City Gates: A Postcolonial Reading of the 'Triumphant' Entry (Mark 11.1-11)," JSNT 32 (2010) 309-35; C. K. Rowe, Early Narrative Christology: The Lord in the Gospel of Luke (BZNW 139; Berlin: de Gruyter, 2006); J. A. Sanders, "A New Testament Hermeneutic Fabric: Psalm 118 in the Entrance Narrative," in Early Jewish and Christian Exegesis: Studies in Memory of William Hugh Brownlee, ed. C. A. Evans and W. F. Stinespring (Atlanta: Scholars Press, 1987) 177-90; K. H. Tan, The Zion Traditions and the Aims of Jesus (SNTMS 91; Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 1997); W. B. Tatum, "Jesus' So-Called Triumphal Entry: On Making an Ass of the Romans," Forum 1 (1998) 129-43; W. R. Telford, The Barren Temple and the Withered Tree: A Redaction-Critical Analysis of the Cursing of the Fig-Tree Pericope in Mark's Gospel and Its Relation to the Cleansing of the Temple Tradition (JSNTSup 1; Sheffield: JSOT Press, 1980); R. E. Watts, Isaiah's New Exodus and Mark (WUNT 2/88; Tübingen: Mohr Siebeck, 1997); idem, "Mark," in Commentary on the New Testament Use of the Old Testament, ed. G. K. Beale and D. A. Carson (Grand Rapids: Baker Academic; Nottingham: Apollos, 2007) 111-249; N. T. Wright, The New Testament and the People of God (Minneapolis: Fortress, 1992); idem, Jesus and the Victory of God (Minneapolis: Fortress, 1996).

R. E. Watts

TRUST. See FAITH.

TWELVE, MISSION OF THE. See MISSION.

TWELVE, THE. See APOSTLE; DISCIPLES AND DISCIPLESHIP.

TWO-SOURCE HYPOTHESIS. See SYNOPTIC TRADITION.

TYPOLOGY

The NT makes several comparisons between various OT and NT events, individuals and institutions. These comparisons are often expressed, sometimes explicitly, in terms of typology and constitute major components of *Christology and ecclesiology. But typology offers more than comparisons between specific events and details; it establishes important links between and within the Testaments themselves. Typology therefore has played a significant role in the very formation of the biblical *canon. By means of typology, as well as by means of prophetic fulfillment, the NT writers present Jesus and the church as the continuation and completion of the OT.

1. Terminology, Meaning and Context
2. Typology and First-Century Exegesis
3. Jesus in Typological Interpretation
4. Jesus' Disciples in Typological Interpretation

1. Terminology, Meaning and Context.

The biblical concept of typology is based upon the word typos, which literally means "impression," "mark" (Jn 20:25) or "image" (Acts 7:43) and metaphorically usually means "example" or "model" (1 Cor 10:6; Phil 3:17; 1 Thess 1:7; 2 Thess 3:9; 1 Tim 4:12; Tit 2:7 [cf. hypotypōsis in 1 Tim 1:16; 2 Tim 1:13]). The related word antitypos means "copy" or "counterpart" (Heb 9:24; 1 Pet 3:21). In his influential study of typology, R. Davidson distinguishes three basic meanings within the semantic range of the word typos: (1) the matrix (i.e., what leaves its impress, or Vorbild); (2) the impression (i.e., the result of the impress or blow, or Nachbild); and (3) the matrix (Vorbild) that is simultaneously an impression (Nachbild). The most elaborate emic view of typology is found in 1 Corinthians 10:1-13, in which Paul portrays the experience of the Israelites in the wilderness as a type of the current Christian experience. In 1 Corinthians 10:11 he emphatically declares that "these things happened to them to serve as an example, and they were written down to instruct us, on whom the ends of the ages have come." Paul's statement seems to indicate that the only function of the type is to point toward its antitype. Moreover, he understands Israel's past experience, which is subsequently "inscriptured," as a warning (cf. RSV) to the Christian community—that is, as an example that should not be imitated in the present. This further means that the correspondence between the past and the present is not absolute but rather includes both the elements of continuity and the elements of discontinuity.

The use of typology in the NT, however, is not limited to the presence of the term typos and its cognates. As a hermeneutical category, typology establishes a parallel or correspondence between a person, event or institution in the OT (the type) and another person, event or institution in the NT (the antitype), regardless of whether an author uses the typos terminology or provides an explicit link between the type and its antitype. Many NT passages presume the readers' familiarity with biblical narratives, which should enable them to detect the parallels between the types and the antitypes. Such correspondences are not unique to the NT. Within the OT itself typological comparisons are made. The exodus story becomes a type of salvation in Second Isaiah (Is 40:3-5; 43:16-24; 49:8-13); the wilderness rebellion (Ex 17:1-7; Num 20:1-13) is presented in Psalm 95:7-11 as an example of the *hardness of heart that Israel is to avoid; the garden of Eden functions as a type for Isaiah's portrayal of the new paradise (Is 11:6-9); and king David becomes the model for the expectations of the king who is to come in the future (Is 11:1; 55:3-4; Jer 23:5; Ezek 34:23-24; Amos 9:11).

Scholars generally agree that typology entails three basic components: (1) a correspondence between the type and its antitype; (2) a qualitative progression from the type to its antitype (Steigerung); and (3) the concept of salvation history. Where they disagree is the nature of the events that are related through typology. On the one side are scholars who presume the historicity of the OT and NT events and hold that the correspondence between the type and its antitype reveals God's sovereign plan in history. Scholars who hold this view typically believe that the primary purpose of the events recorded in the OT is to prefigure the events recorded in the NT. Since the purpose of the type is to point toward the antitype, the latter is perceived as a fulfillment or, in some cases, as a replacement of the former. On the other side are scholars who regard typology as a literary device used by early Christian interpreters to explain the significance of Jesus and the emergence of the early church. They do not deny that the NT authors presumed the historicity of the events that they related through typology, but they do not believe that the same view must be held by modern interpreters. Scholars in this group typically put more weight on the completion of revelation in the NT, which sheds light on the OT events retrospectively. While the first approach better corresponds to the perspectives of the NT authors, the second approach better reflects the perspectives and insights of modern and postmodern critical scholarship.

The discussion of the historicity of the types and their antitypes is further complicated by the fact that certain OT types, such as the *Son of David and the Suffering *Servant, are not historical personalities but rather are ideal or eschatological figures that have been modeled after specific individuals. In such cases the OT type has a dual character: it functions as an impression that is molded by the previous matrix, which is in turn capable of molding other things (a nachbildliches Vorbild, in Davidson's terminology).

2. Typology and First-Century Exegesis.

Because biblical exegesis in the early Jewish and Christian period was founded on the belief that Scripture contained the ever-relevant will of God, every effort was made to bring its teaching to bear upon the contemporary world and the concerns of the believing community. This effort lies behind all interpretive methods: allegorization, *midrash, pesher and typology. Allegorization discovers morals and theological symbols and truths from various details of Scripture; pesher seeks to unlock the prophetic mysteries hidden in Scripture by relating individual elements from biblical prophecies to the contemporary experience of the community; midrash seeks to make the Torah relevant to new circumstances and issues and to clarify obscurities and problems in Scripture. In contrast, typology represents the effort to relate scriptural events, persons and institutions to similar events, persons and institutions in the present (and the future) by underscoring their corresponding elements within a larger soteriological paradigm.

Despite their differences, there is significant overlap between these methods of interpretation. For example, to some extent all four involve a searching of Scripture (midrash); all four find symbolic meaning that transcends the letter of the text (allegory); all four recognize the presence of mystery and hidden truth within the text (pesher); and all four believe that to some extent the present and future are foreshadowed by biblical history (typology). To paraphrase B. Chilton, the real difference among these methods is less a matter of method than it is what Scripture is essentially taken to be (Chilton, 138).

Emphasis on the unity of Scripture and salvation history is the distinctive characteristic of typological interpretation. What God has done in the past (as presented in Scripture), God continues to do in the present (or will do in the future). Recent events or future events that are interpreted as salvific are frequently compared to major OT events of salvation. Such comparison does at least two things: (1) it lends credibility to the belief that the newer events are indeed part of the divine plan; and (2) it enables the interpreter to grasp more fully the theological significance of the newer events. Typological interpretation makes it possible for later communities of faith to discern the continuing activity of God in history.

Typological interpretation is not limited to the NT; it is also found in the writings of Philo (Leg. 3.102; Mos. 2.74-76, 141; Somm. 1.206) and *rabbinic literature. Just as Israel prevailed over Amalek as long as Moses was able to hold his hands high, so Israel has prospered when it has obeyed the law of Moses (Mek. Amalek §1 [on Ex 17:11]). The messianic age is often compared with the exodus, a comparison frequently developed by typological interpretation. For example, when the Messiah comes, manna will once again be provided in the wilderness (Mek. Vayassa §4 [on Ex 16:13] and §6 [on Ex 16:33]).

3. Jesus in Typological Interpretation.

While some typologies derive from Jesus himself, many of them are the results of theological reflections of the early church about the significance of Jesus.

3.1. Moses Typology. Correspondences between Jesus and Moses are recognizable in many Gospel passages. At Jesus' transfiguration the voice from heaven enjoins the disciples, "Hear him" (Mk 9:7 par.), an injunction that echoes Deuteronomy 18:15-18 and the promise that some day God will raise up a prophet like Moses. The point of the passage is that Jesus is this anticipated prophet (cf. Mk 8:28 par.; Lk 7:16). Unlike prophetic fulfillment, however, typology looks for broader points of comparison. Consequently, it comes as no surprise that the *transfiguration episode at many points parallels the Sinai theophany: "six days" (Mk 9:2; Ex 24:16); presence of *Moses (Mk 9:4; Ex 24:1-18); *mountain setting (Mk 9:2; Ex 24:12); three companions (Mk 9:2; Ex 24:9 [cf. Deut 19:15]); changed face (Mt 17:2; Lk 9:29 [cf. Mk 9:3]; Ex 34:29-30); cloud (Mk 9:7; Ex 24:15-16 [cf. 2 Macc 2:8]); heavenly voice (Mk 9:7; Ex 24:16); fear (Mk 9:6; Ex 34:30). The point of these parallels is that once again a major act of salvation is being revealed.

Elsewhere in the NT Jesus is explicitly identified as the awaited prophet like Moses (Acts 3:22-23; 7:37; cf. Jn 6:14-15; 7:40). Moses typology lies behind the infancy narrative in Matthew (Mt 2:13-20; cf. Ex

1:15—2:10 [see Birth of Jesus]), the *Sermon on the Mount (esp. Mt 5:1-48), the Fourth Evangelist's portrait of Jesus (Jn 1:14-17; 2:1-10; 3:14-15; 4:7-26; 6:25-65; 7:37-39; 10:1-18) and various *miracles, notably the feedings of the five thousand and the four thousand (Mk 6:35-44; 8:1-9 par.).

3.2. Elijah-Elisha Typology. In some Gospel passages the portrayal of Jesus as a prophet is enhanced through parallels with and allusions to the *Elijah-Elisha tradition. Jesus is the prophet whose requirements for *discipleship are more demanding than those of Elijah (Lk 9:61-62; 1 Kings 19:19-21), but who is also more compassionate and long-suffering (Lk 4:25-27; 9:52-56; 2 Kings 1:9-12). The Lukan portrait of the *ascension also reflects Elijah typology (Lk 24:51; Acts 1:9; 3:21; 2 Kings 2:1, 11). In reference to prophetic tradition in general, Jesus' anticipation of *death in Jerusalem (Mt 23:37 par.) reflects typological thinking.

3.3. Davidic Typology. The title *"Son of David," which is applied to Jesus throughout the Gospels, suggests that Jesus is like David. Davidic typology includes Jesus' Davidic descent (Mt 1:20; Lk 1:27; 2:4; Rom 1:3) and his royal prerogatives, which are especially emphasized in Matthew's infancy narrative: the *genealogy (Mt 1:1, 6, 17); the citation of Isaiah 7:14 (Mt 1:23), an oracle originally addressed to King Ahaz; the visit of the magi (Mt 2:2: "Where is he who was born king of the Jews?"); the citation of Micah 5:2, part of a larger oracle (Mic 5:2-6) that promised a king like David (Mt 2:6); and King Herod's interest and fear (Mt 2:3-18). The Davidic typology is also seen in Jesus' ministry. The blind man cries out to Jesus as "Son of David" (Mk 10:47-48). Jesus justifies his action and the action of his disciples by appeal to the action of David and his men (Mk 2:25-26). If David can violate a cultic *law (1 Sam 21:1-6), then surely can Jesus, who is greater than David (indeed, he is "Lord of the Sabbath" [Mk 2:28]). Finally, Jesus was hailed as Son of David when he entered Jerusalem (Mt 21:9) (see Triumphant Entry).

One of the most significant comparisons between Jesus and David is found in Mark 12:35-37 and its parallels. In this passage Jesus juxtaposes the Davidic descent of the Messiah with Psalm 110:1, in which David (the presumed author of the psalm) calls the Messiah (the presumed recipient of God's utterance) his "lord." The point that Jesus makes about David's son was meant to draw a comparison between himself and Israel's famous king and not simply to pose an exegetical riddle. It is likely that Jesus implied that although he is like David, in that he is "David's son," he is superior to David, in that he is "David's Lord" (cf. Mt 12:42 par., where Jesus declares that one [i.e., he himself] "greater than Solomon is here"). Jesus is not only David's son; he is his Lord. Behind this claim lies typological thinking. David is the type (of the Messiah), Jesus the antitype.

3.4. Son of Man Typology. It is commonly asserted that the *"Son of Man" sayings in the Gospels fall into two disparate categories: the Son of Man who identifies with and suffers for humanity, and the Son of Man who comes in *judgment (with the latter possibly authentic, and the former probably not). It is more likely, however, that these sayings form a typological unity founded on Daniel 7 (and not, as is often assumed, 1 En. 37—71 and 4 Ezra 13), and that they do indeed derive from Jesus. (There is little evidence that these sayings or the title "Son of Man" were of special interest to the early church, hence the likelihood that they derive from Jesus.) Jesus probably saw himself as the fulfillment of the prophesied Son of Man of Daniel 7, who stands with the saints and, after initial opposition and defeat, overcomes and receives the kingdom. Jesus' sayings about rejection, suffering and death (Mk 8:31; 9:31; 10:33; 14:21) (see Predictions of Jesus' Passion and Resurrection) reflect the first aspect (an aspect enriched by allusions to the Suffering Servant [see 3.4 below]), while the sayings that speak of vindication (Mk 9:9; 13:26; 14:62) reflect the second.

3.5. Servant Typology. Four times in Acts, where Isaianic and Davidic themes are combined, Jesus is called the "servant" (pais [Acts 3:13, 26; 4:27, 30]) (see Servant of Yahweh). Although in the Gospels Jesus is never so designated, servant typology nevertheless appears to be present. Four times Second Isaiah's Servant Songs are quoted and applied to Jesus: Jesus' *healing ministry fulfills Isaiah 53:4 (Mt 8:14-17). Jesus' injunctions to silence fulfill Isaiah 42:1-4 (Mt 12:15-21; cf. Is 53:7-8 in Acts 8:32-33). His impending arrest fulfills Isaiah 53:12 (Lk 22:37). Finally, the unbelief of the people fulfills Isaiah 53:1 (Jn 12:37-38). It is noteworthy that in every instance these Isaianic passages are cited as "fulfilled." There are also important Gospel allusions to the so-called Servant Songs: the righteous sufferer predicts his rejection and death (Mk 9:12; Is 53:3); when accused, he remains silent (Mk 14:60-61; Is 53:7; cf. Acts 8:32-33); he is beaten (Mk 14:65; Is 50:6); he intercedes for sinners (Lk 23:42-43; Is 53:11-12); he dies in the company of criminals (Mk 15:27; Is 53:9); his death is on behalf of many (Mk 10:45; 14:24; Is 53:11-12); and he is *buried in a rich man's tomb (Mt 27:57-60; Is 53:9).

3.6. Righteous Sufferer Typology. The function of the psalms of lament in the Gospels, especially in the passion narratives, reflects a righteous sufferer typology. Jesus is betrayed by his friends (Mk 14:18; Ps 41:9; 55:12-14). He is sorrowful (Mk 14:34; Ps 43:5). He is falsely accused (Mk 14:56 par.; Ps 27:12). Pilate washes his hands of Jesus' death (Mt 27:24; Ps 26:6). Jesus' clothes are divided among his enemies (Mk 15:24; Ps 22:18). He is mocked (Mk 15:29-31; Ps 22:7-8; 109:25). He thirsts (Jn 19:28; Ps 69:21). He is given vinegar to drink (Mk 15:36; Ps 69:21). He is abandoned by God (Mk 15:34; Ps 22:1). His friends do not stand by him (Lk 23:49; Ps 38:11), and in death he commits his soul to God (Lk 23:46; Ps 31:5). Allusions to the Servant Songs of Second Isaiah add further details to this typology (see 3.5 above) (see Death of Jesus).

3.7. Adam-Christ Typology. Luke's arrangement of Jesus' genealogy (Lk 3:23-38; cf. Mt 1:2-16) and its juxtaposition with the *temptation narrative (Lk 4:1-13) constitute an Adam-Christ typology. Unlike Paul's similar typology (Rom 5:12-21), with which the evangelist may or may not have been familiar, the point of comparison is not so much between the first and the second Adam, but between the first and the second son of God. According to Luke, Adam and Jesus were "sons of God" by virtue of their being directly created by God's Spirit (Gen 2:7; Lk 1:35) (see Holy Spirit). In order to heighten the comparison, Luke has his genealogy conclude (not begin) with "Adam, the son of God" (Lk 3:38). This conclusion contrasts deliberately with the opening challenge of the temptation narrative, "If you are the Son of God . . ." (Lk 4:3). Unlike the first son of God, who fell when tempted by Satan (see Demon, Devil, Satan), Jesus, the second Son of God, does not. Here again Jesus is presented in typological fashion as the antitype that parallels and in this case clearly transcends the type.

3.8. Jonah Typology. According to Matthew 12:39-41 (cf. Lk 11:16, 29-32), the only sign that was to be given to Jesus' generation was the "sign of Jonah": "For just as Jonah was in the belly of the great fish three days and three nights, so shall the Son of Man be in the heart of the earth three days and three nights" (Mt 12:40 [cf. Jon 1:17]) (see Sign of Jonah). The sign to which Jesus alludes is his death, burial and resurrection "on the third day" (see 1 Cor 15:4; cf. Mk 9:31; 10:34). There are two parts to this typological interpretation: (1) Jesus' death, burial and resurrection correspond to the experience of Jonah; (2) Jesus, like Jonah (Jon 3:4-5), calls for repentance. Again, Jesus understands himself not simply as being like Jonah but rather as "something greater than Jonah" (Mt 12:41). Because the people of Nineveh responded to Jonah's preaching, whose only sign was his remarkable deliverance from the great fish, the people of Jesus' generation are without excuse, for Jesus himself is greater than Jonah, and his attesting sign, resurrection from the dead, is also greater.

3.9. Rejected Stone Typology. Before the time of Jesus the stone idea had already taken on typological meaning. The "stone," laid by God, could be a stone of stumbling (Is 8:14) or a stone of faith (Is 28:16). The rejected stone of Psalm 118:22-23 was understood to be Israel, who, although rejected by the nations, would some day enjoy a favored place. Finally, Daniel 2:45, where the stone has a messianic nuance, describes the destruction of Israel's enemies. At the conclusion of his parable of the wicked tenants (Mk 12:1-9) Jesus quotes Psalm 118:22-23 ("The stone which the builders rejected has become the cornerstone") and applies it to himself (Mk 12:10-11). Assuming that the charge later brought against Jesus ("We heard him say, 'I will destroy this temple made with hands, and in three days I will build another not made with hands'" [Mk 14:58]) approximates something that Jesus actually said (cf. Jn 2:19), it is quite possible that Jesus thought of himself as the foundation of a new community of faith and worship. Luke's version of the "rejected stone" saying is unique ("Everyone who falls upon that stone will be broken; upon whomever it should fall, he will be crushed" [Lk 20:18]), probably reflecting parts of Daniel 2:45 and Isaiah 8:14, and adds an element of judgment. This typology is foundational to the early community's self-understanding (see 4 below).

3.10. High Priest Typology. Although by no means certain, the high *priest typology of Hebrews (see Heb 4-7) may derive in part from certain priestly prerogatives that Jesus had assumed. The most significant of these were his declarations of the *forgiveness of sins (Mk 2:5-10; Lk 7:48). Perhaps his cleansing pronouncements (Mk 1:41) (see Clean and Unclean), his action in the temple (Mk 11:15-17) (see Temple Act) and his intercessory *prayers (Lk 22:32: "Peter, I have prayed for you"; Lk 23:34: "Father, forgive them"), including the so-called high-priestly prayer (Jn 17:9, 20), also contributed to this later typology of Jesus as the ultimate high priest.

3.11. Sacrifice Typology. The sacrifice typology in Hebrews (see Heb 7-10) may have its roots in an early interpretation of the significance of Jesus' death, possibly an interpretation that derives from Jesus' anticipation and understanding of his death. If authentic, the statements found in Mark 10:45; 14:24 would support this notion. It has also been suggested that John 1:29 ("Behold, the Lamb of God, who takes away the sin of the world") may reflect Jewish tradition of the “the binding of Isaac” and the promise given to Abraham that God will provide a lamb (Gen 22:1-14) (see Lamb of God). Such a typology understands Jesus’ death as the ultimate sacrifice, which need never be repeated.

4. Jesus’ Disciples in Typological Interpretation.

4.1. The Twelve Tribes Typology. Jesus’ appointment of twelve apostles (Mk 3:14), clearly an allusion to the twelve tribes of Israel, in all probability symbolized reconstituted *Israel. The twelve *apostles will also function as Israel’s rulers in the kingdom (perhaps as new tribal patriarchs), “sitting on twelve thrones, judging the twelve tribes of Israel” (Mt 19:28 [cf. Lk 22:28-30; Ps 122:3-5; Dan 7:9]). Recognizing the importance of this symbolism, Luke does not neglect to tell us of the replacement of the betrayer (Acts 1:15-26). The Twelve also function as emissaries of their king in carrying out their *mission of evangelism (Mt 10:1-42; 28:18-20; Lk 24:45-49; Acts 1:6-8).

4.2. The New Covenant Typology. The idea of the new covenant in the Gospels reflects Passover traditions and the promise of the “new covenant” of Jeremiah 31:31-34. The new covenant is explicitly mentioned in the Lukan version of the Lord’s Supper: “This cup that is poured out for you is the new covenant in my blood” (Lk 22:20 [cf. 1 Cor 11:25]). Jewish haggadic tradition believed that the blood shed at the first Passover was the blood that established the covenant later proclaimed at Sinai (Tg. Zech. 9:11; Mek. Pisha §5 [on Ex 12:6]). Just as the blood of the lambs at the first Passover delivered Israel from judgment and made the old covenant possible, so too will the shed blood of Jesus deliver the people of God and establish the new covenant.

4.3. The Temple Typology. Jesus’ prophetic demonstration in the *temple (Mk 11:15-17 par.), his implicit criticism of and threat against the ruling priests (Mk 12:1-11; cf. Tg. Isa. 5:1-7), his explicit pronouncement of the temple’s impending destruction (Mk 13:2: “not one stone will be left upon another”), the accusation brought against Jesus at his trial before the Sanhedrin (Mk 14:58: “I will destroy this temple made with hands, and in three days I will build another not made with hands”), and his personal comparison with the temple (Mt 12:6: “Something greater than the temple is here” [cf. Jn 2:19-21]) form part of a spiritual temple typology. In these various statements one is given the impression that Jesus has replaced Jerusalem’s temple with himself and the community of those who believe in him (a similar idea is found in 4Q174 I, 6, which speaks of “a sanctuary of humans”). A later and more explicit expression of this typology is reflected in 1 Peter 2:4-8.

See also MIDRASH; OLD TESTAMENT IN THE GOSPELS.

BIBLIOGRAPHY. D. C. Allison Jr., The New Moses: A Matthean Typology (Minneapolis: Fortress, 1993); D. L. Baker, “Typology and the Christian Use of the Old Testament,” SJT 29 (1976) 137-57; B. D. Chilton, “Commenting on the Old Testament,” in It Is Written: Scripture Citing Scripture; Essays in Honour of Barnabas Lindars, ed. D. A. Carson and H. G. M. Williamson (Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 1988) 122-40; M. Daly-Denton, David in the Fourth Gospel: The Johannine Reception of the Psalms (AGJU 47; Leiden: E. J. Brill, 2000); R. M. Davidson, Typology in Scripture: A Study of Hermeneutical ΤΥΠΟΣ Structures (Berrien Springs, MI: Andrews University Press, 1981); J. W. Drane, “Typology,” EvQ 50 (1978) 195-210; R. A. Edwards, The Sign of Jonah in the Theology of the Evangelists and Q (SBT 18; London: SCM, 1971); L. Goppelt, Typos: The Typological Interpretation of the Old Testament in the New, trans. D. H. Madvig (Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1982); idem, “τύπος, κτλ.,” TDNT 8:246-59; P. M. Hoskins, Jesus as the Fulfillment of the Temple in the Gospel of John (PBM; Milton Keynes: Paternoster, 2006); G. P. Hugenerberger, “Introductory Notes on Typology,” in The Right Doctrine from the Wrong Texts? Essays on the Use of the Old Testament in the New, ed. G. K. Beale (Grand Rapids: Baker, 1994) 331-41; R. N. Longenecker, The Christology of Early Jewish Christianity (SBT 17; London: SCM, 1970); R. Ounsworth, Joshua Typology in the New Testament (WUNT 2/328; Tübingen: Mohr Siebeck, 2012); D. Patte, Early Jewish Hermeneutic in Palestine (SBLDS 22; Missoula, MT: Scholars Press, 1975) 159-67. C. A. Evans and L. Novakovic

UNCLEAN. See CLEAN AND UNCLEAN.

UNPARDONABLE SIN. See FORGIVENESS.

UR-GOSPEL. See SYNOPTIC PROBLEM.

VINE, FRUIT OF THE. See WINE.

VIRGIN MARY. See MARY, MOTHER OF JESUS.

VIRGINAL CONCEPTION. See BIRTH OF JESUS.

VISIONS. See DREAMS AND VISIONS.

W, X, Y, Z

WATER

From earliest times hydōr (“water”) was used as an archetypal symbol associated with both biological and spiritual life. As an indispensable substance, especially in agrarian societies familiar with the effects of drought, hydōr was frequently used figuratively as a symbol for life or as an image for oracular speech. Regarding the later, for example, rabbinic texts spoke of wisdom, Torah, and teaching as water or a well (e.g., m. ’Abot 1:4, 2:8; Exod. Rab. 47:5). In the Gospels the term expresses cleansing and renewal, revelation, and life, especially as they are provided through Jesus Christ. The word hydōr occurs thirty-nine times in the Gospels, more than half of these occurring in the Gospel of John.

1. Synoptic Gospels
2. Gospel of John

1. Synoptic Gospels.

The eighteen occurrences of hydōr in the Synoptics depict water as a cleansing element: eleven times the term is merely referring to a body of water (e.g., Mt 8:32: the pigs went “into the lake and died in the water”) or to water as a liquid (e.g., Mk 9:41: “anyone who gives you a cup of water in my name”), and six times to Jewish or other symbolic purification (e.g. Mt 27:24: Pilate “took water and washed his hands before the crowd”).

The function of hydōr in the Synoptics is not as generic as it might first appear. For example, when hydōr is depicted as a body of water, it can be given a theologically unique manifestation. In Mark 4:35-41 the Sea of Galilee has been interpreted as powers hostile to God, even demonic powers, because the language Jesus uses parallels demonic encounters and the surrounding context (cf. the healing of the demoniac in Mk 5:1-20) (see Demon, Devil, Satan).

The term hydōr also serves to depict cleansing or purification in the Synoptics. The *baptism of John, for example, is described in Mark 1:4 as “a baptism of repentance for the forgiveness of sins.” Its placement early in the Gospel not only summarizes the ministry of John but also connects repentance and *forgiveness to the person whom John is announcing, Jesus Christ, who himself will baptize, not with water but with the Spirit (Mk 1:8; cf. Mt 3:6; Lk 3:3). The necessary connection between hydōr and the ritual washings of *Judaism facilitates a contrast between ritual purification and the purification established by Jesus (see Mk 7:1-23), which serves as a rebuke of external cleanliness and as the replacement of an internal cleanliness (Mt 15:11; Mk 7:14; Lk 11:39-41) (see Clean and Unclean).

2. Gospel of John.

It is in the Gospel of John that hydōr attains special significance. The archetypal symbolism of hydōr and the OT’s application of it as a comprehensive symbol of physical and spiritual life become a point of departure for John the evangelist, who deploys the image metaphorically to depict the work of God as mediated through the Son, who provides both revelation and the *Spirit. The water motif in John first occurs in John 1:26 as part of the baptism of John, where Jesus is noted to be the true baptizer (the title “Baptist” is never given to John in this Gospel), and his “water baptism” is a baptism “with the Holy Spirit” (Jn 1:33). Central to the combination of water with Spirit is the Spirit’s role as the agent of revelation, with water baptism serving as the context in which the revelation of Jesus is made known (Jn 1:33-34). In John 2:1-11 the transformation of the water to *wine is not a demotion of water but rather the utilization of its archetypal symbolism to describe the true purification, which Jesus supplies.

In John 3:1-36 hydōr and “spirit” are directly connected (Jn 3:5), though in a manner not entirely clear. Interpretation options include ritualistic (Jewish or Christian), physiological (e.g., relating to physical birth) or symbolic (e.g., often sacramental), with each giving different definition to the terms and therefore their relation. Central to this relation is the connection between hydōr and “spirit” in the OT, especially in Ezekiel 36:24-28, where a renewal and cleansing of Israel is depicted, including a cleaning with pure water from all uncleanness and the gift of a new heart and spirit: “I will put my Spirit in you” (Ezek 36:27). The juxtaposition of hydōr and “spirit” in John 3:5 is governed by an eschatological relationship. While hydōr stirs images of ritual and symbolic cleaning, “spirit” refers to eschatological fulfillment and the coming of the Spirit. The connection between hydōr and “spirit” is not without distinction, for the Spirit’s activity cannot be confined to water baptism (Jn 3:5-8).

In John 4:1-42 the hydōr that Jesus alone can provide is described as “living water” (Jn 4:10), available for the person who thirsts (Jn 4:13) and ultimately for all people (Jn 4:42). The dialogue between Jesus and the Samaritan woman is complex, offering a multilayered meaning of hydōr. What is clear is that the meaning of hydōr is determined by its connection to the giver; this is no ordinary water. In light of the traditional use of water imagery for divine wisdom and teaching, the source of this hydōr is the Messiah, who declares “all things” (Jn 4:25, 29). The hydōr that Jesus provides quenches thirst entirely; that is, it is the pouring of “eternal life” (Jn 4:14). Ultimately, Jesus is the “well” from which true hydōr is drawn (Jn 4:15), a fulfillment and expansion of the water that even Jacob’s well could not provide. An interesting development occurs in John 7:37-39, especially in relation to John 4. While the hydōr and Spirit are described in terms of fulfillment in John 4, in John 7:37-39 the same connection is described in terms of anticipation. The water motif, however, is less explicit and more implicit, for it is established as part of the context of the Feast of Tabernacles (see Feasts), with its daily water pouring ceremony, made emphatic with Jesus’ offer of an eschatological drink. Jesus declares for a second time that he is the one who provides “living water,” which he implants in those who come to him, those who know that their thirst can be quenched only by the hydōr that he gives (Jn 7:37-38). This depiction of hydōr is the climax of the narrative development of water symbolism in this Gospel, declaring that one prime meaning of the symbol is “the Spirit,” an eschatological gift to be given at the glorification of Jesus (Jn 7:39).

The depiction of hydōr in John’s Gospel is not always so direct; several occurrences of the term are significant even if only implied in a subtle fashion. For example, in John 5:1-15 it is possible to interpret an intentional contrast between the magical waters of healing beside which the lame man hopes for healing and the healing that Jesus offers: “Do you want to become well?” (Jn 5:6). And in light of the explicit significance of hydōr, significance can be attributed to the cleaning of the disciples’ feet by Jesus (Jn 13:5) and the water (and blood) that flows from Jesus’ crucified body (Jn 19:34). With the symbolism of hydōr so deeply articulated by the narrative thus far, these subtle occurrences serve only to impress further the connection between water and Jesus. Ironically, the hydōr that Jesus will ultimately use to cleanse his disciples (Jn 13) will come directly from him, and the “living water” that Jesus provides can be given only by means of his *death. The proof of his death was simultaneously the proof of true life (Jn 19).

The Gospels creatively employ the archetypal symbolism of hydōr, biological and spiritual realities, and all of its OT meanings and allusions in order to articulate how all those symbolisms and meanings are needed to make sense of the work and person of Jesus Christ. By virtue of the eschatological role of the Holy Spirit, the symbol of hydōr is associated with true life and salvific blessings: rebirth, purification, *joy, satisfaction analogous to quenching of thirst, and eternal life.

See also BAPTISM; HOLY SPIRIT; LIFE, ETERNAL LIFE.

BIBLIOGRAPHY. O. Böcher, “Water,” NIDNTT 9:988-91; S. B. Bryan, “Power in the Pool: The Healing of the Man at Bethesda and Jesus’ Violation of the Sabbath (Jn. 5:1-18),” TynBul 54 (2003) 7-22; G. M. Burge, “Revisiting the Johannine Water Motif: Jesus, Ritual Purification and Two Great Pools in Jerusalem,” in New Testament Theology in Light of the Church’s Mission: Essays in Honor of I. Howard Marshall, ed. J. C. Laansma, G. Osborne and R. Van Neste (Eugene, OR: Cascade, 2011); J. D. G. Dunn, Baptism in the Holy Spirit (SBT 2/15; London: SCM Press, 1970); L. Goppelt, “ὕδωρ,” TDNT 8:314-33; L. P. Jones, The Symbol of Water in the Gospel of John (JSNTSupS 145; Sheffield: Sheffield Academic Press, 1997); C. S. Keener, The Gospel of John: A Commentary (Peabody, MA: Hendrickson, 2003); C. R. Koester, Symbolism in the Fourth Gospel: Meaning, Mystery, Community (2nd ed.; Minneapolis: Fortress, 2003); W. Ng, Water Symbolism in John: An Eschatological Interpretation (SBL 15; New York: Peter Lang, 2001).

E. W. Klink III

WAY, THE. See DISCIPLES AND DISCIPLESHIP.

WILDERNESS. See MOUNTAIN AND WILDERNESS.

WINE

Wine was an important drink in the ancient world and features significantly in the teaching of Jesus. In the ancient world, including first-century Palestine, three kinds of wine made from grapes were in use: (1) fermented wine (oinos [e.g., Eph 5:18], which usually was mixed in the proportion of two or three parts of water to one part of wine [b. Pesah. 108b]); (2) new wine (oinos neos [e.g., Mt 9:17; Mk 2:22; Lk 5:37-38; cf. Hos 9:2; Hag 1:11; Zech 9:17], the normal drink of the Qumran community [1QS VI, 4-6; 1Q28a II, 17-18, 20; 1QHA X, 24]), which was wine from the most recent harvest, made of unfermented grape juice (see also the reference to gleukos, ["sweet wine"] in Acts 2:13; however, note that both wine and new wine were fermented grape juice with alcoholic content and thus able to cause intoxication); and (3) wine in which the process of fermentation had been stopped by boiling the unfermented grape juice ("must" or unfermented grape juice). Wine was also, but less frequently, made from pomegranates (Song 8:2) and raisins (b. B.Bat. 97b), as well as with apples, dates, honey, herbs and figs.

1. Old Testament Background
2. Wine in the Gospels
3. Conclusion

1. Old Testament Background.

In the OT, wine (Heb yayin) is portrayed as both an emblem of divine blessing (Gen 27:28, 37; Deut 7:13; Judg 9:13; Ps 104:15; Prov 3:10; Song 7:9; Is 55:1; 65:8; Joel 3:18; Zech 9:17) and in conjunction with violence, corruption and wickedness incurring God's wrath (Deut 32:32-33; Ps 60:3; 75:8; Prov 4:17; 23:29-35; Is 5:22; 16:8-10; 51:17; Jer 25:15; Hos 7:5; 9:2; Hag 2:16). Similarly, the imagery of the wine press is used both to signify abundance and bounty, often connected with God's blessing (Deut 15:14; Joel 2:24; Amos 9:13), and as an image of God's wrath and punishment whereby God or his agent would tread the winepress, often visually resulting in the staining of the treader's garments with blood (Is 63:1-6; Lam 1:15; Joel 3:13; Rev 14:14-20; 19:11-15). Wine and "strong drink" (šēkār, a fermented beverage made from barley and similar to beer) often appear together and are warned against or forbidden (Lev 10:9; Num 6:3; Deut 29:6; Judg 13:4, 7, 14; 1 Sam 1:15; Prov 20:1; 31:4, 6; Is 5:11, 22; 24:9; 28:7; 29:9; 56:12; Mic 2:11; cf. Lk 1:15). Priests were not to drink wine when serving in the temple (Lev 10:9; Ezek 44:21). The OT clearly portrays the negative results of drunkenness, with its accompanying addiction and poverty (Gen 9:20-23; Job 12:25; Ps 107:27; Prov 20:1; 21:17; 23:20-21, 29-35; 31:4-7; Is 5:11-12, 22; 19:14; 24:20; 28:7-8; 29:9; Jer 25:27; 48:26; 51:39, 57; Hos 4:11; Hab 2:5, 15; Sir 19:1-2; 31:29-30; 1 Esd 3:17b-24). Wine was not the normal table beverage during OT times. It seems rather to have been reserved for special occasions (e.g., Gen 27:25). Wine is regularly associated with feasting and celebration (Job 1:4; Esther 1:7-9; Is 25:6; Dan 5:1; cf. Is 22:13). Prophetic and apocalyptic banquet imagery anticipates the end-time messianic banquet that Jesus mentioned in his teaching (Is 25:6; 65:13; cf. Mt 8:11; 26:29; Mk 14:25; Lk 13:29-30).

2. Wine in the Gospels.

2.1. Wine Imagery and References in Jesus' Teachings. According to the Synoptic Gospels, Jesus used wine to illustrate the nature of the *kingdom of God, which he came to inaugurate, referring to the practice of putting new wine into new wineskins (Mt 9:17; Mk 2:22; Lk 5:37-38). "And no one puts new wine [oinos neos] into old wineskins lest the wine burst the wineskins and the wine and the wineskins be destroyed. But new wine is for new wineskins" (Mk 2:22). During wine production new wine was placed into tanned goatskins and sealed (1 Sam 1:24; 10:3; 16:20; 25:18; 2 Sam 16:1; Job 32:18-19). Fermentation required two to four months, during which time the wine expanded the goatskin by releasing carbon dioxide. If old wineskins were reused with new unfermented wine, the further expansion caused by the release of additional carbon dioxide would burst the wineskins. The wineskin illustration, along with the example of the new cloth on the old garment (Mt 9:16; Mk 2:21; Lk 5:36), indicates a degree of discontinuity between *Judaism and Christianity. According to Matthew and Mark, Jesus understood himself as introducing a "new" message ("new wine") that would not completely match or be contained by Judaism as it was understood and practiced at the time. Luke presents the matter from a different perspective, the new piece of cloth, which is torn and does not match the old, while cohering with Matthew and Mark on their major point, that the new and the old are incompatible (Bock, 519).

Matthew 23:24 contains a cryptic statement by Jesus describing the activity and priorities of the Pharisees. He calls them "blind guides, straining out a gnat and swallowing a camel." This refers to the practice of straining out the lees and other foreign matter from wine that had been allowed to mature on the lees (cf. Is 25:6; m. Šabb. 20:1-2). The Pharisees meticulously attended to the minutia of tithing while neglecting "the more important matters of the law: justice, mercy, and faithfulness" (Mt 23:23). The blatant hyperbole of Jesus' statement highlights the absurdity of the Pharisees' misplaced priorities and exposes their *hypocrisy.

Although Jesus is remembered to have regularly drunk wine (see 2.2 below), he clearly endorsed the OT's negative attitude toward drunkenness. In Luke 21:34 Jesus warns the people, "But watch yourselves lest your hearts be weighed down with dissipation [unrestrained behavior when drunk] and drunkenness and the cares of daily life, and that day come upon you suddenly as a trap." The connection of drunkenness with unpreparedness for the day of the Lord is reinforced in the parable contrasting the wise and the wicked servant (Mt 24:45-51 // Lk 12:42-48). A servant who should have been industrious in the fulfillment of the master's commands in preparation for his return and instead treats the other servants harshly and eats and drinks with drunkards (Mt 24:48) and gets drunk (Lk 12:45) will experience severe punishment (Mt 24:51; Lk 12:46). The drunkard is in danger of eschatological punishment ("In that place there will be crying and gnashing of teeth" [Mt 24:51]).

When instituting the Lord's Supper, Jesus used bread and wine as emblems of his body and blood (referring to wine as "the fruit of the vine," genēma tēs ampelou [Mt 26:29; Mk 14:25; cf. Is 32:12]). The phrase "bread and wine" is found repeatedly in the OT (Gen 14:18; Deut 29:6; Judg 19:19; Neh 5:15). The *Last Supper almost certainly was a Passover meal, which by Jesus' time included the use of wine. Wine, which typically was red, was also called "the blood of the grape" (Gen 49:11; Deut 32:14; cf. Sir 39:26; 50:15); thus, the symbolism employed by Jesus lay close at hand. The wine symbolized Jesus' blood "of the covenant which is poured out for many for the forgiveness of sins" (Mt 26:28 [the "new covenant in my blood" in Lk 22:20]). Closely attached to Jesus' interpretation of the symbolism of the wine with reference to his blood in each of the Synoptics is his statement that he would not drink of the fruit of the vine again until the kingdom of God comes (Mt 26:29; Mk 14:25; Lk 22:18), thus indicating a postresurrection messianic banquet.

The notion of the end-time messianic banquet is invoked both in John's account of Jesus' changing of water into wine at Cana and in the Synoptics' account of Jesus' words at the Last Supper regarding a future time at which he would eat and drink wine with his disciples in his kingdom. Banquet imagery was commonly associated with the coming time of messianic blessing (Is 25:6-8; 65:13; 1 En. 62:14; 2 En. 42:5; 2 Bar. 29:8). The identification of the future kingdom of God with a wedding feast also appears frequently in Jesus' *parables (Mt 9:14-15 // Mk 2:18-20 // Lk 5:33-35; Mt 22:1-14 // Lk 14:15-24; Mt 25:1-13; cf. Lk 12:36) and in his other teaching (Mt 8:11; Lk 13:29-30). Jesus told his followers, "And I say to you that many from the east and west will come and will recline to eat with Abraham, and Isaac, and Jacob in the kingdom of heaven" (Mt 8:11). In addition to teaching concerning the future coming of the kingdom of God using banquet imagery, Jesus described his disciples as wedding guests, with himself as the bridegroom (Mt 9:15; Mk 2:19; Lk 5:34), thereby implying the "already" nature of the future messianic banquet in his presence and activity (cf. the turning of water into wine). "And Jesus said to them, 'Can the wedding guests fast while the bridegroom is with them? As long as they have the bridegroom with them, they cannot fast. The days will come when the bridegroom is taken away from them, and then they will fast in that day'" (Mk 2:19-20 ESV). According to these texts, Jesus also indicated awareness that there would be a delay before the final consummation, when the bridegroom would not be present and his disciples would fast.

2.2. Other References to Wine in the Gospels.

According to Luke's Gospel, *John the Baptist did not partake of wine (oinos) or other fermented drink (sikera [beer made from barley]) (Lk 1:15; 7:33). John's complete abstinence may have been due to his being a Nazirite, but in any case, it certainly was tied to the angel's instructions to his father Zechariah: "For he will be great before the Lord, and must not drink wine or strong drink" (Lk 1:15). Nazirite vows involved abstinence from wine and strong drink (Num 6:1-4; Judg 13:4-5, 7, 14; cf. Amos 2:11-12; other biblical examples of complete abstinence for specific reasons include Daniel in Dan 1:8-16, probably because it was connected to the pagan cult or in violation of Jewish dietary laws, and the Rechabites in Jer 35:1-19 as part of their rejection of urban culture). The complete abstinence from wine exemplified by John the Baptist, Daniel and the Rechabites represents exceptions to the biblical and cultural norms of the day. John the Baptist's lifestyle in regard to eating and wine consumption led some to believe that he was *demon possessed (Lk 7:33; Mt 11:18). In stark contrast to John the Baptist's portrayal in Matthew and Luke, Jesus, the *Son of Man, "came eating and drinking" and was promptly accused of being "a glutton and a drunkard" (Mt 11:19; Lk 7:34). This shows that Jesus was known to have drunk wine regularly while associating with his contemporaries (see Table Fellowship).

John's Gospel records Jesus' turning a large quantity of water into wine at a family wedding in Cana of Galilee (Jn 2:1-11; cf. Jn 4:46), this being Jesus' first of a series of messianic signs selected by John for inclusion in his Gospel. In conjunction with Jesus' messianic ministry, his miracle performed at a Jewish wedding signifies that Jesus is the messianic bridegroom, with John the Baptist serving as the "friend of the bridegroom" (Jn 3:29). John's evaluation of the state of first-century Judaism (note the empty stone jars used by the Jews for ceremonial washing mentioned in Jn 2:6) is contrasted with the fullness and abundance of life and joy brought by Jesus the Messiah (cf. Jn 10:10). This is further underscored by both the quantity (Jn 2:6) and the quality (Jn 2:10) of the wine provided by Jesus. Each of the six jars would have held between sixteen and twenty-four gallons (for a total of about one hundred to 150 gallons), and the wine therein was of noticeably higher quality (Jn 2:10). Abundance of wine often was used as a motif to symbolize the age of salvation (Jer 31:12; Joel 3:18; Amos 9:13-14; 2 Bar. 29:5; Sib. Or. 2.317-318; 3.620-623; 744-749) and the coming of the Messiah (Gen 49:11-12).

Wine appears twice in the crucifixion narratives: wine mixed with myrrh (Mk 15:23 [or, in Mt 27:34, with gall, a bittering agent]) at the beginning of the crucifixion, and sour wine right before Jesus died (Mt 27:48; Mk 15:36; Lk 23:36; cf. Jn 19:29-30). The wine mixed with myrrh is commonly understood to have been an analgesic: a humane gesture offered to ease his pain but that Jesus rejected in order to maintain full consciousness until the end (cf. Prov 31:6; b. Sanh. 43a). The medicinal value of wine is affirmed in the NT (Lk 10:34; 1 Tim 5:23; cf. b. B.Bat. 58b). For example, Luke 10:34 describes a Samaritan pouring oil and wine on the wounds of a beaten man. It is more likely, however, that at the crucifixion the myrrh functioned to make the wine undrinkable (note the interpretation of the myrrh by Matthew as gall, an agent added to make the wine bitter [see Koskeniemi, Nisula and Toppari]). According to this reading, the offer of such wine indicates an attempt to intensify the torture of crucifixion.

In addition to the bitter wine mixed with myrrh offered to Jesus at the beginning of the crucifixion, he was given cheap sour wine (oxos [i.e., vinegar]) right before he uttered his final words (Mt 27:48; Mk 15:36; Lk 23:36; cf. Jn 19:29-30). John interprets this wine as a fulfillment of Scripture (Jn 19:28), most likely Psalm 69:21, which reads, "They gave me poison for food, and for my thirst they gave me sour wine [hōmes] to drink" (ESV [in this verse the LXX translates hōmes with oxos]).

3. Conclusion.

In the OT, wine is portrayed both as connoting divine blessing and in conjunction with wickedness incurring God's wrath. Warnings are regularly issued against indulging in "wine and strong drink"; priests were not to drink wine when serving in the *temple; and OT texts pervasively note the negative results of drunkenness, with its accompanying addiction and poverty. At the same time, wine is regularly associated with feasting and celebration, and banquet imagery anticipates the end-time messianic banquet.

According to the Gospels, Jesus was known to have drunk wine regularly while associating with his contemporaries (in contrast to John the Baptist). The Gospel of John recounts an occasion when Jesus turned water into wine at the wedding of Cana. The Synoptics depict Jesus as using bread and wine when instituting a new covenant with his disciples, envisioning a future time at which he would drink wine again with his followers in his kingdom. In this, wine serves as an emblem of divine blessing and messianic *joy.

See also LAST SUPPER; TABLE FELLOWSHIP.

BIBLIOGRAPHY. B. L. Bandstra, "Wine," ISBE 4.1068-72; D. L. Bock, Luke 1:1-9:50 (BECNT; Grand Rapids: Baker, 1994); W. Ewing, "Wine," in A Dictionary of Christ and the Gospels, ed. J. Hastings (2 vols.; Edinburgh: T & T Clark, 1913) 2:824; E. Koskeniemi, K. Nisula and J. Toppari, "Wine Mixed with Myrrh (Mark 15.23) and Crurifragium (John 19.31-32): Two Details of the Passion Narratives," JSNT 27 (2005) 379-91; A. J. Köstenberger, "The Last Supper as Passover Meal?" in The Lord's Supper: Remembering and Proclaiming Christ Until He Comes, ed. T. R. Schreiner and M. R. Crawford (NACSBT 10; Nashville: B & H Academic, 2011) 1-25; J. P. Louw and E. A. Nida, eds., Greek-English Lexicon of the New Testament Based on Semantic Domains (2 vols.; New York: United Bible Societies, 1988) 1:77-78; P. E. McGovern, Ancient Wine: The Search for the Origins of Viniculture (Princeton, NJ: Princeton University Press, 2007); J. P. Ross, "Wine," IDB 4:849-52; J. Schwartz, "Treading the Grapes of Wrath: The Wine Press in Ancient Jewish and Christian Tradition," TZ 49 (1993) 215-28, 311-24; C. Seltman, Wine in the Ancient World (London: Routledge, 1957).

A. J. Köstenberger

WISDOM

In biblical thought "wisdom" has a wide range of meaning. "Wisdom" can refer simply to the practical skills and qualities humans acquire in order to live successfully, and it also can refer to God's knowledge and creative power that transcend human scrutiny, or even to the personified or hypostatized figure of divine Wisdom. Given this range of meaning, it is difficult to give a comprehensive definition of “wisdom.”

Neither the OT nor Second Temple Judaism presents a homogeneous wisdom tradition. Instead, we can distinguish four strands of wisdom tradition in Second Temple Judaism, which are rooted in the OT: (1) the tradition in which wisdom is identified with the *law (Sirach, Baruch, rabbinic literature); (2) the tradition that closely relates wisdom and Spirit (Wisdom of Solomon, Philo, Joseph and Aseneth); (3) the apocalyptic tradition where an interpreting *angel mediates revelatory wisdom about eschatological events to a visionary (1 Enoch, 4 Ezra, 2 Baruch); and (4) the sapiential writings of the Qumran community wherein wisdom is closely associated with the law, Spirit and *apocalypticism (Bennema 2001). Despite its broad range of meaning in Second Temple Judaism, “wisdom” generally appears to be a soteriological category, in that it is a circumlocution for God’s wise and saving activity in the world through the communication of revelatory saving wisdom to people. The Gospels draw on these traditions with varying emphases in their presentations of Jesus.

1. The Double Tradition (Q)
2. Matthew
3. John
4. Conclusion

1. The Double Tradition (Q).

Most of Jesus’ wisdom sayings and the wisdom motifs applied to him in the Synoptic Gospels occur in the material shared by Matthew and Luke (the so-called double tradition or *Q) (see Synoptic Problem). It is now generally agreed that the shift from the presentation of Jesus as a wisdom teacher to the presentation of Jesus as the final and most important messenger for the Wisdom of *God had already been made in the double tradition. According to this view, a further development in the Synoptic tradition to an explicit wisdom *Christology occurs in Matthew, where Jesus is identified in some sense with divine Wisdom itself (Suggs; Robinson; Dunn; Burnett; for wisdom and the historical Jesus, see Witherington 1994). Although Luke and Mark present wisdom sayings of Jesus, they show no interest in a wisdom Christology—that is, in presenting the significance of Jesus and his status as the Christ in terms of divine Sophia (Wisdom).

The double tradition contains a number of aphoristic wisdom sayings of Jesus that do not necessarily distinguish him from any other Jewish wisdom teacher (e.g., Mt 12:33b = Lk 6:44). This is not surprising, since it is not crucial in Second Temple Judaism that such aphorisms be attached to any particular context, person or message. For Gospel studies, therefore, the contexts of such aphorisms in the double tradition become the crucial concern because they alone indicate how early Christians related Jesus to wisdom emphases. There are at least five crucial wisdom passages in the double tradition using the words sophia (“wisdom”) or sophos (“wise” or “wise one”).

1.1. The Wisdom of Solomon (Mt 12:42 = Lk 11:31). This saying refers directly to “the wisdom of Solomon” with the ambiguous assertion “See, here is something greater than Solomon.” The emphasis in both Matthew and Luke is on the judgment of “this generation” in connection with the preaching of Jonah (Mt 12:41 = Lk 11:32) (see Sign of Jonah) and the wisdom of Solomon. The “something greater” than the preaching of Jonah and the wisdom of Solomon, then, seems to be Jesus’ message. In this context Jesus is a messenger who proclaims God’s wisdom with eschatological urgency to “this generation.”

1.2. Wisdom Vindicated (Mt 11:16–19 = Lk 7:31–35). This passage is also concerned with “this generation,” but it emphasizes that *John the Baptist and Jesus (= the *Son of Man) have come to it as messengers of wisdom (sophia). The ending of the pericope in Luke, “And wisdom [sophia] is vindicated by all her children,” usually is considered to be earlier than Matthew’s ending. Sophia is personified as having *children who come proclaiming her message.

Wisdom was personified already in the OT. She calls out and pleads with humans to heed her message (Prov 8:1–9:2). Wisdom also sends out messengers to issue her call (Prov 9:3–6). As this tradition developed in Second Temple Judaism, it could finally be claimed that “in every generation she [Wisdom] passes into holy souls and makes them friends of God and prophets” (Wis 7:27 NRSV).

If the word “all” in Luke 7:35 (cf. Mt 11:19) was present in the double tradition that Luke adopted, then the implication would be that all who respond to Wisdom’s call are her children. “All,” however, seems to be a Lukan addition (cf. Lk 7:29), in which case the focus of the double tradition is on John and Jesus as the culmination of all of Wisdom’s messengers (cf. Mt 11:12–15; Lk 16:16).

1.3. Wisdom’s Envoys (Mt 23:34–36 = Lk 11:49–51). Luke 11:49 is regarded as the earlier form of this saying (“Therefore also the Wisdom of God said, ‘I will send them prophets and apostles, some of whom they will kill and persecute . . .” [NRSV]) (see 2.2 below). The saying seems to be a quotation attributed to personified Wisdom. The emphasis on Wisdom sending messengers (“prophets and apostles”) is present again, but the motif of their rejection is strongly emphasized. The implication of this double-tradition passage is clear: God’s judgment for the rejection of the entire line of Sophia’s envoys culminates with Jesus’ message to “this generation.”

1.4. Wisdom’s Spokesperson (Mt 23:37–39 = Lk 13:34–35). In this case, Matthew has Jesus’ lament over Jerusalem linked with the emphasis on the fate of all the messengers sent to Israel (Mt 23:34–36 = Lk 11:49–51), while Luke has the lament linked explicitly to Jesus’ *death as another of the rejected prophets (Lk 13:33). It is difficult to know, then, whether Matthew or Luke has preserved the order of the double tradition. Has Matthew combined the sayings (Mt 23:34–36, 37–39), or has Luke separated them (= Luke 11:49–51; 13:34–35)? An understanding of the context would help us determine the identity of the speaker, whether it be Wisdom, Jesus on behalf of Wisdom, or Jesus as Wisdom itself.

In this passage from the double tradition the emphasis seems to be on the rejection of Wisdom’s messengers (Mt 23:37a = Lk 13:34a) and on Jesus as the final messenger of Wisdom (“You will surely not see me until . . . the one who comes in the name of the Lord” [Mt 23:39 = Lk 13:35]). Since no explicit identification is made between Jesus and the figure of Sophia, it seems reasonable to conclude that the same emphasis already seen in other passages in the double tradition is found also in this one: Jesus is the final spokesperson who has attempted to reveal Wisdom’s message to humanity.

1.5. Wisdom’s Revealer (Mt 11:25–27 = Lk 10:21–22). This passage from the double tradition seems to emphasize wisdom motifs different from the passages examined so far. First, Jesus as God’s Son seems to be the only recipient and mediator of God’s wisdom (e.g., “All things have been handed over to me by my Father . . .” [NRSV]). Second, it is implied either that God has hidden his Wisdom from Israel because of their unbelief or that Wisdom is unattainable by Israel without the Son’s mediation (e.g., “You have hidden these things from the wise and the intelligent . . .” [NRSV]).

Although this is a difficult passage to interpret, it is clear that stress is placed on the filial relationship between God and Jesus, and the passage implies that the wisdom that only God knows fully is revealed as a gift (cf. Job 28:12–28; Bar 3:15–4:1; Sir 1:10; Wis 8:21). At the very least, this passage seems to focus on (1) the recipients of God’s wisdom (i.e., Jesus and those to whom he reveals it) rather than on those who have rejected wisdom, and (2) Jesus’ function as the revealer of God’s wisdom. These emphases are not incompatible with the other texts from the double tradition, though admittedly they are enhanced only here (see 2.3 below).

1.6. Summary. The wisdom passages of the double tradition emphasize Jesus’ message rather than the relation of Jesus to divine Wisdom. Jesus is presented as the culmination of a long line of messengers to Israel whose message of God’s wisdom has been rejected. The christological aspects of the double tradition emphasize both Jesus as the final-but-rejected spokesperson for Wisdom and his filial relationship to God (see Son of God) in fulfilling this function. Jesus is not yet identified with Wisdom itself; this christological step is taken by Matthew.

2. Matthew.

Matthew’s presentation of Jesus in relation to wisdom motifs is seen primarily in the redaction of wisdom material from the double tradition. The most important passages are Matthew 11:2–19; 23:34–39; 11:25–30.

2.1. Jesus as Wisdom (Mt 11:2–19 [// Lk 7:18–35]). The setting of this passage is John the Baptist’s question concerning Jesus and Jesus’ testimony regarding John. Matthew introduces this section with a phrase that seems to be his: “the works of the Christ” (Mt 11:2; cf. Lk 7:18). Most interpreters of the double tradition regard Luke’s version of the wisdom saying at the conclusion of this section (wisdom is justified by “all her children” [Lk 7:35]) as earlier than Matthew’s (wisdom is justified by “her works” [Mt 11:19b]) (see 1.2 above). It appears that Matthew has framed the passage to equate the phrase “the works [erga] of the Christ” (Mt 11:2) with the phrase “wisdom is vindicated by her works [erga]” (Mt 11:19b). This change virtually identifies Jesus, “the Christ” (cf. Mt 1:1, 16, 17), with God’s divine Wisdom. If this is the case, then in Matthew Jesus is no longer just Wisdom’s messenger; he is Wisdom incarnate (Suggs; Deutsch).

2.2. Wisdom Speaks (Mt 23:34–39 [// Lk 11:49–51; 13:34–35]). Matthew’s redaction of the double tradition in order to equate Jesus with Wisdom is consistent with the differences between Matthew and Luke in this passage. We have already examined Jesus’ lament for Jerusalem in Matthew 23:37–39 (1.4 above), a passage following on Matthew’s larger context of Jesus’ woes on the *scribes and *Pharisees and, finally in Matthew 23:34–36, the sending of *prophets, sages and scribes who are killed and persecuted by *Israel's leaders.

If the parallel passage of Luke 11:49-51 (= Mt 23:34-36) represents the earlier form of the double tradition, as most interpreters believe, then Matthew has made several significant modifications. First, the phrase "the Wisdom of God said" (past tense) becomes in Matthew an emphatic first-person saying of Jesus in the present tense ("See! I am sending you prophets . . ."). A saying of Wisdom has become a saying of Jesus.

Second, although it is unclear whether Matthew is responsible for joining the tradition found in Matthew 23:37-39 (= Lk 13:34-35) with that of Matthew 23:34-36 (= Lk 11:49-51), a strong contextual argument can be made that he did. Matthew 23:37-39 in the double tradition is Jesus' lament about Jerusalem's rejection of his message. In order to express his pathos, Jesus uses the image of Wisdom-Shekinah ("God's presence") as a mother bird gathering its brood. In Matthew, however, Jesus has just been identified with Wisdom (Mt 23:34 = Lk 11:49), so that the lament over Jerusalem now reads as their rejection of Jesus as God's *incarnate Wisdom.

The rejection theme fits both the overall context of the woes (see Blessing and Woe) against the scribes and Pharisees (Mt 23) and Jesus' subsequent departure from the *temple (Mt 24:1). Matthew has also omitted the story of the widow's mite (cf. Mk 12:41-44 = Lk 21:1-4). This omission links Jerusalem's rejection of Jesus as Wisdom with Jesus' emphatic departure from the temple. In this way, the theme of rejection is enhanced in Matthew. Jerusalem's "house" (i.e., the temple) is "forsaken and desolate" (Mt 23:38 = Lk 13:35) because Jerusalem has rejected the very incarnation of Wisdom itself.

In so doing, Matthew seems to build on the motifs present in the Jewish wisdom tradition. In Sirach, Wisdom sought a dwelling place among all peoples, but God assigned her to dwell in the temple at Jerusalem (Sir 24:1-12). Elsewhere we find the emphasis that Wisdom was rejected and left desolate because of God's judgment of Jerusalem (Bar 4:12), or that she could find no place to dwell at all and returned to heaven (1 En. 42:1-2; cf. 4 Ezra 5:9-10). Although we cannot establish Matthew's direct literary dependence on these traditions, given Matthew's evident *redaction of the double tradition, it seems reasonable to suggest that Jesus is presented as Wisdom incarnate who is rejected by Israel and especially its leaders. Thus, he pronounces judgment on them (Mt 23:35-36, 38) and then withdraws his presence (Mt 23:39-24:1).

2.3. Wisdom Beckons (Mt 11:25-30). The double tradition has emphasized already that Jesus' function as the Son is to reveal God's wisdom (Mt 11:25-27 = Lk 10:21-22) (see 1.5 above). Matthew now links Matthew 11:25-27 with Matthew 11:28-30, so that Jesus not only reveals God's wisdom but also issues an invitation to take his yoke and learn from him. The language certainly alludes to the yoke of the law, but because Wisdom and Torah had already been identified in some traditions (Sir 24:23; Bar 3:37-4:1), Wisdom could also invite any who would do so to take her yoke and experience her rest (e.g., Sir 51:26-27).

In Matthew Jesus no longer only reveals Wisdom; his teaching is the total expression of God's revelation because he is Wisdom-Torah. The community of Jesus studies his words as God's revelation (cf. Mt 5:18; 24:35), and he, as the very presence of God's revelation (Mt 1:21-23), guides them (Mt 18:20; cf. m. 'Abot 3:3, 7; 6:10). Righteousness now consists of knowing and doing Jesus' teachings rather than the yoke of Torah (Mt 11:29-30) (see Justice, Righteousness; Law).

2.4. Summary. In the Synoptic tradition Matthew goes beyond both Second Temple *Judaism (in which wisdom is never incarnate as a human) and the double tradition (in which Jesus and John are both Wisdom's final messengers) by moving to a wisdom Christology in which Jesus is Wisdom incarnate. The Gospel of John takes a similar step but by different means and with different emphases.

3. John.

The opening verses of John's Gospel present Jesus as the incarnate divine cosmic logos ("Word") (Jn 1:1-18), and most scholars have recognized the wisdom background of the Johannine prologue. *Logos and Wisdom are virtually interchangeable concepts in both Philo (Dodd) and Wisdom of Solomon (Wis 9:1-2; 18:15). In the Jewish wisdom tradition God created Wisdom before all else, and she participates with God in creation (Prov 8:22-31; Sir 1:4, 9; 24:3-5, 9; Wis 9:1-2, 9). John goes beyond this tradition by emphasizing that the Logos was preexistent with God and was *God (Jn 1:1). As Wisdom and life are associated in the wisdom tradition (e.g., Prov 4:1-13; Wis 8:13, 17), so John emphasizes that life is in the Logos (Jn 1:4). The theme that Wisdom is the perfect reflection of God's *light (e.g., Wis 7:26) is in John too (Jn 1:4-5). John also alludes to Wisdom's descent from heaven (to find a dwelling place on earth), rejection and departure (see 1 En. 42:1-2; cf. Sir 24:8-12, 19-23). The prologue evokes the first stages when preexistent divine Wisdom-Logos descends to earth, becomes incarnate in the person of Jesus and experiences rejection (Jn 1:1-2, 9-11, 14). The final stage, Wisdom's departure, only unfolds in the rest of the Gospel as Jesus' return to the Father taking the path of the cross (Jn 3:13; 6:33, 62; 20:17; for a summary of the whole journey, see Jn 16:28).

John's presentation of Jesus as Wisdom incarnate is not limited to the Logos hymn of the prologue. Since the prologue sets the agenda for the rest of the Gospel, the reader can expect to see Jesus act as divine Wisdom throughout the Johannine narrative. Indeed, many scholars have recognized that John's wisdom Christology permeates the entire Gospel (Scott; Witherington 1995; Ringe; Willett; Bennema 2002).

3.1. The Identity and Mission of Wisdom Incarnate. Jesus has an intimate relationship with the Father (Jn 1:18), and his salvific mission is to reveal the identity and work of the Father and himself and also the nature of their relationship. He does this through his revelatory teaching, which contains life-giving truth/wisdom (Jn 3:31-36; 6:46-51; 8:19, 28, 31-32; 10:38; 12:44-50). The Jewish wisdom literature presents a similar picture, where Wisdom readily reveals herself to those who seek/desire her (Prov 1:23; 8:22-23; Wis 6:13; Sir 4:18; 24:1-4). Wisdom reveals God's intentions/purposes (Wis 9:13, 17), and she can do this because of her intimacy with God (Wis 8:4; 9:4, 9). For Philo, sophia is one of the intermediary figures that reveals God, and in the Qumran community wisdom, through its association with Torah, also had a revelatory function. As in John, teaching is Wisdom's main activity (Prov 1:23; 13:14; Wis 7:21; 9:17-18; Sir 4:11; 24:33).

3.2. The Invitation of Wisdom Incarnate and People's Responses. Jesus invites people to come to him—to "drink" from him and "feed" on him (e.g., Jn 4:10-14; 6:22-59; 7:37-39). People who encounter Jesus and his revelatory teaching must respond: accept or reject Jesus and his saving revelation. Acceptance of Jesus' revelation, usually expressed by the verb pisteuō ("to believe") (see Faith), brings one into an intimate, life-giving relationship with the Father and Son, while rejection results in death and *judgment. The Jewish wisdom literature also depicts Wisdom encountering and inviting people. Wisdom calls out to people and preaches in the streets in order that they may listen and accept her (Prov 1:20-33; 8:1-36); she invites people to her banquet to "consume" her life-giving revelatory teaching (Prov 9:1-6; Sir 24:19-21); she searches for and meets people who seek her (Wis 6:12-25). Wisdom possesses life, which she dispenses to people (Prov 3:16, 18; 4:13; 8:35; 10:11; 13:14; 16:22; Wis 8:13, 17; 15:3; Sir 1:20; 4:12; 21:13; 24:23-34; 39:6). Sapiential Judaism also knows the concept of soteriological dualism: one's destiny—life or death—depends on whether one accepts or rejects Wisdom's call (Prov 1:32-33; 8:35-36; 9:6). Although Jesus acts as Wisdom in his dealings with people, he also surpasses what Wisdom has to offer: alluding to Wisdom's offer in Sir 24:21, Jesus promises a once-for-all satisfaction of hunger and thirst to those who accept him and his teaching (Jn 6:35; cf. 4:14).

3.3. Disciples of Wisdom Incarnate. *Salvation, or divine life (zōē), is a broader concept in John than simply coming to Jesus and accepting him; it needs to be sustained by remaining with him in discipleship. John 6 clarifies this through the story of the sifting of disciples. Although a large number of disciples turn their backs on Jesus when they realize that his teaching is difficult and demanding, a smaller group affirms that it will stick with him (Jn 6:60-69). *Discipleship is in fact depicted as a journey. In his claim to be the way to life or even the way that is life itself (Jn 14:6), Jesus presents himself as the believers' travel companion, leading them on their life journey to the Father. The Jewish wisdom traditions also know the concept of discipleship and its various aspects. The concept of being a disciple of Wisdom is frequently alluded to (Prov 3:13-18; 4:5-9; 8:32-34; 9:1-6; Sir 4:11-18; 6:18-31; 14:20—15:10; 24:19-22; Wis 7:8-14; 8:2, 9, 16-18). Moreover, Sirach 46:6-10; 51:15 evoke the concept of following God and Wisdom. Wisdom saves and gives life to her disciples, to those who remain faithful to her (Prov 8:32-35; Wis 10:4, 9-10; Sir 4:11-18), but those who cease to follow Wisdom will perish (Prov 8:36; Wis 10:3; Sir 4:19). Wisdom is also presented as a divine travel companion on one's life journey to God, providing guidance, assistance, advice and life (Prov 1:20-33; 4:5-13; 8:1-36; Wis 6:12—9:18; Sir 4:11-18; 6:18-31; 39:1-11).

3.4. Wisdom and Spirit. Both in the Gospel of John and some Jewish wisdom literature Spirit and Wisdom are closely related (see Holy Spirit). Against the backdrop of Isaiah 11:2, John 1:32-34 probably alludes to Jesus' endowment with the Spirit of wisdom, knowledge and might. The implication is that the Spirit provides Jesus with revelatory wisdom and knowledge, which would naturally form the basis for his revelatory teaching (cf. Jn 3:34). Jesus' Spirit-imbued teaching provides life because it contains liberating wisdom (Jn 4:10, 14; 6:63, 68; 8:31-32) (Turner; Bennema 2002). Similarly, in some Jewish wisdom traditions the Spirit mediates wisdom (Sir 39:6; Wis 7:7; 9:17) and is occasionally closely associated with the figure of Wisdom (Wis 1:4-6; 7:22-23; cf. Philo).

3.5. Summary. John draws deeply from the general Jewish wisdom traditions in his presentation of Jesus, but he seems to show particular affinity with those sapiential writings that closely associate wisdom and Spirit. The strong wisdom emphases in the prologue are intended to apply to the entire Gospel's presentation of Jesus, as John makes very important christological points. In fact, John's presentation of Jesus as materially and quintessentially the unique Wisdom-Word of God is the strongest christological development of all the NT wisdom traditions.

4. Conclusion.

Although the double tradition (Q) presents Jesus as a wisdom teacher, Matthew and John present an explicit wisdom Christology. The difference between Matthew and John is that "in their . . . portrayal of Jesus as Wisdom incarnate, Matthew, with an emphasis on the Law, might have been more influenced by Torah-centred wisdom tradition, whereas John with his emphasis on the Spirit (in relation to Jesus) may reflect more of a possible influence of the Spirit-centred wisdom tradition" (Bennema 2001, 81).

See also CHRISTOLOGY; GOD; INCARNATION; LAW; LOGOS; OLD TESTAMENT IN THE GOSPELS.

BIBLIOGRAPHY. C. Bennema, "The Strands of Wisdom Tradition in Intertestamental Judaism: Origins, Development and Characteristics," TynBul 51 (2001) 61-82; idem, The Power of Saving Wisdom: An Investigation of Spirit and Wisdom in Relation to the Soteriology of the Fourth Gospel (WUNT 2/148; Tübingen: Mohr Siebeck, 2002); F. W. Burnett, The Testament of Jesus-Sophia: A Redaction-Critical Study of the Eschatological Discourse in Matthew (Lanham, MD: University Press of America, 1981); C. E. Carlston, "Proverbs, Maxims, and the Historical Jesus," JBL 99 (1980) 87-105; C. M. Deutsch, Lady Wisdom, Jesus, and the Sages: Metaphor and Social Context in Matthew's Gospel (Valley Forge, PA: Trinity Press International, 1996); C. H. Dodd, The Interpretation of the Fourth Gospel (Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 1953); J. D. G. Dunn, Christology in the Making: A New Testament Inquiry into the Origins of the Doctrine of the Incarnation (2nd ed.; London: SCM, 1989); F. T. Gench, Wisdom in the Christology of Matthew (Lanham, MD: University Press of America, 1997); R. A. Piper, Wisdom in the Q-Tradition: The Aphoristic Teaching of Jesus (SNTSMS 61; Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 1989); S. H. Ringe, Wisdom's Friends: Community and Christology in the Fourth Gospel (Louisville: Westminster John Knox, 1999); J. M. Robinson, "Jesus as Sophos and Sophia: Wisdom Tradition and the Gospels," in Aspects of Wisdom in Judaism and Early Christianity, ed. R. L. Wilken (SJCA 1; Notre Dame, IN: University of Notre Dame Press, 1975) 1-15; M. Scott, Sophia and the Johannine Jesus (JSNTSup 71; Sheffield: JSOT Press, 1992); M. J. Suggs, Wisdom, Christology, and Law in Matthew's Gospel (Cambridge, MA: Harvard University Press, 1970); M. Turner, The Holy Spirit and Spiritual Gifts—Then and Now (rev. ed.; Carlisle: Paternoster, 1999); M. E. Willett, Wisdom Christology in the Fourth Gospel (San Francisco: Mellen Research University Press, 1992); B. Witherington III, Jesus the Sage: The Pilgrimage of Wisdom (Minneapolis: Augsburg Fortress, 1994); idem, John's Wisdom: A Commentary on the Fourth Gospel (Cambridge: Lutterworth, 1995).

F. W. Burnett and C. Bennema

WITNESS

Witness is an important biblical theme pertaining to people's relationships with one another and with God. The concept is laden with overtones of the law court and is often used forensically by the biblical authors in relation to the truth or falsity of a person's words, covenants between parties, and even God himself. In the OT "witness" terminology is used with reference to establishing the facts in a legal case but extends also to any situation in ordinary life requiring confirmation of evidence. Using terms such as martys ("witness" [noun]), martyria ("testimony") and martyreō ("to witness, testify"), the Gospels feature the witness theme within the matrix of truth and judgment surrounding Jesus' earthly ministry and claims. Each Gospel also testifies to Jesus' gathering and commissioning of followers who would in turn serve as witnesses to Jesus in the early church. The witness theme is most prominent in John and Luke (Luke-Acts), but it is a significant motif in all four Gospels.

1. The Old Testament Background
2. Witness in Mark
3. Witness in Matthew
4. Witness in Luke
5. Witness in John
6. Conclusion

1. The Old Testament Background.

The OT grounds the witness theme in God's relationship with Israel and people's relationships within Israel and with other nations. "Witness" terminology (noun ʿēd, ʿēdā; verb ʾūd) is present in the Law, the Prophets and the Writings as the concept relates to matters of truth and judgment in all affairs of human life, particularly in the law court. The truth of a matter must be established by two or three witnesses (Deut 19:15), especially in the case of capital offenses (Deut 17:6-7; Num 35:30). A witness can be either true or false. A true witness is one whose testimony is reliable and whose truthfulness can be confirmed (Prov 14:25; Is 8:2; Jer 42:5). A false witness is one whose testimony is unreliable in violation of God's commandment issued at Mount Sinai (Ex 20:16). False witnesses are detested by God for their affliction of the faithful (Prov 6:19; 27:12; 35:11) and incur the penalty that would otherwise fall on those whom they falsely accuse (Deut 19:16-21). To "witness" can also carry the sense of testifying against others (1 Kings 21:10), whether by prophets (Jer 42:18-22; Amos 3:13) or even Yahweh himself (Ps 50:7-21; Mal 2:14; cf. 1 Sam 12:5). Thus, God calls creation as a witness to his covenant with Israel (Deut 4:26; 30:19). Inanimate objects such as the law scroll (Deut 31:26) or the stone at Shechem (Josh 24:27) can serve as covenant witnesses against Israel as well. Particularly significant for the concept in the Gospels is God's commissioning of his servant Israel as his witness to the nations over against that of idols (Is 43:9, 10; 44:8-9). Israel's witness is thus an extension of the Davidic kingship by the word of the Lord (Is 55:3-5, 11).

2. Witness in Mark.

Jesus instructs the leper to give testimony or "proof" (martyrion) of his *cleansing to the priest (Mk 1:44; cf. Mt 8:4; Lk 5:14; Lev 13:49). Jesus also affirms the ninth commandment, "Do not bear false witness [pseudomartyreō]" (Mk 10:19; cf. Mt 19:18; Lk 18:20) and includes "deceit" (Mk 7:22) or "false witness" (Mt 15:19) in his vice list of that which defiles a person. In keeping with the juridical use of these terms, however, are the instructions that Jesus gives to his disciples as he sends them into a hostile world as his witnesses. If their proclamation is rejected by the people, they are to shake the dust off their feet as a "testimony" (martyrion) to them (Mk 6:11; cf. the stronger expression in Lk 9:5: a testimony "against" them). Here the shaking off of dust is a "witness" because it warns the recipients that their rejection will be used as evidence against them on the day of *judgment, and because it calls them to repent (Cranfield, 201). Jesus also tells his disciples that they will bear witness for his sake before governors and kings in an environment of persecution when they are "delivered over" to councils and "beaten" (Mk 13:9; Mt 10:18) as the witness of the *gospel advances throughout the earth (Mk 13:10; Mt 24:14). Yet they are not to be anxious, but rather to let the *Holy Spirit speak through them (Mk 13:11; Lk 21:13-15).

Jesus himself models how his witnesses are to behave during their hour of testimony. In fact, Mark clusters most of his witness terminology around the *trial of Jesus in Mark 14, and here the words bear the full forensic nuance of "a witness at a trial who gives evidence" (Trites, 189). Alluding to the multiple witness requirement in the law (Deut 17:6-7; 19:15), Mark claims that the testimonies against Jesus did not agree (Mk 14:56, 59), thus constituting false witness (Mk 14:56-57; cf. Ex 20:19) similar to that of the *demonic forces earlier in the Gospel (Mk 1:24-25; 3:11-12). In this way, Mark traces the christological connections between truth, falsehood, judgment and witness in Jesus' earthly ministry.

3. Witness in Matthew.

As the parallel references in the previous section indicate, Matthew's use of witness terminology is similar to Mark's. Yet Matthew is in many ways unique. He is the only evangelist to explicitly cite Deuteronomy 19:15, invoking its multiple-witness requirement to protect a believer charged with sin to the effect that the testimony of one person is insufficient to confirm the transgression. Jesus instructs his followers, "Take one or two others along with you, that every charge may be established by the evidence of two or three witnesses" (Mt 18:16). Also, Matthew portrays the *Pharisees as testifying against themselves in their persecution of Jesus in keeping with Israel's earlier persecution of the prophets (Mt 23:31, 35; cf. Lk 11:48).

Matthew relates the concept of witness to judgment, especially the "day of judgment," when everyone must give an account (Mt 12:36-37). On the last day Christ will therefore serve as both witness (Mt 10:32-33) and judge (Mt 25:31-34, 40-41). On that day the "sheep" will be separated from the "goats" in keeping with the judge's verdict (Mt 25:34-36, 41-43). Possibly harking back to Isaianic theology (Is 43:10), Matthew's witness motif includes Christ's disciples, who will bear witness to the nations on his behalf (Mt 10:18; cf. Mt 28:18-20). According to Matthew, therefore, Jesus Christ is the *Son of Man, to whom his disciples will bear witness before all nations, and the judge, before whom all nations must give an account.

4. Witness in Luke.

Some of the "witness" terminology in Luke's Gospel has already been noted above in the discussions of Mark's and Matthew's Gospels. In addition, those who hear Jesus read in the synagogue “testify” (martyreō) concerning his gracious words (Lk 4:22). Luke uses the verb pseudomartyreō (“to bear false witness”) once (Lk 18:20), but false witnesses are not included in Jesus’ trial (Lk 22:66-71). Luke is the only evangelist to use the verb diamartyromai, meaning “to bear solemn testimony” (BDAG 2000), once in his Gospel in the sense of a warning (Lk 16:28), and several times in Acts (Acts 10:42; 20:21, 24; 23:11; 28:23). In fact, it is not in his Gospel, but rather in Acts, where martys and its cognates are used thirty-nine times, that we see more clearly Luke’s development of “witness” as a juridical term. In Acts a “witness” is one who bears testimony to Jesus of Nazareth, so that those who hear will render the proper verdict about his ministry, crucifixion and resurrection (Acts 1:8, 22; 2:32; 3:14-15; 10:37-43; 22:15; 26:16). Jesus went to trial and was crucified, but *God vindicated him through the resurrection. Now, through the witness of the apostles, Jews and Gentiles alike are given the chance to repent and pronounce a new verdict (Trites). Jesus’ prophetic declaration in the Synoptics about the first witnesses (Mk 13:9-11; Mt 10:16-19; Lk 21:12-15) is realized in Acts, where the gospel is proclaimed in a hostile environment (Acts 7:54-60; 12:1-3; 13:49-51; 14:19; 18:12-17; 19:23-34), witnesses are delivered over to councils and beaten (Acts 4:1-12; 5:27-42), and they appear before governors and kings (Acts 22:1-22; 25:1-7; 28:23-31). Nevertheless, this same forensic nuance of witness terminology is also present in Luke, where we note several specific features the evangelist uses to develop the motif.

4.1. Dependence on Eyewitnesses. From the very outset of his Gospel Luke stresses the importance of eyewitness testimony (Lk 1:1-4; cf. Acts 1:3). Luke writes an “orderly account” for Theophilus in keeping with the testimony of the original “eyewitnesses” (autoptai). This is the only NT instance of autoptai, a significant term in ancient historiography. While not a forensic term per se, autoptai refers to those who were firsthand observers of the “events fulfilled in our midst” (Lk 1:1) (see Alexander). In short, eyewitnesses introduce primary evidence that “asks to be trusted” (Bauckham), and significant for Luke’s Gospel is that his testimony aligns with that which was witnessed “from the beginning” (Lk 1:3). Luke’s sources may include Peter (Lk 5:3-8; 24:34), the *women who followed Jesus from *Galilee (Lk 8:2-3; 23:49) and other principal eyewitnesses to the story of Jesus such as Elizabeth the mother of John the Baptist, *Mary the mother of Jesus (Lk 1:5-80), *John the Baptist (Lk 3:1-20) and the *apostles who bore ongoing witness to Jesus subsequent to his departure (Lk 22:48; cf. Acts 1:21-22).

4.2. Witness in the Context of Persecution. Luke develops the witness motif as a metaphor for discipleship in the context of persecution and conflict. In Luke’s account of Jesus’ appearance in the Nazareth synagogue the narrative takes a negative turn as Jesus’ audience seeks to kill him for an apparent allusion to *Gentile inclusion in the orbit of salvation (Lk 4:25-27; cf. 1 Kings 17:8-24; 2 Kings 5:1-19). Just as *Elijah and Elisha were rejected, so too will be Jesus and his disciples. For Luke, persecution is part and parcel of discipleship, and true disciples are those who confess the *Son of Man before all people (Lk 12:1-12). Persecution, an integral part of the life of a follower of Jesus, will serve as an opportunity for “witness” (martyrion) in the last days (Lk 21:13).

4.3. The “Two” Witnesses Motif in Luke. In keeping with the OT requirement of two (or three) witnesses (Deut 19:15), Luke features a theme involving the number “two.” He writes two volumes that connect the mission of Jesus with the mission of the church. Two witnesses abound: Simeon and Anna (Lk 2:25-38), Naaman and the widow of Zarephath (Lk 4:26-27), the pairs of witnesses commissioned by Jesus (Lk 10:1), the Queen of Sheba and the men of Nineveh (Lk 11:31-32). At the end of the Gospel the resurrected Jesus appears to two disciples—Cleopas and an unnamed disciple—on the road to Emmaus (Lk 24:13-35).

4.4. The Universal Scope of Witness. Possibly invoking Isaianic “new exodus” theology, Luke notes that salvation will be proclaimed in Jesus’ name to all the nations beginning in Jerusalem (Lk 24:47; cf. Is 43:9-10). By the power of the Holy Spirit promised by the Father, the disciples’ witness concerning *repentance and *forgiveness of sins in Jesus will extend to all nations, as the sequel to Luke’s Gospel goes on to narrate (Lk 24:46-49; cf. Acts 1:8).

5. Witness in John.

Among the four evangelists, John makes the most of the witness motif, using the verbal form “to bear witness” (martyreō) thirty-three times, constituting 43 percent of its usage in the NT. The noun “testimony” (martyria) occurs fourteen times, accounting for 38 percent of NT usage. Similar to Luke, John’s witness theme builds upon Isaianic theology, portraying Jesus’ earthly ministry in universal, cosmic terms.

5.1. The Cosmic Trial Motif. As A. Lincoln has argued, the “witness” and “judgment” word groups in John’s Gospel are part of a “cosmic trial” or “lawsuit motif" (Lincoln 2000), "in which Jesus as God's uniquely authorized agent acts as both witness and judge" (Lincoln 2004, 128) (see, e.g., Jn 9:39). According to Lincoln, the lawsuits between God and Israel and between God and the nations in Isaiah 40–55 form the background against which the Johannine lawsuit motif should be understood. In the context of the lawsuit, truth stands for the whole process of judging, culminating in the verdict. At the heart of John's Gospel is the question of whether or not the crucified Jesus is the Messiah and whether or not he rightly claimed to be one with God. "Truth" is in essence an affirmative answer to these questions. What is more, Jesus himself embodies truth (Jn 1:14, 17; 14:6). The witness motif in John, therefore, plays on the crucial issue of true versus false witnesses.

5.2. The Witness of John the Baptist. John's Gospel features as many as seven witnesses to Jesus to testify to the truthfulness of his claims (cf. Jn 14:6). As the first witness, *John the Baptist fulfills OT prophecy and the OT requirement for multiple witnesses in conjunction with Jesus' own testimony and the witness borne by others (Jn 1:6–8, 15; cf. Deut 19:15). The Baptist thus serves as the forerunner of the Messiah, a "voice" preparing "the way of the Lord" (Jn 1:23; cf. Is 40:3). In fulfillment of Isaianic prophecy, John's ministry paves the way for God's coming in the person of the Messiah to his people Israel in order to inaugurate a new exodus through the wilderness. His testimony is that Jesus is the "Lamb of God who takes away the sin of the world" (Jn 1:29), the sacrifice to be offered in the context of a cosmic trial (see Lamb of God).

The Baptist's witness, among others, is also invoked in a key passage in John 5. This chapter stands at the beginning of a section focused on Jesus' signs to the Jews and the mounting controversy elicited by his ministry, particularly with the Pharisees (Jn 5–10). The controversy in John 5 centers on the healing of a lame man on the *Sabbath (Jn 5:1–13). In order to defend Jesus against the charge of *blasphemy (Jn 5:17–18), the evangelist adduces the witness of the Father (Jn 5:32, 37), John the Baptist (Jn 5:33–35), Jesus' works (Jn 5:36; cf. Jn 10:25) and the Scriptures (Jn 5:39). What is more, the words of Moses testify against the Pharisees just as the law had done against Israel (Jn 5:46; cf. Deut 31:26).

5.3. The Witness of the Holy Spirit and of Jesus' Disciples, Including the Evangelist. The *Holy Spirit plays a prominent role in John's Gospel as a witness and advocate of Jesus Christ (e.g., Jn 15:26). The Spirit bears testimony concerning sin, righteousness and judgment (Jn 16:7–11), for he is the Spirit of truth (Jn 16:13). He also serves as the inward witness for Jesus' disciples (Jn 14:16–17, 26; 16:13–14), enabling them to carry out their role as ongoing witnesses to Jesus as they had been "from the beginning" (Jn 15:27). Just as Jesus was "in the beginning" with God as "the Word" (Jn 1:1–2) and hence was perfectly qualified to serve as a witness to God, whom no one had ever seen (Jn 1:18), so the disciples had been with Jesus "from the beginning," qualifying them to bear witness to Jesus' messianic identity. Thus, the farewell discourse (Jn 13:31–16:33) links Jesus' ministry to the Jews (see esp. Jn 5–12) with the disciples' ongoing mission to the world (cf. Jn 15:18–25). To this end, the witness of the "disciple whom Jesus loved"—most likely the evangelist and apostle John, the son of Zebedee (Jn 13:23) (contra Bauckham)—stands as a final witness to the truth of Jesus' signs and resurrection (Jn 21:24) (see Beloved Disciple).

6. Conclusion.

The theme of witness pervades the OT and the Gospels in connection with the twin motifs of truth and judgment. The OT establishes the basis for true versus false witnesses (Deut 19:15; Ex 20:16). The Gospels apply this theme to the life and work of Jesus Christ, themselves bearing witness to the truthfulness of Jesus' claims, culminating in his *resurrection. Mark uses "witness" terminology surrounding Jesus' *death on the cross to illustrate the false testimony leveled against the Messiah. According to Matthew, Jesus is the authoritative Son of Man, who is charged with executing judgment over all nations and who commissioned his disciples to bear witness to all nations. Working within the context of his unique "two" motif, Luke compiles his Gospel on the basis of the testimony of the original eyewitnesses to Jesus in order to bear witness concerning Jesus' universal offer of salvation and the nature of discipleship. John, building upon Isaianic theology, portrays Jesus' entire earthly ministry as a cosmic trial between God's Messiah and the world. Beginning with John the Baptist, the evangelist adduces at least seven witnesses, including himself, to attest to the truthfulness of Jesus' claims. John also stresses the ministry of the Holy Spirit and of Jesus' disciples as ongoing witnesses to Jesus before the world.

See also APOSTLE; GOSPEL: GOOD NEWS; HOLY SPIRIT; JOHN THE BAPTIST.

BIBLIOGRAPHY. L. Alexander, The Preface to Luke's Gospel: Literary Convention and Social Context in Luke 1.1–4 and Acts 1.1 (SNSTMS 78; Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 1993); R. Bauckham, Jesus and the Eyewitnesses: The Gos- pels as Eyewitness Testimony (Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 2006); R. B. Chisholm, “ôd,” NIDOTTE 3:335-40; C. E. B. Cranfield, The Gospel According to Mark: An Introduction and Commentary (CGTSC; Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 1959); B. Gerhardsson, “Mark and the Female Witnesses,” in Dumu-E2-Dub-Ba-A: Studies in Honor of Åke W. Sjöberg, ed. H. Behrens, D. Loding and M. T. Roth (Occasional Publications of the Samuel Noah Kramer Fund 11; Philadelphia: University Museum, 1989) 217-26; A. J. Köstenberger, “What Is Truth? Pilate’s Question in Its Johannine and Larger Biblical Context,” in Whatever Happened to Truth? ed. A. J. Köstenberger (Wheaton, IL: Crossway, 2005); idem, A Theology of John’s Gospel and Letters (BTNT; Grand Rapids: Zondervan, 2009); A. J. Köstenberger, L. S. Kellum and C. L. Quarles, The Cradle, the Cross, and the Crown: An Introduction to the New Testament (Nashville: B&H Academic, 2009); A. T. Lincoln, Truth on Trial: The Lawsuit Motif in the Fourth Gospel (Peabody, MA: Hendrickson, 2000); idem, “Reading John: The Fourth Gospel Under Modern and Postmodern Interrogation,” in Reading the Gospels Today, ed. S. E. Porter (MNTS; Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 2004) 127-49; A. A. Trites, The New Testament Concept of Witness (SNTSMS 31; Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 1977); K. J. Vanhoozer, “The Hermeneutics of I-Witness Testimony: John 21:20-24 and the Death of the Author,” in First Theology: God, Scripture and Hermeneutics (Downers Grove, IL: InterVarsity Press, 2002) 257-74. A. J. Köstenberger

WOE. See BLESSING AND WOE.

WOMANIST CRITICISM. See FEMINIST AND WOMANIST CRITICISMS.

WOMEN

Jesus frequently ministers to women in the Gospels and welcomes them as his followers and partners in the family of God. Though some scholars have touted Jesus’ outreach to women as radically progressive for his day, care must be taken not to overplay this point. Apart from his male disciples’ astonishment on one occasion (Jn 4:27), no other Gospel figure, friend or foe, raises any queries about Jesus’ associations with women per se. Simon the Pharisee’s concern about Jesus’ reception of a “sinner woman” focuses more on her sinful character than gender as part of a larger Pharisaic polemic against Jesus’ fraternization with “tax collectors and sinners” (Lk 7:34-39). Moreover, Jesus and the Gospels’ openness to women should not be exaggerated in contradistinction to first-century patriarchal Mediterranean society. Jesus was not, and historically could not have been, a “feminist” by modern standards. On the one hand, Jesus affirmed traditional service roles for women (more radical was his elevation of servanthood as the “greatest” vocation for himself and other men as well as women [see Mk 9:33-37; 10:35-45]). And on the other hand, the opportunities that Jesus afforded women for active participation in his mission may be compared with women’s rich involvement in ancient Jewish and Greco-Roman religious life.

Overall, the Gospels, in varying degrees, offer a multidimensional portrayal of women who meet and follow Jesus. Although many remain anonymous, most are not simply stock female characters. From the perspective of contemporary feminists and women’s rights’ activists (who themselves hold widely varying views), the Gospels offer a complex mix of “double messages” on the “liberating versus conventional” spectrum regarding women’s roles and identities. Such tensions demand close attention to each Gospel’s profile of women in their literary and social contexts.

1. Women’s Places
2. Synoptic Traditions
3. Mark
4. Matthew
5. Luke
6. John

1. Women’s Places.

Resisting sweeping stereotypes and narrow pigeonholing, careful analysis appreciates multiple spheres—ethnic, domestic, economic, political, religious—that shaped first-century women’s identities. The Gospel narratives reflect women’s variable intersections with each of these areas.

1.1. Nation and Race. Not surprisingly, most of the women around Jesus in the Gospels are fellow Jews. But he also has significant encounters with a Greco-Syrophenician mother (Mk 7:24-30; cf. Mt 15:21-28) and a Samaritan woman (Jn 4:1-42). Moreover, Matthew includes four non-Israelite women in Jesus’ genealogy (Mt 1:3-6) and briefly interjects the opinion of Pilate’s (Roman) wife concerning Jesus (Mt 27:19), while Luke refers to various “foreign” women from the OT as illustrations for Jesus’ teaching (Lk 4:25-26; 11:31; 17:32). In these cases, cross-cultural as well as gender matters complicate Jesus’ view of women.

1.2. Home and Family. The home was the primary social location for most women, occupying them with typical chores of cooking, cleaning, clothing and childrearing as wives and mothers. Although formally subject to the male head of the *family (paterfamilias), women could exercise considerable freedom in domestic affairs, including managing servants in larger households; and in the absence of a male authority, due to widowhood or other factors, women effectively ruled their own houses (as it appears with Martha in Lk 10:38; cf. Acts 9:12:12; 16:14-15). Moreover, we must not imagine a rigid dichotomy between private and public, as if women were quarantined in designated domestic spaces. They were in fact regularly out and about among the “crowds,” shopping in the marketplaces and participating in community life. Some demarcation of female and male quarters occurred within larger peristyle residences, but without precluding mixing of the sexes. In smaller, cramped one- and two-room peasant houses and tenement apartments (insulae), which predominated in Jesus’ Palestinian world (cf. Lk 11:5-7), private space scarcely existed at all.

In the Gospels Jesus encounters women in both domestic (Simon’s mother-in-law, Jairus’s daughter, Martha and Mary) and public (hemorrhaging woman, widow at Nain, Samaritan woman) spaces, and his parables involving women depict them performing both household duties of baking and sweeping and more public activities of attending nuptial ceremonies and pleading legal cases. In several cases women appear as independent characters with undefined or unconventional domestic roles, and some of Jesus’ teaching acknowledges and, to some extent, encourages conflict in the family unit. In short, the Gospels present a realistic, thickly textured picture of women’s everyday lives.

1.3. Commercial and Political Arenas. First-century women could also operate in male-dominated areas of business and government, as exemplified in Acts by the commercial purple-cloth dealer Lydia in Philippi (Acts 16:14-16) and the tentmaker Priscilla in Corinth (Acts 18:1-3). In both cases these merchants doubtless worked some out of their homes in manufacturing and marketing their goods; and Priscilla labored in tandem with her husband, Aquila, perhaps in a ground-level workshop below their residence. Again, we find a blurring of sharp divisions between public and private and between economic and domestic spheres. On the political side, however, women’s influence seems more restricted to the privileged wives and daughters of nobles and powerful officials (see Acts 13:50; 17:4, 12; 24:24 [Drusilla]; 25:23; 26:30 [Bernice]).

In Palestinian Galilee “many women” of some means, according to Luke, followed and supported Jesus and his movement financially, including Mary Magdalene, who may have been a merchant, and Joanna, the wife of Herod Antipas’s steward (Lk 8:1-3). As for politically prominent women in the Gospels, apart from the disciple Joanna and Pilate’s cautious wife, we only meet Herod’s treacherous wife Herodias (and her daughter), who spearheads the execution of *John the Baptist (Mt 14:3-12; Mk 6:17-29; Lk 3:19-20). In short, the Gospels present a broad cross-section of women, some well-heeled in high places who affect Jesus’ mission for both good and ill, and others poor and needy whom Jesus aids.

1.4. Cultic and Prophetic Arenas. Scholars have long noted women’s key roles as priestesses and other high-level participants in pagan temples, mystery cults and other forms of Greco-Roman religion. In recent decades archeological evidence has also demonstrated that Jewish women, though restricted from the priesthood, held leadership positions in local synagogues; likewise, fresh attention has been paid to Jewish female prophets and sages, like the celibate women among the philosophical monastic sect of “Therapeutics” in Egypt described by Philo (Contempl. 21-33). Although the Gospels generally do not include women among the principal Jewish religious rulers, Luke features the long-term, ascetic temple prophet (and widow) Anna and reports the prophetic utterances of Elizabeth and Mary; and John highlights the apostolic witness of a *Samaritan woman and Mary Magdalene. Each of these women has a voice—a prime medium of spiritual authority and influence. But for the most part, Gospel women remain unobtrusively silent; and sometimes Jesus even rebuffs them for their speech, as with the Canaanite/Syrophoenician woman in Matthew/Mark, Martha in Luke, and his mother in John.

2. Synoptic Traditions.

2.1. Jesus’ Teaching About Women and Family.

2.1.1. Jesus’ Prime Family (Mt 12:46-50; Mk 3:31-35; Lk 8:19-21). A crowd surrounding Jesus informs him that his mother and brothers (and sisters in Mk 3:32) are “standing outside,” desiring to speak with him. In response, Jesus identifies his true family—“my brother and sister and mother”—in spiritual rather than biological terms as anyone who obeys the will/word of God (“my heavenly Father” in Mt 12:50). Significantly, this spiritual household includes no “fathers,” save the one sovereign Father God; and under the Father’s authority, women and men serve together as equal kin.

2.1.2. Divided Families (Mt 10:34-39; 19:27-30; Mk 10:28-31; Lk 12:49-56; 14:26; 18:28-30). The Synoptic Gospels candidly affirm that following Jesus may spark division within one's natural family and, ultimately, separation from parents, spouses, children and in-laws. The absolute demands of discipleship trump all other kinship ties. Again, women are well represented (mothers, daughters, mothers/daughters-in-law, sisters) in these texts, and the inclusive household of God remains the principal family unit: whatever may be lost in natural relationships is gained a "hundredfold" in God's wide extended family (Mt 19:29; Mk 10:29-30).

2.1.3. Marriage and Divorce (Mt 5:31-32; 19:1-12; Mk 10:1-12; Lk 16:18). In a legal debate with certain Pharisees over the proper scriptural grounds for *divorce and remarriage, Jesus affirms the "one flesh," permanent marital union between a man and woman established at creation (cf. Gen 1:27; 2:24) and offers a strict interpretation of the Mosaic law (cf. Deut 24:1-4) concerning what a husband may deem as objectionable conduct by his wife meriting dismissal. In Mark and Luke, Jesus in fact allows no acceptable reasons for divorcing one's wife and taking another (Mk 10:11; Lk 16:18). Mark also accentuates that a man who remarries commits adultery "against her"—that is, against his divorced wife—and adds a reciprocal statement applied to women's initiation of divorce-and-remarriage proceedings (more common outside than within Jewish society) (Mk 10:12). Matthew alone accepts a legitimate cause for divorce, but only in one exceptional case: the wife's "sexual immorality" (porneia). Amid these variations, Jesus and the Synoptic Gospels evince a common thrust of promoting husband-wife partnership and protecting women from capricious, male-centered divorce practices.

2.2. Women as Good (Mostly) and Bad Models.

2.2.1. Baker (Mt 13:33; Lk 13:20-21). In a brief parable Jesus compares the sure establishment of God's righteous rule (kingdom) on earth, despite its often slow and hidden progress, with the small amount of yeast that a baker kneads into some fifty pounds of flour to yield over a hundred loaves of bread—enough to feed a whole village for a day. Engaged in traditional food service for her community, this woman models God's creative and sustaining work for God's people.

2.2.2. Herodias (Mt 14:3-12; Mk 6:17-29; Lk 3:19-20). This lone villainous woman in the Gospels hatches a plot, with the help of her daughter, to have John the Baptist beheaded for denouncing her current marriage to Herod Antipas, Rome's client-ruler in Galilee, while she remained legally wed to Antipas's brother Philip. Given her specialized social status and treacherous scheme, Herodias hardly demonstrates women's general proclivity toward anger or vengeance. Moreover, despite her instigation, her husband still remains responsible for ordering John's execution. Together, the Herodian couple illustrates malignant, self-protective abuse of power in contrast to the self-sacrificing love of both Jesus and his forerunner John (see Herodian Dynasty).

2.2.3. Women Grinding Grain (Mt 24:37-41; Lk 17:26-35). Jesus illustrates his apocalyptic message that the Son of Man will come in discriminating judgment while most people are blithely going about their daily business with the examples of two women grinding at the village mill, one of whom will be taken and the other left (Mt 24:41; Lk 17:35). This quotidian scenario reflects typical peasant women's work of food preparation, paired with men's farming in Matthew ("two will be in the field" [Mt 24:40]) in a practical, complementary division of labor.

2.2.4. Widow's Offering (Mk 12:41-44; Lk 21:1-4). Watching the parade of contributors to the temple treasury, Jesus singles out to his disciples a particular poor widow as an object lesson. In contrast to the rich folk who give significant sums but at little cost to themselves, this impoverished woman, Jesus stresses, though giving only two meager coins, outshines the rest by sacrificing her entire livelihood (bios). She thus models the radical, total surrender of all possessions to God that Jesus demands of his followers (cf. Mk 8:34-37; 10:21-22; Lk 9:23-25; 14:33; 18:22). In the present context she also provokes implied criticism of hypocritical religious officials who "devour widows' houses" and thus insure their poverty (Mk 12:38-40; Lk 20:45-47) and of a morally bankrupt temple system about to be destroyed (Mk 13:1-4; Lk 21:5-7). Curiously, however, while calling positive attention to this poor widow, Jesus never speaks or reaches out to her in the narrative, and in turn she is given no voice. She thus remains more distant object than personal subject.

2.2.5. Anonymous Anointing Woman at Bethany (Mt 26:6-13; Mk 14:3-9). In the last days of Jesus' life an unnamed woman pours out expensive perfume on his head as he reclines at table in the home of Simon the leper. Such an effusive act is fit for anointing a king or priest or hosting a very important dignitary. In this case, however, it draws charges of wastefulness from "angry" guests. But Jesus vigorously defends the woman's "good deed" as a present gesture of preanointing his body for *burial. She thus stands out as the only Gospel figure, male or female, who fully grasps the reality of Jesus' predictions of his death and who actually gets to prepare his body (since would-be anointing women will find an empty tomb). No wonder Jesus memorializes this woman's act "wherever the gospel is proclaimed in the whole world."

2.3. Women Healed by Jesus. In summary statements of Jesus' (and his disciples') restorative ministry through *healings and exorcisms, we can assume female as well as male beneficiaries (cf. Mt 4:23-25; 8:16-17; 9:35; 10:7; 14:35-36; 15:29-31; 19:1-2; Mk 1:32-34; 6:13, 53-56; Lk 4:40-41; 6:17-19; 7:21-22; 9:1-6; 10:9, 17-20). But certain women made whole by Jesus are singled out for special mention.

2.3.1. Simon Peter's Mother-in-Law (Mt 8:14-17; Mk 1:29-35; Lk 4:38-42). In Peter's house early in his ministry, Jesus heals Peter's feverish mother-in-law, by soothing touch in Matthew and Mark and by rebuke in Luke. Afterwards, she promptly resumes domestic duties of "serving" (diakoneō) the household. Evidently, problems of family separation and division mentioned elsewhere do not apply here. At the end of the day, the restorative experience of the fever-stricken woman sets a pattern: throughout the night Jesus cures many other infirm people who come to the house.

2.3.2. Jairus's Daughter and a Bleeding Woman (Mt 9:18-26; Mk 5:21-43; Lk 8:40-56). A synagogue leader, Jairus, begs Jesus to come and aid his daughter, who in Matthew's narrative has just died, but in the fuller accounts of Mark and Luke remains alive on the brink of death. However, as he proceeds with a crowd to Jairus's house, an anonymous single woman with a chronic, twelve-year bleeding disorder approaches Jesus from behind, touches his cloak and instantly becomes well. Again, Mark (especially) and Luke supply extra detail and suspense. We learn that the woman, perhaps well-to-do at one time, had spent everything she had on inept physicians. But now, with a mere touch of Jesus' clothing, she discharges a flow of healing power from Jesus that stanches her flow of blood. This is the only Gospel miracle that takes Jesus by surprise, triggered entirely by another's initiating act. When Jesus demands, "Who touched me [and took power from me]?" the woman falls down before Jesus "in fear and trembling" (Mk 5:33), terrified about how Jesus might react. But at this critical moment Jesus affirms her as "daughter" in God's household, commends her remarkable faith, and dispatches her in peace.

The Gospels provide no precise diagnosis of the woman's hemorrhaging condition, but it plausibly involved some kind of constant, irregular vaginal "flow." If so, she would have been more or less permanently "unclean" by Levitical standards (see Clean and Unclean). But in no sense would that also make her a "sinner" (impurity and iniquity are quite different); and purity issues, which largely affect temple access in Jerusalem, are never raised in this Galilean story. On a social level, more than "purifying" her, this woman's healing may signify her restored ability to marry and have children.

Meanwhile, during the hiatus of dealing with the bleeding woman, word reaches Jesus that Jairus's "little" (Mark) or "only" (Luke) daughter has died. But no matter: Jesus goes to the house, takes her by the hand, and raises her to new life. The "sandwich" structure of this girl's story surrounding that of the hemorrhaging woman accentuates connections between the two incidents, focusing on the "daughter" relationship, the twelve-year span, the element of touch and perhaps the prospect of reproduction (Jairus's daughter being at the age of puberty and the woman's cure of her uterine dysfunction).

2.3.3. A Canaanite/Syrophenician Woman's Daughter (Mt 15:21-28; Mk 7:24-30). If the bleeding woman incident represents the only Gospel occasion where someone procures Jesus' healing power without his permission, this episode features the lone case where someone prompts Jesus to change his mind. During one of Jesus' few sojourns outside his native region, across the northern border into Phoenicia, a local mother respectfully petitions him to help her demon-possessed daughter. However, Jesus initially rebuffs her, first, in Matthew, by ignoring her and then, in both Matthew and Mark, by informing her that "it is not right to take the children's bread and throw it to the dogs," with children representing Jews (Jesus' people), and dogs representing Gentiles (this woman). Still, with dogged persistence and posture, this mother, crouched at Jesus' feet, quips (yaps) back that even the dogs eat the crumbs that fall from the household table. Far from being offended by her backtalk, Jesus is moved by her clever response to heal her afflicted daughter; and more than that, this frank exchange seems to motivate the Markan Jesus' wider feeding and healing mission in non-Israelite territory (Mk 7:31-8:10).

Other distinctive aspects of Mark's story include the woman's realistic ethnic-geographic identification as Greco-Syrophenician (Mk 7:26) and her sick daughter's location as lying at home on a "bed" (klinē [Mk 7:30]), a more substantial item than a simple "mat" (krabbatos). That such elements point to the woman's elevated, opulent status, as some scholars suggest, remains speculative. The Markan profile focuses on her “foreign” and maternal (no husband/father mentioned) identity. Compared with Mark, Matthew’s narrative uses the anachronistic designation of “Canaanite woman” (Mt 15:22), harking back to ancient Israel’s Baal-worshipping foes in the promised land. Remarkably, however, this “Canaanite” honors Jesus as “Lord” (three times) and “Son of David,” kneels before him, and beseeches him in “shouting,” challenging yet prayerful mode, as in a lament psalm.

2.4. Women at Jesus’ Cross and Tomb.

2.4.1. Witnesses to Jesus’ Death (Mt 27:55-56; Mk 15:40-41; Lk 23:27-31, 48-49). While the male disciples desert Jesus at his *death, numerous women followers and benefactors from Galilee witness his crucifixion, yet still “from a distance” (Luke also includes many “daughters of Jerusalem” bewailing Jesus’ procession to the cross [Lk 23:27-28]). Chief among them in Matthew and Mark are Mary Magdalene and a certain Mary the mother of James and Joseph/Joses, who might also be the mother of Jesus (cf. Mk 6:3). Matthew further singles out the mother of Zebedee’s sons (cf. Mt 20:20), Mark mentions Salome (otherwise unknown in the Gospels), and Luke includes a group of unnamed women (though cf. Lk 24:10) among “all his [Jesus’] acquaintances [gnōstoi].” The two women identified as mothers are not accompanied by their husbands or fathers on this occasion.

2.4.2. Attendants at Jesus’ Burial and Empty Tomb (Mt 27:61—28:10; Mk 15:47—16:8; Lk 23:55—24:12). On the evening of Jesus’ death, Mary Magdalene, the “other Mary” (Mt 27:61; 28:1) the mother of James, and additional Galilean women, according to Luke, including Joanna (Lk 23:55; 24:10), observe the preparation and entombment of Jesus’ body by Joseph of Arimathea. They then return after the Sabbath on the first day of the week to anoint Jesus’ corpse with spices (again, unaccompanied by any men). However, much to their shock, they discover the stone dislodged from the tomb’s entrance with no body inside. Suddenly, a divine messenger or two (variously described in each Gospel) appear, informing them that Jesus’ absence owes to his *resurrection “just as he told you” (Mk 16:7; cf. Mt 28:8; 24:9). This reminder of Jesus’ predictions of passion and resurrection indicates that these women had been tutored by Jesus along with the male disciples, yet they remained blind, as did the men, to the full significance of Jesus’ teaching. Still, the women at least continue to follow Jesus. They stand out as the first witnesses to Jesus’ empty tomb, and the messenger commissions them to report this news to the other disciples.

At this point the Synoptics notably diverge: (1) in Mark, Mary Magdalene and company flee the scene in terror and “say nothing to anyone” (Mk 16:8); (2) in Matthew, they run to fulfill their assignment with “great joy” as well as fear, and along the way they meet the living Jesus, who reassures them and repeats the commission to tell “my brothers” (Mt 28:8-10); these women thus emerge as the first apostolic witnesses of the risen Lord; (3) only Luke narrates the women’s actual encounter with the male “apostles,” and the result proves disappointing: “the eleven and all the rest” dismiss the women’s report as hysterical “nonsense,” though Peter at least runs to the tomb and confirms their story (Lk 24:8-12). These varied responses reflect the distinctive narrative theology of the Synoptic evangelists and a range of discipleship patterns exemplified by the women, from fear and silence (Mark), to joy and witness (Matthew), to being ridiculed and dismissed (Luke).

3. Mark.

All of the Markan texts dealing with women have Synoptic parallels with Matthew and/or Luke and need not be reiterated in this section. But two prominent patterns of women’s behavior, somewhat in tension with each other, are worth noting. First, a trio of quite distinctive women clusters in Mark 5—7 who, each in her own way, proactively obtains what she wants from a powerful yet unsuspecting or resistant male figure: the bleeding woman presses through the crowd and extracts healing power from Jesus without his (prior) permission (Mk 5:25-34); Herodias opportunistically forces Herod’s reluctant hand (Mk 6:26) to grant her desire for John the Baptist’s execution (Mk 6:14-29); and the Syrophenician woman mounts a trenchant argument, in the face of Jesus’ initial rebuff, persuading him to heal her afflicted daughter (Mk 7:24-30). Obviously, however, the common initiative and persistence of these women are applied to starkly different ends: the two involving Jesus lead to restored health; the one involving Herod results in grisly death.

Second, two anonymous women emerge toward the end of Mark as remarkable models of extravagant giving: the poor widow who contributes her last two coins—“all she had to live on”—to God’s service (through the temple treasury) (Mk 12:41-44); and the woman at Bethany who lovingly and lavishly anoints Jesus’ head with expensive perfume in anticipation of his imminent death and burial (Mk 14:3-9). Again, differences also stand out, not least the accusation hurled at the latter woman that her three hundred denarii worth of luxury ointment could have been put to better use helping the destitute (like the poor widow!). But Jesus staunchly defends her seemingly prodigal gesture as a perceptive seizing of the hour at hand: only she realizes Jesus' impending departure and acts upon it while she can. The poor can (and should) be helped in normal circumstances, but in this most crucial of historical moments Jesus must be helped and honored, now! There is no time to waste and no gift too wasteful.

4. Matthew.

Consistent with Matthew's emphasis on active righteousness or doing the will of God (Mt 1:19; 3:14-15; 5:6, 10, 16-20, 33; 6:10; 7:21; 12:50; 25:31-46), the women uniquely featured in this Gospel tend to be proactive agents, working both courageously and cunningly within the male-dominated establishment to achieve their goals. And most of the time their goals are consistent with God's righteous purposes. The pushy, "faith-full" hemorrhaging woman and the "Canaanite" mother (Mt 9:20-22; 15:21-28 [see 2.3.2 and 2.3.3 above]) also fit this pattern of dynamic, determined Matthean women.

4.1. The Righteous Foremothers of Jesus' Genealogy (Mt 1:1-17). Matthew's family album of Jesus includes a select quartet of extraordinary foremothers from OT history: Tamar (Gen 38), Rahab (Josh 2; 6:22-25), Ruth (Ruth 1—4) and "the wife of Uriah" (Bathsheba) (2 Sam 11; 1 Kings 1) (see Genealogy). All of them represent marginal women with non-Israelite connections (Tamar and Rahab as Canaanites; Ruth the Moabite; the wife of Uriah the Hittite) and irregular sexual histories (Tamar and Rahab as prostitutes; Ruth as seductress; Bathsheba as adulteress). But, as a careful reading of their stories demonstrates, they are by no means judged as sinful, wicked women. Quite the contrary, amid their dire circumstances, these outsiders act to secure their own survival and to advance the covenantal line of God's people. However unconventional their means, all of them merit the commendation that Judah ultimately accords Tamar: "She is more in the right than I" (Gen 38:26). Ironically, as Matthew's birth narrative unfolds, it is Jesus' stepfather, Joseph, who most resembles his right-acting foremothers (Mt 1:18-25; 2:13-15, 19-23); by contrast, mother Mary is a notably passive figure in Matthew.

4.2. The Ambitious Mother of Zebedee's Sons (Mt 20:20-23; 27:56). Although they leave their father and his fishing business behind to follow Jesus (Mt 4:21-22), the two sons of Zebedee, James and John, do not also abandon their mother. Or at least she does not desert them, but rather follows Jesus with and without them, all the way to the cross (Mt 27:56 [see 2.4. above]). As Jesus approaches his final fate in Jerusalem, this unnamed mother entreats him to grant top ranks to her sons in his coming kingdom. Such a request reflects a mother's typical boosting of her sons' patriarchal status. But, as Jesus points out to James and John (not answering their mother directly), such hierarchies do not serve the will of God, in whose realm God reigns alone as king and father.

4.3. Wise and Foolish Bridesmaids (Mt 25:1-13).

In a parable stressing the importance of alert preparedness for the Son of Man's arrival (Mt 25:13; cf. 24:36-41), Jesus contrasts the readiness of wise and foolish virgins (parthenoi) to meet and attend a tardy bridegroom arriving in the middle of the night (see Bride, Bridegroom). While five wise maids bring sufficient oil to fuel their lamps, five foolish ones run out at the most inopportune time: when they leave their post to purchase more oil, the bridegroom comes and shuts the door on the wedding. Here Jesus draws on familiar wisdom traditions in which female figures typify right and wrong conduct (even pushing at times to a personification of Woman Wisdom and Woman Folly [cf. Prov 1—9; 31; Mt 11:19]). On the positive side, the parable bolsters Matthew's depiction of women as those who act resourcefully and righteously. More distressing, however, is the wise virgins' refusal to help out their ill-prepared sisters, even if sharing oil might risk their own deficiency (Mt 25:8-9).

4.4. The Cautious Wife of Pontius Pilate (Mt 27:19). As Joseph was warned in a dream to take righteous action and protect the infant Jesus from Herod's murderous scheme (Mt 2:13-14), so Pilate's wife, spurred by a disturbing dream, exhorts her husband to "have nothing to do" with executing the "righteous" (dikaïos) Jesus. However, unlike other resolute women in Matthew, the righteous aim of Pilate's wife is not realized. Governor Pilate may try to wash his hands of the matter and substitute another criminal for Jesus, but still he authorizes Jesus' crucifixion (Mt 27:21-31) (see Pontius Pilate).

5. Luke.

Luke features more female characters than any other Gospel, but numbers do not tell the whole story. Here we especially encounter something of a "double message" regarding women's roles as both dynamic prophets and silent hearers of the word; both patrons and clients of the Jesus movement; both leaders and servants in the household; both wives/mothers and single women; both paired with male characters and presented independently. Luke may be struggling to strike the proper balance between Jesus' liberating gospel for all persons and prevailing social structures in Greco-Roman society.

5.1. Prophets (Lk 1:39-55; 2:36-38). In stark contrast to Matthew's *birth narrative, Luke presents *Mary and her relative Elizabeth as key protagonists in God's plan of *salvation. Though cast in traditional roles as mothers of sons (Jesus and John the Baptist) who will carry out God's prophetic mission, these women emerge as Spirit-inspired prophets in their own right: Elizabeth commends Mary's acceptance, as God's "slave-woman" (doulē [cf. Lk 1:38]), of her high calling to bear Jesus, the destined Lord and Messiah of Israel; and in turn Mary utters a soaring song of praise, confirming her own status as a humble servant (doulē [Lk 1:48]) before God, but also proclaiming God's impending work of lifting the lowly, filling the hungry, and toppling the oppressive hierarchs in fulfillment of God's liberating promises to "his child/servant [paidos] Israel" (Lk 1:54). Moreover, these mothers' conceptions of messianic-prophetic sons in their wombs owe less to the potency of their husbands than to the power of God: the long-barren Elizabeth conceives John by her husband, Zechariah, only when God supernaturally intervenes; and the virginal Mary conceives Jesus directly by the creative agency of the Holy Spirit with no help from her fiancé, Joseph.

When Mary and Joseph dedicate the infant Jesus to God in the *temple, the aged widow Anna—a well-known "female prophet" (prophētis) and contemplative based in the temple—"began thanking God and speaking about him [the Christ child] to all who were waiting for the redemption of Jerusalem" (Lk 2:38). In contrast, however, to the devout, elderly Simeon, whom Anna otherwise parallels in Luke's narrative, her prophetic voice is only indirectly and summarily heard (cf. Lk 2:25-34). Further, after Luke 2 we note a conspicuous absence of Mary and Elizabeth in the rest of the Gospel and a dearth of women's voices, prophetic or otherwise.

5.2. Widows (Lk 2:36-38; 4:25-26; 7:11-17; 18:1-8; 20:45—21:4). Luke shows special interest in widows, including Anna and the widow who offered her last coins (see 2.2.4 above; cf. Acts 6:1-7; 9:39-41). Beyond this latter case, Luke's Jesus employs two other stories of exemplary widows in his teaching. For one, in his inaugural sermon in Nazareth, he recalls the destitute widow at Zarephath, for whom the prophet Elijah miraculously provided food and revived her dead son (Lk 4:25-26; cf. 1 Kings 17:8-24).

Such feeding and healing work becomes programmatic of Jesus' ministry in Luke, including restoring a widow's deceased "only son" to her at his funeral in Nain of Galilee (Lk 7:10-17). The widow from Zarephath in Sidon also sets the stage for two other "foreign" women from the OT Jesus holds up as models of conduct, good and bad: positively, the Queen of the South (Lk 11:13; cf. 1 Kings 10:1-13; 2 Chron 9:1-12; see also Mt 12:42), who sought out Solomon's wisdom; and negatively, Lot's wife, who longingly and disastrously looked back on Sodom's destruction (Lk 17:31-32; cf. Gen 19:26).

Jesus showcases another widow figure in a brief parable (Lk 18:2-5), illustrating the practice of persistent prayer and persevering faith in an unjust world (Lk 18:1, 6-8). Mistreated by some "unjust antagonist" (antidikos), this widow pleads with an equally unjust judge to make things right. Although he could not care less about her problem, because of the woman's unrelenting pressure, including the prospect of "giving him a black eye" (hypōpiazō), the callous judge finally rules in her favor. While the parable's context counterpoints this judge with God, who "quickly" responds to prayerful pleas for justice, it also spotlights the widow, who faithfully and forcefully pursues justice in this world, thereby paving the way for the Son of Man's advent (Lk 18:8). Although the widows of Zarephath and Nain and the one who gives her final pittance to the temple treasury fit the pattern of poor and vulnerable women in need of care, Anna and especially the woman in the parable exemplify proactive, persistent widows who are scarcely helpless victims of oppression and may even have substantial means at their disposal.

5.3. Hosts and Servants (Lk 4:38-39; 7:36-50; 10:38-42; 15:8-10). Not surprisingly, in conjunction with a major focus on hospitality and *table fellowship, Luke casts various women in conventional roles of food preparation (Lk 13:20-21), table service (Lk 4:39; 10:40), tending to guests (Lk 7:37-38) and housecleaning (Lk 15:8-10). However, far from denigrating such labor as menial and relegating it to women alone, Jesus elevates domestic service to God's family as the "greatest" vocation for all, which he himself models (Lk 22:24-30) and compares to the saving work of God (Lk 15:8-10; cf. all of Lk 15). Moreover, Lukan women are by no means restricted to subordinate serving tasks, as they also appear as hosts (again, like Jesus) and household heads.

Jesus extols the loving, forgiven "sinner woman" (whose sins are never specified) as his true host in the home of Simon the Pharisee; for unlike Simon, who invited Jesus to dinner but neglected to provide customary hospitality, this woman, though uninvited, bathes Jesus' feet with her tears, kisses and perfumes and wipes them with her hair—all lavish, loving acts beyond the normal refreshing and greeting gestures required of an honorable host (Lk 7:44-47). Although she is a silent object of attention throughout the story ("Do you see this woman?" [Lk 7:44]), her actions speak loudly and clearly.

Jesus is also entertained by household head Martha and her sister Mary, both of whom appear as his devoted disciples. In this case, however, Martha overdoes the hospitality or, better put, becomes overwrought about it, imploring Jesus to order Mary, who sits silently at his feet, listening to his word, to help her. Gently rebuking Martha's anxiety (not her action), Jesus commends Mary's "good" (agathē) choice (Lk 10:38-42). Contrary to some popular interpretation, Jesus does not elevate Mary's quiet contemplation over Martha's active service (diakonia). Overall, the brief story presents laboring for and listening to Jesus as complementary responses of discipleship. But it scarcely encourages women's speech, as a rare expression of a woman's (Martha's) direct voice outside the birth narrative is effectively squashed in favor of (Mary's) silence.

5.4. Healed Clients and Patrons (Lk 8:1-3; 13:10-17). In addition to the Synoptic examples of Simon's mother-in-law, Jairus's daughter and the bleeding woman, Luke acknowledges that Jesus cured other women of various diseases and demonic afflictions, including Mary Magdalene, Joanna the wife of Chuza (Herod's steward) and Susanna, whose maladies are unspecified beyond citing Mary's suffering from "seven demons" (Lk 8:2-3), as well as an unnamed woman whose chronic bent back Jesus straightens (Lk 13:10-17). This last healing takes place in a local synagogue on the Sabbath, the timing of which sparks indignation from the (male) synagogue leader against Jesus. The restored woman, who embodies the "straightening" mission of God's kingdom (cf. Lk 3:5; Acts 15:16), gets somewhat lost in the shuffle as the object of debate. She "praises God" for her cure, but with no direct words. Jesus lays therapeutic hands upon her and speaks liberating words to her ("Woman, you have been freed from your illness" [Lk 13:12]), but thereafter he only speaks about her to the synagogue official. However, he does refer to her as a "daughter of Abraham" worthy of being "set free" on the *Sabbath as much as, if not more so, than a tethered, thirsty draught animal (Lk 13:15-16).

As for Mary Magdalene and company, Luke notably introduces them as disciples, alongside the "twelve" male "chosen" followers (cf. Lk 6:12-16), and as patrons of Jesus' movement as well as clients of his healing ministry. They "serve" (diakoneō) Jesus, like other women, but with their financial resources more than their domestic labor (Lk 8:1-3). As such, they must be women of some wealth: Mary may have been a successful, independent merchant from Magdala, a fish-processing center on the western shore of the Sea of Galilee, and Joanna likely had access to considerable means as the wife of a prominent Herodian official. As we noted (see 2.4 above), Mary and Magdalene and Joanna reemerge at the cross and empty tomb of Jesus, with the flashback allusion that they have followed Jesus from Galilee to Jerusalem (Lk 23:49; 24:6-8); but this belated mention of their presence is mitigated by their complete narrative absence between Luke 8 and Luke 23-24. Moreover, the male disciples' rejection of the women's Easter report diminishes the value of their witness in some measure, even though it remains true.

6. John.

Women portrayed in John's Gospel stand out for their direct speech. All the female characters engage in challenging conversation with Jesus. The emerging tensions concern the degree to which Jesus accepts, respects, and/or corrects these women's expressed viewpoints.

6.1. The Mother of Jesus (Jn 2:1-12; 19:26-27). Never named in John's Gospel, the mother of Jesus appears both at the beginning of his ministry and at the end of his life (see Mary, Mother of Jesus). At a wedding in Cana of Galilee she prompts the performance of Jesus' "first sign" (Jn 2:11). She informs him that the host family has run out of wine, which Jesus takes as her insistence that he rectify the problem. And his response is none too polite or compliant; literally, he retorts, "What [is it] to me and to you, woman! My hour is not yet here" (Jn 2:4). In other words, "You cannot tell me what to do; my schedule is divinely appointed." But not to be deterred, Jesus' mother immediately instructs the servants, "Do whatever he tells you to do" (Jn 2:5), thus maintaining Jesus' authority but still pressing her point. And indeed, Jesus proceeds to solve the shortage, just as his mother desired, transforming the "purification" water into superlative wine. Afterwards, Jesus heads to Capernaum with his mother, brothers and disciples, where they sojourn a few days (Jn 2:12); at this point, no distinction is made between natural and spiritual families of Jesus.

Jesus' mother completely drops out of the narrative until the crucifixion. Suspended from the cross, Jesus speaks to his mother (who does not speak back this time), commending her to the mutual love and care of her designated “son,” the ideal, beloved disciple (Jn 19:26-27). In this moving gesture Jesus appears to constitute the true family of God, composed of all “mothers” and “sons” who will follow him to the end and carry on his work.

6.2. The Samaritan Woman (Jn 4:4-42). The exchange between Jesus and the Samaritan woman by Jacob’s well near Sychar represents the longest sustained dialogue that he has with any character, male or female, in the Gospels. And, contrary to prejudicial opinion, this woman holds her own in the conversation; though initially confused about Jesus’ offer of “living water,” she progresses, through probing questions and comments, toward greater knowledge of his messianic vocation and leads her townspeople to faith in Christ. Her references to father Jacob (Jn 4:11-12), prophetic identity (Jn 4:19) and worship practices (Jn 4:20) demonstrate her biblical-theological literacy. True, the Samaritan woman focuses more on “earthly” elements (buckets, wells, mountains) than Jesus does, but in the process, as she learns from him, she also challenges him to embrace fully his incarnational vocation, which is both material and spiritual (“the Word became flesh” [Jn 1:14]).

As for the woman’s moral character, common assumptions of her licentious past outrun the textual evidence. To be sure, the narrative highlights her difficult marital history: implicitly, in Jesus’ engaging her at a well, evoking typical settings of marriage proposal (cf. Gen 24; 29:1-14; Ex 2:15-21); and explicitly, in Jesus’ revealing her having five ex-husbands and now living with a sixth man (Jn 4:16-18). The nature of these relationships, however, is never detailed. She may have been widowed or divorced multiple times, and her present arrangement may be a chaste one with a protective kinsman. In any case, the text nowhere labels her as a “prostitute” or “sinner” of any kind. Jesus discloses her marital status in order to reveal his deep knowledge of her experience, not to expose her sin or to offer her forgiveness. The woman’s checkered background reflects a hard life, but not necessarily a marginal one. She has “many” Samaritan friends and neighbors who “believe her word” of witness without demurral (Jn 4:39).

6.3. Martha and Mary (Jn 11:1-44; 12:1-8). The same sisters presented briefly in Luke 10:38-42 appear in a more extended story in John, surrounding the death and resuscitation of their brother, Lazarus, in Bethany. Martha again takes the lead in voicing her complaints to Jesus, this time about his tardiness in coming to Lazarus’s aid (“Lord, if you had been here, my brother would not have died” [Jn 11:21]) and his indecorum in requesting the removal of Lazarus’s tombstone (“Lord, he already stinks after four days” [Jn 11:39]). But Martha also expresses extraordinary faith in Jesus as Lord, Messiah and Son of God, who mediates God’s blessings of resurrection life. Although more intent on her brother’s resurrection “on the last day” than on Jesus’ plan to raise him now, she does affirm Jesus’ present and eternal identity (“I AM”) as “the resurrection and the life” (Jn 11:22-27).

Apart from echoing her sister’s sentiment about the lateness of Jesus’ arrival (Jn 11:32), Mary remains silent throughout the account. In conventional women’s grieving mode, she weeps at Jesus’ feet en route to Lazarus’s gravesite; significantly, however, she elicits Jesus’ deep, shared emotional response, including his crying with her (Jn 11:31-35). And then, after Lazarus’s resuscitation, she anoints Jesus’ feet with expensive perfume and wipes them with her hair at a home dinner party, reminiscent of the anointing scenes in the Synoptic Gospels. Here, however, Judas Iscariot emerges as the main objector to her prodigal action, which Jesus nonetheless confirms as a perceptive and passionate gesture of preburial preparation (Jn 12:3-8). Siblings Lazarus and Martha, though mentioned first, remain in Mary’s shadow. Martha’s role is now relegated to serving (diakoneō) dinner (Jn 12:2).

6.4. Mary Magdalene (Jn 20:1-18). In John’s Gospel, Mary Magdalene comes alone to Jesus’ garden tomb and is the first to find it empty. She reports this distressing news to three audiences: first, she runs to Simon Peter and the Beloved Disciple, adding, “We [other women implied?] do not know where they [unspecified] have laid him” (Jn 20:2); second, back at the open tomb she weeps (like Mary of Bethany) before two angels, declaring, “I do not know where they have laid him” (Jn 20:13); and third, continuing to weep, she turns, sees a man whom she takes to be the gardener, who in fact is the risen Jesus, and pleads, “Sir, if you have carried him off, tell me where you have put him, and I will take him” (Jn 20:15). These remarks reveal not only Mary’s anxiety and ignorance but also her determination to find her Lord’s body. In each case the hearers respond skeptically or dismissively to her report: first, the two male disciples run to check out Mary’s story and corroborate her testimony, but without ever acknowledging her directly (Jn 20:3-10); second, the two angelic visitors almost mock her as hysterical by querying, “Woman, why are you weeping?” (Jn 20:12-13); and third, the incognito Jesus repeats the angels' query and adds, somewhat cheekily, "Whom are you seeking?" (Jn 20:14-15). As knowing readers, we appreciate the humor in Jesus' tease, but the disconsolate Mary is in no mood to laugh.

Promptly, however, Jesus moves on to reveal his true identity by simply uttering, "Mariam" (Jn 20:16). Voice recognition of this "good shepherd" who knows his followers by name (cf. Jn 10:1-5) spurs Mary to call Jesus "Rabbouni" ("Teacher") and to hold him in loving embrace. In turn, Jesus resists her clinging, but not because he rejects her; quite the contrary, both he and she have urgent assignments to fulfill: Jesus must ascend to God the Father, and he commissions Mary to report her encounter with him to his "brother disciples" (Jn 20:16-18). Mary thus stands out as the first witness to the risen Christ in John's Gospel and as "apostle to the apostles." However, although the narrative confirms Mary's announcement to the male disciples, it stops short of recounting their response to her.

See also CHILD, CHILDREN; DIVORCE; FAMILY; FEMINIST AND WOMANIST CRITICISMS; MARY, MOTHER OF JESUS; SOCIAL-SCIENTIFIC CRITICISMS.

BIBLIOGRAPHY. R. Bauckham, Gospel Women: Studies of the Named Women in the Gospels (Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 2002); M. A. Beavis, The Lost Coin: Parables of Women, Work and Wisdom (BibSem 86; London: Sheffield Academic Press, 2002); L. H. Cohick, Women in the World of the Earliest Christians: Illuminating Ancient Ways of Life (Grand Rapids: Baker Academic, 2009); K. E. Corley, Private Women, Public Meals: Social Conflict in the Synoptic Tradition (Peabody, MA: Hendrickson, 1993); A. Fehribach, The Women in the Life of the Bridegroom: A Feminist Historical-Literary Analysis of the Female Characters in the Fourth Gospel (Collegeville, MN: Liturgical Press, 1998); F. T. Gench, Back to the Well: Women's Encounters with Jesus in the Gospels (Louisville: Westminster John Knox, 2004); T. Ilan, Jewish Women in Greco-Roman Palestine (Peabody, MA: Hendrickson, 1996); R. S. Kraemer, Her Share of the Blessings: Women's Religions among Pagans, Jews, and Christians in the Greco-Roman World (New York: Oxford University Press, 1992); R. S. Kraemer and M. R. D'Angelo, eds., Women and Christian Origins (New York: Oxford University Press, 1999); A.-J. Levine, ed., A Feminist Companion to Mark (FCNTECW 2; Sheffield: Sheffield Academic Press, 2001); idem, ed., A Feminist Companion to Matthew (FCNTECW 1; Sheffield: Sheffield Academic Press, 2001); idem, ed., A Feminist Companion to Luke (FCNTECW 3; London: Sheffield Academic Press, 2002); idem, ed., A Feminist Companion to John (2 vols.; FCNTECW 4-5; London: Sheffield Academic Press, 2003); E. Moltmann-Wendel, The Women Around Jesus (New York: Crossroad, 1997); C. Osiek and M. Y. MacDonald, with J. H. Tulloch, A Woman's Place: House Churches in Earliest Christianity (Minneapolis: Fortress, 2006); B. E. Reid, Choosing the Better Part? Women in the Gospel of Luke (Collegeville, MN: Liturgical Press, 1996); L. Schottroff, Let the Oppressed Go Free: Feminist Perspectives on the New Testament (Louisville: Westminster John Knox, 1993); E. Schüssler Fiorenza, Jesus: Miriam's Child, Sophia's Prophet; Critical Issues in Feminist Christology (New York: Continuum, 1994); T. K. Seim, The Double Message: Patterns of Gender in Luke and Acts (Nashville: Abingdon, 1994); F. S. Spencer, Dancing Girls, "Loose" Ladies and Women of "the Cloth": The Women in Jesus' Life (New York: Continuum, 2004); idem, Salty Wives, Spirited Mothers, and Savvy Widows: Capable Women of Purpose and Persistence in Luke's Gospel (Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 2012).

F. S. Spencer

WONDERS. See MIRACLES AND MIRACLE STORIES.

WORD. See LOGOS.

WORLD

The language of the Gospels provides us with no exact precedent for what we mean by "world," though kosmos comes close to doing this. The distinctiveness of the modern perception of the world constitutes a difficulty in the task of reconstructing ancient understandings of the world. Difficulty also arises because the Gospel writers did not give detailed accounts of their understandings of the world, though John comes closer to doing this than the Synoptics. When writing about the "world" in the Gospels, we must fill in gaps on the basis of what we suppose the authors would have known. It is frequently suggested that the writers of the NT thought of the earth as a disc upon which the heavens rest like a dome and under which the waters of the deep also formed the sea. But from the time of Aristotle the Greeks understood the world to be a sphere (Cael. II:2.285a.32), and perceptive attempts were made to calculate the circumference of the earth. It is not safe to assume that knowledge of this sort was foreign to the Gospel writers. It could also be a mistake to interpret biblical imagery as scientific description rather than as poetic portrayal.

1. Terminology and Usage
2. Age (Aiōn)
3. Earth (Gē)
4. Inhabited World (Oikoumenē)
5. World (Kosmos)

1. Terminology and Usage.

The Gospel writers build on both Jewish and Greek language traditions when writing of the world. The Greeks provided the word kosmos, which has become a technical term in Western tradition. By the first century A.D. this word was used to convey a complex range of meaning. The dominant sense of an ordered system had applications to areas other than cosmology. They do not concern us here. The kosmos is sometimes understood as planet earth but also, in a wider sense, as the universe. In this latter sense it has the same meaning as the OT expression “heaven and earth” (Heb. haššāmāyim wēhā’āreš) referring to the creation. Writers closely dependent on the OT used this language instinctively even though kosmos had become part of the vocabulary of Greek-speaking Jews. But the translators of the Greek version of the OT (LXX) had no cause to use the term kosmos because the natural translation for the Hebrew of “heaven and earth” is ouranos kai gē, and the OT has no single word that covers the same semantic area as kosmos. Consequently, it is only in the later books composed in Greek, such as Wisdom of Solomon (16x), 2 Maccabees (8x) and 4 Maccabees (4x), that kosmos is used. The Synoptic Gospels show a preference for the use of gē rather than kosmos. Matthew uses gē forty-three times, Mark nineteen times and Luke twenty-five times compared with the use of kosmos eight or nine times (textual variant: Mt 13:35), three times and three times respectively. The reverse tendency is seen in John, where kosmos is used seventy-eight times and gē thirteen times.

Two other expressions relate to what we mean by “world” and overlap the Greek use of kosmos. The first of these is oikoumenē, which is short for oikoumenē gē and was used in the LXX to translate the Hebrew ēbēl. In the poetic works of the OT ēbēl is frequently used in parallel with ’ereš (“earth”). By the time the Gospels were written, oikoumenē had come to mean “the inhabited world,” which sometimes was considered to be coterminous with the Roman Empire (see Rome). The second word is aiōn, which was used to translate the Hebrew ’ōlām. Both the Hebrew and the Greek words have a reference to time, but when used in the expression “this age,” they have substantially the same meaning as “this world.”

2. Age (Aiōn).

Here the Hebrew equivalent is ’ōlām. In the Synoptics the world is conceived as a temporal reality with beginning and end. Beyond that, it is also a new world (a notion found also in Stoicism) that finds expression in the terms “this age” and “the age to come,” expressions found on the lips of Jesus.

2.1. Mark. Jesus speaks of what awaits his disciples in this and the coming age (Mk 10:30 // Lk 18:30; cf. Mt 19:29). In the phrase “this age” the word used is kairos, while in “the coming age” it is aiōn (see Kingdom of God/Heaven). Strangely (see 2.2. below), Matthew omits this reference to the two ages. Reference to “the cares of the age” (Mk 4:19 // Mt 13:22 [Luke 8:14 has “cares . . . of life”]) is to be understood in terms of “this age.”

2.2. Matthew. Matthew has increased the references to the two ages by introducing these terms into a Markan context from which they were absent (Mt 12:32 // Mk 3:29 // Lk 3:10), by transforming the wording of “all things to be fulfilled” (synteleisthai panta [Mk 13:4, cf. Lk 21:7]) to “the fulfillment [end] of the age” (synteleias tou aiōnos [Mt 24:3]), and by introducing frequent references to “the end of the age” (Mt 13:39, 40, 49; 28:20).

2.3. Luke. Jesus speaks of “the sons of this age” (hoi huiōi tou aiōnos toutou), contrasting them with “the sons of light,” who also exist in the present time. The contrast suggests that “the sons of this age” are “the sons of darkness,” and “the sons of light” are “the sons of the age to come” (Lk 16:8). In Luke 20:34-35 “the sons of this age” are contrasted with “those who are accounted worthy to attain to that age and the resurrection from the dead.” The two ages appear to be in sequence, present and future. Apparently, “the sons of light” (Lk 16:8) are those thought worthy to attain to “that age.”

The language of the two ages, a feature of Jewish apocalyptic, probably was characteristic of the teaching of Jesus, being found in Mark and the traditions peculiar to Matthew and Luke. Matthew, influenced by Jewish apocalyptic, has increased the use of this language. It is altogether absent from Q and from John, though John’s use of “this world” (kosmos) is formally similar but, on closer inspection, differs in meaning.

3. Earth (Gē).

Here the Hebrew equivalent is ’ereš. Each of the four Gospels uses the word “earth” to mean “soil,” a particular “land” and the planet “earth,” though the last sense is rarely found in John. It is evident in the phrase “heaven and earth,” in which the OT spoke of creation, an idiom familiar to Jesus and found in each of the Synoptics but not in John. Sayings that have reference only to the earth can be ambiguous because gē can mean “soil” and “land” as well as the planet “earth.”

3.1. Mark. Jesus asserts that “heaven and earth will pass away” (Mk 13:31 // Mt 24:35 // Lk 21:33), a notion consistent with the language of the two ages. Jesus claims, “The Son of Man has authority to forgive sins on earth” (Mk 2:10 // Mt 9:6 // Lk 5:24) (see Forgiveness of Sins). The authenticity of this saying, along with the other *Son of Man sayings, has been hotly debated. It asserts the universal authority of the Son of Man on earth. Two other uses of “earth” by Mark (Mk 4:31; 9:3) are omitted by Matthew and Luke, though they make use of the parable of the mustard seed and the narrative of the transfiguration from Mark. The mustard seed is described as the smallest of seeds on earth, and Jesus’ clothing is described as whiter than any fuller on earth could achieve. Both could be considered as Markan editorial comments. In Mark the finite character of the creation and the universal nature of Jesus’ authority are affirmed.

3.2. Q Material. Jesus asserts that “heaven and earth will pass away” (Mt 5:18 // Lk 16:17). He says, “I thank you, Father, Lord of heaven and earth” (Mt 11:25 // Lk 10:21), affirming God’s lordship over all creation. Referring to his own mission, Jesus says, “Do not suppose that I came to bring peace on earth” (Mt 10:34 // Lk 12:51); and contrasting the response to his word, he tells his hearers that “the Queen of the South came from the ends of the earth to hear the wisdom of Solomon” (Mt 12:42 // Lk 11:31). Matthew appears to have added reference to “the heart of the earth” in a Q context (Mt 12:40 // Lk 11:30) and may have omitted it from another (Mt 16:3 // Lk 12:56), though it is more likely that Luke has added it along with the reference to “hypocrites,” which Matthew is not likely to have omitted. As in Mark, the finite character of the creation is clear. God’s lordship over creation is affirmed, and Jesus’ mission is further clarified in terms of conflict with the world.

3.3. Matthew. Jesus promised the meek that they would inherit the earth (Mt 5:5), meaning either the promised land or the world (see Sermon on the Mount/Plain). He tells the disciples, “You are the salt of the earth” (Mt 5:13), a Matthean saying combined with Markan material (Mk 9:50). He forbids swearing by heaven or earth (Mt 5:34–35) and teaches the disciples to pray, “Let your will be done, as in heaven so on earth” (Mt 6:10), which may be a Matthean interpretation of the petition (found also in Lk 11:2)

“Let your kingdom come.” He admonishes, “Do not store up treasures on earth” (Mt 6:19). The relative value of earthly possessions is a dominant theme in Luke. Distinctive to Matthew are the sayings to Peter (Lk 16:19) and the *disciples (Lk 18:18) about binding and loosing on earth with apparent consequent effects in heaven. The closest parallel in meaning, though not in language, is found in John 20:23, which is expressed in terms of forgiving sins. The thought of the influence of earth on heaven is continued where Jesus says that the agreed request of two disciples on earth will be granted by “my Father in heaven” (Mt 18:19). In the idiom of apocalyptic Jesus speaks of “the kings of the earth” (Mt 17:25) and “the tribes of the earth” (Mt 24:5), which appears to be Matthean redaction introduced into a Markan context (Mk 13:2 // Lk 21:27). Finally, Jesus asserts, “All authority in heaven and earth has been given to me” (Mt 28:18), and he commissions his disciples to continue his mission, promising to be with them until the end of the age (Mt 28:20). While the relative value of the created order is maintained, *salvation is increasingly interpreted in terms of this world. The lordship ascribed by Jesus to his Father in Q is claimed by him in Matthew, and indeed his authority is extended to his disciples as they carry on his *mission to the world.

3.4. Luke. At the *birth of Jesus the angels announce “peace on earth” (Lk 2:14), a view of Jesus’ mission apparently in conflict with the Q saying of Jesus, “Do not suppose that I came to bring peace on earth” (Mt 10:34 // Lk 12:51). Consistent with the Q saying, Luke’s “I came to cast fire on earth” (Lk 12:49) could be part of Q not used by Matthew. Jesus asks, “When the Son of Man comes, will he find faith on earth?” (Lk 18:8), and in the Markan context of the apocalyptic discourse Jesus in Luke refers to distress (anankē) on earth (Lk 21:23; cf. Mk 13:19) and anxiety (synochē) of the nations on earth (Lk 21:25; cf. Mk 13:25) and warns that “that day will come upon all who dwell on the face of all the earth” (Lk 21:35 [cf. Mk 13:33–34; Lk 21:36]). Luke may reduce the political scandal of Jesus’ life, but the crisis of his mission remains clear, and the *apocalyptic expectation of the end of the age is undiminished.

3.5. John. References to planet earth are few because John has favored the use of kosmos. In John 3:31 there are three references to being “of the earth” (ek tēs gēs), the equivalent of being “from below” (katō) as opposed to “from above” (anō) (see Jn 8:23). In John 12:32 “lifted up from the ground” (cf. Jn 3:14) is intended to have overtones of leaving the world (cf. Jn 3:13). Jesus, the Son of Man, is exalted from earth to heaven by way of the cross upon which he is lifted up from the earth. Finally, Jesus asserts, “I glorified you [the Father] upon earth” (Jn 17:4). Although the antithesis between heaven and earth is strong in John, the mission of the heavenly emissary is carried out on earth for the sake of those on earth.

4. Inhabited World (Oikoumenē).

Here the Hebrew equivalent is tēbēl. Oikoumenē is used only fifteen times in the NT, of which Luke the evangelist is responsible for eight (Luke 3x; Acts 5x). It is used once in Matthew 24:14 in the context of the Markan apocalyptic discourse to assert that before the end comes the *gospel of the kingdom must first be preached in the whole inhabited world. Here Matthew’s use of oikoumenē is an interpretation of Mark’s “all the nations” (ta ethnē [Mk 13:10]). In the Q account of the *temptation narrative, where Jesus is shown all the kingdoms of the world, Luke’s use of oikoumenē (Lk 4:5) probably is redactional, being more appropriate to the political sense than Matthew’s kosmos (Mt 4:8). Luke 2:1 refers to the decree to tax “the whole world”—in other words, “the entire Roman Empire.” Luke also probably has introduced oikoumenē into the Markan apocalyptic discourse when Jesus warns of people fainting with fear and foreboding of what is coming upon the inhabited world (Lk 21:26). Thus, this and the other use of oikoumenē by Jesus (Mt 24:14) probably are due to the redaction by Matthew and Luke.

5. World (Kosmos).

Thus far there has been little discussion of John’s view of the world. This now changes because together, John’s Gospel and 1 John provide more than half of the uses of kosmos in the NT. Only Paul in 1 Corinthians comes even close to this frequency of use. Paul uses kosmos forty-seven times, twenty-one of these in 1 Corinthians.

Jesus asks about the value of gaining the whole world but losing life itself (Mt 16:26 // Mk 8:36 // Lk 9:25). This relative value of possessions was an important emphasis in the teaching of Jesus. Jesus says that wherever the gospel is preached in the whole world, the details of his anointing will be spoken of (Mt 26:13 // Mk 14:9). This notion of the gospel being preached universally probably was introduced by Mark or the tradition that came to him, as is suggested by the use of the word “gospel” (euangelion). In the longer ending of Mark (Mk 16:15) Jesus commissioned the disciples, “Go into all world [kosmos] and proclaim the gospel to the whole creation [ktisis].” This text has no strong claim to contain authentic Markan tradition, let alone be among genuine sayings of Jesus.

5.1. Foundation of the World (katabolē kosmou); Beginning of the World (archē kosmou). Jesus spoke of “the blood of all the prophets shed from the foundation of the world” (Lk 11:50 [cf. Mt 23:35]). Into the Markan framework of the explanation of *parables (Mk 4:33-34) Matthew has inserted as his commentary Psalm 78:2: “I will open my mouth in parables, I will utter what has been hidden since the foundation of the world” (Mt 13:35). John’s *Christology is expressed when Jesus asserts the Father’s love for him “before the foundation of the world” (Jn 17:24 [cf. Jn 17:5]). In the parable of the great judgment the king tells those on his right hand, “Inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world” (Mt 25:34). The “beginning of the world” (archē kosmou) has the same meaning (Mt 24:21). The Markan parallel has “from the beginning of the creation” (ap’ archēs ktiseōs [Mk 13:19]). The latter phrase also is used by Jesus in his discussion of marriage and *divorce, arguing that “from the beginning of creation God made them male and female” (Mk 10:6). In this way the idea of the creation by God was clearly expressed in the teaching of Jesus and finds expression in each of the Gospels.

5.2. The World of Humankind. “The nations of the world” (ta ethnē tou kosmou [Lk 12:30]) (see Gentiles) and “the kingdoms of the world” (hai basileiai tou kosmou [Mt 4:8]), like the references to the kings of the earth and the tribes of the earth (Mt 17:25; 24:30), refer to the world of humankind and might have used the term oikoumenē. Jesus tells the disciples, “You are the salt of the earth [gē]” (Mt 5:13), and follows that by saying, “You are the light of the world [kosmos]” (Mt 5:14). In Hebrew this parallelism might have been expressed using ēreṣ and tēbēl. John may have developed the discipleship saying in a christological direction when Jesus claims, “I am the light of the world [kosmos]” (Jn 8:12; 9:5). In the parable of the tares it is explained that the field is the world (Mt 13:38). Woe is pronounced on the world of humankind (Mt 18:7). This reminds us that this world, though the creation of God, is dominated by the *demonic. That the world is under the power of evil and needs to be liberated by God is part of the apocalyptic worldview that dominates the Synoptics, especially Mark. Jesus’ role in inaugurating the kingdom of God is expressed in exorcisms. They are evidence that the present world ruler has been overthrown and that the kingdom of God is already dawning (Mk 3:20-30; Mt 12:2 // Lk 11:20).

5.3. John. John’s prologue (Jn 1:1-18) provides a detailed reinterpretation of the Genesis creation story. A Jewish understanding of creation is daringly reinterpreted in the light of faith in Jesus as the savior of the world. Here the kosmos is first the universe, the totality of the creation. The word is used four times in the prologue, but the most emphatic statement occurs in John 1:3: "All things [panta] were made [egeneto] by him, and without him was not anything made that was made." Speaking of the creation in terms of "the all" may owe something to the influence of Platonism, though precedent can also be found in Jewish tradition. What is distinctive about the prologue is that the mediating role of the logos in creation is identified with the figure of Jesus.

The form and content of the prologue raise questions about its milieu. R. Bultmann argued that this is to be found in the syncretistic Jewish baptist movement influenced by gnosis. Certainly the view of the world in John's Gospel, among other matters, sets it apart from the Synoptics (see Synoptics and John). Like the writings of Philo, John shares a concentrated use of kosmos that signals a form of Hellenistic influence scarcely to be found in the Synoptics. Concentrated use of kosmos is matched by the distinctly dualistic framework in which it is set with references to "this world" (planet earth) and "the judgment of the prince of this world" (Jn 12:31; 14:30; 16:11). This world is not contrasted with some future world; rather, the world below is contrasted with the world above, the world of darkness with the world of light (see Light and Darkness). This world, though created by the logos, is ruled by the prince of this world. In John only Jesus is accused of demon possession; there are no exorcisms. Nevertheless, Jesus' struggle with the prince of this world is a central feature further accentuated by the antithesis of light and darkness dominating this Gospel.

Jesus, the emissary from above, has come into this world (Jn 1:9, 10; 3:16, 17, 19; 6:14; 10:36; 11:27; 12:46; 16:28; 17:18, 21, 23; 18:37). His mission was an expression of God's love for the world (Jn 3:16). This world is dominated by darkness and the prince of this world. The world in view is humankind. The coming of the emissary was to save, not to condemn, the world (Jn 3:17; 4:42; 6:33, 51; 12:47), but condemnation is inevitable where the saving mission is rejected (Jn 9:39). The coming of the emissary is expressed in terms of the coming of the light into the world as the light of the world (Jn 3:19; 8:12; 9:5; 12:46). The light does not belong to the world (Jn 8:23; 17:16; 18:36) but has come to reveal the Father and his love for the world (Jn 14:31; 17:21, 23-24). His coming was to bring life to the world (Jn 6:33) by giving his life for the world (Jn 1:29; 6:51). Having entered the world and completed his mission, the emissary departs from it (Jn 13:1; 14:19; 16:28), having commissioned his disciples to continue his mission to the world (Jn 17:21, 23). Those who are called out from the world (by the emissary) and no longer belong to it (Jn 15:19; 17:6, 11, 14, 16) are consequently hated by it, as the emissary himself was hated (Jn 15:18, 19; 17:14). The mission was made possible by the coming of the Paraclete/Spirit of truth (see Holy Spirit) to expose the world to the truth revealed by the light (Jn 3:19-21; 16:8). Yet the world does not recognize the Spirit, just as it did not recognize the emissary. It knows only the mission of Jesus and those who continue his mission. Only those who believe perceive the light of the world, which has the power to transform those who belong to the world so that their lives are shaped by the light from above.

In John the focus moves from the world perceived as creation to the world of humankind dominated by the darkness of false loves, false values, false knowledge and to the mission to save the world. Much of this interpretation of the world is given in the words of the narrator (Jn 1:9-10; 3:16-17, 19) or other characters, such as *John the Baptist (Jn 1:29), the *Samaritans (Jn 4:42) and the crowd (Jn 6:14) (see People, Crowd), in addition to Jesus himself. Jesus, narrator and believing *witnesses present a consistent view of the world, its predicament and its salvation.

See also APOCALYPTICISM AND APOCALYPTIC TEACHING; DEMON, DEVIL, SATAN; ESCHATOLOGY; KINGDOM OF GOD/HEAVEN; LIGHT AND DARKNESS.

BIBLIOGRAPHY. J. Botha and P. Rousseau, "For God Did Not So Love the Whole World—Only Israel! John 3:16 Revisited," HvTSt 61 (2005) 1149-68; R. Bultmann, Theology of the New Testament, trans. K. Grobel (2 vols.; New York: Scribner, 1951-1955); idem, "The Understanding of Man and the World in the New Testament and in the Greek World," in Essays, Philosophical and Theological (London: SCM, 1955) 67-89; C. H. Dodd, The Interpretation of the Fourth Gospel (Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 1953); G. Gloege, "Welt"; J. Klein, "Weltanschauung"; E. Dinkler and H.-H. Schrey, "Weltbild," RGK 6:1595-629; G. Johnston, "Oikoumene and kosmos in the New Testament," NTS 10 (1963-1964) 352-60; O. Michel, "οἰκουμένη," TDNT 5:157-59; J. Painter, "A Review of Belief in the World: Reading John 1-4," Pacifica 7.1 (1994) 85-94; J. T. Pennington, Heaven and Earth in the Gospel of Matthew (NovTSup 126; Leiden: E. J. Brill, 2007); H. Sasse, "αἰών, αἰώνιος," TDNT 1:197-209; idem, "γῆ," TDNT 1:677-81; idem, "κόσμος," TDNT 3:868-95; R.

Schnackenburg, Christian Existence in the New Testament, trans. F. Wieck (2 vols.; Notre Dame, IN: University of Notre Dame Press, 1968) 1:190-228; 2:184-229; R. Tuppurainen, "The Whole World or Not Quite: ΚΟΣΜΟΣ in John 16:8," JECH 1 (2011) 165-84. J. Painter

WORSHIP

The Gospels find their beginning and end in adoration of *God; indeed, several begin and end with acts of worship. However, they neither stress worship as a separate subject nor describe worship in the first century A.D.

1. Introduction
2. Worship: Corporate and Personal
3. Worship and the Word
4. Worship and Koinōnia
5. Particular Tendencies in Each Gospel
6. The Gospels as Evidence for Liturgy in Earliest Christianity

1. Introduction.

1.1. Language for Worship in the Gospels. A survey shows all of the words commonly translated as "worship" (either verb or noun): sebomai ("I fear, revere") in Matthew 15:9 // Mark 7:7; latreia ("service") in John 16:2; latreuō ("I serve") in Luke 1:74; 2:37; Matthew 4:10 // Luke 4:8; leitourgia (liturgical "duty") in Luke 1:34; proskyneō ("I bow, come forward to kiss") in Matthew 2:2, 8; 4:9-10; 20:20; Luke 4:7-8; 24:52; John 4:20-24; 12:20.

All four Gospels show a marked preference for the colorful verb proskyneō. Because they suggestively disclose the identity of Jesus as the unique *Son, the ambiguity of proskyneō (which can depict "homage" to a human) is convenient. For example, Matthew pictures the magi seeking to revere the signaled messiah, but in the eyes of faithful readers their quest may indicate the glory of Jesus, who alone is to be worshiped with God (cf. Mt 4:9-10; 10:25-27). Although there is controversy concerning the best reading and appropriate translation of Luke 24:52 (compare RSV with NRSV), many maintain that the Gospel ends with a tableau in which disciples worship the ascending Jesus before returning to the temple, blessing God (see Ascension). In the Gospels, then, the worship of the God of Israel is assumed, while the worship of Jesus is (at the very least) suggested.

1.2. Second Temple and Greco-Roman Contexts. The study of worship in the Gospels would be simpler had we easy access to practices immediately preceding and contemporaneous to these writings.

However, Second Temple Judaism was complex and diversified, and we speak about first-century A.D. "Judaisms" in the plural, with all that this implies concerning both belief and practice. Worship was attached to certain centers: to the temple in Jerusalem, to other traditional holy places (particularly in Samaria), to the gatherings of separatist communities that were critical of the temple as it had developed (e.g., the Qumran community or communities), to the evolving institution of the synagogue, and to the family home, where prayers were offered over bread.

*Temple worship is so emphasized in the OT that we might forget that Judaism was practiced in different ways, even to the point of establishing rival temples (e.g., in Leontopolis and Heliopolis). The ongoing controversy with the northern peoples is documented for us in John 4 in the exchange between Jesus and the *Samaritan woman concerning the center of worship. Although we can deduce that festivals or *feasts described in the OT were celebrated in the temple, we have little direct knowledge of first-century A.D. prayers or the state of a lectionary; for such matters we are reliant on later Jewish texts, which may not accurately reflect the earlier period. There were also *synagogues, or houses of prayer, scattered throughout the Diaspora and even in Jerusalem itself. Yet, excavations of such places show no normative structure, and as for what went on, beyond the reading of the scrolls, we cannot be sure, since our earliest knowledge of synagogue worship dates mostly from the fourth century A.D. It may well be that the focus of the *Pharisees (antecedent to rabbinic Judaism) upon the Torah led to an increased importance of the synagogues, where Torah dominated, even prior to the fall of the temple and the deliberations at Yavneh (Jamnia).

We are more fortunate in our knowledge of non-Jewish worship practices in the Roman Empire and its provinces, which were legion. However, since early Christians, with the rest of Second Temple Judaism, eschewed all such worship as idolatrous, the value of this knowledge in tracing the development of early Christian worship is marginal. From pagan cults, however, we can deduce the political and the social importance of religion (reflected also in the satirical language deployed in the book of Revelation, with its critique of "Babylon"); to remember this entanglement is salutary for twenty-first-century readers accustomed to the separation of church and state. Further, even where an individual or a community was henotheistically devoted to one particular god or goddess, the idea of a radical monotheism was foreign. Thus, Christians were dubbed “atheists” because they rejected the pantheon (see Gods, Greek and Roman). The fairly early (second century?) decision of some Christian communities no longer to use musical instruments in worship may reflect their self-differentiation from pagan cults. What else would have caused them to abandon the OT practice, so vividly illustrated in Psalm 150? It is possible that some of the early hymns to Christ were influenced by Gentile forms, but as in the case of second Temple Judaism, there is a paucity of information available (see Songs and Hymns). Early Christian hymns were manifestly related to their OT antecedents (e.g., the Magnificat [Lk 1:46-55]; cf. the psalms) but, heeding Jesus’ rebuke in Matthew 6:7, they did not follow pagan conventions such as the proliferations of names, titles and attributes seen in, for example, the Homeric Hymn to Artemis or Isidorus’s four hymns to Isis.

All in all, it may be that the Gospels are as useful in providing students with insight into contemporaneous Jewish and pagan worship (allowing for the biases of a community that was crystallizing its identity) as are these communities helpful in providing models by which we can understand developing Christian worship. We may assert, however, that early Christian worship was variously influenced by temple and synagogue (for a number of priests were “obedient to the faith,” and Saul/Paul was a rabbi). Given the incarnational character of this nascent movement, it is not impossible that non-Jewish elements were incorporated into worship, as part of the “riches of the nations” (Rev 21:26). An unambiguous tracing of such processes, however, remains beyond our reach; we must look to the Gospels themselves in search of our quarry.

2. Worship: Corporate and Personal.

Typically, worship is characterized in the Gospels as a corporate act. Personal worship or *prayer is also featured, but it is not played off against corporate worship. Indeed, the epitome of *hypocritical prayer is seen in the insulated figure of the Pharisee who “prays with himself” (Lk 18:11) even while in the temple. Worship as something done by the gathered faithful is exemplified in Jesus’ own habit of attending synagogue (Mk 10:1), a pattern emulated by the disciples in Acts. Matthew’s Gospel begins with Gentile magi (plural) who seek to worship the messiah of Israel. As Luke’s Gospel opens, we see Zechariah interceding for believers in the temple, and then we hear Mary exult in God “helping Israel” according to the promises made to her fathers (Lk 1:54-55).

In John’s Gospel Jesus speaks to the woman at the well concerning the “worshippers” (plural) whom God seeks (Jn 4:23), and he prays his high priestly prayer on behalf of the disciples and those who will believe because of them (Jn 17:23).

2.1. Worship as Response to God’s Actions Among the People. Because of the long-standing translation in hymnody and popular piety of Jesus’ words “the kingdom of God is entos hymin” (Lk 17:21) as “the kingdom is within you,” we tend to forget that hymin (“you”) is plural and so to believe that Jesus individualized faith. In this view, the reign of Christ within the individual heart is sharply distinguished from the mistaken idea of first-century A.D. Jewish people, who envisaged the *kingdom of God as a concrete, social reality. However, Jesus’ challenge here is different. He is alerting his generation to the new thing that God is doing “among you” (entos hymin), neither drawing a distinction between the physical and the spiritual nor championing individual, internalized worship. He is provoking the Pharisees to see what is immediately among them: God is here materially in Jesus, but unrecognized. He is longing like a hen to gather the chicks, his people, under his wings, but they “would not” (Mt 23:37). This is consonant with the Fourth Gospel’s lament, “He came to what was his own, and his own [people] did not receive him” (Jn 1:11). Worship is not directed toward a God who simply cares for the human soul; rather, the Gospels observe that God, in Jesus, seeks a whole people to worship in Spirit and in truth: “The Father seeks such as these to worship him” (Jn 4:2).

So it is that Jesus weeps over Jerusalem and appeals, from the cross, “Father, forgive them” (Lk 23:34). Indeed, when the disciples ask him, “Teach us to pray” (Lk 11:1), Jesus does not correct the “us” but rather goes on to model a collective prayer: “Our Father . . . give us this day . . . forgive us our sins . . . lead us not into temptation” (Lk 11:2-4). It is interesting that the pronoun used to address the Lord is the second-person singular (“thy kingdom . . . thy will” in the Old English), even while the voice of the petitions is in the first-person plural (“us, we”). The God of the Gospels proves himself personal when his people pray together. A document roughly contemporaneous with the Gospels, the Didache (Did. 10), reproduces this prayer and prescribes that it be prayed thrice daily—a parallel to the Jewish practice of reciting the blessings known as the Tefillah. Early Christians, it seems, prayed together and at set hours.

2.2. Worship in the Body. But are there not some verses that suggest that Jesus intended to establish an interior, spiritualized worship that rejected the temple? What of the “cleansing” of the temple (see Temple Act) and Jesus’ injunction to enter “the closet” when praying? Let us recall that Jesus deemed the temple a place of prayer for all nations (Mk 11:17 par.) and did much of his teaching there. Luke presents the boy Jesus as industrious “in [his] Father’s house” (Lk 2:49), and the earliest community as continuing this attachment (e.g., Lk 24:53; Acts 3:1-3). Jesus clearly enacted a prophecy of judgment against the temple, but his critique was not a movement from the physical to the spiritual. Rather, the Gospels envision a displacement of the humanly built temple with Jesus, the embodied “temple built without hands” (Mk 14:58; Jn 2:21; cf. Acts 7:49-56), and by extension, with the people of Jesus, God’s “house” (cf. 1 Pet 2:5). The transformation, then, is not from the physical to the abstractly spiritual, but rather from the temple and Torah as centers of worship to the person of Jesus, and the worship of the Holy God by those gathered in him.

Similarly, privatized prayer is not enjoined in Jesus’ command “But when you [sg.] pray, go into your inner room and shut the door and pray to your Father, who is in the hidden place; and your Father who sees in the hidden place will reward you” (Mt 6:6). Here is no aphorism meant to disqualify or qualify the importance of corporate prayer. Rather, the attack is on the political use of prayer to “win friends and influence people.” The words about the inner chamber are positive instructions replacing the selfish motivation for prayer that the Gospel rejects: “When you pray, you must not be like the hypocrites; for they love to stand and pray in the synagogues and at the street corners, that they may be seen by people. Truly, I say to you, they have received their reward” (Mt 6:5).

Jesus does pray alone at key moments in the Gospels: at the calling of his disciples (Lk 6:12), in the garden (Mt 26:36-37), and with only three (or five?) disciples at his *transfiguration (Lk 9:28). Even here, Jesus’ “solitary” prayer is contextualized within the community: it leads to the calling of the Twelve and the giving of his life for many. His prayers on the Mount of Transfiguration are joined by the old-covenant representatives *Moses and *Elijah and transform his three apostles as he apprentices them for the sake of the church. We discern in Jesus’ model sacrificial worship that brings to memory the needs of God’s people, and that is answered by ministration of mysterious agents of God (Mt 4:11; cf. later textual variants concerning an angel at Lk 22:43). He is alone only in a restricted sense, for worship involves the whole people of God and indeed the entire created order.

3. Worship and the Word.

3.1. Worship and the Proclaimed Scriptures. The Gospels also portray, both by implicit and explicit means, a strong connection between worship and the reading or proclamation of God’s word. In Luke 1:46-55 Mary exults in words recalling OT praises (1 Sam 2:1-10; Ps 34:1-3; 89:10-13; 103:17; Hab 3:18; Sir 10:14). In both Matthew 4:10 and Luke 4:8 Jesus highlights worship while quoting Scripture to rebuke the enemy: humans live by the word of God, and they are meant to worship God alone. Jesus’ public adult ministry begins in Luke’s Gospel with the reading of Isaiah in the synagogue, first in Nazareth, and then in Capernaum (Lk 4:16-22, 31-32 // Mt 13:53; Mk 6:1-6), even as the boy Jesus has already been pictured “going up” to the Jerusalem feast and sitting among the scribes while handling Torah (Lk 2:41-48). His treatment of Scripture in the place of worship leads to the “amazement” or “astonishment” of all who hear him speak (Mt 13:54; Mk 6:2; Lk 2:48; 4:22, 32). Luke provides an ironic picture for readers who know the whole Gospel: the one who is the temple sits in the temple of Jerusalem; the one who gathers sits in the gathering, and, by his interpretation of the word, he amazes those who do not recognize him. Worship, word and the revelation of this one merge both in the temple and in the synagogue. In these pictures the evangelist commends to the perceptive reader the model of Mary, “who kept all these things in her heart” (Lk 2:5).

3.2. New-Covenant Priestly Handling of the Word. It is easy to assume, when we discern quotations, allusions or echoes to Scripture in the Gospels, that these function as teaching moments only. Certainly, the evangelists are modeling for us the manner in which the earliest Christian communities read and interpreted the Scriptures, so as to point to Christ (cf. Lk 24:27, 44-45). However, there is also an explicit link of the written word with worship. It may well be that the evangelists shared what seems to have been a rabbinic conviction: a reverent handling of the Scriptures is the equivalent of temple service (cf. m. Menah. 13:10; b. Menah. 110a). Christian tradition too came to see believers as “a kingdom of priests” because of the high priest, Jesus. Certainly, we are told that Jesus’ own “opening of the Scriptures” caused “hearts to burn” and led to joyful praise (Lk 24:32). Throughout the Gospels we find embedded various portions of the OT, explicitly studding the pages of Matthew and also present in various degrees of clarity in the other Gospels. In some cases, these references may well reflect use of Scripture in early Christian worship, which retained some continuity with the synagogue; the verses also make their mark upon subsequent readers, encouraging us to worship as well.

3.3. Worship and the Last Supper. Especially instructive are the OT allusions surrounding the episodes of the *Last Supper (Mt 26:26-30; Mk 14:22-26; Lk 22:15-23; cf. 1 Cor 11:23-25), with Jesus' arrest and passion. Although the Last Supper narratives are brief, they are suggestive of early eucharistic models that retained features of the Passover meal. (Care must be taken here to avoid both of two extremes: on the one hand, a "panliturgical" confidence that discerns liturgy everywhere in the NT, despite literary silence concerning the shape of first-century A.D. Jewish liturgy and early Christian worship, and, on the other hand, the assumption that Christians broke entirely from their Jewish past into a "free" worship such as that championed in ultra-Protestant communities today.) Reference to prayers of "blessing" (eulogeō) or "thanksgiving" (eucharisteō) given over the bread and cup are consonant with the Passover: Luke's version seemingly features two cups with an interpretation of the second cup, and this is reminiscent of the symbolic discourse of the Passover meal, which had four cups (cf. m. Pesah. 10:1-7). Original readers taught to read the OT in the light of Christ would hear the expressions "Passover," "suffering," "fruit of the vine," "new covenant in my blood" (or "my blood of the covenant") and "poured out" and be reminded of numerous psalms and scriptural passages, including the original covenant of Exodus 24:3-11, the Passover narratives, Psalm 80 (with its cry that the Lord return), Isaiah 53, Zechariah 9:11 and other psalms "of the suffering righteous one" (eg., Pss 10; 27; 37; 38; 41; and esp. Ps 22).

The language not only integrates the Last Supper with key OT readings, but also lends a solemnity to the passage, by which Jesus is exalted at the point of his humiliation. In two versions (Mt 26:30; Mk 14:26) the episode is capped by the singing of hymns, a reflection of the Passover singing of Psalms 115-118: "I will offer to you the sacrifice of thanksgiving and call upon the name of the LORD" (Ps 116:17). Similarly, the sustained presence of Psalm 22 and other dramatic passages (e.g., Is 53; Zech 9-14) in the narratives of the passion call forth adoration on the part of a faithful readership. Clearly, the aim of all four evangelists (as articulated explicitly by one of them in Jn 20:31) is to move readers beyond the blindness of those who search the Scriptures, not recognizing that they testify to the Messiah (cf. Jn 5:39). The purpose of the word is not simply to instruct, but to be a vehicle of praise, blessing and thanksgiving.

4. Worship and Koinōnia.

4.1. Worship Gathered Around Jesus. Finally, the Gospels link together the theme of worship with that of koinōnia, or communion with God and with the entire faithful community. Worship is pictured as entrance into that communion, as we vividly perceive in the Lukan version of Jesus' transfiguration (Lk 9:28-36), where Peter, James and John behold the glorified Jesus and themselves enter the Shekinah cloud (the dwelling place of God's presence). In Mark's Gospel the feedings of the four thousand and five thousand issue in the gathering of all the fragments into baskets (first twelve, then seven), a detail underscored by Jesus' pointed questions in Mark 8:18-21: he is gathering a community as he teaches and feeds. Close attention to the feeding episodes of the Gospels, coupled with the description of the early church's worship in Acts 2:41-42, leads us to ask whether at least Luke and John intend readers to link worship with the table, as well as with the word. At any rate, in all four Gospels the gathering of the community occurs around Jesus, and it is by means of his actions, blessing and prayers that this new community is granted the ability to rightly worship the true God.

4.2. Worship with the Son. In the Synoptics Gospels the dramatic climax of Jesus' teaching occurs in the parable of the wicked tenants (Mt 21:33-46; Mk 12:1-12; Lk 20:9-19), which has embedded within it Psalm 118:22-23: "The stone that the builders rejected has become the cornerstone. . . . It is amazing in our eyes!" Earlier in Jesus' ministry the so-called Johannine bolt from the blue (Mt 11:25-27 // Lk 10:21-22) depicted Jesus in prayer, "rejoicing in the Holy Spirit" and "giving praise." In this worship, by which the Son communes with the Spirit and the Father, Jesus describes the passing down of this life from the Father to himself and then to the faithful "little ones" to whom the Father is revealed. The disciples are "blessed" (Lk 10:23-24) because in their sight and hearing are fulfilled the promises given to prophets and kings. Similarly in the climactic John 12, where worship in Jerusalem is joined to the quest of Greeks to see Jesus, Jesus declares that the *Son of Man is to be glorified, and the Father announces that he will glorify Jesus (Jn 12:20-28). The twin themes of worship and communion are most fully expressed in John 14-17, where Jesus prays that all who follow him (Jn 17:20) be admitted into the life of God and behold his *glory—that is, that they might worship: “I in them and thou in me, that they may become perfectly one” (Jn 17:23). As Mary Magdalene learns on Easter morning, it is because of incorporation into the Son that worshipers may now call upon God as “Father”: “Tell my disciples . . . that I am ascending to my Father and to your [pl.] Father” (Jn 20:17).

5. Particular Tendencies in Each Gospel.

The presence of common themes in Matthew, Mark, Luke and John demonstrate that the Gospels, for all their particularities, evince more similarities than differences in their approach to worship. However, some specific tendencies can be traced as we compare the four. Structurally, we may contrast Matthew with Luke, in that Matthew begins and ends his narrative explicitly with worship of Jesus (Mt 2:2, 8, 11; 28:9, 17), while Luke begins and ends in the temple, thus stressing a continuity with the old covenant and the worship of God. Mark more typically portrays Jesus as gathering a community for worship than as the object of adoration in himself (though the amazement of the crowd subtly gestures at this); John, in contrast, establishes and concludes his Gospel with christological worship (Jn 1:1; 20:28), sustaining this by means of OT imagery and feasts interpreted in the light of Jesus. While Luke portrays Jesus as the model pray-er and worshiper, who frequents the temple, John has the most material on worship per se and (as is typical of his style) leads readers to meditate at length on the true meaning of worship (Jn 4) for those who are associated with the Messiah and who receive the *Holy Spirit. These particular tendencies provide a thick and varied description of worship as a personal and corporate response to God’s mighty acts, as informed by the OT Scriptures (particularly the psalms) and expressed by means of those sacred writings, and as explicitly gathered around the figure of Jesus, who makes such worship and communion possible.

6. The Gospels as Evidence for Liturgy in Earliest Christianity.

The Gospels continue to provide suggestive material for the investigation of Jewish worship in the first century A.D. and early Christian worship. Some writers (Guilding; Goulder), noting the prominence of feast days in the Fourth Gospel, have daringly theorized about the possibility of a fixed calendar and Jewish lectionary lying behind the Gospels and their structure. Such readings remain hypothetical because we have no direct knowledge concerning the shape of synagogue worship at this time, and because the Gospels are not handbooks of early Christian worship. Debates are ongoing (see Bradshaw) concerning the line of continuity between temple/synagogue worship, worship in the first century A.D. and worship as described in later centuries, and also concerning the extent of variation or consistency in early Christian worship. In all this, some firm observations may be made concerning the significance of *baptism (into the triune name of God by the point of Mt 28:19), the centrality of a table rite associated with Jesus’ death and related to Passover sacrifice, the interpretation of OT Scriptures according to the apostolic tradition to disclose Christ (cf. Lk 24:44-45; Acts 2:42) and the continued importance of corporate worship that included singing, praising, teaching, breaking of bread and the recital of psalms. In the present climate, it is particularly helpful to recover in the Gospels the concept of worship as entrance into a historic, ongoing community and into the life of Christ (with the Father and Holy Spirit) passed down to believers, rather than to picture earliest Christianity as privatizing devotion or valorizing novelty for its own sake.

See also BAPTISM; FEASTS; GOD; LAST SUPPER; PRAYER; SONGS AND HYMNS; SYNAGOGUE; TEMPLE.

BIBLIOGRAPHY. P. F. Bradshaw, The Search for the Origins of Christian Worship: Sources and Methods for the Study of Early Liturgy (New York: Oxford University Press, 1992); J. D. G. Dunn, Unity and Diversity in the New Testament (Philadelphia: Westminster, 1977) 124-49; M. D. Goulder, “The Liturgical Origin of St. John’s Gospel,” in Studia Evangelica VII: Papers Presented to the Fifth International Congress on Biblical Studies Held at Oxford, 1973, ed. E. A. Livingstone (TUGAL 126; Berlin: Akademie Verlag, 1982) 205-21; H. Greeven, “προσκυνέω, προσκυνητής,” TDNT 6:758-66; A. Guilding, The Fourth Gospel and Jewish Worship: A Study of the Relation of St. John’s Gospel to the Ancient Jewish Lectionary System (Oxford: Clarendon, 1960); E. M. Humphrey, Grand Entrance: Worship on Earth as in Heaven (Grand Rapids: Brazos, 2011); L. W. Hurtado, Lord Jesus Christ: Devotion to Jesus in Earliest Christianity (Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 2003); J. Jeremias, The Eucharistic Words of Jesus, trans. Norman Perrin (London: SCM, 1966); J. A. Jungmann, The Early Liturgy: To the Time of Gregory the Great, trans. F. A. Brunner (UNDLS 5; Notre Dame, IN: University of Notre Dame Press, 1959); J. Marcus, The Way of the Lord: Christological Exegesis of the Old Testament in the Gospel of Mark (Louisville: Westminster John Knox, 1992); I. H. Marshall, Last Supper and Lord’s Supper

(Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1981); C. F. D. Moule, Worship in the New Testament (ESW 9; Richmond: John Knox, 1961); W. O. E. Oesterley, The Jewish Background of the Christian Liturgy (London: Oxford University Press, 1925).

E. M. Humphrey

YEAR OF JUBILEE. See JUBILEE.

ZEALOTS. See REVOLUTIONARY MOVEMENTS.

ZION. See JERUSALEM.

Scripture Index

OLD TESTAMENT

Genesis

1, 319, 522, 523, 698,
699, 823, 902
1—2, 388, 522, 524
1—3, 194
1:1, 592, 627
1:1-5, 524, 525
1:1—2:3, 821
1:2, 68, 387
1:3, 524, 525, 698
1:3-5, 627
1:14, 271
1:14-18, 627
1:26, 169
1:26-27, 524, 525
1:27, 169, 509, 590,
631, 633, 1006
1:29-30, 450
2, 387
2—3, 371
2:2, 702
2:2-3, 628
2:3, 820
2:7, 388, 392, 433,
522, 524, 628, 775,
989
2:21-23, 509
2:24, 214, 509, 513,
590, 631, 633, 1006
3, 171, 194, 200
3:8, 932, 933
4—11, 299
4:24, 582
5:1, 299
5:2, 631, 633
5:24, 373
6:1-4, 171, 194, 200
6:1-5, 168
6:3, 522
6:7, 522
6:11-13, 168
7:9, 169
8:8-11, 68
8:21, 18
9:20-23, 993
10:1, 299
11—21, 75
11:30, 75
12—25, 2
12:1, 265, 409
12:1-3, 304

12:3, 2, 129
13:2, 313
13:14-17, 232
14, 451
14:18, 704, 994
14:18-20, 700
14:20, 223
15:1, 397
15:6, 259
15:18-21, 409
16:7, 11
16:7-11, 12
16:11, 14
16:11-12, 15
16:13, 14
17:1, 75
17:1-8, 139
17:4-6, 2
17:7-8, 525
17:14, 145
17:16, 2, 75
17:17, 75
17:19, 3, 75
17:22, 785
18, 636
18—19, 12, 16
18:1-15, 926
18:3-5, 75
18:4, 873
18:9-15, 15
18:11-12, 75
18:14, 75
18:17, 932
18:18, 2
18:19, 319, 463
18:20, 863
19, 12
19:2, 869, 873
19:26, 1010
20:1, 760
21:6, 75
21:8, 925
21:20-21, 439
21:23-24, 629
22, 4
22:1, 953
22:1-14, 953, 990
22:1-18, 14
22:2, 3, 4, 68, 689,
968
22:3, 4
22:5, 4, 309
22:6, 4

22:7, 4
22:9, 4
22:10, 3, 4
22:12, 3, 4
22:15-18, 953
22:16, 3, 629
22:18, 2, 129, 259, 300
23:1-20, 98
24, 1012
24:1-67, 97
24:10, 484
24:27, 320
24:32, 873
24:35, 801
24:60, 88
24:62, 932
25, 636
25:9-10, 98
25:20, 484
25:27, 932
26:5, 149, 259, 932
26:13, 801
26:26-31, 925
26:31, 667
27:25, 993
27:28, 993
27:37, 993
28:12, 5, 16, 592
28:22, 223
29:1-14, 1012
29:1-20, 97
29:22, 925
30, 636
30:43, 801
31:1, 313
32:3, 11
32:10, 320
33:17, 274
34, 700
34:23, 489
35:13, 785
35:19, 46
35:21, 46
37—42, 666
37:2, 932
37:14, 667
38, 1009
38:8, 633
38:26, 1009
40:5-8, 217
40:20, 925
43:24, 873
47:7, 88

47:27, 801
47:30, 98
48—49, 266
48:16, 14
48:20, 88
48:22, 836
49, 141, 268
49:2, 932
49:10, 53, 168, 415,
700
49:10-11, 275, 980
49:10-12, 981
49:11, 994
49:11-12, 995
49:26, 615
49:29, 775
49:29-32, 98
50:13, 775

Exodus

1, 74, 381
1:1—2:10, 634
1:11-16, 294
2, 74
2:15-21, 1012
2:15-22, 97
2:23-25, 294
2:24, 2
3:1, 92
3:2, 14
3:6, 4, 374, 633
3:7-10, 294
3:8, 409
3:13, 601
3:13-14, 638
3:14, 5, 120, 398, 400,
525
3:14-15, 590
3:15, 4
3:16, 226, 837
3:18, 92, 226
4, 74
4:1-9, 601
4:1—15:21, 362
4:6-7, 562
4:15-16, 599
4:16, 610
4:18, 667
4:20, 610
4:21, 360
4:22, 431, 686
4:22-23, 958, 968
4:27, 92, 616
4:31, 314
5:1, 271
5:1-3, 273
5:3, 92
6:5-7, 294
6:7, 430
7—12, 597
7:1, 610
7:3, 360
7:4-5, 599
7:5, 430
7:13, 360
7:14, 360
7:17, 430
7:22, 360
8:1, 360
8:15, 390
8:19, 599
8:27, 92
8:32, 360
9:3, 599
9:7, 360
9:12, 360
9:13, 872
9:14, 562
9:15, 599
9:27, 360
9:34, 360
9:35, 360
10:1, 360
10:16-17, 360
10:20, 360
10:27, 360
11:10, 360
12, 482, 483, 872
12:1-28, 273, 287, 443
12:3-4, 276
12:5, 273
12:6, 273, 990
12:7, 180
12:8-9, 273
12:10, 637
12:11, 273
12:12, 360
12:12-13, 273
12:13, 92, 180, 189
12:14, 271
12:17, 92, 273
12:18, 273
12:21, 273
12:21-23, 273
12:22, 189, 277
12:22-27, 92

12:23, 273	19:1—23:33, 634	24:4, 632	31:14-15, 820	Leviticus
12:23-37, 483	19:1—31:18, 632	24:8, 183, 186, 494,	31:16-17, 820	1, 171, 942
12:26-27, 275	19:3, 602, 616	495, 497	31:18, 599	1—16, 518
12:28, 276	19:3-5, 632	24:9, 226, 987	32, 632, 699, 957	2:1, 703
12:42, 611	19:4, 339	24:9-11, 925	32:1, 616	2:2, 18
12:43-49, 273	19:4-6, 295	24:11, 611	32:6, 272	4, 450
12:46, 189, 277, 431,	19:6, 697	24:12, 611, 987	32:25-29, 264	4:5, 699
483, 637	19:9, 968, 969	24:15, 611	32:27-29, 700, 702	4:13-35, 183
12:48-49, 273	19:16, 698, 969	24:15-16, 969, 987	33—34, 430	5:2-7, 144
13, 295	19:16-21, 610	24:15-18, 611, 967,	33:1-23, 634	5:7, 277, 948
13:2, 635, 636	19:16-25, 970	968	33:7-11, 968	5:11-13, 183
13:3, 591	19:17, 525	24:16, 611, 987	33:9-11, 970	6:2-7, 144
13:3-22, 232	20, 245	24:16-18, 313	33:12-23, 697	6:15, 115
13:4, 273	20:1-7, 719	24:18, 195, 955	33:15-16, 430	8:7-9, 698
13:8, 275	20:1-17, 169	25—40, 699	33:17-23, 596	8:12, 704
13:12, 635, 636	20:2, 295, 417, 870	25:8, 941	33:18, 525	8:13, 698
13:15, 635, 636	20:5, 318	25:19, 12	33:18-19, 430	9:1, 760
13:21, 277	20:7, 629, 767	26—27, 944	33:18-23, 611	9:9-10, 801
13:21-22, 970	20:8-11, 263, 454,	26:31-33, 951	33:19, 562, 610	9:22, 703
14, 562, 577	820, 822	28, 698, 699	33:20, 430	9:22-24, 697
14:4, 360, 396	20:9, 820	28—29, 697, 700	33:20-23, 428	9:23-24, 313
14:8, 360	20:11, 88	28:1-43, 457	33:23, 430, 610	10:7, 697
14:10-31, 634	20:12, 263, 508, 631	28:2, 698	34, 612, 613, 616	10:8-9, 439
14:17, 360	20:12-16, 631, 633,	28:4, 172, 700	34—35, 525	10:9, 993
14:18, 396	635	28:5-6, 703	34:1, 169, 601	10:10, 142
14:19, 14, 15	20:14, 633	28:9-29, 703	34:1-9, 611	10:10-11, 697
14:19-20, 14	20:16, 630, 1001, 1003	28:11, 703	34:3, 616	10:17, 702
14:20, 895	20:19, 1001	28:21, 703	34:5, 895, 970	11, 144, 272, 455
14:21, 388	20:21, 835	28:32, 703	34:6, 320, 428, 430,	11—15, 171, 611, 697
14:31, 268	21:10, 213, 214, 215	28:36, 698, 703	588, 853	11:1-23, 508
15:17, 950	21:10-11, 213	28:38, 702	34:6-7, 598	11:3, 143
15:18, 471	21:17, 508, 631	28:39, 698, 700	34:7, 85	11:7, 851
15:25-26, 746	21:24, 510, 633, 667	28:39-42, 698	34:9, 982	11:9, 143
15:26, 260, 362, 367	21:29, 179	28:40, 698	34:14, 318	11:12, 143
16, 276, 562, 617, 925,	21:30, 828	28:41, 17, 116, 697,	34:18, 273	11:20-21, 143
953, 957	22:24-26, 668	699, 704	34:18-26, 273	11:20-23, 455
16:1-36, 614	22:25-27, 668, 800	29:1, 704	34:21, 821	11:24, 66
16:1—17:7, 634	22:27, 85	29:4, 145, 873	34:22, 272, 273, 274	11:29-31, 455
16:4, 94, 953	22:28, 86	29:6, 700	34:23, 272, 925	11:32, 66
16:10, 313	23:1, 864	29:7, 116, 276	34:28, 270, 957	11:41-44, 455
16:10-11, 968	23:11, 801	29:18, 18	34:29, 616, 967	11:44-45, 144
16:13, 987	23:14, 925	29:33, 697	34:29-30, 611, 612,	11:45, 318, 453
16:15, 602	23:15, 271, 273	29:38-42, 457, 950	987	12:8, 548, 635, 636,
16:22-26, 820	23:16, 273, 274	29:38-46, 482	34:29-35, 611, 634,	802, 948
16:33, 987	23:17, 272, 925	29:43, 313	966, 967	13, 517
17, 925, 957	23:20, 14, 15, 439,	30:11-16, 179, 225, 457	34:30, 611, 987	13—14, 517
17:1-7, 945, 986	441, 475, 562, 617,	30:13, 948	34:35, 967	13:1-46, 517
17:6, 277	631, 632, 633, 983	30:14, 277	35:2, 820	13:45-46, 517
17:7, 953	23:20-21, 14	30:17-21, 456, 873	35:3, 456, 820	13:47-59, 517
17:11, 987	23:20-22, 11, 14, 15,	30:23, 703	36:31-33, 181	13:49, 507, 1001
18, 562	699	30:29, 702	39, 698	14—17, 241
18:11, 360	23:20-23, 612	30:29-30, 704	39:1-30, 697	14:1-4, 746
18:12, 226	23:25, 367	30:31-33, 697	39:23, 703	14:1-32, 611
18:21, 92, 276	24, 612, 616	30:34, 703	39:27-29, 698	14:6-16, 66
18:25-26, 43	24:1, 226	31:12, 821	40:9-11, 934	14:8-9, 145
19, 704	24:1-18, 611, 987	31:12-17, 143, 145, 822	40:23, 92	14:21-23, 948
19—24, 245, 577, 846	24:2, 616	31:13, 822, 982	40:34, 313, 525	14:34-53, 517
19—40, 705	24:3-11, 1021	31:14, 821	40:34-35, 314	14:45-46, 144

15:5-8, 145	22:10-16, 697	5:6, 591	19:17-20, 66	4:35, 318
15:5-27, 66	22:14, 277	5:22, 10	20:1-13, 986	4:37-40, 232
15:10-11, 145	22:32, 687	6:1-4, 994	20:8-13, 945	4:39, 318
15:13, 145	23:1-14, 272	6:1-21, 439	21:4-9, 614	4:40, 257
15:18, 145	23:2, 271	6:2-3, 625	21:18, 842	4:47, 47
15:19-30, 146	23:3, 820	6:3, 181, 993	22:22, 193	4:48, 52
15:21-22, 145	23:4-8, 273	6:22-27, 704	22:22-35, 14	5:1-22, 169
15:31, 145, 146	23:7-8, 272, 273	6:23-24, 88	22:32, 193	5:5, 610
16, 698	23:9-16, 273	6:23-26, 697	22:33, 12	5:6, 295
16:1-34, 197	23:11, 273	7:10, 274	23:7, 417, 651	5:6-10, 719
16:2, 181	23:11-16, 273	7:11, 274	23:18, 651	5:7, 318
16:4, 145, 172	23:15-21, 272	7:84, 274	24:2, 955	5:11, 629
16:8, 193	23:17, 274	7:88, 274	24:3, 651	5:12, 171
16:10, 193, 618	23:18-20, 274	9:10, 98	24:7-8, 592	5:12-15, 820
16:15, 181	23:21, 274	9:10-11, 273	24:17, 169, 592,	5:14, 263, 820, 822,
16:15-16, 183	23:24-25, 275	9:12, 637	797	823
16:15-22, 197	23:27, 269	9:14, 273	25, 699, 700	5:16, 257, 313, 631
16:19, 183	23:33-36, 272	10:10, 271	25:6-13, 740	5:16-20, 631, 633, 635
16:20-21, 197	23:34, 274	10:34, 895	25:11-13, 838	5:17, 633
16:26, 145, 193	23:34-36, 274	11, 276, 617	27:8, 417	5:20, 630
16:28, 145	23:36, 970	11:16, 837, 838	27:16-17, 859	5:22, 970
17:7, 193	23:39, 274	11:16-17, 226	27:17, 92, 397, 617	5:23, 837
17:10-14, 144	23:39-43, 274	11:17, 955	27:18-23, 838	5:24, 525
17:15-16, 145	23:40, 274	11:24-25, 226	27:21, 700	5:26, 319, 326, 521
18:5, 491	23:41, 274	11:25, 955	28—29, 273	5:33, 257
18:6-30, 145	23:42, 274	11:26, 932	28:3-8, 457, 950	6:1-3, 257
18:16, 441	23:43, 274	11:29, 955	28:9-10, 147, 820	6:1-9, 263
18:24-25, 143	24:5-9, 92, 820	11:31, 388	28:11-15, 275	6:4, 151, 323, 417, 453,
18:25, 453	24:10-16, 85	11:31-34, 925	28:16-25, 273	511, 684, 932
18:27, 143	24:16, 176	12, 517	28:18-25, 273	6:4-5, 318, 539, 590,
19, 144, 152, 511, 577,	24:20, 510, 633, 667	12:3, 610	28:26, 273, 274	631
588	25, 450, 451, 741, 803	12:6, 217	28:27-31, 274	6:5, 150, 151, 257, 268,
19:2, 144, 318	25:1-7, 450	12:8, 610, 709	29:1-6, 275	511, 536, 633, 635
19:3, 982	25:2, 450	12:12, 144	29:12, 274	6:5-9, 684
19:12, 630	25:6-7, 801	13:22, 41	29:12-38, 274	6:7, 511
19:16-18, 169	25:8-55, 286, 450	14:18, 320	30:2, 508, 630	6:13, 581, 629, 872,
19:17, 169, 536	25:10, 450	15:22-26, 183	31:21-24, 697	956, 957
19:17-18, 140, 536	25:13, 802	15:27-28, 183	32:12, 202	6:13-14, 956
19:18, 150, 151, 152,	25:23, 450, 802	15:30-31, 85	32:32-33, 47	6:16, 581, 953, 957
257, 434, 511, 512,	25:33, 740	15:32-36, 820, 822	35:25, 838	6:20-25, 263, 295
587, 588, 590, 631,	25:35-55, 806	15:37-38, 455	35:28, 838	7:6, 142
633, 635	25:42, 295, 450	15:37-41, 684	35:30, 38, 1001	7:13, 993
19:19, 697	25:55, 295	15:40, 318	35:31-32, 828	8:1-3, 270
20:2-5, 145	26, 851	16—17, 697, 701	35:33-34, 145	8:1-6, 264
20:9, 631	26:3-12, 142	16:7, 702		8:1-9, 390
20:10, 215, 614	26:11-12, 1	16:40, 697	Deuteronomy	8:2, 93, 956
20:10-21, 145	26:12, 202	18:3-4, 696	1—26, 636	8:3, 93, 269, 270, 520,
20:21, 441	27:30-33, 223, 509	18:20-32, 223	1:15, 276	522, 581, 956, 957
20:22-23, 143		18:21-24, 272, 801	1:39, 111	8:10, 88, 685
20:22-26, 145, 318	Numbers	18:21-32, 223, 697	3:8, 47	8:11-17, 520
20:27, 775	1:4-16, 43	18:24-32, 509	3:14, 51	8:16, 93, 953
21, 699	3:5-10, 696	19, 142, 697	3:20, 617	9:9, 616
21:6, 926	3:12, 702	19:1-19, 275	4:1-14, 202	9:10, 390
21:10, 115, 698, 703	3:32, 838	19:1-22, 272	4:20, 142	9:25, 955
21:12, 115, 697	3:46, 702	19:2, 981	4:25-26, 257	10:12, 202
21:17-19, 942	3:48-49, 702	19:7-8, 145	4:26, 1001	10:20, 629, 784, 956
21:17-23, 699	5:1-3, 517	19:11-19, 98	4:31, 853	11:4, 981
22:10, 144	5:1-4, 702	19:12, 145	4:34, 471	11:8-9, 257

11:13-21, 684	18:18, 94, 610, 616, 792	29:6, 993, 994	19:28, 48	1 Samuel
11:18-21, 257	18:18-20, 709	30:3-4, 188	19:34, 57	1—2, 592, 636
11:26, 851	18:18-22, 835	30:4, 459	19:35, 49	1:11, 439, 592
12:1-28, 253	18:19-20, 691	30:11-12, 417	21:16, 45	1:15, 993
12:9-10, 617	18:20, 973	30:11-19, 849	21:32, 297	1:17, 667
12:12, 263	19:11-13, 226	30:15-20, 257, 851	23—24, 266	1:24, 993
12:16, 144	19:15, 38, 169, 987, 1001, 1002, 1003	30:19, 1001	24:17, 295	2:1, 881
13, 478, 546	19:15-21, 837	31—33, 266, 267, 268	24:27, 1001	2:1-10, 592, 636, 881, 901, 1020
13:1-5, 217, 719, 975	19:16-21, 1001	31:7, 267	24:32, 98, 775	2:2, 318
13:2-6, 721	19:18, 589	31:7-9, 634	Judges	2:6, 397, 775
13:6-11, 264	19:21, 510, 633, 667	31:9-13, 274, 697	1, 14	2:7, 808
13:14, 589	20:1, 981	31:10, 271	2:1, 11	2:26, 439, 592
14:3-21, 508, 611	20:2-4, 700	31:16-18, 268	2:10, 775	4:3, 226
14:19, 455	21:3, 981	31:26, 1003	3:10, 388	6:7, 981
14:22-27, 223, 801	21:5, 697	32, 626	4:3, 85	8:4-9, 226
14:22-29, 223, 272, 509	21:18-21, 226, 264, 703, 719	32:4, 320, 463	5:9, 842	9:9, 589
14:26, 263, 272	21:22-23, 99, 171, 174	32:4-6, 320	6, 15, 16	9:13, 88
14:28-29, 223, 465	21:23, 174, 175, 417	32:4-20, 264	6:8, 295	9:15—10:1, 17
15, 804	22:4, 257	32:6, 264, 686	6:11-24, 14	9:16, 116
15:1-2, 801, 803	22:6-7, 257, 767	32:10-14, 264	6:21, 785	10:1, 116, 276, 651
15:7-11, 806	22:11, 697	32:12, 626	6:22-23, 12	10:1-9, 601
15:9-10, 802	22:12, 455	32:14, 994	6:23, 669	10:2-10, 981
15:11, 17, 803, 804	22:13-21, 226, 264	32:15, 828	6:29, 589	10:3, 993
15:12, 802	22:15, 226	32:18, 626	9:2, 388	10:5, 842
15:14, 88, 993	23:2, 143, 752	32:18-20, 626	9:7-15, 653	10:9-16, 388
16:1-3, 273	23:2-4, 138	32:32-33, 993	9:13, 993	10:10-12, 842
16:1-5, 273	23:18, 417	32:35, 285	9:27, 274	10:19, 828
16:1-8, 273	23:21-23, 630	32:39, 133, 318, 397, 398, 746, 775	13, 16, 624, 636	12, 141
16:1-17, 274	23:24-25, 821	32:46-47, 257	13:2-3, 624	12:1-25, 266
16:2, 273	24:1, 213, 214, 215, 509, 513, 633	33, 141, 267	13:2-7, 439	12:5, 1001
16:3, 92, 275	24:1-4, 214, 590, 849, 1006	33:2, 12	13:3, 74, 624	12:14, 202
16:5, 273	24:10-13, 668	33:5, 610	13:3-5, 14, 15	15:29, 772
16:7, 273	24:19, 801	33:9, 268, 699, 702	13:4, 993	15:30, 227
16:9-15, 263	24:20-21, 801	33:10, 697	13:4-5, 994	16, 933
16:10-12, 273	25:2, 864	33:21, 841	13:5, 624, 625	16:3, 116
16:11, 272	25:4, 590	33:27, 525	13:5-7, 592	16:6, 116
16:13, 274	25:5, 633	34:5-6, 611	13:7, 624, 625, 993, 994	16:12-13, 17, 116
16:14, 272, 274	25:7, 226	34:9, 388, 838	13:9, 624	16:20, 993
16:15, 274	25:15, 257	34:10, 968	13:14, 993, 994	17, 85
16:16, 272, 273	26:5, 484	34:10-12, 610	13:20, 785	17:26, 319, 326
16:16-17, 925	26:5-10, 232	Joshua	13:22, 12	17:36, 319, 326
17, 699	26:12, 223, 801	1:1-9, 634	13:24-25, 439	17:54, 981
17:6-7, 1001	26:12-15, 509	1:8, 522	14:10, 925	18:6-9, 981
17:8-9, 697	26:14, 775	2, 1009	16:17, 624, 625	19:6, 629
17:8-13, 837	27, 835	3:10, 319, 326	18:6, 667	19:20, 138, 842
17:14-20, 699, 701	27—28, 167	5:14, 12	19:19, 994	19:20-24, 202
17:17, 169	27:9-10, 697	6:22-25, 1009	19:20, 669	19:24, 842
18:1-8, 590	27:15-26, 10	12:5, 51	19:21, 873	20, 275
18:11, 775	28—30, 462	14:8, 202	21:19, 274	20:5, 275
18:15, 610, 612, 613, 616, 692, 706, 968, 969	28:1-14, 801	14:9, 202, 232	21:19-21, 274	20:13, 667
18:15-18, 454, 968, 969, 971, 987	28:4, 111	14:14, 202	21:25, 388	20:18-19, 275
18:15-19, 101, 830	28:15-68, 630	15:8, 371, 459	Ruth	20:26-27, 275
18:15-20, 639	28:37, 651	15:32, 48	1—4, 1009	21:1-6, 92, 821, 988
18:15-22, 706, 889		15:55, 45	2:14, 181	21:1-9, 882, 883
		18:16, 371, 459	4:18-22, 299	21:6, 590
		18:23, 52		22:1-2, 883
				24:7, 116

24:11, 116	13:24, 869	7:45, 939	1:3, 231	23:21-23, 273
24:14, 651	13:29, 980, 981	7:48, 939	1:6, 193	23:24, 775
24:22, 629	14:1-20, 653	7:49, 939	1:8, 230, 439, 442,	24:1-17, 939
25:14, 88	14:14, 372	8:1-21, 939	563	25:1, 939
25:18, 993	14:22, 88	8:2, 274	1:9-12, 988	25:11-12, 939
25:41, 873	15:1, 980	8:10-11, 939	1:16, 193	25:21, 254
26:9, 116	15:1-6, 981	8:12-13, 828	2, 185, 229
26:11, 116	15:9, 667	8:14, 138	2:1, 988	1 Chronicles
26:16, 116	15:30, 981	8:22-61, 939	2:5-14, 46	1—9, 299
26:23, 116, 319	16:1, 993	8:32, 319	2:11, 373, 706, 988	2, 939
28:6, 842	16:1-2, 981	8:48, 409	2:11-12, 59, 612	3:19-24, 837
28:7, 775	18, 980	8:65, 274	3:11, 589	5:1, 299
28:15, 842	18:9, 981	9:3, 409	4:1, 202	6:61, 297
29:4, 193	18:20, 343	9:6-9, 942	4:18-37, 48	9:20, 740
29:7, 667	18:22, 343	10:1-13, 6, 1010	4:23, 275	11:3, 73
31:9, 343	18:25, 343	10:9, 319, 697	4:32-37, 231, 775	13:2, 138
31:13, 269	18:27, 343	11:1-8, 939	4:38, 202	16:31, 471
	19—20, 980, 981	11:14, 193	4:42-44, 276, 602	16:33, 687
2 Samuel	19:25, 667	11:23, 193	5:1-19, 518, 1002	17:14, 471
1:10, 700	22:1, 881	11:25, 193	5:19, 517, 667	20:6, 471
2:4-5, 98	22:1-51, 881	11:43, 775	6:31, 629	21, 12
2:20, 398	22:5, 199	12:6, 43	7:9, 343	21:1, 193
3:3, 41	22:11, 12	12:6-8, 227	8:18, 254	22:2, 839
3:17, 227	22:21, 319	12:28-33, 253	8:27, 254	22:10, 939
3:20, 925	23:1, 115, 881	12:30, 253	9:1, 202	23:30, 684
3:21-23, 667	23:1-7, 881	12:32, 274	9:3, 276	23:31, 271
4, 53	24:1, 193	12:32-33, 271	9:13, 982	24, 697
4:10, 343	24:17, 697	13:34, 253	9:28, 775	24:1-19, 457
5:2, 73, 884		14:8, 202	11:12, 700	24:6, 841
5:3, 227	1 Kings	14:15-16, 253	13, 229	25:8, 202
5:6-9, 408	1, 1009	17, 230	13:21, 775	28—29, 266
5:7, 408	1:5, 980, 981	17—19, 441, 442	13:23, 2	28:5, 470
5:8, 942, 951	1:32-35, 980, 982	17:8-16, 231, 981	14:9-10, 653	28:8, 138, 589
5:17-25, 981	1:32-40, 980	17:8-24, 1002, 1010	16:3, 254, 371	29:10, 88
6, 981	1:33, 980, 981	17:10, 777	17, 833, 834	29:10-13, 471
6:3, 981	1:33-34, 980	17:17-24, 48, 775	17:6, 297	29:22, 697, 699
6:5, 981	1:35, 980	17:22, 777	17:7-23, 253
7, 881	1:38, 980	17:23, 777	17:13, 771, 842	2 Chronicles
7:2, 939	1:38-39, 980	19, 229, 612	17:21-23, 253	3:1, 3, 939
7:4-16, 232	1:38-40, 17, 275	19:5, 12	17:23, 254	3:10-13, 939
7:8-16, 454	1:40, 980	19:8, 611, 955	17:24-33, 485	3:15-17, 939
7:11-14, 882	1:42, 343	19:8-18, 611	17:24-41, 833	4:1, 939
7:12-14, 317, 979	2:10, 775	19:11, 611	17:29, 834	4:2-5, 939
7:12-16, 53, 116, 118,	2:28-30, 980	19:15, 47	17:41, 833	4:7, 939
881, 892	3:5-15, 217	19:15-21, 47	18—19, 85	4:8, 939
7:13, 939	3:6, 319	19:16, 17, 116	18:26, 484, 487	4:10, 939
7:14, 128, 886	3:9-28, 697	19:19-21, 37, 231, 988	19, 326	4:11, 939
7:14-16, 634, 886	5:5, 939	19:20, 265	19—20, 229	4:11-13, 939
7:22, 318	6:2, 939	21, 441, 442	19:4, 319	4:16, 939
8:15, 463, 697	6:13, 944	21:10, 1001	19:7, 388	4:19, 939
11, 951, 1009	6:15-29, 939	21:21, 301	19:16, 319	5, 939
11:8, 873	6:16-18, 939	22:8, 589	19:16-21, 229	5:3, 274
12:1-4, 653	6:20, 939	22:17, 859	20:5, 362	5:13-14, 939
12:3, 653	6:20-22, 939	22:19-22, 12	21:3, 254	6:1-11, 939
12:4, 653	6:23-28, 939		22:3-13, 840	6:12-42, 939
12:16, 269	7:15-22, 939	2 Kings	22:20, 775	6:16, 932
12:23, 775	7:23-26, 698, 939	1—2, 441, 442	23:2, 842	7:2, 313
13:23-27, 271	7:40, 939	1:2-3, 193	23:10, 459	7:9, 274

9:1-12, 1010	6:3-5, 254	Esther	Psalms	23:8, 981
11:15, 193	6:3-12, 487	1:3, 925	1, 170, 271	24:1, 224
13:8, 470	6:3—8:36, 939	1:7-9, 993	1:1, 863	24:8, 981
13:22, 589	6:6-15, 227	1:9, 925	1:2-3, 522	25:4, 836
15:10-14, 273	6:7-8, 837	3:7, 273, 274	2, 317, 467, 886	25:10, 320
17:4, 589	6:10, 702	4:16, 269	2:2, 115	25:11, 688
19:5-11, 838	6:14, 837	5:4-8, 925	2:6, 411	25:18, 688
19:8-11, 697	6:17, 702	6:14—7:10, 925	2:7, 128, 440, 686, 689, 719, 887, 969, 982, 983	26:2, 953
20:3, 269	6:19-22, 273	9:17-32, 275	2:7-8, 886	26:6, 989
20:27-30, 981	7, 841	9:19-28, 925	2:8, 101	26:8, 313
22:9, 589	7:1-6, 697	9:24-28, 274	4, 595, 700	26:10, 867
23:11, 700	7:5, 698	9:24-32, 274	5:3, 684	27:12, 989
24:4-10, 457	7:6, 202, 612, 841	9:26-28, 263	6:3-4, 312	29:1, 698
24:8, 809	7:10, 589, 697, 841	Job	7:8, 463	29:2, 313
24:10, 809	7:11, 202	1—2, 199	7:9, 953	29:3, 402
24:20-21, 703	7:12-26, 485, 487, 932	1:4, 993	8:3, 111, 984	30:9, 320
24:20-22, 942	7:24-25, 842	1:6, 11, 193	8:4, 894	31:5, 636, 883, 989
24:27, 589	8:21, 269	1:7, 193	8:6, 11	31:9-10, 312
26:6, 838	9:5, 684	1:9, 193	9:1-8, 462	31:11, 187
26:12-21, 701	9:5-15, 697	1:12, 193, 953	9:7, 1	31:14, 187
26:16-21, 697	9:6-15, 389	1:21, 89	9:11, 408	31:15, 187
26:19-21, 517	10:14, 227	2:1, 11, 193	9:14, 408	31:18, 636
28:3, 371	10:16, 227	2:2, 193	9:17, 864	31:18-24, 180
29—31, 949	Nehemiah	2:4, 193	12:5, 800	31:22, 312
30, 834	2:16, 523	2:6, 953	16:8-11, 533	32:6, 599, 693
30:1-5, 273	5:7, 227, 837	2:7, 193	18, 881	33:7, 598
30:16, 273	5:15, 994	3, 522	18:13-14, 698	33:11, 1
30:19, 589	7:5, 227	4:2, 953	18:17, 693	34:1-3, 1020
31:10, 698	7:7, 227	7:1, 953	18:50, 882	34:7, 12, 14
32, 229	8, 841	7:8-10, 775	19:12, 688	34:10, 637
32:33, 313	8:7-9, 841	7:18, 953	20:7, 981	35:5-6, 12
33:6, 371	8:8, 485, 931	9:8, 396, 596, 598	20:14, 599	35:10, 800, 853
34—35, 949	8:10-12, 272	9:8-11, 128	21:9, 184	35:13, 269
34:6, 834	8:14, 274	9:31, 693	22, 664, 884, 1021	35:15-16, 180
34:13, 841	8:14-17, 274	10:1-3, 802	22:1, 181, 632, 665, 782, 883, 989	35:19, 637, 639
34:28, 775	8:17, 274	10:17, 953	22:1-18, 128	36:5, 320
35:7, 273	8:18, 271	12:25, 993	22:2, 983	36:9, 319
35:11, 273	9:1-3, 269	15:7, 615	22:6, 581	36:10, 397
35:13-14, 273	9:2, 863	17:13, 372	22:7, 178, 180, 181, 632, 883	37:11, 170, 848
35:15, 273	9:10, 471	20:15-22, 800	22:8, 883	37:12, 463
36:7, 939	9:17, 320	24:19, 372	22:7-8, 989	37:14, 853
36:23, 254, 939	9:27, 863	26:6, 775	22:8, 261, 581, 636, 983	38:11, 989
Ezra	10:32-33, 457	28:1, 997	22:16, 581	40:10-11, 320
1, 698	10:32-39, 225	28:22, 775	22:18, 181, 632, 636, 637, 639, 883, 989	40:17, 800
1:1-4, 939	10:34, 275	29:4, 398	22:20, 312	41:9, 632, 637, 989
1:2-4, 254	10:35-38, 223	31:6, 398	22:20-23, 200	42:2, 319, 807
1:6-11, 939	10:37-39, 697	31:12, 775	22:25-31, 181	42:5-6, 312
2:2, 227	12, 700	31:16-20, 802	22:27, 200	42:5-11, 632
3:5, 275	12:10-11, 838	32:18-19, 993	22:28, 200	42:6, 312
3:7-13, 939	12:27, 274	33:4, 387	22:29, 200	42:8, 693
3:12-13, 939	13:1, 138	33:14-18, 217	23, 859	42:9-11, 310
4, 834, 939	13:13, 697	34:30, 394, 674	23:5, 828	42:11, 312
4:7, 931	13:15, 820	36:13, 394, 674		43:3-4, 272
4:8—6:18, 485, 932	13:15-21, 148	38:7, 11		43:5, 312, 632, 989
5—6, 940	13:15-22, 822	39:27-29, 340		44:1, 96
5:5, 837	13:24, 487	42:11-17, 953		44:4, 981
5:9, 227, 837	13:28, 833			45:7, 95
				45:7-9, 74

46:3, 402	78:52, 397	104:4, 867	143, 807	11:22, 851
46:6, 828	78:69, 30	104:15, 993	143:2-3, 365	11:28, 800
48:2, 408	78:70, 882	104:19, 271	144, 881, 902	12:10, 822
48:3, 828	78:70-72, 859, 881	104:30, 387	144:7, 693	12:27, 801
48:11, 408	80:8, 397	106:2-30, 740	144:10, 882	12:28, 319
49, 522	80:8-16, 431	106:16, 702	145:8, 320	13:4, 801
50:1-7, 462	82:6, 637	107:1-3, 459	145:14, 453	13:6, 319
50:7-21, 1001	84:1-2, 272	107:25-30, 128	146:8, 595	13:14, 999
50:12-13, 926	84:2, 319, 326	107:27, 271, 993	147:3, 362	13:21, 801
51—100, 467	86:1-2, 800	109:6, 193	148:2, 12	14:15, 772
51:10, 388	86:9, 313	109:25, 989		14:25, 1001
51:14, 463	86:15, 320	110, 884, 931, 934	Proverbs	15:11, 775
51:16-19, 318	88:10, 372, 775	110:1, 60, 119, 316,	1—9, 1009	16:22, 999
51:17, 272	88:11, 775	392, 590, 631, 635,	1:6, 651	17:23, 864
54:5, 320	88:13, 51, 52, 684	700, 884, 981, 983	1:20-33, 999	20:1, 993
55:4-8, 310	89, 116, 881	110:4, 60, 119, 700	1:23, 999	21:16, 372
55:12-14, 989	89:3, 882	111:2, 589	1:32-33, 999	21:17, 993
55:17, 684	89:3-4, 629, 882	111:9, 801	2:18, 372	22:4, 801
55:23, 775	89:4, 637	112:1-3, 801	3:10, 993	22:10, 836
60:3, 993	89:8-9, 128	114, 232	3:11-12, 264	22:17, 202
61:1-3, 310	89:8-14, 698	115—118, 1021	3:13-18, 999	23:20-21, 993
63:1, 807	89:10-13, 1020	115:4-8, 360	3:16, 999	23:29-35, 993
65:5, 601	89:20, 881, 882	116:17, 1021	3:18, 999	25:1, 202
65:8, 402	89:20-27, 886	118, 884	4:1-13, 998	26:26, 836
68:4, 969	89:20-29, 172	118:2-4, 933	4:5-9, 999	27:12, 1001
68:9, 616	89:24, 886	118:14-18, 982	4:5-13, 999	28:6, 800
68:11, 343	89:26, 128	118:15-16, 982	4:13, 999	28:27, 802
68:16, 940	89:28-37, 882, 886	118:19, 982	4:17, 993	29:23, 807
68:22, 181	89:36, 1	118:20, 982	5:8, 417	30:4, 933
69:1, 598	89:39, 700	118:22, 635, 693, 883,	6:19, 1001	30:15, 193
69:1-2, 312	89:49-51, 882	884	6:34-35, 828	31, 1009
69:2, 693	89:51, 882	118:22-23, 128, 631,	8, 526	31:4, 993
69:4, 637, 639	91:11, 12, 14	882, 983	8:1-36, 999	31:4-7, 993
69:9, 952	91:11-12, 633, 956	118:25-26, 533, 631,	8:1—9:2, 996	31:6, 180, 993, 995
69:14-15, 693	91:12, 195	633, 637, 639, 882,	8:12, 525	31:20, 802
69:21, 181, 632, 636,	95:9, 953	983	8:20, 319
639, 989	96:2, 343	118:26, 276, 883, 884,	8:22, 428, 525	Ecclesiastes
70:5, 180	96:3, 313	942	8:22-23, 999	1:2, 932
71:15, 74	96:10-13, 462	118:27, 982	8:22-31, 525, 933, 998	3:19-21, 776
72, 116	96:13, 687	119:9-16, 522	8:22-36, 902	5:3, 217
72:7-11, 980	97:2, 463	119:10, 589	8:25, 615	5:6, 941
72:10-11, 703	97:6, 698	119:45, 589	8:30, 525	5:7, 217
74:4, 271	98:6-9, 462	119:94, 589	8:32-34, 999	12:7, 776
74:12-17, 698	98:8-9, 462	119:155, 589	8:32-35, 999
74:13-14, 128	98:9, 687	122:3-5, 990	8:35, 999	Song of Solomon
74:14, 698	100:3, 431	124:4-5, 693	8:35-36, 999	4:5, 934
75:8, 309, 993	102:8, 180	125:1, 615	8:36, 999	7:9, 993
76:15, 599	102:12, 1	132, 116, 881, 981	9:1-6, 999	8:2, 993
77:18, 698	102:13, 271	132:1-5, 882	9:3-6, 996
77:19, 277	103:3, 362, 363, 365	132:9, 697	9:5, 397	Isaiah
77:20, 396, 397	103:8, 320	132:10, 882	9:6, 999	1, 140, 275, 595, 618,
78, 881	103:12, 320	132:10-18, 882	9:18, 372	687, 994
78:2, 633	103:13-14, 317	132:15-16, 800	10:2, 319	1—6, 361
78:5, 16	103:17, 592, 1020	132:17, 882	10:4, 801	1:6, 362
78:25, 12	103:20, 12	133, 257	10:11, 999	1:13-14, 275
78:41, 953	104, 522	135:8-18, 360	11:4-6, 319	1:13-17, 269
78:42, 179	104:1-2, 698	137, 409	11:13, 836	1:14, 271
78:49, 12	104:3, 895	139:23, 953	11:18-19, 319	1:21, 464

2, 454, 855	9:1-2, 3, 56, 57, 298,	25:8, 775	38:17, 775	42:7, 441, 595
2:1-4, 940	633, 634, 640, 984	26:1, 372	40, 24, 464, 562, 581,	42:8, 315
2:2, 951	9:5, 11	26:2-3, 463	631, 636	42:9, 626
2:2-3, 101, 615, 616	9:6, 882	26:4, 626	40—55, 233, 251,	42:11, 315
2:2-4, 616, 949	9:6-7, 668, 881, 980	26:5-6, 808	626, 855, 858, 1003	42:12, 313
2:2-5, 578, 606	9:7, 463	26:7-10, 463	40—66, 190, 450,	42:14, 626
2:3, 578	9:14, 842	26:14, 184, 372, 775	454, 475, 855	42:16, 399
2:5-11, 360, 361	10:3, 313	26:19, 372, 775, 778,	40:1-2, 390, 636	42:18, 452, 595, 984
2:17-22, 360	10:33-34, 439	779, 781	40:1-3, 169	43:1, 43, 399
3:2, 842	11, 24, 116, 390, 882	26:21, 687	40:1-9, 476	43:1-7, 459
3:14, 228	11:1, 48, 56, 57, 73, 74,	27:1-2, 698	40:1-10, 578, 981	43:2, 693
3:14-15, 800	169, 580, 592, 625,	27:9, 483	40:1-11, 636	43:3, 828
4, 635, 856	882, 986	27:13, 256	40:2, 483, 636, 688	43:5, 188
4:5, 313	11:1-4, 388	28:3-4, 951	40:3, 129, 169, 170,	43:6, 431
5:1-7, 397, 431, 592,	11:1-5, 882, 980	28:7, 842, 993	178, 230, 231, 251,	43:8, 452
652, 653	11:1-9, 578, 790, 881	28:7-8, 993	323, 343, 411, 438,	43:9, 392, 1001
5:7, 268, 464	11:1-16, 982	28:16, 170, 989	439, 442, 464, 475,	43:9-10, 398, 1002
5:8, 89	11:2, 131, 625, 700,	28:17, 464	483, 532, 562, 581,	43:10, 120, 133, 319,
5:8-13, 800	882, 999	29:9, 993	617, 631, 632, 633,	398, 429, 1001
5:11, 993	11:2-4, 483	29:10, 842	634, 636, 637, 638,	43:11, 319
5:11-12, 993	11:3-5, 882	29:13, 19, 349, 508,	639, 668, 982, 983,	43:11-12, 828
5:14, 372	11:4, 882	631, 634	1003	43:13, 120, 133, 398
5:22, 993	11:6, 882	29:18, 368, 595	40:3-4, 284, 617	43:14, 179
5:25, 140	11:6-9, 986	29:18-19, 441, 452,	40:3-5, 76, 233, 439,	43:16, 128, 399
6, 15, 189, 361	11:10, 882	984	617, 635, 636, 858,	43:16-24, 986
6:1, 189, 315, 707, 932	11:11-12, 882	29:23, 687	986	43:17, 981
6:1-3, 189	11:12, 188	30:8, 87	40:3-6, 439	43:22, 179
6:1-5, 457	12:2, 828	30:10, 677	40:5, 313, 635, 636,	43:23, 179
6:1-10, 37	12:6, 828	30:29, 272, 626	640	43:25, 128, 133, 398,
6:2-7, 12	13, 30, 827	31:1, 981	40:8, 1	598, 982
6:8, 140	13:21, 193, 618	31:7, 867	40:9, 343, 471, 816,	44:1, 855
6:8-10, 360, 361	14:9, 372	31:9, 371	940	44:1-5, 388
6:9, 635	14:11, 372	32:12, 994	40:9-10, 687	44:1-6, 471
6:9-10, 91, 320, 631,	14:12-14, 776	32:15, 636	40:9-11, 636	44:2, 43, 855
632, 634, 636, 640,	14:13, 615	32:15-18, 388, 390,	40:11, 188, 859	44:3-4, 522
672, 771	14:15, 372, 775	392	40:13, 387	44:3-5, 627
6:10, 361, 592, 637,	14:29, 882	32:19, 439	40:18, 319	44:6, 318, 319
638, 639	16:5, 882	33, 471	40:18-20, 319	44:8, 319, 626
7, 828	16:8-10, 993	33:22, 471	40:18-26, 521	44:8-9, 1001
7—12, 625	16:12, 615	34, 30, 827	40:23, 319	44:9-20, 319, 626
7:14, 73, 74, 81, 130,	17:10, 626	34:4, 599, 626	40:28, 319	44:21, 855
169, 321, 489, 633,	18:7, 409	34:8-10, 626	41:4, 128, 133, 398,	44:24, 319
634, 723, 828, 988	19:1, 895	34:11-15, 194	638	44:24-28, 471
7:15-16, 111	19:14, 993	34:14, 193	41:8, 855	45:4, 319
7:16-25, 634	19:18, 487	35:1-2, 617	41:10, 312, 399	45:5, 318
7:17-25, 828	22:13, 993	35:4, 687	41:13, 399	45:6, 318, 319
8:2, 1001	24—27, 775	35:4-6, 826	41:21-24, 319	45:7, 319
8:6-8, 828	24:9, 993	35:5, 172, 595	42, 312, 640, 855, 858	45:9-11, 626
8:7-8, 693	24:20, 993	35:5-6, 368, 441, 452,	42:1, 68, 128, 131,	45:14, 233, 318, 319
8:8, 321, 402	24:21-22, 595	616, 884, 984	440, 581, 689, 707,	45:16-22, 319
8:8-10, 828	24:22, 595, 775	35:5-10, 983	856, 869, 872, 968,	45:18, 318, 319, 398
8:14, 989	25:1, 494	35:8-9, 981	971	45:21, 318, 319
8:14-15, 828	25:6, 271, 276, 868,	37:4, 326	42:1-4, 3, 305, 388,	45:21-24, 784
8:16, 202, 936	993	37:6, 85	389, 391, 465, 580,	45:22, 318, 319
8:18, 828	25:6-8, 276, 494, 925,	37:17, 326	582, 633, 634, 855,	46:3, 264
8:19, 775	994	37:23, 85	857, 884, 988	46:4, 133, 398
9, 24, 116	25:6-9, 449, 478	37:36, 12	42:6, 76, 312, 640	46:5-7, 319
9:1, 297, 486, 564	25:6-10, 616	38:10, 140	42:6-7, 397, 856	46:9, 318, 319

46:10-11, 398	1021	58:5, 269	65:17-20, 626, 628	11:5, 10
46:13, 313, 626	53:1, 431, 533, 637,	58:5-7, 318	65:18-19, 980	14:18, 842
48:12, 133, 319, 398	638, 858, 988	58:6, 76, 286, 451,	65:24, 850	15:7, 771
49, 640, 855, 858	53:2-10, 189	477, 605, 635, 852,	66:1-2, 251	15:10, 708
49:1-6, 606, 855	53:3, 178, 632, 988	853, 857	66:2, 807, 974	16, 24
49:1-26, 459	53:3-6, 269	58:6-10, 803	66:5, 30	16:16, 37
49:3, 626	53:4, 482, 580, 633,	58:11, 945	66:10, 980	17:19-27, 148
49:5, 312, 856	634, 857, 872, 884,	58:13, 272, 365, 820	66:13, 320	17:21-22, 744, 820
49:5-7, 578	988	58:13-14, 171	66:13-24, 462	17:22, 456
49:6, 76, 101, 397,	53:5-6, 186	59:6, 867	66:18-19, 313	18:2-6, 633, 635
592, 608, 668, 786,	53:6, 179, 186	59:9, 463	66:22, 1, 319, 454,	18:8, 771
858, 902	53:7, 179, 476, 482,	59:19, 367	626, 628	18:10, 772
49:7, 856	632, 858, 973, 974,	60—62, 981	66:24, 371, 374, 491,	18:18, 202, 842, 843
49:8-13, 986	976, 988	60:1-19, 313	592	19:1-2, 54
49:11, 830	53:7-8, 186, 857, 988	60:1-22, 616	Jeremiah	19:1-13, 371
49:12, 367	53:7-9, 180	60:5, 980	1, 800	19:1-15, 459
49:15, 320	53:8-9, 186	60:6, 343, 703	1:4-10, 37	20, 708
49:22-23, 578	53:9, 179, 988	60:9, 626	1:7, 140	20:13, 167
49:24-26, 982	53:10, 179, 186, 277,	60:13, 275	1:9, 709	20:15, 343
50, 857	495, 632, 856	60:21, 626	2:13, 319	21:2, 589
50:4, 202	53:10-11, 131	61, 117, 345, 452, 706,	2:21, 397, 431	21:8, 851
50:4-9, 855	53:10-12, 179	708, 741, 855, 933	2:27-29, 264	22:3, 697
50:5-9, 312	53:11, 107, 131, 186,	61:1, 131, 140, 172,	3, 24	23:1-4, 431
50:6, 131, 180, 665,	187, 466, 482, 695,	286, 343, 344, 345,	3:1, 214	23:3, 882
976, 988	776	368, 450, 451, 452,	3:3, 214	23:5, 187, 592, 625,
51:1-2, 139	53:11-12, 494, 580,	595, 806, 884, 982,	3:4, 317, 322	697, 881, 882, 986
51:3, 371	632, 988	984	3:8, 214	23:5-6, 116, 578, 790
51:3-6, 233	53:12, 179, 186, 267,	61:1-2, 35, 76, 117, 131,	3:13, 214	23:6, 882
51:4, 397	632, 635, 665, 856,	231, 390, 441, 451,	3:17, 214, 949	23:11, 842
51:5, 463	857, 872, 988	477, 599, 605, 635,	3:18-19, 320, 322	23:14, 867
51:9-11, 233	54, 24	639, 741, 803, 807,	3:19, 317	23:25-32, 217
51:10, 399	54:1, 636	830, 852, 853, 857,	3:20, 214	23:33-34, 842
51:10-11, 179	54:4-8, 95	933	4, 214, 412, 686	23:36, 319
51:12, 133, 398	54:13, 202, 637	61:1-4, 388, 450, 451	4:28, 772	24:7, 430
51:17, 309, 993	55, 525	61:1-11, 803	5:26-28, 800	24:9, 651
51:17-23, 693	55:1, 993	61:2, 639	6:13, 842	25:5, 771
51:22, 309	55:1-2, 449	61:3, 388, 626	6:15, 984	25:15, 993
52, 30	55:3, 881	61:4, 343	7, 412, 459, 942	25:15-29, 693
52—53, 126, 896, 898	55:3-4, 986	61:10, 980	7:1-15, 232, 413, 545,	25:15-38, 309
52:1, 626	55:3-5, 1001	62:3, 700	950	25:27, 993
52:1-12, 330	55:5, 626, 982	62:10-12, 981, 984	7:11, 413, 631, 685,	26, 950
52:3, 179	55:6-7, 688	62:11, 984	942, 950, 982	26:4, 771
52:6, 133, 398	55:10-11, 61, 525	63:1, 463	7:13-34, 360	26:7-8, 842
52:7, 101, 251, 343,	55:11, 1001	63:1-6, 993	7:30-33, 371	26:11, 842
345, 471, 668	56, 459	63:9, 11	7:31-32, 459	26:16, 842
52:7-8, 471	56—66, 233, 626	63:11-14, 617	8:8, 840	26:19, 771
52:9, 179	56:1, 803	63:16, 295, 686	8:10, 842	27:5, 319
52:12, 189	56:3-8, 949	63:17, 360	8:13, 951	29:1, 227, 842
52:13, 188, 315, 431,	56:4, 982	64—66, 24	9:17-21, 412	30, 24
776, 858	56:7, 564, 631, 684,	64:1, 707	9:24, 463	30:9, 882, 982
52:13—53:12, 128, 131,	685, 744, 942, 944,	64:10-11, 942	10:4-9, 698	31, 73, 172
178, 186, 188, 189,	949, 951	65:1-25, 462	10:8-10, 319	31:1-25, 615
312, 666, 855	56:8, 188, 885	65:8, 855, 993	10:10, 326	31:1-40, 73
53, 178, 179, 186, 189,	56:12, 993	65:11, 193	10:11, 932	31:3, 320
192, 367, 482, 483,	57, 189	65:13, 993, 994	10:12, 933	31:8, 188
494, 495, 522, 632,	57:15, 189, 807	65:13-14, 449	10:21, 859	31:9, 320
640, 664, 708, 827,	58:3, 269	65:17, 233, 319, 454,	11:1-17, 360	31:9-11, 317, 322
856, 857, 858, 859,	58:4-6, 269	628		31:10, 188

31:11, 179, 322	700, 868	34:11-16, 397, 431	39:25-27, 687	6:21, 895
31:12, 995	1:1, 707	34:13, 188	39:27, 188	6:22, 12
31:15, 57, 73, 169, 633, 635, 961	1:26-28, 314, 698	34:15, 885	39:28, 255	6:26, 326
31:16-17, 73	2, 828	34:16, 606, 883, 884	39:29, 687	7, 25, 27, 116, 117, 178,
31:20, 686	21:4, 140	34:17-22, 885	40—48, 12, 24, 941	179, 471, 581, 640,
31:31-34, 1, 186, 246, 247, 495, 625, 626, 628, 687, 990	4, 940	34:21, 188	43:1-5, 981, 982	701, 736, 753, 857,
	4:6, 955	34:22-24, 116	43:4-5, 313	895, 896, 897, 898,
	7:26, 842, 843	34:23, 397, 606, 859, 881, 884, 885	43:4, 313	900, 988
	8—10, 940	34:23-24, 609, 881, 982, 986	43:21, 277	7—9, 27
31:31-40, 390	8:1, 227	34:30-31, 606	44:14, 696	7—10, 26
31:32, 95	8:4, 313	36, 627	44:17-19, 697	7—12, 14, 179, 940
31:33, 497	8:6, 942	36—37, 24, 393	44:19, 697, 702	7:2, 185
31:34, 430, 497, 688	8:12, 942	36:8, 388	44:21, 993	7:4, 185
31:35, 598	9:3, 942	36:16-27, 627	44:23, 697	7:6, 185
32:2, 412	9:9, 942	36:21-23, 687	44:24, 697	7:7, 185
32:9, 57	10, 413, 828	36:23, 687	45:25, 274	7:9, 14, 119, 120, 185,
32:12, 840	10:18, 313	36:24-28, 390, 992	46:4, 820	590, 967, 968, 990
32:34-35, 371	11, 688	36:25-26, 392	46:17, 450	7:10, 118
33:1, 412	11:19, 388	36:25-27, 1, 432, 625, 627, 628	47:1, 945	7:11, 185
33:8, 688	11:19-20, 1, 625	36:25-32, 688	47:1-12, 238, 432	7:13, 16, 60, 61, 127,
33:14-26, 454	11:23, 942, 981	36:26, 388, 522	47:2-12, 945	128, 176, 183, 185,
33:15, 592, 625, 882	14:1, 227	36:26-27, 687	48:1-29, 450	314, 702, 703, 704,
33:15-26, 982	14:1-11, 360	36:27, 388, 522, 992		736, 750, 972, 973,
33:16, 882	14:6, 771	36:28-38, 627	Daniel	975
33:17-22, 116, 701	15:2-6, 431	36:33, 389, 390	1, 12, 14, 25, 26, 27, 194, 781	7:13-14, 24, 25, 30,
34:8, 450	16, 627	37, 179, 452, 627, 882	1:7-9, 194	59, 86, 119, 412,
34:13, 295	16:8-14, 95	37:1-14, 373, 388, 522, 775	1:8, 270	461, 578, 581, 590,
34:15, 450	16:15-22, 698	37:1-16, 319	1:8-16, 994	695, 699, 894, 895,
34:17, 450	16:44, 651	37:5, 392	2, 13, 25, 27, 684, 699, 792, 898	899
35:1-19, 994	17:2, 651	37:5-6, 775	2—7, 473	7:13-15, 25
35:15, 771	17:5-10, 431	37:8-10, 775	2:4, 485, 932	7:13-27, 284
35:15-17, 771	17:6-8, 397	37:9, 628	2:34-35, 792	7:14, 14, 24, 702, 895,
36, 412, 688, 840	18:31, 388	37:12-13, 184, 775, 778	2:44, 792, 816	899
36:7, 688	19:10-14, 431	37:13-14, 388	2:44-45, 25, 116	7:14-15, 32
36:31, 412	20:5-7, 360	37:14, 184, 392	2:45, 615, 989	7:14-16, 25
36:32, 202	20:12, 820	37:15-22, 43	2:47, 528	7:17, 25
39:2-21, 601	20:20, 820	37:15-28, 257	3:12, 895	7:18, 179
40:5, 834	20:33-44, 617	37:20, 859	3:14, 895	7:19-21, 179
42:5, 1001	21:26, 700	37:21-22, 184	3:18, 895	7:21, 179
42:18-22, 1001	22:25, 842	37:21-23, 390	3:25, 14	7:22, 179
43:3, 840	23:31-34, 309	37:22, 859	3:28, 12, 14, 895	7:23-24, 25
48:1, 89	26:20, 775	37:24, 884, 885	3:29, 85	7:23-25, 179
48:26, 993	28:8, 775	37:24-25, 184, 881, 982	3:92, 11	7:24-25, 25
51:25, 615	28:12, 700	37:26, 184	4, 471	7:25, 179
51:39, 993	28:12-15, 699	37:28, 184	4:13, 11, 12	7:27, 179, 895
51:57, 993	29:4-5, 38	38:16, 687, 932	4:23, 11, 12	8:9-11, 30
52:20-23, 939	32, 30	38:23, 687	4:34, 473	8:15-16, 782
	33:11, 771	39:7, 687	4:34-35, 319	8:16, 12, 636
Lamentations	34, 860, 882, 884, 885	39:9-10, 932	5:1, 993	9, 25, 254, 697, 792
1:15, 993	34:1-6, 606	39:17-19, 868	5:3, 151	9:1-19, 269
2:7, 271	34:1-10, 431	39:17-20, 271	5:10-13, 186	9:9, 598
3:1-19, 319	34:1-16, 884		5:23, 528	9:13, 610
3:23, 320	34:4, 884		6, 471	9:16-19, 389, 390
4:20, 122	34:5, 92, 859		6:10, 684	9:21, 12, 636, 684,
4:22, 389, 390	34:5-6, 859		6:17, 895	782
	34:11-13, 141		6:20, 326	9:24-25, 25
Ezekiel	34:11-14, 118			9:24-26, 25
1, 12, 13, 338, 687,

9:24-27, 30, 116, 254, 451, 792	7:5, 993	2:4, 693	Haggai	11:12, 885
9:27, 411, 819, 942, 943	9:2, 993	2:6, 775	1:1, 837	11:12-13, 633, 635, 973
10:5-6, 13	9:5, 274	3—4, 862	1:11, 993	11:15-17, 859
10:6, 967	10:8, 412	3:4-5, 989	2:3, 939	11:17, 89
10:7-9, 13	11:1, 57, 73, 129, 169, 317, 581, 592, 633, 634, 719, 723, 964	3:8, 867	2:9, 941	12, 933
10:9-12, 968	11:1-2, 957	3:10, 771	2:16, 993	12:1, 934
10:13, 12	11:1-4, 264	4:2, 320, 853		12:7-8, 982
10:21, 12	11:1-7, 462	4:5, 274	Zechariah	12:7—13:1, 116
11—12, 25, 27, 781			1, 14, 941	12:8, 11
11:30, 943	Joel	Micah	1—6, 12, 14	12:10, 388, 637, 933
11:31, 819, 942	1:14, 269	1, 417	1:4, 771	12:10-14, 973
11:31-35, 30	2:2, 181	2:4, 651	1:7, 449	13, 640
11:33, 776	2:12, 269	2:5, 138	1:12-17, 14	13—14, 632, 633
11:35, 776	2:13, 320, 853	2:11, 993	1:16-17, 940	13:1, 238
12, 179	2:17, 651, 697	2:12, 397	2:6-12, 615	13:4, 439
12:1, 12, 13, 179, 776	2:24, 993	4:1, 951	3, 15	13:7, 119, 128, 631, 632, 635, 664, 665, 859, 860, 885, 973
12:1-3, 179, 233, 373, 375	2:28, 217	4:1-5, 606	3—6, 700	13:7-9, 609, 859
12:2, 184, 430, 519, 695, 775, 776, 778, 779, 781	2:28-32, 636, 706	4:1-8, 578	3:1-2, 193	13:9, 953
12:2-3, 184, 825	2:31, 181, 626	4:2, 615	3:1-10, 388, 700	14, 949, 982
12:3, 15, 373, 776, 780, 781	3:1-5, 388, 390	4:4-7, 139	3:8, 592, 625, 933	14:1-11, 981
12:8, 651	3:13, 993	4:6-7, 615, 616	4, 118, 703	14:4, 260, 408, 615, 616, 617, 632, 942, 981
12:10, 864	3:14, 626	4:10, 179	4:6, 388	14:4-5, 55, 410, 617
12:11, 30, 411, 819, 942	3:18, 238, 993, 995	5:1, 57	4:7, 933	14:6-8, 277
12:11-12, 940	4:13, 458	5:1-9, 578	4:12-14, 116	14:8, 238, 392, 432, 945
12:13, 179, 233, 775, 776	Amos	5:2, 45, 73, 169, 170, 580, 633, 637, 884, 988	4:14, 701, 837	14:8-11, 941
Hosea	2, 995	5:2-4, 980	6:11, 700, 837	14:9, 494
1, 617	2:8, 668	5:2-6, 988	6:11-12, 116	14:16, 432
1:10, 326	2:11-12, 994	5:3-4, 884	6:12, 592, 625, 933, 974	14:16-21, 274
2:1-23, 95	3:13, 1001	5:4, 633	6:12-13, 118	14:17, 274
2:11, 275	4:1-11, 771	6:4, 179, 295	6:13, 700, 701, 703, 934	14:21, 632, 944, 949, 983
2:14-23, 617	4:2, 38	6:8, 465, 509, 586	7:3, 842	Malachi
2:20, 430	4:4, 223	7:6-18, 30	7:5, 269	1:6, 686
3:5, 116, 881, 882, 982	4:6, 771	7:18-19, 128	8:1-8, 459	2:2, 704
4:4, 842	5:11, 839	7:20, 320	8:7, 276	2:6-7, 439
4:11, 993	5:14-15, 803	Nahum	8:8, 320	2:7, 11, 13, 697, 699, 941
4:12, 388	5:21-25, 318	1:2, 169	8:12, 494	2:14, 1001
5:4, 771	5:24, 464	1:15, 343	8:20-23, 606, 949	3, 562, 631
5:15, 771	6:4, 275	Habakkuk	8:23, 455	3:1, 15, 56, 129, 229, 230, 323, 411, 439, 441, 475, 562, 563, 617, 631, 632, 633, 707, 944, 982, 983
6, 192	6:4-6, 925	1, 168	9, 494, 984	3:1-3, 11
6:1, 771	6:12, 464	1:13, 169	9—14, 494, 885, 1021	3:1-4, 562
6:1-3, 775	8:4-8, 800	1:14-17, 38	9:6-8, 981	3:1-5, 982
6:1-5, 367	8:5, 275, 820	2:2, 649	9:8, 494	3:1-12, 803
6:2, 179, 775	8:9, 181	2:5, 993	9:9, 118, 187, 189, 275, 412, 413, 479, 494, 633, 635, 637, 885, 933, 980, 981, 982, 983, 984, 985	3:3, 944
6:6, 146, 147, 318, 322, 367, 467, 514, 582, 586, 588, 635, 822, 848, 941	8:11, 807	2:6, 651	9:9-10, 116, 128, 973, 980	3:5, 983
6:7-11, 367	9:13, 993	2:15, 993	9:12-14, 116	3:7, 771
7:1-2, 367	9:13-14, 995	3:15, 396	9:13, 578	3:8, 223
	Jonah	3:18, 1020	9:10, 981, 984, 985
	1—2, 862	Zephaniah	9:11, 494, 495, 1021
	1:4, 598	1:14—2:3, 626	9:17, 993
	1:4-17, 57	1:15, 181	10:2, 217
	1:17, 989	3:9, 488	10:4, 933
	2:1, 862	3:15, 981	10:8, 179
	2:2, 372	3:16, 985

4:1-6, 982
 4:4-6, 968, 969
 4:5, 181, 441, 706,
 707, 983
 4:5-6, 178, 229, 439,
 442, 454, 611, 706
 4:6, 229, 230

APOCRYPHA

Tobit

1, 456
 1:2, 297
 1:6, 272
 1:6-7, 223
 1:7-8, 272, 801
 1:8, 223
 1:17-18, 98
 2:1, 273
 2:1-2, 263, 272
 2:1-3, 272
 2:7, 98
 3:3, 863
 4, 256
 4:3-4, 263
 4:7, 802
 4:15, 512
 4:21, 453
 5—12, 16
 6:6-7, 197
 6:14, 98
 6:16-18, 197
 7:9, 802
 8:2-3, 197
 8:3, 618
 12, 454
 12:8, 802
 12:12, 697
 12:15, 12
 12:17, 669
 12:19, 16, 785
 12:20-21, 785
 13—14, 256
 13:4, 685
 13:6, 772
 13:8, 864
 14:3-11, 266
 14:5, 456, 950
 14:5-7, 615
 14:10, 98

Judith

4, 3
 4:8, 837
 6:15-17, 227
 7:9-10, 227
 8:12, 953

8:20, 318
 8:24-27, 3
 8:25, 953
 9:1, 684
 9:11-12, 453
 9:14, 318

Wisdom of Solomon

1:1, 528
 1:4-6, 999
 1:7, 528
 1:9, 528
 1:15, 776
 2, 666
 2:13, 528
 2:16, 685
 3:1-4, 776
 3:2, 970
 3:5, 953
 4—5, 666
 4:3-5, 439
 5:4, 651
 6:12-25, 999
 6:12—9:18, 999
 6:13, 999
 6:14, 580
 6:22—10:21, 902
 7, 999
 7—9, 526
 7:6, 970
 7:7, 999
 7:8-14, 999
 7:22-23, 999
 7:26, 428, 998
 7:27, 996
 7:29-30, 525
 8:2, 999
 8:4, 999
 8:9, 999
 8:13, 776, 998, 999
 8:16-18, 999
 8:17, 776, 998, 999
 8:21, 997
 9:1-2, 525, 998
 9:4, 999
 9:9, 998, 999
 9:13, 999
 9:17, 999
 9:17-18, 388, 999
 10:3, 999
 10:4, 999
 10:9-10, 999
 10:10, 453
 10:15, 143
 11:10, 685
 11:23, 772
 12:3, 272

12:10, 772
 12:13, 318
 12:19, 772
 14:3, 685
 15:3, 776, 999
 16:7, 772
 16:13, 140
 18:9, 272, 273
 18:15, 998
 18:15-16, 525
 18:20-25, 702
 18:21, 697

Sirach

1, 432, 610, 699, 704,
 993
 1:4, 525, 998
 1:9, 998
 1:10, 997
 1:20, 999
 1:25, 863
 1:28-29, 394
 2:1, 689
 2:12, 863
 3:1-16, 263
 3:6, 264
 4, 178, 263, 319
 4:3-5, 802
 4:11, 999
 4:11-18, 999
 4:12, 999
 4:17, 953
 4:18, 999
 4:19, 999
 5:7, 772
 6:3, 439
 6:18-31, 999
 6:28, 580
 7:10, 802
 7:17, 374
 7:27-31, 699
 8:5, 772
 10:14, 1020
 11, 689
 11:5, 808
 11:13, 808
 11:21, 808
 12:1-7, 802
 13:17, 864
 14:12-19, 373
 14:20—15:10, 999
 15:11-12, 953
 15:12, 863
 15:20, 953
 16:30, 373, 776
 17:1, 373, 776
 17:24, 772
 17:25-26, 772

17:30, 373, 776
 18:1, 319
 18:21, 772
 19:1-2, 993
 20:20, 651
 21:10, 863
 21:13, 999
 21:27, 193
 23:1, 685
 23:4, 685
 23:9-11, 629
 24, 13, 526, 902
 24:1-4, 999
 24:1-12, 998
 24:3, 610
 24:3-5, 998
 24:3-22, 525
 24:4, 14, 525
 24:8, 525, 610
 24:8-11, 841
 24:8-12, 525, 998
 24:9, 130, 998
 24:16-17, 525
 24:17-18, 397
 24:19, 580
 24:19-21, 999
 24:19-22, 999
 24:19-23, 998
 24:21, 397, 999
 24:23, 610, 998
 24:23-34, 999
 24:31, 276
 24:33, 841, 999
 25:24, 194
 25:26, 263
 26:5, 138
 27:30, 863
 29:1, 802
 30:4-6, 109, 111
 30:18, 775
 31:8, 489
 31:12—32:13, 926,
 928
 31:15, 926
 31:29-30, 993
 32:15, 394
 33:1, 689, 953
 33:2, 394
 33:14, 864
 34:26, 269
 36, 684
 36:5, 318
 37:26, 776
 38:1-8, 362
 38:1-15, 746
 38:21, 776
 38:24—39:11, 841
 39, 707

39:1-11, 999
 39:2-3, 651, 707
 39:4, 841
 39:6, 999
 39:6-8, 388
 39:6-11, 841
 39:9, 776
 39:26, 848, 994
 40:1, 373, 776
 40:11, 373, 776
 41:10, 373, 776
 41:19, 275
 44:1, 982
 44:1—51:24, 855
 44:8-15, 776
 44:9, 373
 44:16, 772
 45:1-5, 610
 45:2, 610
 45:5, 610, 612
 45:6, 702
 45:7, 703
 45:7-8, 698
 45:7-12, 697
 45:12, 698, 700
 45:13, 697, 703
 45:15, 699, 703
 45:17, 697, 841
 45:20, 698
 45:21, 982
 45:24, 696, 703
 45:26, 697, 698
 46:6-10, 999
 47:1-11, 982
 47:11, 791
 47:17, 651
 47:22, 791
 48, 229
 48:1, 439
 48:7, 612
 48:9, 612
 48:10, 439, 611
 48:10-11, 178
 48:13-14, 775
 48:15, 772
 48:24, 432
 50, 698, 841
 50:1, 698
 50:1-21, 699
 50:3, 53
 50:5-7, 704
 50:7, 698
 50:11, 457, 698
 50:15, 994
 50:16-21, 457
 50:20-21, 697
 50:20-22, 703
 50:26, 834

50:27, 841	4:19-25, 980	4:12, 376	6:15, 394	1:2-17, 3, 4, 255, 573,
51:10, 685	4:24, 982	4:13, 376	6:17, 394	592, 608
51:12, 453	4:36, 985	4:21, 980	6:28-29, 857	1:3, 80, 129, 300, 579
51:15, 999	4:36-51, 274	4:21-22, 980	7:3, 776	1:3-6, 1004
51:23, 904	4:36-59, 925	4:44, 838	7:13-14, 3	1:5, 3, 129, 300, 579
51:23-26, 130	4:46, 706	5:22-23, 834	7:19, 780	1:5-6, 80
51:26-27, 998	4:52-58, 274	5:25, 394	9:2, 610	1:6, 3, 299, 300, 579,
51:27, 580	4:59, 274	6—7, 795	9:22, 776	580, 883, 984, 988
	5:15, 486	6:2, 834	10:15, 776	1:6-7, 634
Baruch	5:23, 297, 486	6:7, 274, 332	13:8-12, 3	1:8, 299
1:15—3:8, 389	5:45-54, 980	6:18-31, 841	13:13-17, 3	1:11, 255, 299, 300
3:9-12, 525	7:12-13, 841	6:21, 394	14:4-5, 776	1:11-12, 322, 634
3:15—4:1, 997	7:33, 838	6:24-25, 394	16:13, 776	1:12, 255
3:36, 318	10:21, 702	7, 233, 373, 666, 776	16:14, 795	1:12-16, 299, 300
3:36—4:1, 428	10:86, 980	7:1-42, 776	16:18-20, 3	1:13, 299
3:37—4:1, 998	11:23, 838	7:9-36, 454	16:25, 780	1:16, 80, 121, 300,
4, 318	12:6, 837, 838	7:10-11, 776	17:10, 795	566, 579, 997
4:12, 998	12:20-23, 700	7:14, 776	17:19, 610	1:17, 3, 121, 255, 299,
4:36-37, 459	12:43-50, 980	7:30, 610	18:8, 618	300, 322, 579, 625,
5, 631	13:43-51, 980	8:1, 376	18:10-11, 3	634, 883, 984, 988,
5:5, 276	13:49-51, 982	10:1-8, 274	18:10-19, 263	997
5:5-6, 459	13:51, 985	10:6-8, 274, 925	18:12, 42	1:18, 80, 81, 121, 299,
	14, 699	10:7, 332, 985	18:18, 610	321, 391, 579, 624
Prayer of Azariah	14:4-5, 698	10:29-30, 12	18:23, 776	1:18-19, 263
1:6, 772	14:4-15, 699	11:5-12, 12		1:18-20, 81
	14:20, 838	11:27, 837		1:18-21, 597
Susanna	14:24-49, 838	12:31-32, 273	NEW TESTAMENT	1:18-23, 83
3, 263, 610	14:25-49, 222	14:38, 376	Matthew	1:18-24, 828
62, 610	14:28, 838	14:46, 776	1, 3, 5, 36, 83, 243,	1:18-25, 63, 74, 80,
	14:43, 702	15:12-16, 700	906, 1018, 1020	264, 1009
Bel and the Dragon	14:44, 838	15:22-23, 12	1—2, 73, 74, 83, 84,	1:18—2:10, 300
5, 319	15:32, 698	15:36, 274	339, 474, 624, 625,	1:18—2:12, 82
6, 319	15:36, 698		968	1:18—2:23, 72, 80
24, 319		3 Maccabees	1—7, 83, 201, 625,	1:19, 215, 464, 685,
25, 319	2 Maccabees	2, 697	854	1009
41, 318	1, 776	2:21, 685	1—8, 618	1:20, 14, 80, 129, 170,
	1:7, 272	2:24, 772	1—13, 152, 359	172, 321, 454, 531,
1 Maccabees	1:8-9, 274	2:28-30, 332	1:1, 3, 115, 121, 129,	598, 624, 625, 884,
1, 699	1:9, 272	5:7, 685	172, 299, 300, 301,	984, 988
1:11-15, 486	1:12, 272	5:51, 140	391, 579, 580, 592,	1:20-21, 3, 217
1:34, 864	1:18, 272	6:3, 685	598, 608, 625, 634,	1:21, 73, 74, 108, 130,
2:6, 85	1:24, 319	6:8, 685	845, 883, 984, 988,	182, 183, 261, 285,
2:24-26, 740	1:24-25, 128	6:16-29, 12	997	304, 321, 322, 460,
2:29-41, 820	1:24-29, 684	6:18-19, 14	1:1-2, 634	495, 581, 624, 625,
2:42, 673	2:5, 941	6:30-40, 271	1:1-16, 495	634, 639, 828, 845,
2:42-48, 264	2:8, 987	7:6, 685	1:1-17, 3, 74, 121, 129,	865, 921
2:44, 864	2:13-15, 697	7:17-20, 271	299, 302, 454, 578,	1:21-23, 625, 998
2:48, 864	2:17, 697		1009	1:22, 237, 531, 768
2:49-70, 266	2:19, 274	4 Maccabees	1:1-20, 529	1:22-23, 73, 81, 129,
2:50-52, 259	2:19-28, 377	2, 618	1:1—2:23, 634	573, 575, 625, 723
2:57, 791	2:21, 376	2:10-13, 264	1:1—4:11, 134	1:23, 74, 75, 126, 130,
2:58, 864	3:24-26, 12	2:17, 610	1:1—4:16, 571	184, 202, 304, 321,
2:68, 817	3:25-26, 13	4:10, 12	1:2, 3, 300	339, 402, 429, 495,
3:3-9, 699	3:34, 785	4:11, 148	1:2-6, 299	567, 570, 573, 581,
3:4, 791	4:1-2, 222	4:26, 376	1:2-13, 299	582, 608, 624, 633,
3:13, 138	4:9, 376	5—7, 841	1:2-16, 80, 81, 299,	634, 706, 784, 806,
3:27—4:25, 55	4:10, 376	5:4, 841	989	828, 845, 951, 973,
4, 259	4:11, 376	5:19, 864		988

1:24, 14, 531	380, 666, 957	3:12, 67, 371, 374, 439	4:12-17, 298, 957	5:2, 829, 846
1:24-25, 81, 685	2:17, 237, 955	3:13, 955	4:13, 48, 57, 936	5:3, 170, 353, 468,
2, 4, 74, 79, 80, 83,	2:17-18, 73, 129, 169,	3:13-17, 25, 46, 68,	4:13-16, 572, 625	473, 474, 579, 639,
136, 309, 317, 448,	573, 635, 973	391, 440, 634, 828,	4:13-17, 50	805, 807, 846, 847,
625, 828, 836, 859,	2:18, 73, 304, 495,	845	4:14-15, 634	848, 917
940	633, 961	3:14-15, 1009	4:14-16, 129, 573	5:3-5, 451, 465
2:1, 45, 80, 134, 572,	2:19, 46, 321, 531, 624	3:15, 146, 261, 322,	4:14-17, 367	5:3-6, 579, 846
579	2:19-20, 217	389, 440, 464, 847	4:15, 74, 486, 579,	5:3-10, 88, 448, 465,
2:1-2, 170	2:19-21, 15, 73, 957	3:16, 66, 391, 440,	633, 640	474, 846
2:1-4, 121	2:19-23, 1009	625	4:15-16, 122, 304, 984	5:3-11, 90
2:1-6, 842	2:20-21, 403, 581	3:16-17, 217, 322, 371,	4:16, 48	5:3-12, 28, 167, 168,
2:1-8, 57	2:21-23, 847	440, 581	4:17, 27, 28, 88, 182,	449, 452, 828, 846
2:1-12, 54, 75, 108,	2:22, 217, 381	3:16—4:11, 959	246, 344, 367, 439,	5:3-16, 846
129, 304	2:22-23, 45, 57, 298	3:17, 3, 130, 182, 322,	459, 468, 473, 474,	5:3—7:27, 395, 514,
2:1-18, 576, 847	2:23, 48, 73, 74, 129,	367, 440, 580, 719,	520, 571, 578, 579,	630, 717, 845, 854
2:1-22, 845	264, 573, 592, 624,	856, 857, 954, 955,	606, 667, 772, 773,	5:4, 579, 848
2:1-23, 380	625, 633, 973	957, 968	930	5:5, 848, 1015
2:2, 74, 75, 130, 168,	3, 2, 19, 92, 95, 229,	4, 125, 302, 771, 959,	4:17-25, 845	5:6, 261, 322, 353,
169, 403, 473, 580,	284, 352, 439, 444,	1000	4:17—9:35, 578	465, 495, 582, 847,
581, 582, 784, 847,	458, 468, 492, 518,	4—16, 571	4:17—16:20, 344,	848, 1009
988, 1018, 1022	566, 572, 631, 673,	4:1, 93, 195, 389, 391,	571, 572	5:6-10, 465
2:2-3, 412	826, 966, 996	581, 617, 953, 955,	4:18, 40, 49, 139	5:7, 318, 322, 582,
2:3, 984	3—4, 618	957	4:18-21, 967	586, 848
2:3-6, 75	3:1, 46, 67, 439	4:1-10, 322	4:18-22, 36, 210, 846,	5:8, 322, 360, 848
2:3-18, 988	3:1-2, 170	4:1-11, 73, 93, 129,	848	5:9, 246, 667, 719,
2:4, 228, 579, 700,	3:1-6, 169, 284, 439,	171, 182, 322, 572,	4:19, 37, 205, 608	848, 849
702, 843	803	634, 712, 715, 716,	4:20, 808	5:10, 261, 465, 468,
2:4-6, 984	3:2, 67, 439, 459, 468,	845, 891, 917, 941,	4:21, 40	474, 579, 582, 846,
2:5, 73	473, 474, 520, 578,	954, 959	4:21-22, 1009	847, 848, 1009
2:5-6, 129, 170	579, 771, 772, 773	4:2, 195, 269, 270,	4:23, 298, 344, 367,	5:11-12, 88, 448, 846,
2:6, 74, 304, 403, 625,	3:3, 129, 231, 304,	955	468, 473, 474, 573,	848
633, 706, 859, 884,	438, 439, 464, 532,	4:3, 93, 130, 168, 182,	667, 829, 905, 906,	5:12, 248, 370, 708,
973, 988	581, 633, 634, 639,	194, 581, 953, 954,	907	852, 972
2:7, 108, 592	982	955, 957	4:23-24, 366, 367, 671	5:13, 848, 1015, 1016
2:8, 34, 74, 75, 130,	3:4, 230, 389, 442,	4:3-4, 955	4:23-25, 1007	5:13-16, 606, 848
581, 784, 1018, 1022	806	4:4, 93, 270, 322, 956	4:23—9:38, 579	5:14, 170, 523, 615,
2:9, 74	3:4-6, 439	4:5, 201, 412, 941,	4:24, 57, 196, 367	616, 1016
2:9-10, 75	3:5, 581	955, 957	4:25, 52, 57, 204, 249,	5:15, 523, 616
2:10, 108, 448	3:5-6, 865	4:5-7, 14, 15, 956	304, 490, 594, 670,	5:16, 313, 370, 417,
2:11, 45, 74, 75, 130,	3:6, 66, 991	4:6, 130, 182, 304,	671, 846	523, 686, 848
581, 703, 784, 806,	3:7, 19, 20, 67, 519,	581, 633, 954, 955,	4:25—5:2, 846	5:16-20, 1009
1022	673, 674	956, 957	5, 88, 138, 150, 213,	5:17, 304, 367, 417,
2:12-13, 217	3:7-9, 773	4:7, 316, 321, 322, 956	247, 342, 594, 848,	464, 474, 575, 577,
2:13, 15, 74, 321, 349,	3:7-10, 3, 171, 439,	4:8, 46, 195, 201, 313,	891, 1004	578, 580, 605, 612,
531, 624, 957	441, 459, 824	468, 473, 474, 615,	5—7, 50, 285, 339,	633, 635, 849, 851,
2:13-14, 1009	3:7-11, 241	617, 955, 956, 957,	354, 474, 570, 572,	892
2:13-15, 57, 73, 417,	3:7-12, 235, 237, 439,	967, 1016	573, 597, 620, 634,	5:17-18, 350
1009	459, 462, 673, 712	4:8-10, 237, 784, 956	692, 714, 768, 828,	5:17-20, 151, 249, 514,
2:13-20, 987	3:8, 5, 140, 373, 474,	4:9, 581, 847, 956	855	580, 829, 849, 930
2:13-23, 83, 745	771, 772	4:9-10, 1018	5—9, 573	5:17-48, 130, 169, 170,
2:14-15, 169, 218	3:9, 139, 322, 431, 772	4:10, 130, 195, 316,	5:1, 50, 57, 130, 207,	243, 245, 694
2:15, 73, 74, 129, 130,	3:10, 67, 371, 373, 374,	321, 322, 784, 872,	339, 371, 572, 615,	5:17—7:12, 846, 848
304, 531, 573, 581,	519, 688, 772	956, 957, 1018, 1020	616, 715, 784, 846,	5:18, 10, 33, 514, 612,
592, 633, 634, 719,	3:11, 67, 389, 391, 392,	4:11, 15, 195, 201, 872,	905, 906, 967	628, 633, 998, 1015
723, 955, 957, 973	437, 625, 771, 773,	956, 957, 1020	5:1-2, 208, 597, 616	5:18-19, 149, 509
2:15-16, 79	847	4:12, 182, 443, 920	5:1-48, 988	5:18-20, 464
2:16, 34, 74, 412	3:11-12, 3, 429, 439,	4:12-13, 298	5:1—7:27, 130	5:19, 149, 150, 247,
2:16-18, 46, 57, 111,	441, 773	4:12-16, 3, 56, 57	5:1—7:29, 573, 634	468, 612, 847

5:20, 146, 150, 261, 322, 464, 474, 475, 519, 520, 612, 630, 673, 674, 807, 828, 847, 849, 850, 906	511, 536, 582, 688, 849	6:12-13, 686	7:9-11, 109, 112	490, 573, 576, 578, 595, 606, 871
5:21, 514	5:44, 285, 350, 434, 511, 667, 690	6:12-15, 284, 285	7:11, 390, 690, 848, 849	8:6, 598
5:21-22, 460, 510, 806	5:44-45, 112, 586	6:13, 194, 309, 630, 953	7:12, 244, 245, 250, 371, 512, 582, 635, 851, 926	8:7, 579
5:21-26, 26, 250, 265, 285, 849	5:44-46, 225	6:14, 848	7:13, 519	8:8, 367, 594
5:21-48, 464, 510, 580, 640, 708, 849	5:44-48, 318	6:14-15, 112, 285, 286, 322, 582, 688, 850	7:13-14, 851	8:9, 64, 906, 961
5:21—7:12, 855	5:45, 319, 320, 464, 667, 686, 848, 849	6:16, 270, 395, 849	7:13-27, 846, 851	8:10, 10, 249, 305, 403, 579, 582, 828
5:22, 55, 371, 373, 374, 411, 460, 489, 519, 836, 849	5:45-48, 285, 668, 849	6:16-18, 269, 270, 806, 849	7:14, 519, 828	8:10-11, 20, 261, 367, 459
5:22-24, 222	5:46, 224, 849	6:17, 17, 873	7:15-20, 373, 459, 460	8:10-12, 206, 495, 984
5:23-24, 507, 941	5:46-47, 511, 866	6:17-18, 17, 171	7:15-23, 598, 851	8:11, 93, 276, 371, 459, 473, 925, 993, 994
5:23-26, 688	5:47, 302, 304, 612, 850	6:18, 270, 322, 849	7:15-27, 829	8:11-12, 26, 28, 30, 57, 308, 374, 495, 606, 779, 828
5:25, 905	5:48, 112, 322, 511, 807, 847, 848, 849	6:19, 241, 1015	7:16-20, 246, 464	8:12, 367, 371, 374, 459, 460, 473, 519
5:26, 10, 849	6, 149, 467	6:19-20, 225	7:16-23, 464, 474	8:13, 367, 828
5:27, 633	6:1, 248, 464, 847, 848, 849	6:19-21, 806, 851	7:17-19, 688	8:14, 39, 597
5:27-28, 510, 806	6:1-4, 222, 225, 806	6:19-33, 804	7:19, 237, 373, 374, 519	8:14-15, 364, 595, 598
5:27-30, 26, 110, 237	6:1-8, 322	6:19-34, 248, 808, 850	7:21, 264, 460, 474, 475, 510, 519, 581, 712, 828, 848, 1009	8:14-17, 988, 1007
5:27-32, 112, 849	6:1-18, 247, 464, 577, 849	6:20, 370	7:21-22, 532	8:15, 597, 872
5:28, 360	6:1-21, 474	6:20-21, 805	7:21-23, 429, 519, 582, 851	8:16, 367
5:28-29, 208	6:2, 313, 395, 674, 849, 905, 906	6:21, 360	7:21-27, 460	8:16-17, 196, 363, 364, 367, 594, 872, 884, 1007
5:29, 373	6:2-4, 803, 849	6:22, 91	7:21-29, 373	8:17, 129, 367, 495, 573, 580, 633, 634, 857, 869
5:29-30, 55, 411, 519, 804, 849	6:4, 322, 848, 849	6:22-23, 90, 91, 851	7:22, 64, 344, 829	8:18, 671
5:30, 215, 373	6:5, 395, 849, 904, 905, 906, 1020	6:24, 225, 318, 322, 489, 803, 806, 850, 871	7:23, 150, 372	8:18-21, 205
5:31, 849	6:5-6, 690, 806, 850	6:24-34, 261	7:24, 460, 524	8:18-22, 206, 597
5:31-32, 510, 1006	6:5-8, 849	6:25, 519	7:24-27, 460, 464, 712, 851, 852	8:18-27, 829
5:32, 213, 215, 509, 513	6:5-12, 175	6:25-26, 851	7:26, 524, 936	8:19, 204, 205, 249, 843, 907, 909, 935
5:33, 514, 630, 849, 1009	6:5-15, 264, 390, 850	6:25-32, 112, 322	7:28, 524, 570, 670, 671	8:19-20, 36, 805
5:33-37, 241, 510, 629, 828, 849	6:6, 322, 848, 849, 1020	6:25-33, 264	7:28-29, 63, 207, 245, 472, 846	8:19-22, 829
5:34, 321, 474, 630, 687, 688	6:7, 302, 304, 308, 850, 1019	6:25-34, 804, 806, 851	7:29, 829, 843, 906	8:20, 56, 117, 183, 235, 736, 802, 896, 898, 899
5:34-35, 1015	6:7-8, 690, 850	6:26, 370, 590, 767, 848	8, 207	8:21, 204, 207, 263
5:34-37, 513	6:7-15, 93, 850	6:26-30, 319, 320	8—9, 366, 474, 572, 573, 597, 828, 845	8:21-22, 263, 510, 804, 805
5:35, 412, 847	6:8, 848	6:29, 313	8—20, 201	8:22, 154, 249, 265
5:37, 26, 194, 630	6:9, 317, 318, 370, 402, 848, 890	6:30, 260, 261, 582, 598	8:1, 572, 616, 670, 671, 846	8:23, 207, 249
5:38, 633	6:9-10, 448, 474, 495, 686	6:32, 304, 848, 850	8:1-2, 598	8:23-24, 598
5:38-39, 667	6:9-13, 28, 686, 687, 690, 715, 744, 849, 850	6:33, 318, 322, 464, 468, 473, 474, 806, 847, 850	8:1-4, 364, 367, 595, 612	8:23-26, 769
5:38-42, 248, 285, 510, 512, 849	6:10, 93, 112, 264, 309, 311, 320, 344, 465, 468, 473, 510, 579, 1009, 1015	7—10, 846	8:1-17, 573	8:23-27, 595, 597
5:38-48, 285	6:11, 93, 495, 805, 806	7:1-2, 579	8:1—9:35, 778	8:23—9:8, 573
5:39, 668, 973	6:11-15, 285	7:1-5, 222, 265, 285, 851	8:2-4, 146	8:24, 49
5:42, 803, 805, 806	6:12, 285, 286, 322, 495, 582, 803	7:5, 395	8:4, 367, 577, 612, 941, 942, 1001	8:25, 207, 598, 769, 828, 829, 935
5:42-48, 225		7:6, 308, 851	8:5, 50, 302, 572, 597	8:26, 260, 572, 582, 598, 769, 828
5:43, 151, 536, 633, 849		7:7, 804	8:5-13, 4, 122, 140, 241, 364, 379, 459,	8:27, 129, 598
5:43-44, 287		7:7-8, 93
5:43-45, 322		7:7-11, 264, 806, 851
5:43-48, 240, 245,		7:7-12, 390
		7:8-11, 93
		7:9, 91, 93

8:28, 57, 598	9:18-34, 573	10:5-15, 802, 809	10:32-39, 519	11:16-19, 248, 441,
8:28-34, 26, 51, 304,	9:19, 249	10:5-16, 606	10:34, 118, 240, 246,	460, 712, 866, 996
364	9:20, 455, 506, 572	10:5-42, 130, 206	605, 667, 683, 892,	11:18, 577, 994
8:29, 130, 519, 598,	9:20-22, 146, 367,	10:6, 38, 263, 305,	1015	11:18-19, 182
605	1009	339, 403, 404, 606,	10:34-35, 474	11:19, 42, 183, 224,
8:31, 194	9:21-22, 828	835, 859, 884	10:34-36, 30, 246, 265	237, 341, 466, 474,
8:32, 991	9:22, 260, 582, 828	10:7, 38, 235, 468,	10:34-38, 263	507, 573, 580, 625,
8:33-34, 598	9:23, 194, 906	473, 474, 607, 608,	10:34-39, 265, 1006	703, 719, 802, 803,
8:34, 598	9:23-26, 146, 364,	667, 1007	10:35-36, 667	867, 896, 926, 927,
9, 45, 196, 318, 364,	778, 779	10:7-8, 367	10:37-38, 804	928, 930, 994, 996,
610, 884, 905	9:25, 367	10:7-16, 607, 805	10:37-39, 206, 250	997, 1009
9:1, 50, 57, 936	9:26, 778	10:8, 38, 225, 518,	10:37-42, 851	11:20-21, 64, 594, 930
9:1-8, 364, 495, 594,	9:27, 129, 207, 454,	667, 781	10:38, 249	11:20-24, 27, 51, 56,
595, 702, 828	572, 580, 586, 598,	10:9, 606	10:38-39, 713	237, 305, 773, 828
9:1-13, 284	848	10:9-10, 607	10:39, 519, 828	11:21, 51, 89, 594, 599
9:2, 176, 572, 582,	9:27-30, 951	10:10, 38, 248, 590	10:40, 429, 605	11:21-24, 298
828	9:27-31, 50, 57, 364,	10:11-13, 38, 263	10:40-42, 460	11:23, 64, 370, 371,
9:2-3, 367	595, 884	10:11-15, 607	10:41, 248, 464, 852	594
9:2-6, 176, 865	9:28-29, 828	10:12-13, 667	10:42, 204, 207, 582,	11:25, 130, 317, 580,
9:2-8, 472	9:29, 367, 582	10:13, 667, 771	806	984, 1015
9:3, 85, 671, 719, 906	9:32-34, 364, 673	10:13-14, 38	11, 580, 584	11:25-27, 111, 320,
9:4, 360	9:33, 404, 598, 670	10:13-15, 667	11:1, 570	580, 686, 690, 997,
9:6, 474, 896, 1015	9:34, 19, 595, 673, 953	10:14, 111, 524, 668	11:2, 25, 121, 441, 573,	998, 1021
9:6-8, 117	9:35, 298, 344, 468,	10:14-15, 237	580, 707, 997	11:25-30, 63, 634,
9:8, 129, 207, 313,	473, 474, 573, 606,	10:15, 10, 519, 668	11:2-3, 47	997, 998
598, 671	685, 829, 905, 906,	10:16, 35, 38, 248,	11:2-6, 117, 172, 462,	11:27, 130, 322, 425,
9:9, 36, 42, 205, 206,	951, 1007	667, 859, 936	598, 705, 707, 716,	581, 889, 891
224, 225, 249, 814	9:35-36, 909	10:16-19, 1002	776, 937	11:28, 936
9:9-13, 45, 140, 206,	9:35-38, 207, 667	10:16-23, 139	11:2-11, 28, 234, 712	11:28-30, 130, 248,
495, 582, 598, 610,	9:35-11:1, 344	10:16-25, 140, 206	11:2-19, 440, 580, 997	580, 714, 982, 998
865, 926	9:36, 228, 495, 586,	10:17, 836, 905, 906,	11:2-16:20, 572	11:29, 519
9:10, 206, 276, 606	670, 859, 884	908	11:3, 441, 518, 779	11:29-30, 591
9:10-11, 224, 867, 927	9:37-38, 235, 607, 805	10:17-25, 607	11:3-4, 600	12, 198, 317, 857, 996
9:10-13, 146, 171, 455	9:38, 316	10:18, 122, 304, 607,	11:4-5, 168, 452	12:1, 708
9:11, 577, 673	10, 339, 570, 572, 573,	1001	11:4-6, 64, 248, 594,	12:1-8, 92, 93, 206,
9:11-14, 674	607, 620, 634, 714,	10:19-20, 30	595	456, 507, 640, 822,
9:12, 367	768, 936	10:19-22, 322	11:5, 344, 345, 515,	884
9:12-13, 300, 606	10-11, 828	10:20, 433	518, 580, 639, 779,	12:1-14, 20, 171, 183,
9:13, 276, 284, 318,	10:1, 38, 64, 207, 594,	10:21-22, 264, 265	781, 801, 803, 805,	305, 455, 575, 577,
322, 367, 464, 466,	607, 608	10:22, 828, 972	806, 884	588
474, 514, 580, 582,	10:1-2, 208, 606	10:23, 10, 24, 27, 28,	11:6, 88, 441	12:1-23, 984
586, 591, 605, 635,	10:1-4, 37, 249, 640	246, 403, 581, 668,	11:7, 441, 617	12:2, 673, 674, 1016
773, 848, 927, 941	10:1-11, 29	694, 724, 896	11:7-15, 441	12:3-6, 147
9:14, 171, 673	10:1-15, 205, 210, 669	10:24, 204	11:7-19, 229	12:4, 828
9:14-15, 96, 927, 994	10:1-16, 667	10:24-25, 206, 248,	11:8, 806	12:5, 822, 936
9:14-17, 269, 270,	10:1-42, 597, 845, 990	249, 265, 829, 871,	11:8-10, 241	12:6, 53, 412, 613,
440, 598	10:1-11:1, 573, 859	935	11:10, 13, 633, 707,	708, 942, 972, 990
9:15, 994	10:2, 34, 40, 139	10:25, 193, 194, 204	982	12:7, 147, 318, 322,
9:16, 993	10:2-4, 36, 39, 967	10:25-27, 1018	11:11, 468	367, 464, 514, 580,
9:17, 122, 884, 993	10:3, 42, 224	10:26-33, 26	11:11-12, 182	582, 586, 635, 822,
9:18, 130, 367, 572,	10:4, 42	10:28, 373, 460, 519,	11:12, 27, 468	848, 941
581, 784, 905, 906,	10:5, 35, 302, 304,	779, 803, 828	11:12-13, 707	12:7-8, 577
908	305, 307, 503, 606,	10:28-31, 112	11:12-15, 996	12:8, 455, 896
9:18-19, 364	835	10:29-30, 322	11:13, 635, 968	12:9, 906
9:18-25, 746	10:5-6, 56, 57, 118,	10:29-31, 320, 767,	11:14, 46, 229, 441,	12:9-10, 367
9:18-26, 515, 595,	129, 257, 308, 573,	937	454, 707	12:9-14, 364, 367,
884, 908, 1007	578, 606	10:31-32, 829	11:16, 936	456, 595, 640, 822,
9:18-29, 778, 779	10:5-8, 608	10:32-33, 1001	11:16-17, 109, 111	906, 951

12:10, 147, 367	12:36-37, 27, 519, 1001	13:14-15, 91, 129, 634,	13:47, 468, 652	14:27, 396
12:10-14, 474	12:37, 466	672, 706	13:47-50, 320, 374,	14:28, 581
12:11, 507, 984	12:38, 20, 673, 828,	13:15, 361, 771	460, 474, 851	14:28-33, 261
12:11-12, 241, 884	861, 862, 935	13:16, 88, 207	13:49, 15, 464, 579,	14:29, 599
12:12, 367	12:38-39, 594	13:17, 464	1014	14:30, 598, 828, 829
12:14, 19, 147, 175,	12:38-40, 693	13:18, 651	13:49-50, 26, 167, 519,	14:31, 207, 260, 582,
183, 598, 673, 828	12:38-41, 305	13:18-22, 361	579	598, 828
12:15, 670, 671, 884	12:38-42, 27, 28, 460,	13:19, 194, 195, 360,	13:50, 30, 371, 374,	14:33, 75, 130, 581,
12:15-21, 171, 367, 391,	773, 861, 862, 954	468, 473, 524	460	598, 784, 829
884, 982, 984, 988	12:38-45, 405	13:20, 448, 449	13:51, 207	14:34, 49
12:16, 367	12:39, 708, 862	13:22, 804, 806, 1014	13:51-52, 520	14:35, 598
12:17, 884	12:39-40, 183	13:23, 140	13:52, 468, 652, 843,	14:35-36, 1007
12:17-21, 3, 129, 573	12:39-41, 56, 989	13:24, 468, 652, 937	844, 905, 906, 907,	14:36, 455, 506
12:18, 167, 305, 322,	12:39-42, 779, 954	13:24-30, 31, 320,	908, 909, 938	15, 580, 784
367, 391, 465, 519,	12:40, 136, 183, 779,	462, 474, 579, 595,	13:53, 570, 1020	15:1, 20, 673, 843
857, 869, 872	780, 862, 896, 989,	628, 642, 652, 657,	13:53-58, 567	15:1-2, 577, 580, 674,
12:18-21, 122, 129,	1015	870, 871	13:54, 64, 298, 594,	828
465, 579, 580, 582,	12:41, 706, 779, 862,	13:24-35, 453	905, 906	15:1-3, 171, 508
633, 706, 857	989	13:25, 195	13:54-58, 264, 598,	15:1-20, 20, 147, 149,
12:19, 367	12:41-42, 519, 613,	13:28, 195	906	150, 175, 456, 577,
12:20, 465	705, 942	13:30, 195	13:55, 264	719
12:21, 305, 884	12:42, 6, 779, 862,	13:31, 28, 468, 651,	13:57, 131, 708, 906	15:2, 147, 575, 884
12:22, 367	988, 996, 1010,	652, 937	13:58, 64, 259, 260,	15:3, 150
12:22-23, 196, 364,	1015	13:31-33, 344	261, 262, 594	15:3-5, 322
884	12:43-45, 460, 600,	13:33, 28, 468, 579,	14, 317	15:3-6, 508
12:22-24, 167, 673	618	651, 652, 1006	14—28, 94, 359	15:4, 612
12:22-28, 474, 667	12:44, 771	13:34, 671	14:1, 381, 441, 780	15:5-6, 150
12:22-30, 198, 284,	12:45, 194	13:34-36, 208	14:1-2, 382, 441, 442	15:7, 394, 850
719	12:46, 222	13:35, 129, 573, 579,	14:1-12, 441, 576,	15:7-9, 349
12:22-32, 367	12:46-49, 206	633, 705, 1016	630, 690, 847	15:8, 360, 672
12:22-37, 390, 391	12:46-50, 206, 264,	13:36, 207, 671	14:2, 594, 871	15:8-9, 706
12:23, 129, 580, 594,	474, 567, 608, 804,	13:36-42, 26	14:3, 381, 382	15:10-20, 508
598, 670, 671, 892	1005	13:36-43, 28, 31, 237,	14:3-4, 441	15:11, 147, 346, 514,
12:23-24, 367	12:48-49, 350	374, 462, 579, 628,	14:3-12, 437, 1005,	991
12:24, 19, 86, 193,	12:48-50, 322, 464	652, 657	1006	15:12, 673, 828
194, 598, 671, 673,	12:49, 207	13:37, 896	14:3-13, 438	15:14, 90, 674
828, 953	12:49-50, 205, 207,	13:37-43, 474	14:5, 441, 670	15:15, 208
12:24-29, 26	265	13:38, 194, 473, 1016	14:6, 110	15:15-16, 572
12:25, 473	12:50, 112, 264, 510,	13:39, 15, 194, 195,	14:6-9, 441	15:17, 514
12:25-26, 468	582, 1005, 1009	579, 1014	14:10, 182	15:18-19, 360
12:25-29, 195, 594	13, 140, 339, 460,	13:40, 371, 373, 374,	14:10-12, 441	15:18-20, 150
12:26, 473	570, 572, 573, 579,	579, 1014	14:12, 98	15:19, 1001
12:27, 193, 194	620, 628, 634, 656,	13:40-42, 519	14:13, 50, 182, 298,	15:20, 147
12:27-28, 235	662, 768, 828, 1014	13:40-43, 579	617, 671	15:21, 51, 57
12:28, 28, 234, 317,	13:1, 57	13:41, 15, 16, 150, 473,	14:13-14, 207, 884	15:21-28, 241, 304,
322, 367, 390, 468,	13:1-17, 91	896, 899	14:13-21, 50, 93, 494,	305, 339, 364, 503,
473, 520, 579, 595,	13:1-52, 130, 248	13:41-42, 26	495, 595, 598, 927	573, 578, 582, 598,
596, 598, 642, 708,	13:1-53, 474, 573, 845	13:41-43, 628, 828	14:14, 586, 671, 884	884, 1004, 1007,
746	13:2, 28, 670, 671	13:42, 30, 371, 373,	14:15, 276, 599, 617	1009
12:29, 595	13:2-3, 208	374, 460	14:17, 91	15:22, 129, 302, 304,
12:30, 600, 884	13:3-9, 652	13:43, 371, 468, 473,	14:19, 89, 276, 927	367, 572, 580, 581,
12:31, 389, 392, 865	13:10, 207, 208	613, 781, 828, 967	14:21, 264	586, 598, 848, 892,
12:31-32, 86, 284, 703	13:10-17, 208, 657	13:44, 448, 468, 579,	14:22, 304, 671	951, 984, 1008
12:32, 896, 1014	13:11, 468, 520	652, 656, 773	14:22-24, 49	15:22-28, 62
12:33, 373, 688, 996	13:11-12, 25	13:44-46, 225, 347,	14:22-33, 594, 595	15:23, 207
12:33-37, 237, 459,	13:12, 713	474, 642	14:23, 207, 572, 615,	15:24, 35, 38, 118, 129,
460, 464	13:13-15, 320, 361	13:45, 468, 652	690, 967	304, 305, 307, 308,
12:36, 849	13:14, 640	13:45-46, 773, 803, 851	14:25, 598	345, 403, 404, 573,

578, 582, 605, 859	326, 441, 572, 579	17:6-7, 207, 968	18:10, 15, 26, 140,	19:3-12, 169, 175, 490,
15:25, 130, 581	16:16-17, 475	17:8, 968	370, 859	612
15:26, 91, 851	16:16-18, 261	17:9, 217, 276, 695,	18:10-14, 112, 285,	19:4-5, 633
15:28, 579, 582	16:17, 39, 88, 249	780, 896, 967, 968	859	19:4-6, 214
15:28-31, 951	16:17-18, 139	17:10, 207, 843	18:12, 140, 618, 984	19:4-8, 590
15:29, 93, 572, 615,	16:17-19, 770	17:10-12, 968	18:12-13, 140	19:6, 361
616, 967	16:18, 139, 140, 208,	17:10-13, 442, 454,	18:12-14, 448	19:6-7, 612
15:29-31, 208, 304,	339, 475, 495, 582,	780	18:13, 10	19:7, 633
595, 1007	829, 905, 906	17:11-13, 46, 705	18:14, 140, 859	19:7-8, 214, 612
15:29-38, 616	16:18-19, 26, 475	17:12, 183, 309, 896	18:15, 140, 222, 865	19:8, 612
15:29-39, 276, 494	16:19, 140, 207, 468,	17:13, 207, 229	18:15-17, 140, 304	19:9, 213, 215, 513, 514
15:30, 670, 671	582	17:14-18, 26	18:15-18, 906	19:10, 207
15:30-31, 367, 598,	16:20, 122	17:14-21, 196, 364	18:15-20, 169, 224,	19:10-12, 213
616	16:21, 20, 136, 182,	17:15, 196, 367, 586,	225, 285, 690	19:12, 468, 828
15:31, 50, 313, 316,	183, 228, 309, 571,	848, 935	18:15-22, 265	19:13, 690
321, 403, 404, 598,	572, 580, 779, 780,	17:16, 367	18:15-35, 495	19:13-15, 207, 582
951	856, 972	17:17, 460, 495	18:16, 1001	19:14, 468, 767
15:32, 586, 670, 884	16:21-22, 573	17:19, 147	18:16-18, 140	19:15, 112
15:32-39, 93, 495, 595,	16:21-23, 39, 441, 956	17:19-20, 206	18:17, 139, 224, 249,	19:16, 130, 519, 804,
927	16:21-28, 966, 968	17:20, 207, 261, 572,	285, 302, 304, 339,	921, 935
15:36, 599	16:21—20:28, 572	582, 598, 671	582, 829, 867, 905,	19:16-17, 828
15:38, 264	16:21—28:20, 572	17:22, 309, 692, 896	906	19:16-22, 149, 150,
15:39, 49	16:22, 182	17:22-23, 183, 572,	18:18, 475, 582	170, 225
16, 249, 441, 673	16:22-23, 207	573, 580, 856	18:19, 1015	19:16-24, 780
16—20, 571	16:23, 207, 957	17:23, 136, 780	18:20, 130, 140, 322,	19:16-26, 806
16:1, 20, 93, 673, 861,	16:24, 183, 828	17:24, 409	402, 573, 581, 582,	19:16-29, 204
862, 953	16:24-25, 140, 713	17:24-25, 208	784, 829, 942, 998	19:16-30, 640
16:1-2, 693	16:24-26, 206, 582,	17:24-27, 225, 295,	18:21, 208, 285, 865	19:17, 129, 519, 580,
16:1-4, 175, 405, 594,	806	457, 576, 595	18:21-22, 140, 582	582
861, 862	16:24-28, 519	17:25, 847, 1015, 1016	18:21-35, 322, 688,	19:18, 1001
16:1-12, 828	16:25, 828	17:25-27, 225	847	19:18-19, 633
16:2-3, 29	16:25-26, 519, 803,	17:26, 294	18:22, 300	19:21, 170, 225, 249,
16:3, 1015	828	18, 138, 285, 339, 570,	18:23, 468, 524, 652	801, 803, 804, 806,
16:4, 460, 862	16:26, 1016	573, 582, 620, 634,	18:23-34, 263	807, 828
16:5, 207	16:27, 14, 16, 313, 613,	768, 828, 859, 905,	18:23-35, 31, 285, 318,	19:23, 804
16:5-11, 572	703, 803, 829, 849,	910	460, 582, 656, 803,	19:23-24, 473, 475,
16:5-12, 93, 206, 207	896	18:1, 207, 208, 468	851, 870, 871	519, 828
16:6, 20, 92, 93, 673,	16:27-28, 183, 237,	18:1-4, 111, 475	18:25, 531, 849	19:23-26, 804, 807
824	442, 581, 828, 899	18:1-5, 140, 577, 582	18:26, 784, 849	19:23-30, 205, 206
16:8, 207, 260, 572,	16:28, 10, 468, 473,	18:1-9, 285	18:27, 286	19:24, 473
582, 598	694, 896, 899	18:1-20, 582	18:28, 849	19:25, 828
16:9-10, 927	17, 614, 616, 634	18:1-35, 130, 140, 573,	18:29, 849	19:26, 322
16:11, 92, 824	17:1, 52, 371, 572, 615,	845, 859	18:30, 849	19:27, 222
16:11-12, 20, 673	784, 846, 967	18:2, 429, 573	18:33, 586, 848	19:27-28, 249, 828
16:12, 93, 207, 824	17:1-2, 967	18:3, 10, 519, 767, 859	18:34, 849	19:27-30, 806, 1006
16:13, 52, 896	17:1-8, 25, 309, 313	18:3-4, 828	18:34-35, 871	19:28, 27, 28, 43, 234,
16:13-14, 671	17:1-9, 217, 276, 442,	18:4, 468	18:35, 360	237, 249, 255, 314,
16:13-19, 899	523, 612, 966, 971	18:5, 572, 807	19, 628	322, 403, 454, 474,
16:13-20, 39, 52, 118,	17:1-13, 16	18:6, 140, 259	19:1, 57, 150, 570	519, 579, 625, 626,
381, 719, 829, 966	17:2, 313, 612, 702,	18:6-9, 110, 140	19:1-2, 1007	628, 779, 828, 896,
16:13-23, 692, 891	781, 968, 987	18:6-14, 140, 374	19:1-12, 1006	899, 990
16:13-28, 967	17:3, 612, 968	18:7, 89, 1016	19:1-30, 474	19:28-29, 118, 519
16:13—17:13, 702	17:3-4, 168, 612	18:8, 140, 371, 374,	19:2, 598, 670, 671,	19:29, 221, 519, 780,
16:14, 49, 131, 412,	17:4, 935	921	884	803, 828, 921, 1006,
705	17:5, 3, 130, 131, 276,	18:8-9, 26, 460, 519,	19:3, 213, 513, 514,	1014
16:14-16, 231	440, 580, 613, 640,	780, 828	673, 767	19:29-30, 241
16:16, 96, 122, 130,	856, 857, 966, 968	18:9, 140, 371, 373,	19:3-9, 20, 130, 213,	19:30, 573, 582
182, 261, 317, 321,	17:6, 207	374	318, 361, 509, 577	20:1, 468, 652

20:1-15, 317, 320, 573, 656	21:5, 412, 413, 473, 475, 495, 580, 633, 635, 933, 985	21:32, 322, 440, 464, 773, 847	22:23, 373	23:6-7, 712
20:1-16, 248, 320, 652, 692, 871	21:7, 984	21:33, 591	22:23-33, 4, 242, 374, 612, 780, 824	23:7, 766
20:8, 248, 849	21:8-9, 671	21:33-36, 459	22:24, 612, 633, 935	23:8, 934, 935, 938
20:12-15, 582	21:9, 89, 121, 129, 249, 489, 580, 598, 633, 671, 884, 892, 933, 982, 984, 988	21:33-40, 828	22:26-29, 497	23:8-9, 935
20:15, 322	21:10, 412, 982, 984	21:33-41, 317, 889	22:29, 64, 321, 322, 612, 613	23:8-10, 829
20:16, 573, 582, 806	21:10-17, 744	21:33-44, 674	22:30, 15, 370, 780	23:8-11, 129
20:17, 36	21:11, 412, 671, 707, 708	21:33-46, 8, 20, 140, 305, 442, 460, 573, 652, 667, 693, 694, 828, 871, 942, 1021	22:31, 322, 612	23:8-12, 843
20:17-19, 572	21:12, 940, 942	21:34, 140	22:32, 316, 321, 396, 633	23:9, 112, 264
20:17-20, 573	21:12-13, 20, 136, 148, 171, 176, 413, 457, 690, 920, 942, 951, 972	21:37, 35	22:33, 577, 670, 671	23:9-10, 935, 936
20:17-28, 899	21:12-14, 884	21:37-39, 459, 933	22:34, 20, 673	23:10, 122, 935
20:18, 20, 183, 896	21:12-16, 495	21:39, 412	22:34-40, 149, 151, 536	23:10-11, 295
20:18-19, 309, 856	21:12-17, 947, 952	21:41, 140, 849	22:35-40, 511	23:11, 871
20:19, 780	21:12-22:46, 572	21:41-42, 140	22:36, 536, 935	23:13, 21, 140, 395, 468, 519, 712, 850
20:20, 130, 581, 784, 1008, 1018	21:13, 318, 942	21:41-45, 828	22:36-40, 164	23:13-15, 395
20:20-23, 1009	21:14, 247, 367, 942, 984	21:42, 693, 884, 933	22:37, 316, 318, 322, 360, 519	23:13-23, 89
20:20-28, 40, 267, 872	21:14-16, 582, 951	21:42-43, 170, 942	22:37-39, 633	23:13-29, 673
20:21, 314, 468, 473	21:15, 121, 129, 489, 580, 598, 703, 884, 892, 984	21:43, 140, 302, 373, 404, 459, 464, 468, 473, 474, 579, 582, 829	22:40, 151, 245, 511, 582, 635, 851	23:13-36, 90, 167
20:22-23, 309, 693	21:15-16, 111, 766	21:45, 20, 673	22:41, 673	23:14, 806
20:23, 40	21:16, 598, 951	21:46, 348, 670, 674, 828	22:41-45, 129, 884, 885	23:15, 228, 373, 395, 674, 850
20:25, 65, 472, 531, 847	21:17, 52, 410, 982	22:1-14, 26, 95, 96, 305, 474, 495, 573, 683, 828, 847, 942, 994	22:41-46, 451	23:16, 150, 942
20:25-27, 577, 582	21:18-19, 136, 439, 595	22:1-22, 275	22:42, 121, 168, 580	23:16-21, 148
20:25-28, 474, 582, 857, 871	21:18-22, 690, 951	22:2, 96, 271, 317, 468, 652	22:42-44, 955	23:16-22, 241, 395, 629, 630, 828
20:26, 872	21:20, 207, 598, 935	22:2-14, 928	22:43, 391, 392	23:16-26, 514
20:26-27, 869	21:20-22, 136, 595	22:3-4, 38	22:44, 316, 532	23:21, 409, 412, 942
20:26-28, 183, 206	21:21, 10	22:4, 96	22:46, 577	23:21-22, 942
20:28, 309, 460, 519, 572, 580, 582, 605, 702, 724, 828, 856, 872, 896	21:21-27, 472	22:7, 404, 412, 703	23, 19, 20, 21, 62, 64, 90, 91, 150, 183, 259, 339, 395, 460, 635, 674, 844, 872, 876, 942, 983, 984, 998	23:22, 370
20:29, 671, 884	21:23, 228, 685, 843, 942	22:7-10, 828	23:1, 207, 468	23:23, 150, 151, 223, 318, 395, 464, 465, 506, 509, 580, 582, 586, 612, 635, 674, 712, 803, 850, 993
20:29-34, 52, 364, 884, 982	21:23-27, 63, 442	22:8-10, 96	23:1-3, 208	23:23-24, 245, 395, 806
20:30, 580, 581, 598	21:23-22:46, 671	22:9, 38	23:1-12, 206, 842	23:23-26, 319
20:30-31, 129, 586, 848	21:25, 370, 442	22:10, 276	23:1-24, 577	23:24, 455, 993
20:30-34, 951	21:26, 437, 670	22:11, 4	23:1-35, 828	23:25, 225, 395, 456, 843, 850
20:31, 580, 598	21:27, 442	22:11-14, 96, 237, 495, 613	23:1-39, 228, 247, 349, 577	23:25-26, 147, 506
20:34, 249, 586, 829, 884	21:28-30, 317, 532	22:12, 703	23:1-25:46, 572	23:25-27, 712
21, 53, 65, 136, 462, 635, 651, 870, 884, 952	21:28-31, 110, 263	22:13, 30, 371, 374, 519	23:2, 20, 612, 673, 674, 841, 906	23:25-28, 395
21-22, 573, 577	21:28-32, 442, 459, 573, 828, 829	22:15, 19, 673	23:2-3, 577, 829	23:26, 491
21-28, 571	21:28-22:13, 96	22:15-16, 20, 203	23:2-4, 395	23:27, 395, 850
21:1, 615	21:28-22:14, 459, 663	22:15-22, 175, 224, 349	23:2-34, 843	23:27-28, 170, 240
21:1-9, 136, 412, 981	21:30, 531	22:15-46, 170, 577	23:3, 582, 612, 850	23:28, 150
21:1-11, 172, 572, 942, 980	21:31, 112, 276, 473, 510, 519, 828, 868	22:16, 382, 935	23:4, 21, 228, 712	23:29, 395, 464, 635, 850
21:2, 984	21:31-32, 111, 224, 926	22:18, 395, 850	23:5, 455, 928	23:29-30, 708
21:3, 129		22:21, 322, 849	23:5-7, 21, 395	23:29-31, 779
21:4-5, 129, 573, 706, 885, 980		22:22, 577	23:5-12, 806	23:29-32, 712
			23:6, 905, 906, 928	23:29-36, 395, 460, 708, 973
				23:29-39, 667
				23:29-24:1, 828
				23:30, 495
				23:31, 491, 1001

23:33, 373, 674	24:15-25, 30	25:1-30, 374	26:6, 53, 518	26:36-46, 309, 690
23:33-36, 89	24:15-31, 237	25:8-9, 1009	26:6-13, 17, 62, 118,	26:36-56, 4
23:33-39, 249	24:18, 771	25:11, 829	803, 873, 1006	26:37, 309, 967
23:34, 183, 843, 852,	24:19, 89	25:11-12, 495	26:8, 207	26:38, 309, 519, 581
905, 906, 907, 908,	24:20, 412, 821	25:12, 519	26:9, 801	26:39, 261, 309, 693
998	24:21, 1016	25:13, 309, 1009	26:11, 451, 803, 808	26:39-46, 956
23:34-36, 27, 405,	24:22, 828	25:14-30, 29, 31, 712,	26:12, 99, 118	26:40, 207
460, 703, 712, 996,	24:23-24, 122	803, 806, 870, 871	26:13, 829, 1016	26:41, 309, 954
997, 998	24:24, 721	25:14-46, 806	26:14, 36, 43	26:42, 261, 309, 320,
23:34-39, 997	24:26, 30, 617	25:19, 524	26:14-15, 43	688
23:35, 495, 942, 1001,	24:26-27, 898	25:21, 448, 872	26:14-16, 495, 806	26:45, 207, 309, 581,
1016	24:26-28, 235	25:23, 448, 872	26:15, 885	693, 867
23:35-36, 843, 998	24:27, 31, 183, 237,	25:25-27, 803, 806	26:17, 92, 93, 136,	26:45-46, 171
23:36, 10, 460, 705	702, 896, 899, 980	25:29, 713	271, 276	26:47, 4, 228, 309,
23:37, 56, 988, 997,	24:27-31, 239	25:30, 371, 374, 519	26:17-19, 136, 183,	671, 843
1019	24:29-29, 30	25:31, 14, 16, 26, 314,	920	26:47-56, 136, 175,
23:37-38, 984	24:29-31, 828	579, 702, 896	26:17-20, 180	475
23:37-39, 131, 412,	24:30, 59, 64, 314,	25:31-32, 573	26:17-25, 180	26:49, 205, 935
461, 703, 712, 773,	703, 894, 895, 896,	25:31-34, 118, 956,	26:18, 829, 935, 981	26:50, 4
997, 998	898, 899, 1016	1001	26:18-19, 177	26:51, 4
23:37—24:2, 460	24:30-31, 183, 581	25:31-46, 18, 31, 168,	26:19, 276	26:51-53, 15
23:38, 183, 942, 998	24:31, 15, 26, 495	195, 237, 320, 374,	26:19-30, 926	26:52, 4, 240, 798
23:39, 89, 942, 997	24:32, 651	375, 402, 460, 465,	26:20, 136, 276, 599	26:53, 14, 15, 26,
23:39—24:1, 998	24:32-33, 29	467, 473, 474, 582,	26:20-29, 183, 599	956
24, 28, 314, 412, 463,	24:32—25:46, 96	613, 703, 803, 806,	26:20-30, 136	26:53-56, 724
728, 942	24:34, 28, 29, 460,	828, 851, 884, 885,	26:21, 10	26:54, 578, 581
24—25, 29, 237, 339,	694	926, 1009	26:22, 396	26:55, 4, 671
570, 573, 620, 634,	24:35, 29, 524, 628,	25:32, 122, 607	26:23, 66	26:56, 129, 207, 210,
714, 768	998, 1015	25:34, 89, 371, 473,	26:24, 89, 183	578, 581, 633, 664
24:1, 685, 998	24:36, 29, 728, 889	474, 495, 1016	26:25, 183, 396, 496,	26:57, 137, 228, 838,
24:1-2, 828, 942	24:37, 237, 899	25:34-36, 1001	935, 973	839
24:1-3, 20, 207	24:37-39, 898	25:37, 464, 532	26:26, 89, 93, 276,	26:57-68, 119, 175,
24:1-36, 29	24:37-41, 828, 1006	25:40, 222, 465, 582,	494, 496, 927	972
24:1—25:46, 136,	24:37-42, 29	806	26:26-28, 29	26:57—27:26, 972
573, 845	24:37-44, 474	25:40-41, 1001	26:26-29, 492	26:58, 54, 249, 410
24:2, 10, 176, 183,	24:39, 237, 532, 896,	25:41, 15, 171, 195,	26:26-30, 1021	26:59-61, 942
942, 951	899	371, 374, 807	26:27, 309, 495	26:60, 598
24:3, 31, 55, 207, 237,	24:40, 1006	25:41-43, 1001	26:27-29, 285	26:61, 28, 170, 176,
572, 579, 615, 628,	24:40-41, 519	25:44, 532, 872	26:28, 182, 183, 184,	414, 693, 781, 942,
728, 980, 1014	24:41, 1006	25:45, 465, 582	276, 285, 322, 460,	948, 950
24:3-8, 27	24:42, 316, 532	25:46, 31, 238, 371,	494, 495, 496, 580,	26:63, 130, 182, 183,
24:3—25:46, 96, 130	24:42-44, 309	372, 519, 781, 828,	582, 828, 856, 858,	326, 580
24:4-8, 30	24:42—25:30, 829	921	865, 891, 994	26:63-68, 719
24:5, 396, 1015	24:43-44, 29, 898	26, 241, 344, 667,	26:29, 26, 180, 344,	26:64, 24, 59, 120,
24:6-42, 454	24:44, 899	708	468, 473, 474, 494,	183, 317, 321, 475,
24:7, 468, 473, 607	24:45, 531, 871, 872	26—27, 309, 663	495, 496, 499, 693,	581, 630, 694, 894,
24:9, 1008	24:45-51, 29, 31, 870,	26—28, 789	993, 994	895, 898, 899, 972,
24:9-12, 265	871, 872, 994	26:1, 524, 570	26:30, 309, 615, 900,	973
24:9-14, 30	24:46, 88, 448	26:1-2, 183	1021	26:65, 86, 703
24:9-22, 140	24:47, 10	26:1—27:66, 572	26:31, 495, 635, 664,	26:65-66, 176, 183
24:12, 150	24:48, 360, 994	26:2, 136, 183, 271,	859, 885	26:66, 495
24:13, 828, 972	24:51, 30, 374, 519,	309, 896	26:32, 695, 780, 859	26:68, 122, 580, 708
24:14, 31, 122, 307,	994	26:2-3, 828	26:33, 972	26:69, 870
344, 468, 473, 474,	25, 573	26:3, 137, 228, 349,	26:34, 10	26:69-73, 624
579, 606, 607, 829,	25:1, 474, 652	838, 843	26:35, 207	26:69-75, 39, 630,
1001, 1016	25:1-10, 95	26:3-4, 412	26:36, 4, 54, 309, 410	861, 973
24:15, 25, 412, 942	25:1-13, 29, 31, 96,	26:3-5, 921	26:36-37, 1020	26:73, 298
24:15-20, 576	271, 495, 994, 1009	26:5, 271	26:36-45, 891	27, 174, 460, 623, 635

27:1, 136, 175, 228, 838, 843	27:40, 130, 182, 184, 781, 942, 950, 972	28:2-3, 454, 783	Mark	1:10-11, 25, 181, 310, 440
27:1-2, 679	27:40-43, 891	28:2-4, 32	1, 128, 303, 309, 317, 318, 338, 366, 819	1:11, 4, 95, 96, 120, 148, 178, 251, 303, 323, 396, 411, 557, 564, 689, 707, 719, 856, 883, 887, 890, 891, 954, 958, 969, 982, 983
27:1-10, 460	27:41, 228, 838	28:2-6, 783	1—8, 403, 411, 565, 959	1:12, 389, 391, 617, 955, 957
27:1-35, 576	27:42, 129, 403, 473, 475, 580	28:2-7, 217	1:1, 40, 115, 119, 127, 178, 209, 310, 317, 323, 330, 333, 343, 344, 361, 396, 439, 476, 553, 555, 556, 562, 564, 596, 609, 631, 816, 883, 890, 891, 954, 957, 969, 974, 983	1:12-13, 46, 171, 454, 689, 954
27:2-26, 137	27:43, 182, 184	28:3, 14, 613	1:1-3, 475, 556, 562, 983	1:13, 15, 128, 195, 201, 689, 826, 872, 955, 957, 958
27:2-30, 136	27:45, 199	28:4, 348, 784	1:1-4, 169	1:14, 178, 209, 298, 323, 443, 920
27:3, 773	27:45-54, 184	28:5, 784	1:1-6, 284	1:14-15, 246, 259, 343, 458, 459, 462, 596, 606, 689, 692, 772, 773, 827, 982
27:3-10, 43, 495, 783, 806, 881, 885, 973	27:46, 199, 489	28:5-7, 784	1:1-11, 334	1:15, 27, 28, 119, 139, 178, 236, 251, 260, 295, 323, 343, 416, 462, 468, 473, 475, 476, 518, 562, 597, 771, 772, 906, 921
27:4, 54, 183, 465, 495, 778, 865, 973	27:48, 184, 995	28:6, 784, 846	1:1-13, 56, 178, 555, 617	1:16, 39, 49, 936
27:5-10, 57	27:49, 962	28:6-7, 784	1:1-15, 251	1:16-18, 39, 40
27:6, 183, 495	27:50-51, 184	28:7, 783, 784	1:1—8:26, 692	1:16-19, 827
27:7-10, 54, 411	27:50-53, 184	28:8, 784, 1008	1:1—8:29, 493	1:16-20, 36, 47, 70, 204, 208, 225, 245, 246, 249, 263, 265, 476
27:8, 183, 495	27:51, 20, 30, 32, 140, 181, 184, 261, 828, 951	28:8-10, 783, 1008	1:2, 13, 15, 323, 563, 632, 707	1:16-31, 599
27:9, 403, 573, 633	27:51-53, 32, 617, 778, 783	28:9, 75, 130, 581, 582, 783, 784, 1022	1:2-3, 178, 236, 411, 429, 438, 562, 617, 631, 632, 706, 769, 982	1:16—8:21, 882
27:9-10, 129, 635, 973	27:51-54, 339, 783	28:9-10, 217	1:2-4, 170, 171	1:17, 37, 205, 341, 602, 603, 605
27:11, 129, 176, 403, 473, 475, 580	27:52, 777, 778	28:10, 412, 784	1:2-6, 439	1:18, 37, 206, 808
27:11-26, 140, 679	27:52-53, 237	28:11, 55	1:2-8, 56	1:19, 40
27:14, 183	27:53, 412	28:11-12, 838	1:2-15, 178	1:19-20, 40, 110, 139
27:15, 271, 627, 672	27:54, 32, 140, 182, 184, 305, 576, 783	28:11-15, 348, 384, 412, 418, 783, 784	1:3, 129, 231, 251, 323, 343, 439, 532, 639	1:20, 37, 40, 206, 870
27:15-25, 208	27:55, 249, 872	28:15, 418, 524, 783, 784	1:3-4, 617	1:21, 39, 685, 821
27:17, 122, 176, 580	27:55-56, 40, 49, 210, 1008	28:16, 51, 207, 412, 572, 615, 784, 846, 967	1:3-5, 803	1:21-22, 689, 905, 935
27:18, 703	27:56, 783, 1009	28:16-17, 203, 208	1:4, 66, 67, 439, 771, 772, 773, 955, 991	1:21-27, 128, 476
27:19, 183, 217, 411, 460, 465, 572, 576, 778, 973, 1004, 1009	27:57, 99, 204, 205	28:16-20, 3, 64, 102, 140, 207, 208, 217, 298, 305, 307, 597, 608, 617, 634, 784, 788	1:4-5, 46, 865	1:21-28, 196, 199, 303, 369, 594, 600, 821, 907
27:21-31, 1009	27:57-59, 175	28:17, 75, 130, 261, 581, 582, 784, 1022	1:4-8, 343	1:21-29, 50, 685, 906
27:22, 122, 176, 580	27:57-60, 206, 806, 988	28:18, 64, 127, 130, 412, 472, 474, 475, 570, 579, 581, 583, 784, 848, 891, 921, 1015	1:5, 66, 67, 215, 518	1:21—3:5, 295
27:24, 183, 623, 972, 973, 989, 991	27:57-61, 99, 783	28:18-20, 37, 38, 68, 208, 261, 475, 859, 984, 990, 1001	1:5-6, 439	1:22, 366, 632, 670, 671, 707, 842, 843, 906, 907
27:24-25, 495, 622, 778	27:57-66, 679	28:19, 38, 129, 130, 184, 207, 208, 302, 321, 322, 391, 404, 412, 432, 570, 575, 579, 582, 606, 784, 828, 1022	1:6, 230, 442, 563, 983	1:23, 194, 198, 323, 596, 909
27:24-26, 460	27:58, 849	28:19-20, 122, 129, 148, 202, 207, 405, 433, 572, 607, 906	1:7, 707
27:25, 20, 183, 404, 460, 670, 672, 828, 973	27:60, 55, 99, 783	28:20, 75, 130, 140, 146, 184, 206, 208, 321, 402, 429, 464, 495, 570, 573, 574, 579, 581, 582, 608, 634, 783, 784, 826, 829, 1014, 1015	1:7-8, 439, 441, 922
27:26, 174, 623, 973	27:61, 783, 1008		1:8, 67, 389, 392, 429, 991
27:27, 54, 411	27:61—28:10, 1008		1:9, 48, 66, 264, 338, 560, 564
27:27-44, 184	27:62, 20, 136, 175, 177		1:9-10, 923
27:28, 174, 184	27:62-63, 673		1:9-11, 62, 68, 217, 440, 476, 826
27:28-29, 475	27:62-66, 99, 348, 384, 783, 784		1:9-15, 476
27:29, 129, 403, 473, 580	27:63, 183, 531, 780		1:10, 178, 303, 389, 391, 440, 707, 922
27:30, 130, 665	27:64, 780, 784
27:31-60, 136	28, 32, 683, 783, 826
27:32, 6, 261, 668	28:1, 49, 783, 784, 821, 1008
27:33, 55, 411, 489	28:1-7, 783
27:33-56, 884	28:1-8, 14
27:34, 184, 995	28:1-10, 783
27:37, 129, 174, 181, 403, 473, 475, 580, 745	28:1-15, 136
27:38, 174, 177	28:1-18, 572
27:39, 55, 693	28:1-20, 339
	28:2, 531, 783, 784, 829

1:23-24, 563, 595	2:1, 50, 264	2:18-20, 95, 96, 456, 826, 994	3:11, 194, 199, 323, 363, 396, 596, 974	564, 804, 817, 1005
1:23-25, 564	2:1-2, 263, 594, 936	2:18-22, 114, 206, 245, 269, 270, 440	3:11-12, 121, 199, 564, 1001	3:32, 1005
1:23-28, 26, 198, 364, 689	2:1-5, 826	2:19, 95, 96, 994	3:12, 127, 597, 768	3:34-35, 265, 827, 828
1:24, 198, 199, 596, 605, 624, 702, 974	2:1-10, 596	2:19-20, 127, 652, 994	3:13, 615, 616, 826	3:35, 222, 264, 265, 323, 510, 632, 828, 829
1:24-25, 557, 1001	2:1-11, 594, 597	2:20, 95, 178, 270, 827	3:13-15, 37, 204, 923	4, 2, 138, 149, 229, 236, 342, 352, 468, 557, 562, 564, 565, 594, 612, 656, 966, 1004
1:25, 128, 139, 199, 768	2:1-12, 128, 131, 196, 303, 364, 365, 369, 595, 596, 597, 702	2:21, 993	3:13-19, 208, 632, 640, 936	4:1, 139, 670, 771
1:26, 194, 323	2:1-14, 599	2:21-22, 303, 652	3:14, 2, 34, 35, 43, 597, 936, 990	4:1-2, 139, 404, 671
1:27, 63, 323, 366, 557, 596, 600, 670, 671	2:1-17, 284	2:22, 993	3:14-15, 139, 209, 597, 671	4:1-9, 459, 642, 657
1:27-28, 62, 594, 596	2:1-3:5, 382	2:23-24, 891	3:15, 366, 596, 597	4:1-11, 323
1:29, 39, 50, 265, 936	2:2, 127	2:23-27, 456	3:16, 36	4:1-20, 91, 563, 564
1:29-30, 50	2:4, 670	2:23-28, 92, 93, 114, 241, 318, 507, 590, 640, 702, 821, 882, 884	3:16-19, 36	4:1-34, 248, 632, 647
1:29-31, 39, 40, 196, 199, 364, 595, 597, 689, 821	2:5, 176, 259, 597, 826	2:23-3:6, 20, 455	3:17, 40, 559	4:1-6:12, 778
1:29-35, 1007	2:5-7, 974	2:24, 404, 557, 674	3:18, 42	4:1-8:21, 139
1:29-39, 50	2:5-10, 176, 865, 989	2:25, 936	3:19, 264, 566, 569	4:2, 651
1:30, 262	2:6, 404, 708, 719, 842, 906	2:25-26, 506, 821, 988	3:19-20, 263	4:3, 703
1:31, 366, 597, 599, 872	2:6-7, 891	2:26, 92, 323, 968	3:19-21, 404	4:3-10, 652
1:32, 744, 782	2:7, 85, 86, 128, 323, 557, 596	2:27, 129, 147, 507, 611, 821, 822	3:19-30, 596	4:3-32, 557
1:32-33, 263, 890	2:10, 63, 127, 562, 702, 827, 883, 895, 896, 897, 898, 899, 982, 1015	2:28, 92, 235, 455, 531, 821, 883, 895, 896, 897, 898, 899, 974, 981, 982, 988	3:19-35, 338	4:6-19, 826
1:32-34, 196, 363, 364, 594, 596, 689, 821, 1007	2:11, 366	3, 125, 302, 309, 448, 708, 859, 968, 1000	3:20, 50, 91, 670	4:9, 476
1:33, 50	2:12, 313, 323, 596, 671	3-13, 558	3:20-21, 264	4:10, 36, 671, 968
1:34, 127, 196, 199, 563, 564, 596, 597, 599, 768	2:12-13, 404	3:1, 600, 685, 821, 906	3:20-30, 597, 632, 882, 1016	4:10-12, 25, 121, 206, 208, 320, 361, 597, 657
1:35, 617, 685, 689, 690	2:13, 594, 670, 671, 890, 930	3:1-5, 507	3:20-35, 303, 563, 568, 647	4:10-13, 366, 404
1:37, 596	2:13-17, 42, 206, 245, 246, 465, 597, 865	3:1-6, 178, 196, 318, 364, 591, 595, 597, 640, 821, 822, 823, 826	3:21, 48, 222	4:11, 139, 260, 468, 475, 476, 557
1:38, 596, 605, 892	2:14, 42, 51, 205, 224, 814	3:1-13, 558	3:21-22, 689	4:12, 91, 361, 592, 631, 632, 640
1:38-39, 689	2:14-15, 36, 827	3:1-5, 507	3:21-27, 284, 596	4:13, 209, 671
1:39, 298, 363, 366, 596, 685, 689, 906, 907, 909	2:14-17, 867, 926, 928	3:1-6, 178, 196, 318, 364, 591, 595, 597, 640, 821, 822, 823, 826	3:22, 19, 63, 86, 193, 194, 411, 417, 842, 982	4:13-19, 361
1:40-42, 689	2:15, 147, 225, 275, 404, 606, 802, 929	3:2, 596	3:22-27, 26, 31, 198, 600, 719	4:13-20, 459, 652, 657
1:40-44, 349, 506	2:15-16, 224, 891	3:4, 365, 507, 519, 822, 826	3:22-29, 566	4:14, 524
1:40-45, 146, 176, 196, 364, 518, 562, 595, 611, 702, 942	2:15-17, 114, 171, 303, 455	3:5, 361, 597	3:22-30, 390, 476	4:15, 195
1:40-2:12, 366	2:15-27, 175	3:6, 19, 20, 92, 175, 382, 404, 459, 493, 557, 674, 689, 822, 891, 907, 921	3:23, 595, 597	4:16, 449
1:41, 366, 507, 585, 989	2:16, 176, 404, 465, 557, 591, 674, 842, 843, 908, 930	3:7, 670, 890	3:23-27, 594, 982	4:16-17, 561
1:43-45, 557, 564	2:16-17, 241, 350, 507	3:7-8, 936	3:24, 468, 475	4:16-19, 827
1:44, 127, 366, 506, 507, 518, 611, 612, 697, 746, 768, 783, 1001	2:16-18, 210	3:7-12, 303, 594	3:24-27, 195	4:18-19, 225, 805
1:45, 594, 597, 617	2:17, 95, 118, 275, 284, 365, 464, 465, 466, 605, 606, 746, 773, 864, 866, 892, 927, 929, 930	3:7-19, 600	3:27, 127, 366, 595, 954	4:19, 361, 804, 1014
2, 92, 95, 458, 463, 492, 518, 566, 631, 826, 897	2:18, 171, 203, 437, 674	3:8, 128, 302, 564	3:27-28, 28	4:21-23, 303
	2:18-19, 802, 927	3:9, 139, 594, 600	3:28, 10	4:23, 476
		3:10, 366	3:28-29, 86	4:25, 713
		3:10-11, 594	3:28-30, 284	4:26, 468, 475, 652
		3:10-12, 196	3:29, 86, 389, 392, 1014	4:26-28, 827
			3:30, 86, 323	4:26-29, 28, 458, 476, 827
			3:30-35, 566, 567	4:26-32, 303, 453, 642
			3:31, 264	4:28, 476
			3:31-34, 114	4:29, 827
			3:31-35, 48, 246, 250, 264, 265, 404, 465,	4:30, 28, 468, 475, 652

4:30-32, 476, 564	5:23, 826	6:10, 263	6:38, 91	7:10, 109, 507, 611,
4:31, 1015	5:24, 404	6:11, 38, 111, 668,	6:39, 49, 275, 927	612, 631, 817
4:32, 370	5:24-34, 176	689, 1001	6:40, 92, 276	7:11, 485, 489
4:33-34, 1016	5:25-26, 594	6:12, 518, 771, 773	6:41, 89, 275, 371,	7:13, 323, 817
4:34, 921	5:25-34, 263, 282,	6:12-13, 476	493, 596, 685, 927	7:14, 671, 991
4:35, 671	364, 597, 632, 702,	6:13, 17, 196, 365,	6:42, 92	7:14-23, 176, 508
4:35-36, 139	1008	366, 537, 596, 1007	6:42-43, 275	7:15, 147, 508, 513, 611
4:35-41, 57, 128, 199,	5:26, 362, 596	6:14, 67, 381, 441, 594	6:44, 670	7:15-17, 651
209, 402, 564, 595,	5:27-31, 366	6:14-15, 231, 557, 780	6:45, 139, 304, 671	7:15-23, 506
596, 597, 769, 826,	5:28, 826	6:14-16, 131, 275, 382,	6:45-48, 49	7:17, 671
827, 991	5:29, 295	441, 442, 706	6:45-51, 826	7:17-18, 209
4:35—5:43, 647	5:30, 402, 597, 771	6:14-17, 178	6:45-52, 139, 209,	7:18, 404, 513, 671
4:37, 49	5:33, 1007	6:14-29, 178, 441,	303, 396, 594, 595,	7:18-19, 508
4:37-41, 139, 404	5:34, 259, 260, 366,	475, 563, 630, 689,	632, 827, 922	7:19, 20, 147, 150, 455,
4:38, 596, 935	597, 667, 826	1008	6:45-56, 562	508, 513
4:39, 49, 128, 139,	5:35, 908	6:14—8:26, 555	6:46, 615, 685, 689,	7:21, 360
199	5:35-43, 303, 364,	6:15, 178, 181, 706	968	7:21-23, 319
4:40, 260, 597	632, 702, 778	6:16, 178, 381	6:47-52, 128, 131, 596	7:22, 805, 1001
4:41, 127, 128, 557,	5:36, 524, 597, 826	6:17, 382, 923	6:47—8:26, 305	7:24, 51, 298, 304
596	5:37, 36, 40, 968	6:17-18, 441	6:48-52, 404	7:24-30, 51, 57, 196,
5, 206	5:39, 778	6:17-29, 263, 437,	6:50, 396, 429	298, 303, 307, 364,
5—7, 1008	5:40, 563	438, 442, 1005,	6:50-52, 260	366, 563, 564, 594,
5:1-13, 171	5:40-43, 262	1006	6:51-52, 597	596, 598, 606, 632,
5:1-17, 26	5:41, 176, 366, 472,	6:19-20, 441	6:52, 207, 361, 563,	683, 884, 1004,
5:1-20, 51, 57, 196,	489, 778	6:20, 449, 465	782, 927	1007, 1008
263, 298, 303, 304,	5:42, 778, 783	6:20-44, 562	6:53-55, 139	7:24-31, 56
364, 366, 564, 594,	5:43, 121, 127, 366,	6:21-22, 110	6:53-56, 49, 632, 826,	7:24—8:9, 303
596, 597, 606, 632,	768, 778, 942	6:21-26, 441	1007	7:24—8:10, 597
817, 991	6, 149, 443	6:21-28, 925	6:54-56, 196	7:25, 194, 323
5:1-34, 507	6—8, 924	6:22-25, 47	6:56, 366, 455, 506,	7:25-26, 111
5:2, 139, 194, 323	6:1, 37, 264, 298	6:23, 468	606, 826	7:25-30, 490, 609
5:3, 596	6:1-2, 48, 906	6:24, 67	7, 152, 507, 508, 514,	7:26, 92, 302, 1007
5:5, 615	6:1-4, 595	6:25, 67	817	7:27, 91, 92, 303, 308
5:6, 130	6:1-6, 245, 264, 303,	6:25-28, 178	7:1, 20, 411, 982	7:28, 92, 527
5:6-7, 595	564, 567, 600, 694,	6:26, 275, 1008	7:1-5, 674, 842	7:29, 92, 524, 563,
5:7, 168, 199, 317, 323,	1020	6:27-29, 441	7:1-8, 176, 508	597
371, 396, 563, 596,	6:2, 472, 557, 594,	6:29, 47, 275	7:1-23, 20, 57, 147,	7:30, 1007
974	671, 685, 821, 1020	6:30, 34, 38, 935	149, 150, 162, 171,	7:31, 50, 51, 92, 93,
5:8, 323	6:2-3, 404	6:30-32, 826	175, 308, 349, 366,	276, 298, 490
5:9, 875	6:2-6, 689	6:30-44, 275, 617,	456, 514, 611, 719,	7:31-37, 92, 196, 304,
5:11, 302, 615	6:3, 264, 302, 506,	632, 826, 927	991	364, 367, 595, 632,
5:12-13, 595	566, 752, 1008	6:30-45, 827	7:2, 91, 508	826
5:13, 194, 323	6:3-4, 263	6:31, 57, 671	7:3, 4, 228, 508	7:31—8:9, 303
5:14, 51	6:4, 48, 131, 263, 561,	6:31-32, 139, 617	7:3-4, 150, 560, 575,	7:31—8:10, 1007
5:15, 295	566, 708, 922	6:31-44, 303	873	7:33, 302, 366, 670
5:18, 36, 597	6:5, 260, 366, 594	6:32, 50, 92	7:3-13, 591	7:34, 489
5:19, 316, 366, 531,	6:5-6, 259, 262, 597	6:32-34, 890	7:4, 66, 92	7:36, 127, 597, 768,
585	6:6, 210, 606	6:32-44, 92, 93, 595,	7:5, 20, 228, 508, 557,	942
5:19-20, 597	6:6-11, 936	922	673	7:36-37, 303
5:20, 51, 563, 585, 671	6:6-13, 139, 607, 802,	6:34, 92, 118, 139,	7:6, 19, 394, 395	7:37, 168, 230, 404,
5:21, 139, 670, 890	809	585, 600, 601, 617,	7:6-6, 672	671
5:21-24, 303, 364,	6:6-30, 295	670, 671, 859, 860	7:6-7, 349, 508, 631	8, 90, 181, 346, 771,
632, 778	6:7, 35, 38, 194, 323,	6:34-44, 209	7:6-8, 506	817, 905
5:21-43, 196, 263,	366, 476, 596, 606	6:35, 209, 617	7:7, 1018	8—10, 339
282, 515, 595, 746,	6:7-13, 29, 37, 209,	6:35-44, 988	7:8, 150, 508, 817	8—16, 87, 403
826, 906, 908, 1007	597, 606, 690, 826	6:37, 860	7:8-9, 465, 611	8:1-9, 303, 826, 827,
5:22, 905, 907, 909	6:7-14, 671	6:37-38, 91	7:9, 611	988
5:22-23, 111	6:8-11, 667	6:37-40, 147	7:9-13, 263, 508	8:1-10, 57, 92, 93, 147,

209, 595, 596, 632, 927	8:27—10:45, 209, 611	476, 683, 694, 769, 788, 969, 980	9:18, 596	9:47-48, 491, 592
8:1-12, 596	984	9:1-8, 209	9:18-19, 139	9:48, 371, 374, 961
8:2, 49, 276, 585, 670	8:27—16:8, 692	9:2, 36, 40, 52, 313, 611, 615, 969, 987	9:19, 260, 366, 597	9:50, 667, 1015
8:3, 564	8:27—16:20, 33, 94,	9:2-3, 128, 968	9:19-24, 826	10, 611, 695
8:4, 57	125, 191, 565, 610, 819, 893	9:2-8, 25, 236, 313, 614, 969, 971, 972, 982	9:22, 585	10:1, 670, 671, 1019
8:6, 493, 596	8:28, 131, 178, 706, 987	9:2-9, 217, 476, 616	9:23, 259, 826	10:1-9, 152
8:6-7, 685	8:29, 127, 259, 260, 361, 411, 974	9:2-10, 442, 611, 612, 966, 971	9:23-24, 200	10:1-12, 1006
8:7, 89	8:29-30, 557	9:2-13, 16	9:24, 260	10:1-52, 56
8:8, 92	8:29-31, 894, 982	9:3, 611, 702, 987, 1015	9:25, 198, 323	10:2, 19, 513, 674, 957
8:9-10, 983	8:30, 121, 127	9:4, 611, 612, 614, 968, 969, 971, 987	9:26, 703	10:2-9, 20
8:10, 49, 139, 276	8:30—10:52, 493	9:4-5, 168, 612	9:26-27, 200	10:2-11, 514
8:11, 19, 674, 861, 953, 957	8:31, 20, 25, 127, 178, 199, 228, 249, 276, 310, 411, 493, 557	9:5, 205, 276, 490, 611, 612, 766, 935	9:27, 366	10:2-12, 169, 175, 213, 361, 509, 611
8:11-13, 49, 175, 594, 597, 861	632, 692, 694, 700, 702, 708, 780, 782, 842, 856, 857, 891, 896, 898, 899, 973, 988	9:5-6, 969	9:28, 597, 671	10:3, 611, 631
8:11-15, 674	8:31-32, 563, 769	9:6, 218, 611, 782, 987	9:29, 139, 198, 260, 597, 689, 690, 826	10:3-4, 611, 612
8:11-21, 276	8:31-33, 39, 209, 404, 441, 696, 982	9:7, 4, 96, 120, 128, 131, 148, 178, 276, 310, 396, 440, 476, 557, 611, 612, 640, 883, 890, 891, 966, 969, 982, 983, 987	9:30-31, 25	10:3-5, 214
8:12, 10, 693	8:31-38, 179, 969, 983	9:8, 969	9:30-32, 199, 209, 276, 769, 983	10:4, 509, 611, 882
8:13, 139	8:31—9:1, 966, 969	9:9, 127, 209, 276, 564, 695, 702, 780, 896, 899, 988	9:31, 127, 178, 310, 411, 493, 557, 692, 694, 708, 780, 782, 856, 891, 896, 898, 899, 973, 988, 989	10:4-5, 611
8:13-21, 139	8:32, 310, 671	9:9-10, 612	9:31-32, 404	10:5, 149
8:14-21, 92, 93, 175, 209, 303, 564, 597, 782, 827	8:32-33, 366	9:9-12, 178, 898	9:32, 207, 310, 671, 782	10:5-8, 506
8:15, 20, 92, 674	8:32—9:1, 248	9:9-13, 178	9:32-34, 366	10:6, 319, 323, 1016
8:16, 92	8:32-200, 209, 323, 954	9:9-32, 209	9:33, 50, 57	10:6-7, 507, 611
8:17, 91, 92, 360, 563	8:33, 200, 209, 323, 954	9:10, 207, 695, 780	9:33-35, 139	10:6-9, 214, 514
8:17-18, 404	8:34, 2, 206, 210, 302, 323, 476, 612, 671, 826, 827, 968	9:11, 233	9:33-36, 139	10:9, 323, 361, 513
8:17-19, 260	8:34-35, 713, 827	9:11-12, 181	9:33-37, 111, 209, 267, 562, 872, 1004	10:10, 671
8:17-21, 361, 564	8:34-37, 206, 303, 1006	9:11-13, 178, 442, 454, 706, 780, 842, 969, 983	9:34, 57	10:11, 215, 1006
8:18, 366	8:34-38, 204, 205, 209, 803	9:12, 127, 178, 230, 310, 632, 702, 856, 857, 896, 899, 969, 983, 988	9:35, 139, 872	10:11-12, 95
8:18-21, 1021	8:35, 17, 164, 344, 564, 642, 826, 827	9:12-13, 46, 178, 707	9:36, 671	10:12, 215, 216, 1006
8:19-21, 927	8:35-37, 519, 803, 827	9:13, 178, 230, 563	9:37, 35, 605	10:13, 366, 671
8:21, 207, 404	8:36-37, 828	9:14-27, 26	9:38, 41, 594, 597, 671, 935	10:13-16, 112, 114, 263, 476
8:22, 304, 366	8:38, 14, 16, 24, 127, 128, 236, 313, 323, 442, 524, 702, 703, 803, 826, 827, 865, 896, 936	9:14-29, 167, 196, 198, 199, 263, 303, 364, 594, 597, 826, 891	9:38-40, 365	10:13-31, 562
8:22-25, 260	8:38—9:1, 233, 442, 827	9:15, 670	9:38-41, 26, 562	10:14, 111, 468, 475, 767
8:22-26, 51, 90, 196, 303, 364, 367, 595, 882	9, 374, 614, 616, 971	9:17, 935	9:38—10:16, 209	10:15, 10, 111, 468, 475
8:22—9:29, 303	9-16, 565	9:17-18, 111, 365	9:41, 10, 120, 600, 974, 991	10:15-17, 921
8:22—10:46, 555, 562	9-10, 27, 28, 236, 246, 343, 468, 475,	9:17-29, 690	9:42, 112, 259	10:16, 112
8:22—10:52, 178, 882			9:42-48, 26, 110, 458	10:17, 130, 518, 519, 804, 826, 827, 921, 935
8:23-26, 366			9:42-49, 246	10:17-22, 114, 149, 150, 151, 170
8:26, 127, 366			9:42—10:12, 112, 562	10:17-25, 780
8:26-33, 897			9:43, 371, 411, 459, 518, 826, 827	10:17-30, 374
8:27, 52, 57, 127, 260, 298, 303, 769			9:43-47, 804	10:17-31, 209, 225, 246, 640, 805
8:27-28, 557			9:43-48, 26, 374, 780, 930	10:18, 128, 129, 132, 323
8:27-29, 231			9:44, 961	10:19, 263, 507, 828, 1001
8:27-30, 39, 56, 118, 121, 381, 554, 555, 557, 561, 563, 595, 714, 719, 768, 935, 966			9:45, 411, 459, 518, 826, 827	10:20, 935
8:27-32, 555, 692, 937			9:46, 961	10:20-23, 828
8:27-33, 200, 441			9:47, 411, 459, 468, 475, 518, 826, 827	10:20-30, 828
8:27—9:1, 817				10:21, 225, 265, 801, 803, 804, 826
8:27—9:13, 702				10:21-22, 1006
				10:23, 36, 468, 475, 804

10:23-24, 826	179, 180, 183, 190,	11:12-14, 136, 303,	11:29, 442	536, 590, 703, 907
10:23-27, 476, 804	192, 199, 204, 209,	413, 439, 595, 937,	11:29-32, 178	12:28-35, 562
10:24, 112, 468, 475	276, 305, 310, 366,	942, 951	11:30, 66	12:28-37, 842
10:24-25, 827	493, 494, 519, 563,	11:12-16, 685	11:32, 437	12:29, 316, 403, 453
10:25, 468, 475	564, 605, 609, 632,	11:12-17, 690	11:33, 63, 442, 943	12:29-30, 129, 323,
10:26, 826	695, 702, 724, 736,	11:12-19, 562, 563	12, 27, 152, 241, 826,	511
10:27, 323, 826	827, 828, 856, 872,	11:12-20, 982	943, 1008	12:29-31, 150, 507
10:28, 37, 222	891, 892, 896, 898,	11:12-21, 260, 647,	12:1, 651	12:29-33, 152
10:28-29, 827	899, 951, 988, 989	983	12:1-9, 889, 989	12:30, 316, 511, 519
10:28-30, 109, 561	10:45-46, 869	11:12—12:12, 609	12:1-11, 317, 404, 592,	12:31, 151, 434, 511
10:28-31, 139, 225,	10:46, 275, 562, 671,	11:12—13:2, 805	870, 937, 943, 990	12:32, 935
265, 806, 826, 827,	882	11:13, 148, 937	12:1-12, 4, 8, 20, 303,	12:34, 468, 475
1006	10:46-52, 52, 90, 121,	11:15, 275, 410, 411,	442, 459, 562, 597,	12:35, 233, 685, 981
10:29, 10, 37, 221,	167, 196, 199, 364,	942, 948	652, 693, 694, 703,	12:35-37, 60, 117, 118,
344, 827	366, 595, 597, 826,	11:15-16, 983	871, 890, 974, 1021	120, 128, 451, 529,
10:29-30, 241, 454,	882, 884, 891, 982,	11:15-17, 136, 171, 176,	12:2-6, 429	703, 882, 943, 988
780, 805, 1006	983	413, 457, 459, 744,	12:6, 4, 35, 128, 605,	12:36, 316, 392, 631,
10:29-31, 27	10:47, 128, 259, 563,	945, 950, 989, 990	826	983
10:30, 37, 238, 371,	885	11:15-18, 20, 53, 241,	12:6-8, 933	12:36-37, 883
519, 628, 803, 826,	10:47-48, 366, 454,	303, 597, 920, 952	12:8, 412	12:37, 404, 449, 670,
827, 921, 1014	586, 882, 988	11:15-19, 557, 703,	12:9, 531	981
10:31, 164, 518, 519,	10:47-52, 596	842, 947, 952	12:10, 170, 563	12:38-39, 907, 928
642	10:48, 597	11:15-33, 983	12:10-11, 346, 693,	12:38-40, 465, 705,
10:32, 310, 411, 769,	10:51, 489, 596, 597,	11:16, 632, 942, 948	882, 933, 982, 983,	842, 984, 1006
782	935	11:17, 176, 303, 305,	989	12:39, 271, 905, 907
10:32-34, 199, 209,	10:52, 57, 260, 562,	318, 494, 564, 631,	12:12, 404, 670, 741,	12:40, 690, 803, 805,
493, 692, 769, 780	597, 826	684, 685, 690, 942,	943, 983	928
10:32-45, 209, 983	11, 494, 952, 985	949, 951, 982, 984,	12:13, 19, 20, 382,	12:41, 940
10:33, 20, 127, 178,	11—13, 339	1020	674, 675, 842, 957	12:41-44, 805, 998,
260, 694, 782, 842,	11—15, 942	11:18, 20, 176, 181,	12:13-17, 114, 170,	1006
867, 896, 899, 988	11—16, 56, 411, 555	411, 670, 671, 690,	175, 224, 225, 247,	12:42, 560, 801
10:33-34, 25, 56, 178,	11:1, 53, 410, 411, 555,	842, 921, 942, 951	349, 382	12:42-43, 801
310, 411, 557, 663,	563, 596, 615, 617,	11:19, 943	12:13-34, 936	12:43, 10
683, 708, 856, 891,	632	11:19-25, 303	12:14, 323, 935	13, 15, 28, 29, 236,
898, 973	11:1-4, 276	11:20-21, 891, 943	12:14-15, 224	239, 314, 411, 560,
10:34, 178, 180, 276,	11:1-10, 128, 136, 494,	11:20-25, 557, 690,	12:14-34, 943	561, 617, 728, 735,
351, 989	949, 981	951	12:15, 394, 395	750, 818, 898, 943,
10:35, 935	11:1-11, 55, 563, 890,	11:20-26, 136, 595	12:17, 224, 323, 817	982, 983, 1015
10:35-40, 114, 127	980	11:21, 935	12:18, 373	13:1, 53, 408, 685,
10:35-44, 562	11:1-19, 53	11:21-25, 148	12:18-23, 263	935, 943
10:35-45, 40, 209,	11:1—15:47, 178	11:22, 260, 597	12:18-27, 4, 12, 114,	13:1-2, 20, 29, 53, 148,
246, 249, 267, 366,	11:1—16:8, 178, 882	11:22-24, 260	374, 611, 780, 824	973
476, 1004	11:2, 981	11:22-25, 691	12:18-32, 244	13:1-4, 1006
10:37, 180, 314, 671	11:3, 411, 529, 531	11:23, 260, 360, 617,	12:19, 611, 612, 776,	13:1-27, 31
10:38, 180, 564	11:7, 982	690, 951	935	13:1-31, 562
10:38-39, 68, 206,	11:8, 275	11:23-25, 826	12:24, 323, 611, 613,	13:1-32, 29
693, 826	11:8-10, 411, 979	11:24-25, 690, 951	631	13:1-37, 136, 826
10:39, 40, 561, 671	11:9, 631, 670	11:25, 264, 265, 284,	12:25, 15, 780	13:2, 176, 181, 459,
10:40, 402	11:9-10, 89, 411, 476,	285, 323, 370, 686	12:26, 4, 316, 318,	561, 692, 705, 943,
10:41, 671	489, 882, 933, 983	11:26, 63	319, 323, 506, 507,	948, 949, 951, 974,
10:42, 65, 302, 472,	11:9-11, 276	11:27, 181, 228, 411,	590, 611, 612	990, 1015
531	11:10, 413, 468, 475,	685, 842, 943	12:27, 323	13:3, 55, 246, 408,
10:42-45, 206, 265,	982	11:27-33, 63, 442, 707,	12:28, 536	615, 943
857	11:11, 36, 52, 273, 410,	842, 983	12:28-29, 323	13:3-4, 40
10:43, 872	411, 413, 494, 744,	11:27—12:44, 136	12:28-31, 152, 511	13:3-8, 27
10:43-44, 139, 179,	942, 982	11:27—13:37, 53	12:28-32, 245, 250	13:4, 728, 1014
295, 828	11:11-14, 557	11:28, 63, 707, 708,	12:28-34, 28, 149, 151,	13:4-31, 943
10:45, 111, 127, 128,	11:11-17, 494	943	170, 318, 341, 476,	13:5, 310, 827

13:5-6, 32	13:33, 31	324, 665, 896, 899, 988	14:43, 4, 20, 36, 181, 228, 842	14:62-64, 826
13:5-8, 30	13:33-37, 310			14:63-64, 176
13:5-13, 943	13:34, 652, 827, 871	14:22, 89, 93, 275,	14:43-44, 694	14:64, 128, 694, 703
13:5-22, 826	13:34-37, 237, 827	330, 493, 494, 495,	14:43-46, 209	14:65, 694, 708, 988
13:5-23, 561	13:35-36, 871	496, 596, 927, 951	14:43-52, 136, 175, 240	14:66, 870
13:6, 396, 827	13:36, 310	14:22-23, 685		14:66-70, 624
13:7, 827	13:37, 827	14:22-24, 199, 695	14:45, 935	14:66-72, 39, 209,
13:7-13, 827	14, 87, 92, 180, 241,	14:22-25, 180, 330,	14:46-49, 180	563, 630, 671, 861
13:7-32, 454	302, 496, 558, 564,	492, 493, 497	14:47, 263, 664	14:68, 974
13:8, 236, 468	695, 898, 1001	14:22-26, 492, 1021	14:48, 4, 179	14:70, 502, 974
13:9, 310, 424, 475,	14-15, 421, 663, 664	14:23, 493	14:49, 180	14:71, 139, 974
817, 827, 836, 907,	14-16, 769	14:23-25, 285	14:50, 209, 210, 427,	14:72, 139
908, 1001	14:1, 92, 93, 136, 180,	14:24, 180, 183, 275,	664, 671, 736	15, 125, 178, 181, 192,
13:9-11, 564, 1002	186, 271, 276, 842,	276, 493, 494, 495,	14:50-52, 310, 311	302, 480, 563, 883,
13:9-13, 30, 671	907, 983	609, 632, 828, 856,	14:51-52, 15	886, 995
13:10, 302, 303, 307,	14:1-2, 17, 404	858, 951, 982, 988,	14:53, 20, 228, 838,	15:1, 20, 136, 175, 178,
308, 343, 561, 606,	14:1-9, 563, 890	989	839, 842, 943, 973	181, 228, 694, 836,
609, 1001, 1016	14:1-11, 647	14:24-25, 29	14:53-64, 119	839, 842, 907, 973,
13:11, 433, 1001	14:1-15:47, 178, 180	14:25, 10, 26, 180,	14:53-65, 86, 175,	974
13:11-12, 827	14:2, 271, 670	276, 468, 475, 494,	180, 973, 979	15:1-14, 180
13:12, 37, 647, 706	14:2-16, 276	496, 499, 693, 694,	14:53-72, 136, 263,	15:1-15, 137, 679, 974
13:12-13, 264, 265	14:3, 53, 128, 271, 518,	695, 826, 827, 925,	647	15:2, 128, 160, 176,
13:13, 2, 826, 827	802	993, 994	14:53-15:15, 972, 973	403, 475, 476, 564,
13:13-20, 826	14:3-9, 17, 62, 114,	14:26, 233, 275, 309,	14:54, 54, 209, 410,	974
13:14, 25, 411, 412,	118, 664, 803, 873,	311, 615, 664, 900,	664	15:2-19, 136
560, 561, 647, 819,	1006, 1008	1021	14:54-72, 561	15:3, 20
943	14:4, 17	14:26-30, 349	14:55, 20, 181, 838	15:4, 974
13:14-23, 30	14:5, 17, 801, 974	14:26-31, 736	14:55-56, 943	15:5, 179
13:16, 771	14:6-72, 557	14:27, 631, 632, 664,	14:56, 989, 1001	15:6, 271, 276
13:17, 89	14:7, 451, 803, 808	826, 827, 859, 860	14:56-57, 1001	15:6-15, 404
13:18, 412, 690	14:8, 99, 118	14:27-28, 119	14:57, 943	15:7, 790
13:19, 319, 323, 1015,	14:9, 10, 303, 305,	14:28, 55, 57, 209,	14:57-59, 459	15:8, 54
1016	344, 561, 564, 609,	298, 560, 671, 695,	14:57-60, 53	15:8-15, 671, 979
13:19-20, 827	1016	780, 782	14:57-62, 943	15:9, 128, 403, 475,
13:20, 31, 316, 531, 826	14:10, 36, 43	14:30, 10, 782	14:58, 28, 87, 148,	476, 974
13:21-22, 120, 122,	14:10-11, 17, 43, 449,	14:32, 54, 309, 410	176, 234, 276, 414,	15:10, 178, 703, 880
396	805	14:32-39, 690	416, 459, 563, 693,	15:11, 20, 411, 672,
13:23, 310, 827	14:12, 92, 93, 136, 177,	14:32-42, 311, 465,	708, 781, 923, 943,	974
13:24, 236	271, 275, 276, 920	557, 685, 689	948, 950, 951, 952,	15:11-15, 180
13:24-27, 27, 30, 33,	14:12-13, 276	14:33, 36, 40, 309, 968	979, 989, 990, 1020	15:12, 128, 403, 475,
411, 412, 827	14:12-16, 180, 981	14:33-34, 311	14:59, 1001	476, 974
13:24-30, 233	14:12-18, 180	14:34, 31, 237, 312,	14:60-61, 943, 988	15:13, 974
13:25, 370, 1015	14:12-21, 493	519, 632, 827, 989	14:60-63, 20	15:14, 411, 974
13:26, 127, 128, 179,	14:12-25, 273	14:35, 693	14:61, 87, 89, 120,	15:15, 174, 178, 694
235, 314, 702, 703,	14:12-26, 241, 562	14:35-36, 974	128, 176, 317, 323,	15:16, 54, 411, 560
894, 895, 896, 898,	14:13, 41	14:36, 4, 180, 181,	396, 475, 476, 632,	15:16-17, 174
988	14:14, 136, 271, 529,	264, 310, 312, 317,	890	15:16-20, 557
13:26-27, 16	935	320, 323, 366, 369,	14:61-62, 117, 120,	15:16-22, 180
13:27, 15, 26, 303, 827	14:15, 54, 410	489, 510, 693, 767,	417, 563, 894, 898	15:16-26, 182
13:28, 651	14:16, 136, 179	888	14:61-64, 87, 128, 183	15:16-32, 184
13:28-29, 29	14:16-31, 926	14:37, 310, 827	14:61-65, 719	15:17, 180, 184
13:30, 10, 28, 29, 236,	14:17, 136, 276	14:37-38, 237	14:62, 24, 59, 120,	15:17-19, 180
694	14:17-21, 493	14:38, 647, 689, 953,	127, 128, 176, 179,	15:17-32, 181
13:31, 28, 29, 33, 524,	14:17-26, 136	954	317, 396, 398, 557,	15:18, 128, 180, 200,
628, 1015	14:18, 10, 275, 632,	14:39, 974	564, 590, 630, 683,	403, 475, 476
13:32, 29, 236, 323,	664, 989	14:40, 310, 783	694, 703, 827, 883,	15:19, 130, 180, 665,
402, 425, 686, 728,	14:20, 36, 66	14:41, 127, 178, 310,	889, 894, 895, 898,	694
889, 890, 892	14:21, 89, 127, 178,	693, 867, 974	973, 983, 988	15:20, 694

15:20-46, 136	15:41, 205, 782, 827, 872	1:1—9:50, 33, 614, 903, 971, 995	1:21-22, 943	1:46-55, 20, 78, 79, 167, 218, 247, 306,
15:21, 6, 9, 174, 664, 668	15:42, 136, 177	1:2, 325, 524, 785	1:21-25, 77	325, 412, 449, 461,
15:22, 55, 180, 411, 489	15:42-47, 99, 175	1:3, 549, 627, 817, 1002	1:22, 217	503, 592, 636, 786,
15:22-25, 180	15:43, 468, 475, 476	1:4, 524	1:23, 872	853, 901, 984, 1019, 1020
15:23, 180, 184, 995	15:43-45, 679	1:5, 76, 77, 79, 134, 380, 381, 438, 457, 852	1:24-25, 543	1:46-56, 548
15:24, 181, 182, 632, 694, 883, 983, 989	15:43-46, 179	1:5-7, 543	1:24-56, 548	1:47, 77, 140, 317, 324, 547, 829
15:25, 664, 890	15:44-45, 99	1:5-9, 697	1:24-58, 78	1:48, 75, 78, 88, 592, 852, 853, 870, 871, 901, 1010
15:25-27, 180	15:46, 275	1:5-23, 339, 548, 549	1:25, 75, 78, 531, 852	1:48-49, 78
15:25-32, 563	15:47, 205, 782	1:5-25, 79, 418, 703	1:26-27, 543	1:49, 78, 317, 324
15:26, 120, 128, 174, 403, 411, 475, 476, 745, 798	16, 32, 624	1:5-80, 339, 1002	1:26-35, 301	1:50, 587, 592, 852, 853
15:27, 174, 177, 179, 180, 632, 790, 968, 988	16:1, 17, 205, 782, 783, 821	1:5—2:40, 72, 75	1:26-38, 14, 63, 170, 217, 264, 438, 548	1:50-53, 808
15:29, 181, 276, 411, 459, 563, 632, 670, 693, 781, 883, 950, 973, 974, 983	16:1-4, 782	1:5—2:52, 75, 76, 185, 543	1:27, 81, 88, 131, 529, 883, 984, 988	1:51, 77, 78, 360, 984
15:29-30, 943	16:1-8, 136, 339, 348, 563, 596, 781, 782, 783, 784	1:6, 78, 149, 151, 197, 401, 465, 466, 531, 703	1:28, 48, 531, 567	1:51-53, 438, 520, 852, 853
15:29-31, 989	16:2, 782	1:6-7, 438, 636	1:28-38, 454, 543	1:51-55, 237, 984
15:29-32, 180, 943	16:3-4, 782	1:7, 75	1:29, 524, 567	1:52, 77, 78, 818, 975
15:30-31, 826	16:4, 782	1:8-10, 943	1:30, 324, 901	1:52-53, 478, 902
15:31, 20, 563, 694, 842	16:4-8, 564	1:8-20, 53, 438	1:30-33, 20	1:52-55, 807
15:32, 120, 128, 200, 403, 411, 475, 476, 974	16:5, 14, 15, 55, 782, 783, 785, 968	1:8-22, 412, 457	1:30-35, 829	1:53, 77, 78, 276, 325, 466, 496
15:33, 30, 32, 181, 199, 236, 596, 664	16:5-7, 782	1:8-23, 77, 543	1:31, 75, 81	1:54, 78, 587, 852, 853, 869, 1010
15:33-37, 685	16:6, 411, 694, 782	1:8-25, 438	1:31-35, 478, 971	1:54-55, 403, 1019
15:33-39, 184, 187	16:6-7, 782, 784	1:9, 531, 872	1:31-38, 439	1:55, 4, 75
15:34, 4, 181, 199, 200, 310, 339, 489, 632, 665, 725, 782, 883, 888, 983, 989	16:7, 55, 57, 139, 209, 298, 411, 560, 561, 564, 671, 782, 784, 1008	1:10, 390, 672, 690	1:32, 131, 168, 317, 324, 371, 438, 454, 543, 852, 984	1:57, 79
15:35, 181, 404	16:8, 260, 556, 558, 597, 620, 781, 782, 783, 962, 1008	1:11, 75, 311, 531	1:32-33, 77, 185, 477, 883, 892	1:57-58, 543
15:35-36, 200, 632	16:9, 364	1:11-12, 14	1:32-35, 172, 544	1:57-79, 418
15:36, 181, 989, 995	16:9-20, 260, 558, 782, 962	1:11-20, 217, 454	1:33, 127, 477, 478, 975	1:57-80, 79, 438
15:37, 181, 200	16:15, 343, 1016	1:12, 314, 971	1:34, 81, 82, 1018	1:58, 75, 77, 78, 79, 531, 587, 852
15:37-39, 982, 984	16:15-16, 68, 783	1:12-18, 943	1:35, 79, 81, 131, 317, 324, 325, 368, 371, 389, 438, 599, 600, 636, 830, 892, 970, 989	1:59, 454
15:37-41, 609	16:19, 185	1:13, 75, 77, 79, 438, 690	1:36, 79, 349	1:59-63, 79, 438
15:38, 20, 30, 32, 181, 303, 411, 564, 596, 664, 951, 974	Luke	1:13-17, 20, 389, 829	1:37, 75	1:59-64, 77
15:38-39, 562	1, 33, 72, 79, 80, 84, 93, 387, 438, 450, 614, 701, 903, 912, 943, 971, 1003	1:14, 58, 77, 79, 449, 852	1:38, 75, 325, 531, 567, 685, 870, 871, 1010	1:59-66, 543
15:39, 128, 131, 178, 181, 182, 200, 303, 339, 361, 366, 396, 404, 411, 476, 557, 563, 564, 783, 816, 832, 883, 890, 891, 892, 969, 974	1—2, 75, 77, 78, 79, 82, 84, 197, 412, 438, 449, 550, 636, 883, 901, 903	1:14-30, 694	1:39, 45	1:64, 79, 197, 325, 549
15:40, 40, 42, 782	1:1, 102, 426, 497, 542, 735, 1002	1:15, 79, 389, 438, 439, 531, 636, 993, 994	1:39-55, 1010	1:65-66, 439
15:40-41, 210, 1008	1:1-4, 84, 291, 339, 346, 384, 385, 387, 490, 541, 542, 543, 549, 550, 574, 746, 1002	1:15-17, 439	1:39-56, 76, 77, 438, 543	1:66, 531
		1:16, 316, 324, 403, 771	1:41, 79, 389, 636	1:67, 79, 286, 389, 636, 705, 707, 902
		1:16-17, 230, 547, 701, 786, 984	1:41-45, 77, 78	1:67-79, 20, 218, 246, 412, 439, 543, 548, 549, 668, 786
		1:17, 46, 79, 231, 316, 360, 466, 531, 599, 771, 829, 970	1:42, 570, 901	1:68, 89, 185, 314, 316, 324, 403, 778, 786, 818, 902
		1:18, 75, 218	1:43, 132, 401, 531, 567, 829, 984	1:68-73, 902
		1:18-20, 197, 829	1:44, 77, 79, 84, 829, 852	1:68-79, 167, 237, 497, 829, 901, 984
		1:18-23, 944	1:45, 88, 520, 531, 567, 901	1:69, 140, 668, 830, 869, 883, 902, 984
		1:19, 14, 325, 344, 396, 438, 543, 636	1:46, 902	1:69-79, 599, 829
		1:19-20, 943	1:46-50, 901	1:70, 325, 636
		1:20, 78, 79, 524, 549, 567

1:71, 140, 818, 902	140, 314, 324, 325,	2:35, 360	636, 639, 706, 829,	4, 19, 92, 149, 185,
1:71-75, 286	402, 478, 531, 535,	2:36, 78, 241, 256,	830, 982, 984	197, 284, 309, 345,
1:72, 185, 324, 587	547, 829, 852, 883,	705	3:5, 1011	448, 452, 458, 492,
1:72-75, 472	975, 984	2:36-37, 241, 257, 940	3:6, 305, 635, 829,	518, 566, 631, 715,
1:73, 4, 629	2:11-14, 77	2:36-38, 78, 79, 256,	868	826, 859, 900, 959
1:74, 872, 1018	2:12, 599	283, 412, 548, 829,	3:7, 4, 439	4:1, 79, 368, 389,
1:74-75, 453, 786	2:13, 15, 311, 314	1010	3:7-9, 31, 439, 441,	600, 617, 708, 958
1:74-79, 902	2:13-14, 14, 15, 818	2:37, 78, 269, 690,	460, 673, 705, 712,	4:1-12, 943
1:75, 324, 466	2:14, 15, 16, 45, 287,	872, 943, 1018	713	4:1-13, 93, 171, 197,
1:76, 230, 241, 316,	314, 325, 818, 852,	2:38, 78, 101, 185, 237,	3:7-14, 5, 146, 520,	389, 544, 596, 712,
317, 324, 371, 438,	901, 984, 1015	325, 389, 786, 818,	548	713, 716, 830, 917,
543, 636, 639, 707,	2:15, 218, 311, 370, 531	943, 1010	3:7-17, 235	954, 959, 964, 989
829, 984	2:16, 599	2:39, 48, 256, 531,	3:7-18, 439	4:1-14, 325
1:76-77, 79	2:19, 78, 568	685, 771	3:8, 5, 139, 263, 325,	4:1-21, 301
1:76-79, 286	2:20, 15, 187, 314, 325	2:39-40, 264	431, 466, 547, 771,	4:2, 195, 270, 955
1:77, 286, 324, 325,	2:21, 109, 454, 785	2:39-42, 350	772, 773	4:3, 131, 301, 958, 975,
497, 520, 852, 865,	2:21-24, 263, 543, 685	2:40-52, 439, 543	3:8-9, 466	989
902	2:21-35, 547	2:41, 271, 943	3:9, 67, 371, 439, 772	4:3-4, 955
1:77-78, 829	2:22, 531, 613, 943	2:41-42, 685	3:10, 466, 1014	4:4, 520, 956
1:78, 316, 587, 778,	2:22-24, 412, 613	2:41-43, 272	3:10-14, 247, 439,	4:5, 46, 201, 468, 477,
852	2:22-38, 53	2:41-44, 457	772, 773	478, 542, 955, 956,
1:79, 75, 197, 325,	2:22-52, 920	2:41-48, 1020	3:11, 773	1016
466, 668, 852, 902	2:23, 531	2:41-50, 685	3:12, 224, 773	4:5-6, 313, 958
1:80, 46, 79, 403,	2:23-24, 635, 636	2:41-51, 53, 135, 263,	3:12-13, 930	4:5-8, 477, 956
439, 543	2:23-38, 542	339, 412, 506, 830	3:12-14, 466	4:6, 64
2, 16, 72, 79, 80, 317,	2:24, 277, 531, 548,	2:41-52, 276, 568	3:13, 773	4:7, 956
785, 844, 1010	599, 802, 943, 948	2:42, 271	3:14, 773	4:7-8, 1018
2:1, 76, 77, 339, 534,	2:25, 101, 122, 185,	2:46, 457, 785, 943	3:15, 439, 441, 701	4:8, 316, 324, 872,
540, 542, 852, 1016	465, 466, 636, 706,	2:46-47, 110	3:15-17, 31	956, 1018, 1020
2:1-2, 438, 503, 818	786	2:47, 412, 670	3:15-18, 441	4:9, 131, 201, 301,
2:1-5, 134, 224	2:25-26, 233	2:48, 746, 1020	3:16, 79, 122, 389,	943, 955, 958, 975
2:1-7, 79, 264, 381	2:25-27, 79, 325	2:48-49, 81	437, 439, 600, 707	4:9-12, 14, 15, 956
2:1-11, 77	2:25-32, 237, 412	2:48-51, 264	3:16-17, 235, 429,	4:10, 151, 956
2:1-15, 247	2:25-34, 1010	2:49, 131, 305, 318,	460, 712, 713, 829	4:10-11, 956
2:1-20, 543	2:25-35, 76, 170, 403,	324, 544, 773, 892,	3:17, 67, 371, 439	4:12, 316, 324
2:1-52, 438	548, 829	943, 944, 1020	3:18, 440	4:12-13, 943
2:2, 79, 80, 84, 852	2:25-38, 20, 412, 1002	2:51, 109, 263	3:19, 381	4:13, 185, 195, 311,
2:4, 45, 131, 454, 883,	2:25-39, 543	2:51-52, 685	3:19-20, 440, 441,	769, 953, 956
988	2:26, 122, 131, 531,	2:52, 592	976, 1005, 1006	4:14, 79, 197, 249,
2:4-8, 356	636, 829	3, 79, 80, 81, 140, 317,	3:20, 920	368, 443, 599, 600,
2:5, 1020	2:27, 943	444, 1016	3:21, 440, 672, 691,	958
2:7, 45, 46, 81, 567,	2:27-32, 306	3-24, 883	892	4:14-15, 298, 313
599, 852	2:28, 111, 325, 389,	3:1, 79, 339, 381, 439,	3:21-22, 25, 68, 79, 217,	4:14-21, 830
2:8, 46, 135	902	679, 818	440, 544, 545, 547,	4:14-30, 77, 778
2:8-11, 830	2:28-32, 786, 943	3:1-3, 135, 137	830, 883, 958, 970	4:14-9:50, 544
2:8-14, 669	2:29, 325, 785, 871	3:1-6, 169, 284, 439	3:21-23, 301	4:15, 907, 909
2:8-15, 217	2:29-32, 77, 786, 858,	3:1-14, 803	3:21-4:13, 971	4:15-16, 298
2:8-18, 503	901, 902	3:1-20, 67, 389, 544,	3:22, 131, 301, 311,	4:15-21, 685
2:8-20, 860	2:29-35, 984	547, 1002	325, 389, 600, 719,	4:16, 48, 298, 506,
2:9, 13, 314, 531	2:30, 140, 829	3:1-4:13, 544	856, 892, 955, 964	647, 685, 936
2:9-10, 14	2:30-34, 984	3:1-21:38, 185	3:23, 79, 135, 892, 958	4:16-18, 803
2:9-12, 14	2:31, 302, 670, 672	3:2, 325, 414, 439, 701	3:23-28, 299	4:16-19, 706
2:9-14, 170, 829	2:32, 76, 302, 305,	3:3, 47, 439, 520, 547,	3:23-38, 81, 299, 301,	4:16-20, 305, 441,
2:10, 344, 543, 672	325, 523, 609, 640,	771, 772, 865, 991	454, 529, 544, 989	456
2:10-11, 20, 449, 477,	943	3:3-6, 170	3:31, 883	4:16-21, 35, 64, 68,
818	2:34, 89, 185, 197, 325,	3:4, 438, 439, 524,	3:34, 4	79, 117, 172, 237,
2:10-14, 668	461, 636	635, 636	3:38, 339, 958, 964,	286, 367, 457, 502,
2:11, 122, 131, 132,	2:34-35, 547, 667	3:4-6, 76, 439, 635,	989	936

4:16-22, 1020	4:33, 325	594, 595, 675, 702	6:11, 20, 175, 185, 599	6:27-31, 853
4:16-27, 306	4:33-36, 197	5:17-32, 284	6:12, 50, 615, 685,	6:27-35, 318, 830
4:16-30, 48, 78, 168,	4:33-37, 26, 364	5:18, 368	691, 892, 970, 1020	6:27-36, 240, 536
195, 197, 232, 247,	4:34, 605, 702	5:19, 51	6:12-13, 276	6:27-42, 852, 853
251, 308, 389, 390,	4:35, 196, 544, 600	5:20, 176, 830	6:12-16, 600, 640,	6:28, 89, 511, 512,
477, 490, 503, 542,	4:36, 958	5:20-24, 176, 325,	1011	690
544, 600, 708, 714,	4:36-37, 405	865	6:12-49, 544	6:29-30, 668
852, 853, 907, 932,	4:38, 39, 196	5:20-32, 545	6:13, 34, 35, 36, 43,	6:30, 225, 803, 805
933	4:38-39, 167, 364,	5:21, 20, 85, 544, 549,	94, 140, 204, 205,	6:30-38, 808
4:17-19, 325	595, 1010	719	209, 210, 936	6:31, 512, 853
4:17-21, 91	4:38-42, 1007	5:24, 368, 896, 958,	6:13-16, 36	6:32, 866
4:17-41, 477	4:39, 368, 477, 599,	1015	6:13-17, 204	6:32-34, 865
4:18, 17, 249, 317, 324,	600, 872, 1010	5:25, 187, 599	6:14, 39, 40	6:32-35, 511, 866
325, 497, 520, 547,	4:40, 197, 600	5:25-26, 313, 314, 325	6:14-16, 36	6:32-36, 511, 853
599, 600, 801, 803,	4:40-41, 140, 196,	5:26, 187, 314, 405,	6:15, 42, 796	6:34, 854
807, 818	197, 363, 364, 594,	594, 599	6:16, 42	6:34-35, 803
4:18-19, 76, 286, 345,	1007	5:27, 224, 773	6:17, 50, 204, 205,	6:35, 210, 317, 324,
368, 451, 452, 461,	4:40-44, 600, 601	5:27-28, 36, 205, 306	209, 210, 600, 672,	371, 434, 514, 548,
477, 478, 547, 599,	4:41, 122, 131, 197,	5:27-32, 42, 224, 865,	852	667, 688, 854
605, 635, 639, 741,	599, 600, 829	868, 926	6:17-18, 405, 594, 672	6:35-36, 325
829, 857	4:42, 617, 670, 690	5:27-39, 542	6:17-19, 600, 883,	6:36, 146, 318, 324,
4:18-21, 261, 609, 853	4:43, 35, 305, 324,	5:28, 544, 773, 808	1007	341, 511, 587
4:19, 286, 639, 773	468, 477, 478, 520,	5:28-32, 171	6:17-26, 601	6:37, 325, 497
4:20, 905, 936	600, 605, 606, 772,	5:29, 276, 606	6:17-36, 210	6:37-38, 853
4:21, 245, 261, 375,	773, 921, 982	5:29-30, 773	6:17-38, 222	6:38, 587
451, 477, 497, 605,	4:43-44, 544	5:29-32, 286, 455, 514	6:18, 368, 600, 852	6:39, 164, 651
933	4:44, 56, 907, 909	5:30, 224, 549, 675,	6:18-19, 196	6:39-42, 853
4:21-27, 937	5, 2, 125, 149, 229,	773, 843, 906, 908	6:19, 210, 368	6:40, 206, 935
4:22, 544, 933, 1002,	302, 317, 352, 468,	5:30-32, 496	6:20, 170, 306, 449,	6:41-45, 164
1020	599, 966, 1000	5:31-32, 606, 773	468, 473, 477, 478,	6:42, 395
4:22-30, 264	5:1, 325, 524, 599, 670	5:32, 284, 325, 466,	639, 713, 800, 801,	6:43-45, 236, 460,
4:23, 368, 477, 651,	5:1-2, 49	547, 605, 771, 773,	803, 805, 807, 852,	466
746	5:1-3, 51	866, 927, 929	917	6:43-49, 210, 852,
4:23-27, 131, 367	5:1-11, 36, 204, 210,	5:33, 171, 440, 674	6:20-21, 35, 164	854
4:24, 10, 131, 172, 635,	249, 544, 595, 599,	5:33-34, 927	6:20-22, 452	6:44, 996
708, 778, 830, 975	603	5:33-35, 96, 994	6:20-23, 28, 88, 168,	6:46, 529, 547
4:24-27, 599	5:1—6:11, 544	5:33-39, 269, 270,	449, 846	6:46-49, 246, 460,
4:24-30, 933	5:3, 672	440	6:20-25, 374	466, 712, 830
4:25-26, 970, 1004,	5:4-5, 36	5:34, 994	6:20-26, 87, 90, 167,	6:47, 524
1010	5:5, 935	5:36, 993	246, 247, 306, 461,	6:48, 652
4:25-27, 232, 403,	5:6, 36	5:37-38, 993	466, 520, 808, 830,	7, 719
477, 988, 1002	5:7, 37	6, 88, 138, 185, 342,	852	7:1, 50, 852
4:26, 778	5:8, 132, 466, 599,	449, 594, 599, 863,	6:20-49, 395, 514,	7:1-10, 196, 231, 305,
4:26-27, 1002	865	1004	600, 630, 714, 717,	307, 364, 367, 379,
4:27, 231, 830	5:10, 37, 40, 204	6:1-5, 456, 507, 640,	845, 852, 854, 855	490, 548, 595, 596,
4:28, 185, 933	5:10-11, 205, 599	822, 883, 884	6:21, 853	599, 600, 778, 814,
4:28-29, 20, 853	5:11, 37, 544, 808	6:1-11, 20, 455	6:22, 424, 807, 853,	835, 869
4:29, 48, 185, 264,	5:12-15, 943	6:2, 675	896	7:1-11, 48
615	5:12-16, 196, 364,	6:5, 455, 896	6:22-23, 778, 933	7:1-17, 441
4:30, 185	595, 600, 613	6:6, 600, 906	6:23, 325, 370, 830	7:1-50, 544
4:31-32, 600, 1020	5:14, 613, 943, 1001	6:6-7, 908	6:24, 449, 808	7:2, 302
4:31-37, 196, 907	5:15, 524, 600, 670,	6:6-11, 196, 364, 507,	6:24-25, 164	7:2-10, 871
4:31-38, 907	672	595, 640, 822, 907,	6:24-26, 88, 89, 854	7:3, 140, 228
4:31-39, 600	5:16, 617, 690, 892	975	6:26, 325	7:3-5, 905
4:31-41, 195, 599	5:17, 368, 531, 549,	6:7, 20, 549, 843	6:27, 434, 514, 852	7:5, 50, 302, 907
4:31-44, 544, 599	594, 599, 843, 984	6:7-11, 185, 675	6:27-28, 285, 287, 511,	7:6, 51
4:31—6:16, 852	5:17-21, 843	6:9, 140, 147, 599,	667	7:7, 594
4:32, 599, 958, 1020	5:17-26, 131, 196, 364,	830	6:27-30, 295	7:8, 64, 958

7:9, 306, 368, 830	7:34, 42, 224, 275,	8:5-8, 652	8:50, 140, 520, 599,	786, 829, 830, 856,
7:10-17, 1010	286, 341, 496, 514,	8:9-10, 657	830	892, 896, 975
7:11, 405, 594, 671	545, 548, 703, 719,	8:10, 25, 91, 320, 361,	8:51, 970	9:23, 206, 210, 248
7:11-12, 48	803, 843, 896, 926,	468, 477, 635, 640	8:53, 778	9:23-24, 713
7:11-15, 261	927, 928, 994	8:11, 325, 524, 599	8:54, 778	9:23-25, 206, 1006
7:11-17, 146, 197, 231,	7:34-39, 1004	8:11-12, 140	8:55, 771, 778	9:23-26, 803
364, 367, 515, 548,	7:35, 466, 866, 996,	8:11-14, 361	8:56, 778	9:23-27, 206, 830
595, 746, 777, 778,	997	8:12, 195, 261, 360,	9, 111, 614, 616, 694,	9:24, 599
779, 1010	7:36, 21, 271, 339,	599, 829	808	9:24-25, 803
7:11-21, 368	548, 773	8:12-13, 520	9-13, 883	9:25, 1016
7:12, 262, 368, 777	7:36-50, 17, 18, 62,	8:13, 311, 325, 449	9-19, 883	9:26, 14, 16, 313, 314,
7:13, 531, 587	99, 118, 131, 261,	8:14, 804, 808, 1014	9:1, 38, 43, 594, 601,	324, 524, 613, 803,
7:14-15, 777	286, 306, 452, 496,	8:15, 325	958	896
7:15, 777	545, 548, 688, 702,	8:18, 713	9:1-2, 64, 601	9:26-27, 31, 237, 442
7:16, 187, 314, 325,	802, 808, 866, 867,	8:19, 222, 670	9:1-5, 29, 936	9:27, 477, 478, 769
544, 599, 670, 707,	873, 926, 927, 930,	8:19-21, 205, 264,	9:1-6, 37, 210, 544,	9:28, 545, 615, 892,
708, 777, 830, 933,	1010	466, 568, 804, 1005	606, 667, 802, 809,	969, 970, 1020
987	7:37, 773, 865, 929,	8:21, 265, 325, 524,	1007	9:28-29, 691
7:17, 524	930	599	9:1-50, 544	9:28-36, 16, 25, 217,
7:18, 49, 997	7:37-38, 1010	8:22-25, 195, 595, 830	9:2, 35, 38, 43, 468,	276, 313, 442, 478,
7:18-23, 117, 131, 172,	7:37-50, 514	8:22-56, 600	477	497, 544, 613, 615,
601, 716, 776, 830,	7:38, 17	8:23, 49	9:5, 38, 668, 1001	966, 971, 972, 1021
937, 984	7:39, 131, 544, 773,	8:24, 934, 935	9:6, 345, 368, 773	9:29, 545, 702, 970,
7:18-28, 712	830, 930	8:25, 544, 600	9:7, 441	987
7:18-30, 234	7:40, 935	8:26-37, 26	9:7-8, 131, 231, 780,	9:29-31, 969, 970
7:18-35, 440, 997	7:40-43, 803	8:26-39, 51, 167, 197,	970	9:30, 613, 785
7:19, 131, 531	7:40-47, 928	305, 364	9:7-9, 382, 441, 442,	9:30-32, 969
7:19-20, 441, 544	7:44, 1011	8:28, 131, 317, 324,	544, 966, 971, 976	9:30-33, 168
7:20, 67, 518, 779	7:44-46, 276	371	9:8, 707, 830	9:31, 191, 497, 609,
7:21, 194, 368, 600	7:44-47, 1011	8:29, 140, 325, 618	9:9, 382	613, 692, 971
7:21-22, 452, 478,	7:46, 17	8:30, 875	9:10, 34, 43, 50, 51	9:31-32, 970
1007	7:47, 286, 514, 929	8:31, 371	9:10-17, 93, 276, 496,	9:32, 314, 613, 785,
7:21-23, 196	7:47-48, 286	8:32, 615	595, 830, 927, 965	786
7:22, 35, 368, 515, 518,	7:47-49, 325, 865	8:32-33, 600	9:11, 468, 477, 600,	9:32-33, 969, 970
596, 599, 639, 711,	7:48, 773, 928, 930,	8:35, 368, 518	670, 830	9:33, 403, 490, 613,
778, 779, 781, 801,	989	8:35-39, 197	9:12, 36, 50, 617	934, 935
803, 805, 807	7:49, 85, 131, 544	8:36, 140, 599, 830	9:12-17, 544	9:34-35, 440, 969,
7:22-23, 594, 595	7:50, 140, 210, 260,	8:37-39, 600	9:13, 91, 670, 672	970
7:23, 88, 441	261, 286, 325, 365,	8:38-39, 36	9:16, 89, 94, 276,	9:35, 131, 167, 276,
7:24, 13, 441, 617	599, 600, 667, 773,	8:39, 599	496, 786, 927, 928	544, 613, 640, 786,
7:24-30, 441	830, 930	8:40-42, 364, 778	9:18, 545, 670, 691,	856, 892, 966
7:25, 477	8, 656, 872, 1011	8:40-56, 197, 515, 595,	892	9:35-36, 970
7:26-28, 241	8:1, 36, 345, 468, 477,	746, 908, 1007	9:18-19, 131, 970	9:36, 229, 276, 613,
7:27, 13, 230, 706,	520	8:41, 518, 907, 908	9:18-20, 276, 544,	969, 970
707, 982	8:1-2, 339	8:42, 368	971	9:37-43, 26, 364
7:28, 468, 477, 705,	8:1-3, 64, 205, 206,	8:43, 746	9:18-21, 39, 714, 719,	9:37-50, 544
707	210, 544, 548, 599,	8:43-45, 688	966, 970	9:38, 368
7:29, 224, 439, 466,	601, 773, 802, 804,	8:43-48, 364	9:18-22, 441, 692	9:39, 325
672, 996	1005, 1011	8:44, 506	9:19, 780, 830	9:42, 368
7:29-30, 67, 349	8:1-56, 544	8:45, 935	9:19-20, 231	9:43, 325, 599
7:30, 20, 305, 324,	8:1-9:6, 778	8:46, 368	9:20, 122, 829	9:43-44, 690
637, 675, 837, 843,	8:2, 194, 196, 364,	8:46-48, 140	9:21-27, 544, 966,	9:43-45, 971
866	368, 547	8:47, 672	970, 971	9:44, 692, 708, 780,
7:31-32, 111	8:2-3, 205, 206, 785,	8:47-48, 368	9:21-18:34, 95, 192	785, 786, 830, 856,
7:31-35, 441, 707, 712,	976, 1002, 1011	8:48, 210, 260, 325,	9:22, 21, 39, 136, 185,	892, 896
866, 996	8:3, 49, 210, 599, 773	599, 600, 667, 830	186, 228, 305, 324,	9:45, 544, 780, 786
7:32, 109, 707	8:4-5, 93	8:49, 908	325, 441, 478, 549,	9:46-48, 872
7:33, 439, 675, 994	8:4-15, 91	8:49-56, 364, 778	700, 773, 780, 785,	9:47, 360

9:48, 605	10:12-16, 305	10:39, 518, 531	11:24-26, 596, 600, 618	778, 843, 996, 998
9:49, 41, 934, 935	10:13, 51, 325, 594, 596, 599, 773	10:40, 262, 263, 872, 1010	11:27-28, 210, 568	11:49-51, 703, 708, 996, 997, 998
9:50, 350	10:13-15, 27, 51, 235, 236, 298	10:41, 531	11:28, 88, 325, 524, 599	11:50, 325, 708, 778, 1016
9:51, 185, 371, 412, 461, 692	10:13-16, 773, 933	11:1, 210, 437, 691, 892, 938, 1019	11:29, 31, 594, 862	11:50-51, 89
9:51-56, 40, 52, 835, 907	10:15, 370, 371	11:1-4, 264, 339, 685	11:29-32, 27, 28, 305, 461, 693, 773, 779, 861, 862, 989	11:51, 943
9:51-62, 544	10:16, 35, 429, 605	11:1-13, 390, 545, 547	11:30, 862, 896, 981, 1015	11:51-53, 31
9:51—10:42, 544	10:17, 198, 368	11:2, 93, 317, 318, 324, 468, 477, 1015	11:30-32, 306	11:52, 21
9:51—19:27, 257, 883	10:17-20, 196, 210, 217, 1007	11:2-4, 28, 311, 686, 687, 690, 744, 1019	11:31, 6, 477, 779, 862, 996, 1004, 1015	11:53, 21, 675
9:51—19:28, 339	10:18, 25, 26, 185, 198, 311, 368, 954	11:3, 93, 261, 805	12-13, 714	11:53-54, 185, 394
9:51—19:44, 636, 656	10:18-19, 31	11:4, 194, 284, 285, 325, 803, 865	12, 463, 605, 1015	12-13, 714
9:51—19:48, 542, 544, 547, 550, 613, 984	10:19, 194, 368, 958	11:5, 93	12:1, 20, 92, 93, 175, 339, 394, 675	12:1-12, 246, 1002
9:52, 13, 15, 231, 835	10:20, 370	11:5-7, 1005	12:1-13:9, 545	12:1-12, 246, 1002
9:52-53, 257, 306	10:21, 264, 317, 320, 324, 1015	11:5-8, 93, 263, 656	12:2-7, 26	12:1-12, 246, 1002
9:52-56, 988	10:21-22, 25, 164, 324, 685, 686, 691, 997, 998, 1021	11:5-10, 690	12:4-5, 779	12:1-12, 246, 1002
9:53, 185, 412	10:22, 131, 324, 425, 889, 892	11:5-13, 324	12:4-12, 830	12:1-12, 246, 1002
9:54, 22, 185, 231	10:22-23, 829	11:8, 93, 690	12:5, 411, 460	12:1-12, 246, 1002
9:57, 843, 936	10:23, 88, 599	11:9, 804	12:6-7, 320	12:1-12, 246, 1002
9:57-58, 36, 805	10:23-24, 536, 705, 1021	11:11, 961	12:8, 16, 730, 896	12:1-12, 246, 1002
9:57-60, 236, 596	10:24, 325, 976	11:11-13, 690	12:8-9, 703	12:1-12, 246, 1002
9:57-62, 246, 830	10:25, 151, 371, 536, 537, 549, 843, 921	11:12-28, 390	12:8-11, 390	12:1-12, 246, 1002
9:58, 24, 117, 164, 235, 548, 599, 736, 802, 896, 897, 898	10:25-28, 149, 151, 491, 511, 536	11:13, 93, 249, 321, 324, 390, 690, 1010	12:8-12, 210	12:1-12, 246, 1002
9:59-60, 510, 805	10:25-29, 245, 844	11:14, 196, 594, 596, 670, 672	12:10, 284, 390, 703, 896	12:1-12, 246, 1002
9:59-62, 263, 265, 804	10:25-37, 63, 210, 306, 514, 537, 545, 652, 808, 830, 835, 907	11:14-15, 198, 596, 673	12:10-12, 389	12:1-12, 246, 1002
9:60, 98, 468, 477	10:26, 936	11:14-16, 364	12:11, 907, 908, 958	12:1-12, 246, 1002
9:61-62, 36, 231, 988	10:27, 151, 152, 316, 324, 325, 635	11:14-22, 719	12:11-12, 30, 284, 392, 412	12:1-12, 246, 1002
9:62, 468, 477, 520	10:28, 491, 511	11:14-23, 31, 171, 599, 600, 708	12:12, 324	12:1-12, 246, 1002
10, 152, 607	10:29, 257, 466	11:14-54, 545	12:13, 507	12:1-12, 246, 1002
10:1, 15, 35, 204, 531, 1002	10:29-37, 20, 152, 257, 276, 374, 511, 635, 703	11:15, 193, 194, 478, 595	12:13-14, 346	12:1-12, 246, 1002
10:1-12, 210, 667, 802, 809, 936	10:30-31, 52	11:15-22, 26	12:13-21, 225, 261, 548, 652	12:1-12, 246, 1002
10:1-14, 164	10:30-37, 245	11:16, 594, 673, 989	12:13-31, 808	12:1-12, 246, 1002
10:1-16, 164, 210, 339, 607, 774	10:33, 587, 835	11:17, 477	12:15, 520	12:1-12, 246, 1002
10:1-20, 545	10:34, 17, 362, 537, 995	11:17-18, 468, 599	12:15-21, 164	12:1-12, 246, 1002
10:2, 210, 235, 316, 531, 600, 607	10:36, 257	11:17-19, 596	12:15-31, 804	12:1-12, 246, 1002
10:2-12, 805	10:36-37, 520	11:17-20, 195	12:16-21, 374	12:1-12, 246, 1002
10:3, 35, 596, 936	10:37, 587	11:17-22, 594	12:19, 448	12:1-12, 246, 1002
10:4, 267	10:38, 1005	11:17-23, 198, 478	12:21, 520	12:1-12, 246, 1002
10:5-6, 246, 325, 667	10:38-42, 245, 276, 306, 545, 928, 1010, 1011, 1012	11:18, 368, 477, 958	12:22-24, 295	12:1-12, 246, 1002
10:7, 102, 276, 590		11:18-19, 193, 194	12:22-31, 164, 808	12:1-12, 246, 1002
10:8-9, 477, 601		11:19, 708	12:22-32, 804	12:1-12, 246, 1002
10:8-11, 111		11:19-20, 235	12:22-33, 808	12:1-12, 246, 1002
10:9, 235, 368, 468, 477, 596, 601, 1007		11:20, 28, 234, 317, 368, 468, 469, 477, 595, 596, 598, 599, 600, 642, 746, 830, 1016	12:22-34, 261, 830	12:1-12, 246, 1002
10:9-11, 468		11:21-22, 595, 600	12:24, 590	12:1-12, 246, 1002
10:10-12, 596		11:22-30, 374	12:24-28, 319, 320	12:1-12, 246, 1002
10:11, 468, 477, 668			12:27, 313	12:1-12, 246, 1002
10:12, 668			12:28, 261	12:1-12, 246, 1002
10:12-15, 51			12:29-30, 306	12:1-12, 246, 1002
			12:30, 308, 324, 1016	12:1-12, 246, 1002
			12:31, 318, 468, 477	12:1-12, 246, 1002
			12:31-32, 164	12:1-12, 246, 1002
			12:31-34, 478	12:1-12, 246, 1002

12:32, 139, 247, 324, 468, 477, 547	507, 548, 595, 600, 601, 821, 822, 907, 1011	13:34, 325, 997	14:26, 164, 210, 1006	16:1-13, 261, 520, 830, 871
12:32-34, 222		13:34-35, 30, 56, 461, 703, 712, 773, 984, 997, 998	14:26-27, 250	16:2, 524, 1002
12:33, 164, 370, 461, 803, 804	13:10-18, 477	13:35, 89, 185, 412, 636, 694, 944, 997, 998	14:27, 210, 713	16:3, 531
12:33-34, 242, 520, 548, 805, 808	13:10—17:10, 449	14:1, 21, 91, 93, 339, 496, 823, 905, 908	14:33, 210, 548, 804, 808, 1006	16:8, 170, 523, 531, 1014
12:34, 360	13:11, 600	14:1-3, 675	15, 449, 450, 478, 545, 587, 661, 829, 860, 905, 1010	16:9, 489, 520, 830
12:35-37, 277	13:11-12, 600	14:1-6, 20, 114, 171, 197, 364, 367, 507, 545, 595, 821, 822	15:1, 224, 276, 929	16:9-13, 808
12:35-40, 31, 872	13:11-13, 171, 263	14:1-14, 675	15:1-2, 276, 286, 449, 661, 773, 860, 864, 929	16:10-13, 675
12:35-48, 237, 830	13:11-14, 368	14:1-24, 93, 222, 478, 496, 542, 545, 548, 927	15:1-10, 514	16:11, 489
12:36, 271, 994	13:12, 295, 1011	14:3, 823, 843	15:1-32, 140, 866	16:13, 225, 318, 489, 548, 803, 808
12:37, 531, 599, 870, 872	13:13, 187, 197, 298, 314, 599, 600	14:5, 507, 823	15:2, 20, 496, 507, 549, 675, 773, 843, 926, 927, 930	16:14, 675
12:37-38, 88	13:14, 20, 147, 457	14:6, 823	15:3, 651	16:14-15, 20
12:39-40, 29, 235, 898	13:14-16, 365	14:7-11, 926, 928	15:3-7, 503	16:14-18, 374
12:40, 276, 896	13:15-16, 1011	14:7-14, 93, 313, 599, 781, 928	15:3-10, 263	16:15, 466
12:41-48, 29	13:16, 147, 324, 368, 600, 958	14:8, 275, 926	15:4, 38, 618	16:16, 27, 28, 237, 325, 453, 468, 477, 520, 705, 707, 996
12:42, 531	13:17, 670, 672	14:10, 93, 313, 496	15:5, 449	16:16-31, 613
12:42-46, 460, 871, 872	13:18, 28, 468, 477, 652	14:11, 461	15:6, 38, 449	16:17, 38, 514, 628, 1015
12:42-48, 870, 994	13:18-19, 236	14:12, 177, 271	15:7, 286, 325, 449, 466, 478, 547, 771, 773, 829, 865	16:18, 213, 215, 509, 1006
12:43, 88	13:20, 28, 468, 477, 652	14:12-14, 225, 808, 830	15:8-10, 503, 1010	16:19, 448, 1015
12:45, 360, 870, 994	13:20-21, 1006, 1010	14:12-24, 313, 325	15:9, 449	16:19-21, 374
12:46, 276, 994	13:22, 185, 412	14:13, 168, 452, 545, 781, 801	15:10, 15, 26, 286, 325, 449, 478, 547, 771, 773, 829, 865	16:19-26, 808
12:47, 324, 510	13:22-30, 5, 210, 830	14:13-14, 88	15:11-32, 263, 276, 286, 320, 391, 503, 520, 652, 661, 744	16:19-31, 5, 26, 31, 261, 276, 283, 374, 461, 466, 515, 520, 548, 781, 807, 808
12:47-48, 460	13:22-31, 545	14:14, 237, 461, 781	15:12-14, 773	16:22, 5, 26, 371, 496, 926
12:49, 31, 892, 1015	13:23, 599	14:15, 88, 93, 94, 371, 449, 468, 477, 478, 496	15:17, 91, 870	16:23, 5, 38, 371
12:49-50, 693	13:23-24, 545	14:16-24, 96, 928	15:18, 370, 865	16:24, 66, 587
12:49-51, 118	13:23-30, 237, 478	14:17, 276, 605	15:19, 870	16:25, 807
12:49-53, 164, 265, 412, 667	13:24, 56	14:18-19, 808	15:20-24, 829	16:27-28, 263
12:49-56, 1006	13:25-27, 429	14:18-20, 520, 808	15:21, 370, 865	16:27-31, 375, 808
12:50, 68, 693	13:27, 466	14:21, 452, 545, 781, 801	15:23, 449, 773	16:29, 325, 545, 613
12:51, 325, 605, 667, 683, 1015	13:28, 31, 325, 460, 468, 473, 477	14:21-23, 929	15:24, 449, 781	16:30, 325, 771, 773, 871
12:51-53, 30, 236	13:28-29, 26, 28, 30, 277, 606	14:23, 531, 545	15:25-29, 110	16:31, 5, 325, 374, 613
12:52, 263	13:28-30, 779	14:23-24, 210	15:25-32, 263	17, 162, 714, 728
12:54-56, 29, 237	13:29, 275, 371, 449, 468, 477, 478, 496, 928	14:25-26, 241	15:29, 149, 151, 449, 871	17:1, 89
12:54-59, 164	13:29-30, 993, 994	14:25-27, 265, 804	15:29-30, 773	17:1-10, 545
12:56, 1015	13:31, 21, 673, 908, 976	14:25-28, 206	15:32, 324, 448, 449, 773, 781, 829	17:3-4, 325, 865
12:58, 905	13:31-32, 164, 382	14:25-33, 206, 210, 261, 702	16, 478, 545, 808	17:4, 688, 771
13, 908	13:31-33, 49, 298, 461	14:25-35, 703, 704, 830	16:1, 325, 661	17:5, 34, 531
13—16, 478	13:31-35, 131		16:1-4, 219	17:5-10, 600
13:1, 137, 382, 679, 680, 975	13:32, 185, 247, 261, 600, 786		16:1-8, 656, 874	17:6, 531, 596
13:1-3, 866	13:32-35, 412		16:1-9, 675, 808	17:7, 496
13:1-5, 365, 773, 930	13:33, 56, 172, 185, 261, 305, 324, 412, 692, 709, 773, 829, 933, 997		16:1-11, 803	17:7-10, 248, 871, 872
13:2, 865	13:33-34, 708, 778, 830			17:8, 872
13:3, 325, 771, 773	13:33-35, 185, 692, 943			17:11, 52, 185, 412, 907
13:4, 53				17:11-17, 545
13:5, 325, 771, 773				17:11-19, 197, 257,
13:6-9, 439, 466, 830
13:8, 531
13:10, 545, 685, 821
13:10-17, 5, 196, 282, 306, 318, 364, 367,

364, 367, 518, 595, 600, 835, 907	18:9-17, 599	19, 714, 952	412, 461, 668, 690, 705, 819, 984	20:39, 21
17:11—19:27, 545	18:10-11, 675	19:1, 276	19:42, 246, 325	20:39-44, 844
17:12, 368, 517	18:10-14, 223, 224, 514	19:1-10, 5, 205, 225, 261, 286, 306, 514,	19:42-44, 412	20:41, 944
17:12-19, 52, 370	18:11, 466, 1019	520, 545, 548, 773,	19:44, 314, 461, 778,	20:41-42, 609
17:13, 588, 935	18:11-12, 673	808, 814, 867, 868,	819	20:41-44, 132, 451, 883
17:14, 507, 518, 697	18:12, 223, 456	928, 929, 984	19:45, 635, 944	20:42, 316, 392
17:15, 187, 314, 599, 600	18:13, 318, 320, 853, 865	19:1-27, 548, 984	19:45-46, 136, 171, 176, 413, 457, 744,	20:42-43, 635
17:16, 257, 599, 835	18:14, 461, 466	19:2, 225, 670, 773	920, 951	20:45, 672
17:17-18, 257, 368	18:15, 112	19:3, 549	19:45-48, 545, 947, 952	20:45-47, 21, 466, 842, 1006
17:19, 140, 210, 260, 261, 365, 368, 599, 600, 830	18:15-17, 112, 545, 830	19:5, 276, 773	19:46, 318, 944	20:45—21:4, 546, 1010
17:20, 31, 468, 469, 477, 675	18:16, 468, 478, 767	19:7, 5, 286, 496, 773	19:47, 21, 176, 185, 549, 838, 844, 921,	20:46, 907, 908, 928
17:20-21, 478, 769	18:17, 468	19:8, 5, 225, 286, 531, 773, 801, 808	944, 951	20:46-47, 548
17:20-37, 237, 412	18:18, 804, 921, 1015	19:8-9, 549	19:47-48, 685, 975	20:47, 690, 803
17:21, 28, 830, 1019	18:18-23, 149, 150, 151, 170, 225, 548	19:8-10, 261, 928	19:47—20:2, 951	21, 15, 28, 29, 314, 412, 714, 728, 944
17:22, 896, 899	18:18-25, 780	19:9, 261, 276, 375, 830	19:48, 672	21:1, 940
17:22-37, 898	18:18-30, 520, 640, 773, 808, 830	19:9-10, 140, 773, 864	20, 944	21:1-4, 808, 940, 944, 998, 1006
17:23-24, 30, 122, 235	18:20, 635, 1001, 1002	19:10, 118, 286, 306, 599, 605, 860, 883,	20:1, 228, 345, 685, 844, 944	21:1-33, 29
17:24, 370, 692, 702, 896	18:22, 635, 801, 803, 804, 808, 1006	896, 898, 899, 984	20:1-8, 442	21:2, 801
17:24-25, 694, 785	18:22-25, 261	19:11, 185, 237, 468, 545, 651	20:1—21:4, 136	21:2-3, 801
17:25, 305, 324, 695, 773, 785, 829, 975	18:24, 468, 548, 804	19:11-27, 29, 210, 412, 460, 520, 545, 656, 712, 803, 830, 871, 883	20:1—21:38, 185, 545	21:3-6, 186
17:26, 545, 896	18:24-25, 478	19:12, 477	20:2, 21	21:5-7, 1006
17:26-29, 520	18:24-27, 804	19:12-27, 237	20:3-8, 944	21:5-9, 27, 237
17:26-30, 235, 306	18:25, 468	19:14, 477	20:4, 67, 442	21:5-36, 136
17:26-33, 808	18:26, 140, 599	19:15, 477	20:6, 437, 670, 672	21:5-38, 546
17:26-35, 29, 1006	18:26-30, 830	19:16, 600, 958	20:9-16, 185, 317, 889	21:6, 176, 944
17:30, 27, 896	18:28, 222	19:17, 600, 958	20:9-17, 870	21:7, 728, 1014
17:31, 771	18:28-30, 808, 1006	19:18-20, 970	20:9-19, 8, 442, 652, 693, 694, 871, 1021	21:8, 396
17:31-32, 1010	18:29, 468, 520	19:20-23, 803, 806, 808	20:13-15, 933	21:9, 324
17:32, 1004	18:29-30, 241, 454, 780, 803	19:26, 713	20:16, 870	21:10, 468, 477
17:33, 713	18:30, 238, 921, 1014	19:27, 477	20:17, 170, 635, 883, 933	21:10-19, 30
17:35, 1006	18:30-33, 545	19:28, 185, 412	20:17-18, 693	21:12, 907
17:37, 235	18:31, 36, 185, 412, 497, 785, 896	19:28-40, 980, 981	20:18, 989	21:12-15, 1002
18:1, 661, 662, 1010	18:31-33, 478, 613, 692, 830, 856, 857	19:28-44, 136	20:19, 549, 672, 844	21:13, 1002
18:1-5, 691	18:32, 786	19:28-48, 545	20:19-20, 21	21:13-15, 1001
18:1-8, 210, 261, 466, 467, 545, 548, 830, 1010	18:32-33, 131	19:28—24:53, 883	20:20, 394, 679, 958	21:15, 392
18:2, 317	18:33, 136, 780, 786	19:29, 53, 412	20:20-26, 170, 176, 224, 349, 453, 975	21:20, 25, 412, 461, 818, 819, 944
18:2-5, 656, 1010	18:34, 780, 786	19:31, 984	20:21-26, 944	21:20-24, 31, 148, 306, 412
18:3, 867	18:34-43, 545	19:31-33, 185	20:27, 373	21:21, 412
18:3-5, 242	18:35, 368	19:37, 55, 408, 594, 599, 982	20:27-38, 824, 944	21:22, 412, 497
18:4, 600	18:35-43, 52, 172, 197, 364, 412, 595, 599, 692, 883	19:37-39, 210	20:27-40, 5, 374, 780	21:23, 89, 412, 1015
18:6, 466, 531	18:35—24:53, 819	19:38, 16, 89, 325, 636, 818, 883, 933,	20:28, 613	21:24, 31, 305, 412, 461, 497, 944
18:6-8, 691, 1010	18:36-37, 624	982, 984	20:34, 613	21:25, 1015
18:7-8, 466	18:38-39, 587	19:39, 675	20:34-35, 1014	21:26, 30, 599, 1016
18:8, 24, 259, 545, 691, 703, 896, 899, 1010, 1015	18:42, 140, 260, 368, 599, 830	19:39-40, 984	20:34-36, 15, 16	21:27, 52, 59, 60, 314, 613, 703, 894, 895, 896, 898, 1015
18:9-14, 20, 306, 509, 545, 865, 867, 930	18:43, 187, 314, 599, 600, 672	19:41, 185	20:35, 237	21:28-36, 237
		19:41-42, 818	20:36, 371, 780	21:29-30, 651
		19:41-44, 30, 31, 55,	20:37, 316, 318, 319, 531, 613	21:29-31, 29
			20:38, 780	21:31, 468, 478

21:32, 28, 29, 694	22:16, 180, 267, 468,	857, 872, 988	23:1-25, 136, 137, 679	23:42-43, 988
21:32-33, 31	478, 496, 497, 693	22:39, 311, 410, 615	23:2, 122, 176, 185,	23:43, 10, 27, 261,
21:33, 29, 524, 728,	22:16-18, 26, 285	22:39-46, 310, 313,	186, 187, 224	339, 370, 374, 773
1015	22:16-19, 29	546, 690, 830, 970	23:3, 122, 131, 176,	23:44, 187, 199, 478
21:34, 360, 994	22:18, 180, 267, 468,	22:40, 311	403	23:44-46, 187
21:34-36, 237	478, 496, 497, 499,	22:41, 54	23:4, 122, 131, 186,	23:44-47, 187
21:35, 1015	693, 994	22:41-44, 217	411	23:44-56, 830
21:36, 691, 703, 896,	22:19, 93, 94, 276,	22:42, 131, 305, 311,	23:5, 137, 186, 339,	23:45, 187
899, 1015	277, 496, 497, 786,	324, 693, 892	608	23:46, 131, 187, 199,
21:37, 55, 410, 615,	926, 927, 928, 962,	22:42-44, 199	23:6-12, 137, 382, 975	311, 324, 339, 636,
944	965	22:43, 61, 370, 1020	23:6-15, 348	685, 686, 883, 892,
21:37-38, 685, 951	22:19-20, 186, 267,	22:43-44, 15, 310, 311,	23:7, 958	902, 989
21:38, 672, 944	311, 501, 857	312, 313	23:8, 594	23:47, 107, 131, 187,
22, 185, 199, 269, 313,	22:20, 166, 168, 185,	22:44, 311, 312	23:9, 131, 524	305, 314, 466, 636,
325, 410, 501, 546	277, 285, 493, 496,	22:45-46, 311	23:10, 21	830, 964, 974, 975
22—23, 185, 549, 550,	497, 856, 857, 990,	22:46, 199, 311, 954	23:12, 138, 382	23:48, 405, 546, 670,
663, 664	994	22:47, 43	23:13, 672	672
22:1, 92, 93, 136, 186,	22:21-38, 266, 501	22:47-48, 546	23:13-15, 186	23:48-49, 1008
271, 273, 276	22:21—23:43, 830	22:47-53, 136, 240	23:13-16, 122	23:49, 205, 206, 210,
22:1-38, 496	22:22, 89, 185, 267,	22:47-54, 186	23:13-23, 405	311, 989, 1002, 1011
22:1—23:56, 186, 546	311, 665, 786, 896	22:48, 896, 898, 899,	23:13-25, 975	23:50, 465, 466
22:1—24:53, 185	22:24-27, 111, 132,	1002	23:14, 478	23:50-53, 679
22:2, 21, 549, 670,	472, 599, 857	22:49-51, 798	23:14-15, 131	23:50-56, 99, 175
672, 844	22:24-30, 204, 210,	22:50, 871	23:15, 974, 975	23:51, 99, 324, 468,
22:3, 36, 43, 185, 199,	212, 267, 311, 1010	22:50-51, 364, 595, 601	23:17, 271	837
267, 311, 368, 600,	22:25, 65, 222, 531	22:51, 368	23:18, 672	23:53, 55, 99
769, 954	22:25-26, 295	22:52, 21, 175, 838	23:22, 122, 131, 186	23:54, 136, 177
22:3-6, 185, 546	22:25-27, 164, 267,	22:53, 185, 187, 195,	23:23-24, 546	23:55, 205, 206, 785,
22:4, 43, 185, 838	857	199, 276, 311, 478,	23:24, 1019	1008
22:5, 43	22:26, 872	693, 944, 954	23:26, 6, 174	23:55—24:12, 1008
22:6, 185, 670, 672	22:26-27, 222, 871,	22:53-54, 210	23:26-27, 311	23:56, 149, 151, 455
22:7, 92, 186, 271,	872	22:54, 54, 410, 839,	23:26-54, 136	23:56—24:1, 821
276, 324	22:27, 295, 599, 926	975	23:27, 672	24, 32, 60, 185, 546,
22:7-8, 136, 186, 276	22:28, 311, 496	22:54-62, 199, 974	23:27-28, 1008	549, 550, 703, 785,
22:7-17, 171	22:28-29, 953	22:54-65, 136	23:27-31, 311, 339,	826, 858, 971
22:7-23, 180	22:28-30, 26, 28, 118,	22:54—23:25, 972,	412, 1008	24:1, 17, 785
22:7-38, 501	235, 779, 954, 990	974	23:29, 88	24:1-12, 785
22:8, 41, 276	22:29, 324, 468, 477,	22:56, 870	23:30, 412	24:1-35, 136
22:8-15, 180	686	22:57, 861	23:31, 461	24:1-49, 830
22:11, 186, 276	22:29-30, 43, 93, 186,	22:59, 502	23:32-33, 131	24:1-53, 546
22:12, 54	472, 477	22:61, 786	23:33, 55	24:3, 785, 962
22:13, 136, 186, 276,	22:30, 43, 255, 308,	22:63-65, 478	23:34, 23, 131, 187,	24:4, 14, 546, 784,
935	403, 468, 477, 626,	22:64, 708, 830	287, 324, 325, 339,	785, 970
22:13-38, 926	628, 779	22:65, 187	636, 686, 892, 989	24:4-7, 15, 217
22:14, 34, 43, 136,	22:31, 185, 199, 267,	22:66, 136, 175, 228,	23:35, 131, 187, 368,	24:5, 14, 785
276, 277, 496	311, 368, 600	549, 836, 837, 844	405, 478, 636, 672,	24:5-8, 780
22:14-20, 495, 496	22:31-32, 210, 691,	22:66-71, 86, 975,	971	24:6, 786, 962
22:14-23, 267, 492	954	1002	23:36, 181, 636, 995	24:6-7, 785, 896
22:14-30, 136	22:31-34, 206, 736	22:66—23:1, 21	23:37, 187, 403, 478	24:6-8, 1011
22:14-38, 266, 269,	22:31-38, 267	22:67, 122	23:38, 174, 403, 745	24:7, 185, 305, 324,
501, 542	22:32, 259, 771, 989	22:69, 24, 120, 317,	23:39, 186	325, 773, 785, 786,
22:15, 136, 186, 271,	22:34, 199	599, 609, 894, 895,	23:39-43, 287	829, 865, 867, 898,
276, 496, 497, 920	22:35-38, 607, 802,	896, 898	23:40-41, 773	899
22:15-16, 277	809	22:70, 122, 131, 975	23:40-43, 375	24:8, 786
22:15-17, 186	22:36, 267, 798	23, 174, 549, 947	23:41, 187, 974, 975	24:8-12, 1008
22:15-18, 311	22:37, 131, 171, 185,	23—24, 1011	23:41-42, 772	24:9, 205, 785
22:15-20, 186	186, 311, 312, 324,	23:1, 175, 176	23:42, 187, 468, 477,	24:9-10, 43
22:15-23, 497, 1021	635, 665, 708, 773,	23:1-5, 478, 546, 975	478	24:10, 34, 785, 1008

24:11, 546, 785, 786	24:44-48, 237	1:1-5, 402, 420, 524, 525	1:14-17, 988	1:31-33, 432
24:12, 546, 785, 962	24:44-49, 102, 210, 287, 307, 547, 783, 785, 788	1:1-9, 170	1:14-18, 126, 132, 133, 306, 430, 830	1:32, 922, 923
24:13, 55, 205, 785	24:44-53, 59	1:1-13, 326	1:15, 231, 420, 433, 442, 443, 526, 902, 1003	1:32-34, 25, 47, 392, 479, 999
24:13-22, 546	24:45, 123, 546, 780	1:1-18, 64, 306, 340, 420, 442, 524, 525, 526, 614, 691, 893, 902, 903, 933, 998, 1016	1:17, 5, 123, 428, 430, 483, 514, 524, 525, 536, 588, 601, 613, 614, 638, 830, 978, 1003	1:33, 443, 483, 922, 991
24:13-35, 785, 1002	24:45-47, 546, 786, 829	1:2, 132, 637, 638	1:17-18, 428	1:33-34, 991
24:13-53, 413	24:45-49, 306, 990	1:3, 306, 322, 443, 524, 525, 628, 933, 1017	1:18, 70, 112, 132, 133, 306, 317, 326, 327, 400, 420, 428, 430, 434, 525, 526, 539, 609, 709, 830, 893, 902, 982, 999, 1003	1:34, 123, 133, 430, 483
24:15-31, 217	24:46, 186, 305, 786, 829, 830, 857	1:4, 5, 306, 392, 489, 520, 521, 523, 998	1:19, 21, 307, 420, 433, 442, 675, 702	1:35, 40, 938
24:16, 780, 786	24:46-47, 207, 389, 635, 786	1:4-5, 306, 592, 704, 998	1:19-21, 774	1:35-42, 40, 70
24:17, 524	24:46-49, 37, 1002	1:4-9, 428	1:19-22, 903	1:35-49, 204
24:18, 205	24:46-53, 609	1:4-12, 774	1:19-23, 169	1:35-51, 47, 443, 609
24:19, 131, 325, 390, 461, 601, 672, 707, 708, 786, 830, 933	24:47, 38, 261, 285, 287, 305, 325, 520, 546, 547, 771, 773, 788, 829, 865, 868, 1002	1:5, 187, 188, 521, 523, 977	1:19-24, 454, 676	1:36, 5, 170, 277, 429, 482, 609, 831, 858, 861
24:19-20, 21	24:47-49, 433	1:6, 15, 442	1:19-28, 47, 442	1:37, 609
24:20, 405	24:48, 44	1:6-7, 442	1:19-37, 67	1:37-42, 36
24:21, 131, 786	24:48-49, 786	1:6-8, 67, 420, 523, 526, 902, 1003	1:19-40, 40	1:38, 1, 420, 421, 787, 934, 935
24:23, 217, 785	24:49, 44, 131, 287, 324, 413, 547, 686	1:6-9, 442, 903	1:20, 123	1:38-39, 1, 433
24:23-24, 785	24:50, 56	1:7, 443, 521, 774	1:20-22, 442	1:39, 1
24:24, 785	24:50-51, 89, 478	1:7-8, 433	1:21, 231, 611, 640, 709	1:40, 40
24:25, 325, 786	24:50-52, 543	1:7-9, 306, 627, 704	1:22, 123	1:40-41, 265
24:25-27, 781, 857	24:50-53, 231, 785	1:8, 231, 442	1:23, 170, 231, 429, 442, 483, 617, 637, 639, 706, 709, 1003	1:40-49, 982
24:26, 59, 123, 185, 187, 311, 314, 324, 613, 785, 786, 829, 830	24:51, 59, 60, 370, 371, 785, 988	1:9, 306, 361, 521, 523, 524, 592, 831, 1017	1:24, 21, 675	1:41, 70, 123, 133, 211, 420
24:27, 169, 325, 609, 613, 635, 786, 1020	24:51-52, 339	1:9-10, 1017	1:25, 123, 231, 442, 611, 709	1:42, 39, 489
24:28-35, 496	24:52, 60, 785, 1018	1:9-11, 306, 999	1:26, 27, 231, 442	1:43, 306
24:30, 89, 496, 786	24:53, 89, 412, 567, 944, 952, 1020	1:9-12, 902	1:26-32, 426	1:43-44, 41
24:30-31, 94, 277, 927, 928	John	1:10, 188, 428, 483, 525, 978, 1017	1:26-33, 426	1:43-46, 41
24:31, 780, 785, 786	1, 2, 16, 17, 65, 70, 101, 125, 138, 229, 284, 294, 313, 352, 442, 448, 468, 479, 492, 522, 604, 609, 667, 676, 826, 859, 900, 933, 991, 1004	1:10-11, 211, 525	1:28, 47, 67, 306, 439, 443	1:44, 39, 41, 51, 381
24:32, 360, 781, 786, 1020	1—2, 47	1:11, 22, 188, 268, 428, 431, 434, 977, 1019	1:28-37, 920	1:45, 123, 133, 211, 233, 264, 315, 514, 613, 614, 638, 708, 709
24:33, 205, 785	1—4, 1017	1:11-13, 264	1:29, 5, 133, 170, 188, 189, 190, 277, 287, 295, 306, 349, 421, 428, 429, 431, 443, 482, 483, 538, 609, 831, 858, 861, 865, 989, 1003, 1017	1:45-46, 41, 48, 434
24:33-34, 55	1—10, 358	1:12, 65, 262, 306, 521, 524, 525, 774, 903	1:30-34, 443	1:46, 625
24:34, 785, 829, 830	1—12, 516, 885, 944	1:12-13, 112, 188, 190, 431, 479, 627, 830	1:31, 188, 392, 403, 405, 443, 706, 709	1:46-51, 262
24:34-35, 785	1—20, 71	1:13, 431	1:32, 922, 923	1:47, 479
24:35, 94, 928	1:1, 32, 132, 189, 306, 316, 327, 400, 420, 428, 525, 592, 627, 830, 902, 921, 982, 998, 1022	1:14, 58, 133, 189, 264, 306, 314, 315, 317, 326, 399, 400, 401, 429, 430, 435, 483, 500, 524, 525, 526, 588, 601, 602, 778, 921, 944, 952, 978, 985, 999, 1003, 1012	1:33, 443, 483, 922, 991	1:49, 1, 123, 133, 205, 211, 349, 403, 405, 413, 428, 429, 434, 479, 602, 639, 893, 935, 984
24:36, 325, 669, 785, 962	1:1-2, 400, 428, 434, 524, 525, 539, 999, 1003	1:15, 231, 420, 433, 442, 443, 526, 902, 1003	1:34, 123, 133, 430, 483	1:49-51, 787
24:36-43, 16, 784, 785	1:1-3, 319, 428, 524	1:16, 15, 442	1:35, 40, 938	1:50, 430
24:36-51, 217		1:17, 5, 123, 428, 430, 483, 514, 524, 525, 536, 588, 601, 613, 614, 638, 830, 978, 1003	1:35-42, 40, 70	1:51, 5, 6, 10, 16, 26, 32, 133, 423, 429, 430, 433, 592, 896, 899
24:36-53, 785		1:18, 70, 112, 132, 133, 306, 317, 326, 327, 400, 420, 428, 430, 434, 525, 526, 539, 609, 709, 830, 893, 902, 982, 999, 1003	1:35-49, 204	2, 174, 317, 399, 401, 861, 905, 952
24:37, 785		1:19, 21, 307, 420, 433, 442, 675, 702	1:35-51, 47, 443, 609	2—11, 637
24:37-42, 928		1:20, 123	1:36, 5, 170, 277, 429, 482, 609, 831, 858, 861	2—12, 340
24:38, 360		1:21, 231, 611, 640, 709	1:37, 609	2:1, 48, 277, 306
24:39, 173, 174, 396, 665, 785		1:22, 123	1:37-42, 36	2:1-2, 271
24:41, 546		1:23, 170, 231, 429, 442, 483, 617, 637, 639, 706, 709, 1003	1:38, 1, 420, 421, 787, 934, 935	2:1-10, 723, 988
24:41-43, 785		1:24, 21, 675	1:38-39, 1, 433
24:44, 185, 324, 325, 613, 640, 773, 786, 829		1:25, 123, 231, 442, 611, 709	1:39, 1
24:44-45, 1020, 1022		1:26, 27, 231, 442	1:40, 40
24:44-46, 613, 781		1:26-32, 426	1:40-41, 265
24:44-47, 123, 339		1:26-33, 426	1:40-49, 982

2:1-11, 95, 264, 277, 335, 499, 568, 602, 639, 808, 920, 991, 995	2:22, 401, 639, 781, 952	538, 609, 627, 639, 830, 831, 893, 1017	4:1-45, 306, 420	4:41, 524
2:1-12, 48, 595, 601, 877, 920, 1011	2:23, 271, 277, 413, 423, 430, 594, 742, 944	3:16-17, 317, 320, 483, 609, 1017	4:2, 1019	4:41-42, 430, 434
2:1-4:54, 306	2:23-25, 204, 211, 262, 400, 428, 602, 627, 639	3:17, 306, 307, 429, 461, 479, 609, 830, 1017	4:3, 307	4:42, 133, 307, 428, 429, 432, 480, 538, 609, 830, 992, 1017
2:2, 204	2:24, 413	3:17-21, 830	4:4-42, 52, 1012	4:43-54, 920
2:4, 420, 462, 601, 693, 1011	3, 170, 436, 461, 524, 627	3:18, 461, 732, 774, 899	4:5, 52, 302, 836	4:44, 131, 708, 709, 922
2:5, 526, 1011	3:1, 100, 578, 909	3:19, 32, 188, 211, 361, 1017	4:6, 52	4:45, 271, 639, 742, 893
2:6, 420, 423, 432, 995	3:1-2, 22, 676	3:19-20, 433	4:7, 52	4:46, 48, 479, 995
2:9, 95, 96, 97	3:1-8, 264	3:19-21, 461, 521, 523, 538, 704, 1017	4:8, 1, 52	4:46-54, 306, 364, 368, 420, 521, 595, 601, 602, 808
2:10, 97, 995	3:1-14, 206	3:22, 1, 46, 67, 306	4:9, 307, 424, 836	4:47, 111
2:11, 204, 206, 262, 314, 400, 401, 428, 429, 430, 594, 601, 602, 788, 1011	3:1-15, 25	3:22-23, 443	4:10, 521, 992, 999	4:48, 369, 400, 430, 594
2:12, 48, 50, 265, 568, 1011	3:1-21, 287	3:22-24, 707	4:10-14, 307, 999	4:49, 479
2:12-22, 594	3:1-36, 991	3:22-30, 443	4:10-15, 171	4:50, 430
2:12-25, 639	3:2, 1, 523, 594, 935	3:23, 46, 67, 425, 439	4:11, 52	4:53, 263, 265, 430, 602
2:13, 53, 56, 135, 277, 306, 413, 423, 639, 742, 920, 944	3:2-3, 602	3:23-36, 920	4:12, 5, 423, 429	4:54, 594
2:13-17, 952	3:3, 10, 68, 392, 420, 431, 432, 434, 479, 521, 625, 627, 830, 921	3:24, 443, 923	4:12-14, 432	5, 11, 19, 92, 232, 458, 463, 467, 507, 518, 521, 566, 627, 631, 823, 896, 899, 920, 1003
2:13-21, 601	3:3-5, 432, 627, 921	3:25, 67, 432, 591	4:13, 306, 992	5:1-10, 1003
2:13-22, 1, 53, 168, 307, 457, 781, 947, 952, 976, 985	3:3-8, 392, 628	3:26, 67, 439, 443	4:13-14, 521	5:1-12, 1003
2:13-3:21, 135, 627	3:4, 5	3:27-29, 443	4:14, 5, 238, 521, 592, 992, 999	5:1-14, 287
2:14-15, 861	3:5, 10, 27, 68, 357, 392, 393, 432, 434, 468, 479, 521, 627, 628, 830, 921, 991, 992	3:27-30, 67	4:15, 992	5:1-15, 992
2:14-16, 940, 948	3:5-7, 392, 627	3:28, 96, 123, 442	4:16, 46	5:1-16, 420
2:14-22, 171, 944	3:5-8, 431, 627, 992	3:28-30, 95, 96	4:16-18, 262, 1012	5:1-18, 595, 601, 640
2:16, 318, 944, 949	3:6, 400	3:29, 449, 995	4:19, 709, 1012	5:1-10:42, 614
2:16-21, 433	3:7, 625, 627	3:30, 97	4:19-20, 944	5:2, 53, 410, 425, 456, 489
2:17, 188, 420, 637, 639, 885, 944, 952	3:8, 392, 420	3:31, 26, 429, 525, 627, 1015	4:19-24, 171, 944, 952	5:2-7, 363
2:18, 672, 944	3:10, 405	3:31-36, 443, 999	4:20, 52, 133, 433, 836, 1012	5:2-9, 431, 432
2:18-20, 405, 420, 627	3:11, 10, 434, 521	3:32, 369	4:20-21, 256, 615	5:2-15, 639
2:18-21, 30	3:12, 32	3:32-35, 32	4:20-24, 58, 277, 1018	5:2-18, 821, 823
2:18-22, 53, 413, 601, 830, 952	3:13, 25, 26, 27, 59, 133, 370, 429, 430, 479, 525, 896, 899, 999, 1015	3:33, 326, 521	4:21, 433, 944	5:3, 53
2:19, 176, 188, 451, 923, 944, 948, 952, 977, 989	3:13-14, 32, 899	3:34, 392, 429, 526, 999	4:21-23, 148	5:6, 992
2:19-20, 277	3:14, 32, 188, 238, 315, 423, 429, 462, 568, 613, 614, 618, 638, 639, 693, 781, 831, 858, 896, 899, 1015	3:34-35, 112	4:22, 22, 123, 307, 405, 830	5:7, 53, 532, 602
2:19-21, 170, 277, 923, 990	3:15, 392, 521, 774	3:35, 69, 322, 434, 538, 893	4:23, 188, 326, 601, 728, 944, 1019	5:8-10, 823
2:19-22, 148, 414, 429, 693	3:15-16, 238, 430, 479, 921	3:36, 238, 350, 371, 375, 430, 461, 774, 893	4:23-24, 264, 318, 433	5:9-10, 514
2:20, 5, 135, 940, 944	3:16, 39, 264, 306, 371, 434, 500, 521,	4:1, 21, 69, 207, 533, 675, 707	4:24, 326	5:9-18, 171
2:20-21, 628		4:1-2, 67, 443, 920	4:25, 123, 398, 836, 936, 992	5:10, 672
2:21, 32, 188, 432, 433, 781, 944, 1020		4:1-26, 639	4:26, 133, 398, 526	5:10-11, 147
2:21-22, 188, 211, 977		4:1-29, 63	4:27, 211, 1004	5:12-15, 431
		4:1-30, 5	4:28, 52	5:13, 369, 670
		4:1-42, 95, 97, 287, 606, 683, 908, 920, 992, 1004	4:29, 123, 434, 992	5:14, 287, 369, 431, 865
			4:31, 1, 935	5:15, 672
			4:33, 211
			4:34, 368, 429, 431, 609, 893
			4:35, 135
			4:36, 248, 449, 521
			4:38, 609
			4:39, 430, 1012

5:15-16, 823	5:36-38, 429, 601	6:17, 50	6:46-51, 999	7, 507, 594, 823, 844
5:16, 514, 672	5:37, 317, 326, 430, 1003	6:18, 49	6:47, 10, 238, 430, 500, 521, 774	7—8, 920
5:16-18, 21, 307	5:37-38, 526	6:19, 49, 277	6:48, 132, 397, 421, 429, 520	7:1, 22, 187, 405, 672
5:17, 133, 148, 326, 609, 628, 702, 823	5:38, 261, 326, 375, 429, 526	6:19-20, 426	6:48-50, 397	7:1-9, 920
5:17-18, 147, 264, 1003	5:38-40, 434	6:20, 133, 398, 399	6:49, 618	7:1-43, 639
5:17-21, 601	5:39, 349, 536, 539, 591, 1003, 1021	6:22, 50, 672	6:50, 479, 602	7:1-52, 349
5:17-29, 429	5:40, 521	6:22-59, 999	6:51, 94, 133, 188, 306, 307, 397, 429, 479, 483, 498, 499, 500, 521, 537, 609, 788, 831, 1017	7:1—8:59, 944
5:17-47, 420	5:42, 538	6:22-71, 357	6:52, 500	7:1—10:21, 420
5:18, 133, 326, 514, 823, 921, 982	5:43, 22, 521, 691	6:23, 49, 532, 533, 788	6:52-60, 277	7:2, 274, 423, 432
5:18-29, 423	5:44, 314, 318, 326, 327, 985	6:24, 50	6:53, 10, 500, 896, 899	7:2-4, 275
5:19, 10, 133, 340	5:45, 349, 614, 977	6:24-34, 277	6:53-56, 521	7:2-13, 53
5:19-20, 326, 609, 893	5:45-46, 613	6:25, 1, 935	6:53-58, 32	7:3, 601
5:19-23, 112, 609	5:45-47, 169, 429, 434, 514, 830	6:25-29, 639	6:54, 32, 238, 262, 430, 431, 500, 521, 781	7:3-4, 53
5:19-30, 239, 461, 691	5:46, 261, 315, 614, 638, 709, 1003	6:25-40, 238	6:55, 500	7:3-10, 264
5:20, 69, 326, 434, 461, 538, 601, 893	5:46-47, 614	6:25-50, 94	6:56, 1, 211, 375, 500	7:4, 211
5:21, 133, 326, 369, 521, 831, 893, 952	6, 94, 133, 149, 211, 302, 497, 498, 499, 500, 618, 885, 924, 999, 1000	6:25-65, 988	6:57, 318, 319, 326, 785, 830, 831	7:5, 222
5:21-22, 609	6:1, 50, 94, 306, 788, 920	6:26, 10, 262, 594	6:58, 133, 479, 602	7:6, 420
5:22, 133, 317, 461, 893	6:1-13, 927	6:26-27, 5, 397	6:59, 908	7:7, 211, 434, 539
5:22-24, 238	6:1-14, 397	6:26-59, 57	6:60, 204, 211, 361	7:8, 271, 960
5:23, 317, 609	6:1-15, 595, 601, 602, 922	6:27, 94, 317, 326, 521, 522, 703, 896, 899	6:60-61, 69	7:10, 271, 275, 960
5:23-24, 429	6:1-17, 420	6:28, 601	6:60-66, 204	7:11, 187, 271
5:24, 10, 32, 188, 238, 400, 430, 521, 524, 830	6:2, 594, 602, 670, 672	6:29, 39, 326, 429	6:60-69, 999	7:12, 670, 672, 706
5:24-25, 27, 461	6:3, 602, 615, 616, 618	6:30, 430, 594	6:60-71, 539, 744	7:13, 405, 413
5:24-27, 32	6:3-4, 94	6:31, 277, 420, 618, 637, 885	6:61, 537	7:14, 271, 275, 685
5:24-29, 238, 461	6:4, 49, 56, 135, 271, 277, 602, 639, 920	6:31-32, 927	6:62, 27, 32, 59, 133, 896, 999	7:14-24, 640
5:25, 10, 168, 369, 397, 400, 401, 516, 521, 601, 778, 830, 831	6:5, 1, 670	6:31-33, 614	6:63, 400, 500, 520, 999	7:14-52, 639
5:25-27, 781	6:5-7, 41, 803, 809	6:31-65, 418	6:63-68, 392	7:15, 639
5:25-29, 32, 375	6:6, 953	6:32, 10, 94, 326, 423, 429, 500, 613, 638	6:64, 211	7:16, 609, 709
5:26, 133, 326, 516, 520, 830	6:7-8, 94	6:33, 479, 521, 522, 609, 788, 999, 1017	6:65, 326	7:16-24, 708
5:26-27, 318, 609	6:8, 40	6:35, 94, 132, 262, 307, 397, 421, 423, 429, 430, 520, 521, 999	6:66, 69, 206, 211, 537	7:18, 314, 467, 609, 721
5:27, 64, 133, 238, 317, 326, 461, 467, 703, 894, 899	6:10, 1	6:36, 430	6:66-69, 211, 937	7:19, 22, 187, 613, 614, 638
5:28-29, 32, 238, 431, 461, 781, 899	6:10-13, 94, 426	6:37, 326	6:66-71, 640	7:19-24, 821
5:28-30, 521	6:11, 94, 277, 788, 928	6:38, 133, 370, 893	6:67, 36	7:20, 368, 670, 672
5:29, 375	6:12, 1, 94	6:38-39, 307	6:67-71, 211	7:20-24, 318, 614, 639
5:30, 133, 429, 433, 467, 525, 609	6:14, 94, 131, 133, 454, 594, 602, 706, 707, 708, 709, 969, 1017	6:39, 326, 781	6:68, 520, 532, 999	7:22, 613, 614
5:30-47, 443	6:14-15, 602, 987	6:39-40, 32, 238, 431, 521	6:68-69, 141, 206, 211, 262, 533	7:22-23, 423, 426, 514, 638, 823
5:31-35, 443	6:15, 94, 434, 479, 615, 616, 985	6:40, 306, 430, 500, 521, 781, 893	6:69, 39, 133, 211, 428, 429, 532, 702	7:23, 21, 614, 823
5:32, 1003	6:16-21, 594, 595, 601, 922	6:41, 21, 132, 397, 479	6:70, 188, 211, 923	7:24, 467, 823, 977
5:33-35, 1003		6:42, 133, 568, 569	6:70-71, 36, 954	7:25, 22, 187, 413, 742
5:35, 443, 449		6:44, 32, 238, 317, 431, 521, 781	6:71, 36	7:25-44, 124
5:36, 5, 326, 368, 525, 609, 709, 1003		6:44-45, 124, 326		7:26, 909
		6:45, 369, 420, 637, 709		7:26-27, 124
		6:46, 32, 133, 326, 327, 428, 430, 709		7:28, 685, 893
				7:28-29, 609
				7:28-39, 53
				7:29, 609
				7:30, 22, 420, 693
				7:31, 124, 462, 594, 672
				7:32, 22, 413, 675, 685, 702
				7:32-36, 346
				7:32-47, 675
				7:34, 521

7:35, 302, 423, 431, 672	8:23, 27, 211, 479, 1015, 1017	8:48-52, 602	9:16, 21, 148, 287, 434, 514, 594, 614, 867	10:9-10, 397
7:37, 271, 277, 521	8:24, 133, 398, 400, 774, 865	8:49-50, 691		10:10, 431, 521, 861, 995
7:37-38, 425, 432, 521, 945, 992	8:26, 326, 609	8:50, 314, 326, 609, 721	9:17, 53, 369, 602, 707, 708, 709, 976	10:11, 39, 152, 188, 397, 429, 431, 483, 693, 695, 781, 787, 831, 861
7:37-39, 53, 238, 277, 392, 423, 429, 432, 522, 988, 992, 999	8:27, 326, 361	8:51, 10, 520, 524	9:18, 672	10:11-16, 424
7:38, 171, 392, 432, 637	8:28, 26, 32, 133, 188, 189, 238, 315, 326, 396, 398, 400, 433, 462, 524, 525, 526, 568, 601, 693, 781, 831, 858, 893, 896, 899, 999	8:51-56, 830	9:20-21, 431	10:11-18, 431, 860
7:39, 59, 188, 238, 315, 392, 401, 431, 432, 433, 601, 781, 788, 831, 992	8:29, 326, 609, 893	8:52, 22, 195, 368, 672	9:22, 22, 123, 405, 424, 672, 876, 908, 909	10:12, 431, 861
7:40, 131, 454, 707, 708, 709, 987	8:30, 774	8:52-53, 429, 709	9:22-23, 307	10:12-13, 870
7:40-41, 413	8:30-32, 428, 430	8:53, 423	9:24, 614, 867	10:14, 132, 397, 429, 431, 861
7:40-43, 672	8:30-59, 195	8:53-54, 638	9:24-25, 431, 867	10:14-15, 430, 431, 787
7:41-42, 56	8:31, 1, 195, 211, 262, 405, 413, 524, 672	8:53-58, 5	9:24-29, 203	10:14-16, 118, 141, 516
7:41-43, 124, 454	8:31-32, 5, 999	8:54, 59, 314, 316, 326, 609, 831	9:25, 91	10:15, 39, 152, 190, 326, 397, 483, 831, 893
7:42, 45, 168, 637, 885	8:31-36, 287	8:54-55, 430	9:28, 614	10:15-16, 188
7:43, 434	8:31-44, 483	8:55, 893	9:28-29, 613	10:15-18, 431
7:44, 405	8:31-47, 296	8:56, 5, 315, 430, 449, 638	9:29, 349, 614	10:16, 22, 47, 141, 423, 431, 609, 860, 861, 885
7:45, 22, 685, 702	8:31-59, 5, 188, 413, 638	8:56-58, 893	9:35, 860, 896, 899	10:17, 326, 434, 538, 893
7:45-52, 413, 675	8:32, 188, 211, 294	8:56-59, 982	9:35-38, 32, 287, 369, 431, 703	10:17-18, 152, 190, 781, 831
7:47, 706	8:33, 5, 188, 294, 431, 830	8:57, 672	9:36, 532	10:17-19, 628
7:48, 909	8:33-35, 870	8:58, 5, 10, 120, 133, 398, 400, 425, 429, 638, 921	9:36-38, 413	10:18, 65, 152, 421
7:49, 424	8:33-36, 211	8:58-59, 21	9:37, 526	10:19, 434, 672
7:50, 676	8:34, 10, 483, 865	8:59, 188, 211, 262, 685	9:38, 532, 533, 602	10:19-21, 361
7:50-51, 22	8:35, 1, 433	9, 91, 431, 507, 523, 532, 676, 823, 860	9:39, 238, 1003, 1017	10:20-21, 22, 368
7:50-52, 170	8:36, 188, 294	9-10, 431	9:39-41, 433, 861	10:22, 271, 274, 277, 423, 742, 925, 985
7:52, 591, 707, 709	8:37, 22, 187, 211, 524	9:1-2, 363	9:39-10:21, 861	10:22-29, 860
7:53-8:11, 421, 614, 960, 962	8:37-44, 263	9:1-3, 365	9:40-10:21, 431, 433	10:22-30, 639
8, 11, 326, 405, 1017	8:37-47, 295	9:1-4, 287	9:41, 369, 865	10:22-39, 172, 443, 685, 945, 977
8:1, 55, 615	8:38, 26, 295, 526	9:1-7, 595, 601, 602	10, 2, 149, 860, 861, 885, 920	10:23, 53, 940
8:1-9, 215	8:39, 5, 638	9:1-41, 287, 364, 368, 594, 821, 867	10-19, 663	10:24, 361, 945
8:2, 670, 685	8:39-40, 830	9:1-10:21, 860, 861	10:1-19, 663	10:25, 601, 691
8:3, 295, 526, 842, 909	8:39-42, 241	9:2, 211, 861, 935	10:1-5, 1013	10:27, 431, 861
8:3-20, 675	8:39-44, 190	9:2-3, 431, 865	10:1-10, 141, 860	10:28, 238, 397, 521
8:5, 614, 638	8:39-47, 109, 112	9:2-7, 211	10:1-15, 609	10:29, 704
8:6, 936	8:40, 187, 188	9:3, 369, 601	10:1-18, 656, 788, 860, 988	10:30, 21, 112, 340, 400, 434, 539, 788, 893, 945, 985
8:7-11, 614	8:41, 5, 317, 326, 483, 752	9:4, 421, 601, 609	10:1-21, 639	10:30-31, 132
8:8, 936	8:42, 188, 295, 326, 433, 434, 538, 638	9:4-5, 521	10:1-42, 141	10:30-33, 176
8:11, 532, 865, 930	8:42-44, 211	9:5, 307, 397, 421, 523, 609, 704, 1016, 1017	10:2, 124, 861, 1003	10:31, 187, 405, 672, 839
8:12, 277, 307, 397, 421, 425, 428, 429, 521, 523, 609, 704, 774, 831, 1016	8:43, 524	9:5-7, 277	10:3, 871	10:31-39, 277
8:13, 413	8:44, 5, 22, 187, 188, 295, 431, 483, 638	9:5-41, 397	10:3-4, 430, 787	10:32, 187
8:16, 317, 326, 609	8:44-46, 195	9:6, 595	10:3-5, 431	10:32-33, 601
8:17, 424	8:46, 433, 865	9:7, 53, 410, 425, 432, 456, 489, 602, 860	10:4, 860	10:32-38, 601
8:18, 317, 326	8:47, 211	9:9, 398	10:4-5, 431	10:33, 21, 86, 187, 945
8:19, 999	8:48, 22, 58, 195, 672, 836, 908	9:11, 53, 369, 410, 602	10:4-6, 431	10:34, 424, 637, 885
8:20, 420, 462, 685, 693, 940	8:48-49, 368	9:12, 431	10:5, 431
8:21, 521, 865		9:13-34, 413, 639	10:6, 211, 361, 656, 921
		9:13-41, 675	10:7, 397
		9:14, 514	10:8, 431
			10:9, 132, 397, 429, 830

10:36, 326, 423, 609, 704, 1017	11:27, 124, 133, 429, 532, 533, 609, 893, 1017	803, 808, 873, 928, 1012	896, 899, 985 12:23-24, 420, 428, 430, 431	521, 523, 704, 774, 1017
10:36-38, 112		12:1-11, 516		12:47, 830, 1017
10:37-38, 124, 430, 601	11:31, 405	12:2, 271, 275, 872, 1012	12:25, 426	12:47-50, 461
10:38, 132, 893, 999	11:31-35, 1012	12:3, 17, 18, 434	12:26, 326, 872	12:48, 32, 238, 431, 521, 638
10:39, 22, 187	11:32, 532, 1012	12:3-8, 426, 1012	12:27, 133, 312, 693	12:48-50, 609
10:40, 47, 67, 439, 443	11:33, 133, 405	12:4-5, 43	12:27-28, 189	12:49, 307, 317, 433, 609
10:40-42, 47, 443	11:34, 532, 787	12:5, 801, 803	12:27-29, 312	12:49-50, 152, 524, 525, 526, 709, 830
10:41-42, 430	11:35, 133, 602	12:5-6, 808, 809	12:27-30, 25	12:50, 317, 420
11, 94, 406, 413, 483, 517, 532, 965, 966	11:36, 69, 405, 434, 516, 672	12:6, 43, 803, 809, 860	12:27-32, 217	13, 188, 268, 420, 434, 436, 497, 499, 512, 537, 5872, 873, 874, 894, 992
11—12, 516	11:38, 133	12:7, 99, 695	12:28, 314, 315, 326, 601, 781	13—14, 601
11—21, 358	11:38-39, 778	12:8, 803, 808	12:28-29, 326	13—16, 11
11:1, 47, 52, 410	11:38-44, 397	12:9, 670, 672	12:28-32, 984	13—17, 266, 269, 340, 392, 401, 492, 499, 500, 860
11:1-3, 262, 265	11:39, 532, 778, 1012	12:9-11, 136	12:29, 16	13—19, 421
11:1-44, 52, 364, 368, 516, 521, 691, 778, 984, 1012	11:40, 314, 601, 602, 609, 778	12:9-13, 984	12:30-31, 601	13—20, 637
11:1-57, 595, 601	11:41, 326, 364	12:9-18, 594	12:30-32, 26	13—21, 516, 885
11:1—12:11, 515	11:41-44, 691	12:11, 405, 413, 430, 774	12:31, 32, 188, 194, 211, 315, 400, 462, 483, 602, 798, 1017	13:1, 133, 136, 189, 271, 277, 420, 434, 497, 498, 529, 539, 639, 693, 787, 872, 920, 1017
11:2, 17, 532, 533	11:42, 326, 413, 430	12:12, 189, 271, 277, 413, 672	12:31-32, 195, 199, 315	13:1-3, 59, 94
11:3, 69, 133, 434, 516, 532	11:44, 98, 778, 787	12:12-15, 413	12:31-33, 238	13:1-15, 927, 982
11:4, 314, 315, 369, 428, 516, 601, 609, 691, 778, 831	11:45, 307, 405, 413, 516, 672	12:12-19, 980, 981	12:32, 127, 188, 189, 238, 312, 315, 462, 479, 568, 693, 704, 781, 788, 831, 858, 985, 1015	13:1-17, 1
11:5, 69, 434, 516	11:45-53, 602	12:12-36, 189	12:32-33, 431, 978	13:1-20, 18, 287
11:5-45, 211	11:46-57, 984	12:13, 89, 133, 189, 403, 405, 428, 434, 479, 489, 533, 602, 637, 639, 885, 933, 982, 985	12:34, 1, 32, 124, 188, 238, 693, 781, 894, 896, 899	13:1-30, 349
11:6, 601	11:47, 594, 836	12:13-16, 479	12:35, 523	13:1-38, 277
11:6-19, 691	11:47-50, 188, 516	12:14, 426, 637	12:35-36, 167, 428, 521, 704	13:2, 43, 69, 136, 188, 271, 360, 462, 872, 954
11:8, 1, 187, 211, 672, 935	11:47-52, 257	12:15, 189, 413, 434, 479, 602, 637, 706, 885, 985	12:36, 170, 400, 523, 638, 774, 982	13:2-15, 539
11:9-10, 704	11:47-53, 405, 425, 921, 952, 977	12:16, 59, 211, 315, 361, 401, 431, 601, 639, 831	12:37, 268, 430, 594, 602, 638	13:3, 326, 370, 479, 609, 704, 781, 872, 927
11:11, 516	11:48, 177, 675, 945	12:17-18, 982	12:37-38, 988	13:3-5, 296
11:11-15, 211	11:48-50, 190	12:18, 314, 594, 670, 742	12:37-41, 361, 638	13:3-30, 926
11:12, 532	11:48-52, 945	12:19, 420, 424, 675, 985	12:38, 316, 327, 431, 524, 533, 637, 638, 709, 858	13:4, 271, 926
11:13, 361	11:49, 420	12:19-26, 307	12:38-41, 189	13:5, 992
11:15, 430, 516, 601	11:49-51, 703	12:20, 271, 272, 302, 423, 431, 1018	12:39, 637, 638	13:6, 533
11:16, 41, 42, 369	11:49-53, 137	12:20-21, 985	12:39-40, 774	13:7, 873
11:17, 778	11:50, 177, 188, 976	12:20-22, 606	12:40, 320, 637, 638, 639, 640, 706	13:8, 873
11:17-44, 263	11:50-52, 431, 831	12:20-23, 609	12:41, 189, 315, 430, 638	13:9, 533
11:18, 47, 52, 410, 742	11:51, 188, 945	12:20-26, 640	12:42, 22, 307, 424, 538, 675, 908, 909	13:10, 873
11:19, 405	11:51-52, 483, 985	12:20-28, 1021	12:43, 314	13:11, 872
11:20-26, 691	11:52, 141, 188, 190, 431, 885	12:21, 51, 381, 527, 531	12:44-45, 609, 709	13:12, 926
11:21, 532, 1012	11:53, 188	12:21-22, 41	12:45, 39, 133	13:12-14, 39
11:21-22, 691	11:54, 52, 617	12:22, 40	12:46, 277, 306, 428,	13:12-15, 873
11:22-27, 1012	11:55-57, 639	12:23, 133, 188, 189, 312, 315, 462, 601, 693, 781, 831, 872,		13:12-17, 206
11:23-26, 521	11:55, 135, 275, 277, 432, 639, 742			13:12-33, 432
11:23-27, 601	11:56, 187, 271			13:13, 211
11:24, 238, 781	11:57, 149, 405
11:25, 238, 307, 392, 397, 400, 429, 520, 774, 778	12, 188, 189, 315, 637, 702, 876, 1021
11:25-26, 188, 375, 397, 430, 831	12—19, 920
11:26, 520	12:1, 56, 136, 271, 277, 410, 639, 920, 952
	12:1-3, 95, 97
	12:1-7, 808
	12:1-8, 17, 18, 118,

13:13-14, 872	14:2-4, 521	14:26, 2, 268, 307,	15:19, 211, 609, 1017	16:29, 656, 921
13:14-15, 434	14:2-6, 429	326, 432, 520, 669,	15:20, 524, 529, 639,	16:30-31, 430
13:14-16, 431	14:2—15:17, 433	787, 788, 1003	871	16:32, 420, 609, 787
13:14-17, 499	14:3, 238, 421, 433	14:27, 211, 669, 787	15:22, 433, 526, 865	16:33, 268, 401, 669,
13:15, 539	14:4, 401	14:28, 2, 400, 434,	15:22-24, 369, 601	689, 787
13:16, 34, 426	14:5, 42, 211, 361, 433,	602, 781, 787	15:23-25, 434	17, 267, 268, 538, 691,
13:17, 88, 872, 873	533	14:29, 430, 774	15:24, 433, 526, 601,	704
13:18, 94, 211, 637,	14:5-7, 788	14:30, 195, 211, 483,	865	17:1, 189, 315, 326,
638, 664, 885	14:6, 39, 268, 295,	1017	15:25, 424, 524, 637,	371, 400, 401, 693,
13:19, 133, 398, 430	307, 397, 401, 429,	14:31, 152, 211, 434,	885	831
13:20, 434, 609	430, 433, 526, 787,	497, 538, 540, 893,	15:25-26, 39	17:1-2, 601
13:21, 10	830, 831, 944, 978,	1017	15:26, 2, 393, 432,	17:1-5, 141, 691
13:21-30, 462	999, 1003	15, 2, 499, 539	433, 788, 1003	17:1-6, 268
13:23, 5, 41, 69, 70,	14:6-7, 413	15:1, 268, 396, 397,	15:26-27, 268, 433,	17:1-18, 312
141, 275, 427, 434,	14:6-11, 945	429, 499	434	17:1-26, 141, 268
926, 1003	14:6-24, 830	15:1-2, 397	15:26—16:2, 30	17:2, 326, 521, 609,
13:23-26, 516	14:7-9, 430, 433	15:1-8, 499, 539, 656	15:27, 609, 1003	899
13:26, 66	14:7-11, 112	15:1-10, 375	16, 393, 467, 669	17:2-3, 238
13:27, 43, 188, 199,	14:8, 211, 317, 327, 709	15:1-11, 141, 170	16:2, 424, 872, 876,	17:3, 123, 262, 318,
954	14:8-9, 41	15:1-17, 639	908, 909, 1018	327, 521, 609
13:28, 361, 926	14:8-10, 429, 539	15:1-27, 141	16:4, 268, 639	17:4, 609, 691, 1016
13:29, 136, 271, 275,	14:8-12, 601	15:1—16:4, 268	16:5, 59	17:4-5, 315
803, 808, 809	14:8-14, 788	15:2, 326	16:5-16, 392	17:5, 59, 132, 189, 314,
13:30, 26, 199, 421,	14:9, 133, 428, 609	15:2-6, 431	16:7, 2, 432, 433, 787,	315, 401, 429, 431,
523	14:9-11, 830, 944	15:3, 392	788	538, 693, 831, 893,
13:31, 315, 400, 401,	14:10, 433, 601	15:4, 211	16:7-11, 1003	1016
693, 702, 899	14:10-11, 430	15:4-5, 397, 429	16:8, 287, 433, 467,	17:6, 398, 704, 1017
13:31-32, 32, 133, 315,	14:10-14, 112	15:4-7, 141, 433	1017, 1018	17:7, 326
601, 691, 831	14:11, 601	15:4-10, 1	16:8-9, 865	17:8, 262
13:31-33, 467	14:11-12, 601	15:5, 397, 421, 429,	16:8-11, 39, 190, 268,	17:9, 989
13:31-38, 268	14:12, 2, 10, 307, 602,	499	433, 462, 467, 483	17:9-10, 704
13:31—16:33, 269,	781, 787, 861	15:5-6, 397	16:10, 133, 467, 602,	17:11, 326, 398, 401,
1003	14:13, 59, 315, 691	15:6, 211, 371	781, 787	602, 691, 787, 1017
13:31—17:26, 267, 433	14:13-14, 691	15:7, 262	16:11, 188, 194, 195,	17:11-15, 704
13:33-35, 112, 265	14:15, 152, 434, 539	15:7-8, 691	1017	17:11-19, 141
13:34, 152, 434, 536,	14:16, 2, 268, 392,	15:8, 211, 315, 609,	16:12-15, 268	17:12, 398, 704
537, 539	432, 787, 788	691	16:13, 307, 433, 1003	17:13, 133, 449
13:34-35, 152, 211,	14:16-17, 393, 1003	15:9, 326, 434, 893	16:13-14, 1003	17:14, 434, 479, 524,
431, 434, 511, 512,	14:16-23, 433	15:9-10, 2, 141	16:13-15, 430	1017
536, 537	14:17, 211, 307, 375,	15:9-14, 141	16:14, 315	17:15, 194, 326
13:35, 306, 434, 538,	421, 433	15:10, 152, 268	16:14-15, 433	17:16, 398, 1017
540	14:18, 268, 433, 669	15:11, 449, 539	16:16, 669	17:16-20, 434
13:36, 211, 433, 788	14:18-19, 781	15:12, 152, 190, 434,	16:16-22, 32	17:17, 39, 326, 526, 704
13:36-37, 533	14:18-21, 112	512, 808	16:16-24, 781	17:18, 39, 306, 434,
13:36-38, 539, 788	14:19, 211, 401, 785,	15:12-13, 190, 499	16:16-27, 945	540, 609, 691, 1017
13:37-38, 831	1017	15:12-17, 211	16:17, 602, 781, 787	17:19, 704
13:38, 10	14:19-20, 433	15:13, 536, 539, 831,	16:17-18, 211, 361	17:20, 433, 989, 1021
14, 194, 433, 826	14:20, 704, 893	861	16:20, 10	17:20-21, 141
14—15, 1	14:21, 152, 262, 268,	15:13-14, 434	16:20-22, 449, 787	17:20-23, 295, 691
14—16, 669	434, 539	15:13-15, 431, 539	16:22, 360	17:20-26, 141
14—17, 188, 307, 497,	14:22, 42, 211	15:15, 430, 433, 434,	16:23, 10, 691	17:21, 112, 430, 538,
669, 1021	14:23, 172, 268, 326,	529, 871	16:23-24, 809	609, 788, 1017
14:1, 267, 360, 669	400, 421, 433, 524,	15:16, 1, 36, 141, 205,	16:24, 449	17:21-23, 432, 434,
14:1-6, 268	526, 539	211, 539, 609, 691	16:25, 656, 921	540, 787
14:1-15, 268	14:23-24, 434	15:17, 152, 268, 808	16:26, 691	17:22, 315
14:1-31, 268	14:23-31, 539	15:18, 1017	16:27, 326, 434, 539	17:23, 326, 434, 538,
14:2, 433	14:24, 317, 524, 526,	15:18-19, 268, 434	16:28, 59, 602, 781,	609, 893, 1017,
14:2-3, 371, 433	609	15:18-25, 434, 1003	787, 999, 1017	1019, 1022

17:23-24, 434, 1017	18:28—19:18, 187	19:16-19, 190	20:1-2, 787	20:24-29, 784
17:24, 132, 315, 326, 429, 538, 539, 704, 893, 1016	18:28—19:22, 679	19:16-42, 136	20:1-10, 141	20:25, 430, 533, 665, 788, 986
17:24-26, 538	18:28—19:37, 639	19:17, 55, 174, 489	20:1-18, 95, 97, 787, 1012	20:26, 340, 669, 788
17:25, 467, 609, 893	18:29-32, 977	19:17-42, 55	20:1—21:23, 136	20:26-29, 217
17:26, 326, 420, 434, 538, 691, 704	18:30, 189, 952	19:19, 403, 413, 434, 479, 602, 624, 745	20:2, 69, 70, 434, 787, 1012	20:27, 173, 261, 400, 430, 788
18, 910	18:31, 215, 839	19:19-20, 174	20:2-5, 41	20:27-31, 774
18—19, 189, 413, 417	18:32, 190	19:19-22, 423, 461	20:2-10, 70, 516	20:28, 42, 132, 133, 211, 316, 400, 402, 428, 429, 530, 533, 788, 921, 1022
18—21, 789	18:33, 54, 176, 403, 411, 413, 479	19:20, 55, 307, 411, 484	20:3, 420	20:28-31, 211, 430
18:1, 309, 420, 628	18:33-38, 490, 977	19:21, 190, 403, 413, 479, 602	20:3-10, 787, 1012	20:29, 262, 369, 428, 602
18:1-2, 54, 312, 410	18:33-39, 434, 602	19:23, 627, 703	20:6-8, 141	20:29-31, 430
18:1-13, 860	18:33-40, 461	19:24, 190, 637, 638, 885	20:7, 778, 787	20:30, 594
18:1-14, 462	18:35, 22, 302, 424, 462	19:25-26, 41	20:8, 430, 787, 788	20:30-31, 69, 70, 268, 368, 385, 420, 421, 428, 442, 443, 786, 861, 922
18:2, 189	18:36, 27, 94, 211, 434, 479, 521, 921, 1017	19:25-27, 141, 516, 568, 570	20:8-10, 211	20:31, 70, 71, 115, 123, 211, 261, 317, 400, 428, 430, 521, 602, 627, 830, 893, 1021
18:2-12, 136, 240	18:36-37, 434	19:26, 69, 70, 427, 434	20:9, 361, 787	21, 50, 70, 71, 72, 298, 420, 421, 499, 786, 788, 861
18:3, 22, 175, 228, 523, 675	18:36-38, 425	19:26-27, 70, 264, 340, 1011, 1012	20:10, 787	21:1, 49, 277, 788
18:4, 54, 187	18:37, 190, 413, 434, 479, 609, 1017	19:28, 190, 340, 638, 989, 995	20:11, 787	21:1-8, 788
18:4-8, 624	18:38, 5, 228, 977	19:29, 188, 277, 482	20:11-13, 217	21:1-14, 348, 500
18:5, 133, 396, 398	18:39, 189, 276, 277, 403, 482	19:29-30, 189, 995	20:11-18, 787	21:1-25, 602
18:6, 133, 398, 399, 429	18:40, 790, 952	19:30, 340, 392, 431	20:12, 14, 787	21:2, 41, 48, 69, 427
18:7, 187	19, 189, 192, 570, 992, 995	19:31, 136, 177, 639, 920	20:12-13, 1012	21:3, 50, 141
18:8, 133, 187, 398	19:1, 665	19:31-33, 189, 348	20:13, 529, 533, 787, 1012	21:3-6, 94
18:8-11, 479	19:1-3, 461, 977	19:31-36, 287	20:14, 340	21:4, 784
18:9, 190	19:3, 189, 403, 413, 434, 479, 602, 665	19:31-37, 188, 482	20:14-17, 217	21:4-14, 595, 601
18:10, 871	19:5, 628	19:33, 277	20:15, 531, 628, 787, 1012	21:4-22, 217
18:11, 312, 693	19:6, 228	19:34, 133, 189, 400, 401, 432, 499, 992	20:16, 1, 489, 529, 935, 1013	21:6, 788
18:12, 22	19:6-7, 952	19:35, 70, 71, 425, 427, 622	20:16-18, 1013	21:7, 69, 70, 71, 141, 211, 434, 516, 533, 788
18:12-14, 972, 976	19:7, 22, 189, 411, 417, 672, 977	19:36, 189, 277, 431, 483, 637, 638	20:17, 59, 316, 317, 417, 602, 781, 787, 999, 1022	21:8, 788
18:13, 410, 701	19:8-11, 490	19:37, 637, 885, 933	20:17-18, 211	21:9, 50, 91, 94, 788, 976
18:13-14, 137	19:9, 54, 411	19:38, 99, 672, 679	20:18, 327, 530, 533, 788	21:9-14, 788, 928
18:13-27, 136	19:9-11, 977	19:38-39, 413, 808	20:19, 669, 787, 788	21:11, 141
18:14, 831	19:11, 27, 340, 434, 627, 865, 978	19:38-42, 99, 175, 205, 206, 808	20:19-21, 211	21:12, 211, 784, 788
18:15, 41, 70	19:11-13, 985	19:39, 22, 100, 578, 676	20:19-22, 206	21:13, 91, 94, 277, 602, 788, 927, 928
18:15-16, 70, 704	19:12, 22, 176, 413, 434, 461, 479, 672, 952	19:39-40, 17	20:19-23, 211, 217, 287, 392, 393, 433, 787	21:13-14, 277
18:15-18, 788	19:13, 54, 411, 461, 486, 489	19:40, 778	20:20, 449, 533, 669, 787, 788	21:14, 788, 952
18:15-19, 861	19:14, 5, 136, 175, 177, 188, 189, 228, 277, 479, 482, 497, 498, 639, 977	19:41, 55, 99, 348, 628, 787	20:21, 37, 39, 207, 307, 392, 434, 540, 602, 609, 691, 787, 788	21:15, 788
18:15-27, 141	19:14-15, 413, 461, 602	19:41-42, 411	20:21-23, 102, 112, 287, 433, 609, 783	21:15-17, 39, 434, 788
18:16, 871, 976, 979	19:15, 189, 479, 672, 977	19:42, 55, 136, 177, 639, 787	20:22, 287, 315, 392, 431, 433, 628, 788	21:15-19, 206, 340, 499, 788, 860, 861
18:17, 870	19:15-16, 434	20, 70, 317, 529, 533, 628, 786, 787, 826	20:22-23, 307, 392	21:16, 788, 861
18:18, 788, 871, 976	19:16, 462	20—21, 786	20:23, 702, 704, 788, 865, 1015	21:16-17, 861
18:19-20, 526		20:1, 628, 977	20:24, 36, 41
18:19-24, 701, 972, 976
18:20, 685, 904, 908, 909, 910
18:25, 861
18:25-27, 39, 539, 788
18:26, 628, 871
18:28, 54, 136, 177, 277, 411, 482, 497, 498, 920, 977
18:28-31, 228, 405
18:28—19:16, 136, 137, 972, 976, 977

21:17, 788	1:17, 43	2:37-41, 829	4:9, 222	6—7, 514
21:18, 10	1:18-19, 43, 54	2:38, 285, 325, 520,	4:10, 44, 123, 141,	6:1, 35, 487
21:18-19, 141, 315,	1:19, 54, 411, 489	547	609	6:1-2, 209
788, 861	1:21, 324, 533	2:38-40, 829	4:10-12, 829	6:1-6, 44
21:19, 693, 788	1:21-22, 44, 47, 938,	2:38-41, 829	4:11, 636	6:1-7, 1010
21:20, 69, 70, 271,	1002	2:40-41, 830	4:12, 61, 829	6:2, 36, 205, 207, 209
434, 771	1:21-26, 937	2:41-42, 1021	4:13, 41, 44, 938	6:4, 937
21:20-23, 71, 516, 788	1:22, 66, 185, 608,	2:42, 34, 44, 690,	4:16, 44	6:5, 41
21:20-24, 1004	1002	927, 937, 1022	4:20, 368	6:7, 61, 140, 205, 209
21:20-25, 427	1:23, 636	2:42-43, 34	4:24, 838	6:8, 61, 599
21:22, 521, 609, 788	1:24, 140, 141, 533	2:43, 34, 44, 61, 471,	4:25, 982	6:8—8:2, 839
21:23, 71, 524, 788	1:26, 34, 39	837	4:26, 838	6:9, 591, 904, 909
21:23-24, 71	2, 413, 477, 771	2:44-45, 414, 805	4:27, 137, 988	6:10, 61
21:24, 58, 425, 427,	2:1, 273	2:46, 905, 927	4:28, 305, 324, 325	6:12, 842
516, 788, 1003	2:1-4, 61, 67, 690	2:47, 140, 830	4:30, 44, 61, 988	6:13-14, 264
21:24-25, 41, 71, 421,	2:1-21, 238	3—5, 44	4:31, 61	6:14, 416, 781
788	2:1-41, 140	3:1, 684, 952	4:32, 205, 207, 209	6:15, 15
21:25, 56, 385, 786,	2:4, 140	3:1-3, 1020	4:32-35, 805	7, 527
788	2:7, 298	3:1-10, 41, 44	4:32—5:11, 242	7:1-53, 829
Acts	2:8, 746	3:1—4:31, 36	4:33, 34, 44	7:22, 390
1, 60, 61, 387, 477,	2:9-11, 272	3:6, 61, 123, 141, 609	4:35, 34, 44	7:30, 311
636, 1003	2:13, 993	3:11, 940	4:36, 34, 489	7:35-38, 830
1—2, 608	2:14, 39	3:11-26, 39	4:37, 34, 44, 518	7:37, 611, 987
1—6, 44	2:14-36, 829	3:12, 39	5, 1016	7:38, 830
1—7, 82, 413	2:14-40, 39	3:12-26, 609	5:1-11, 39	7:43, 986
1:1, 140, 305, 601, 609	2:14-42, 199	3:13, 137, 988	5:2, 44	7:48, 324
1:1-2, 541, 746	2:17, 706	3:13-15, 21	5:3, 368, 600	7:48-50, 974
1:2, 34, 185, 276	2:17-21, 325, 390	3:14, 187, 466, 830	5:9, 368	7:49-56, 1020
1:3, 59, 60, 384, 477,	2:20, 429	3:14-15, 60, 830, 1002	5:12, 44, 61	7:51-52, 21
785, 1002	2:21, 829	3:15, 44, 345, 778,	5:14, 44, 520, 829	7:52, 187, 325, 466,
1:4, 44, 324	2:22, 61, 390, 471,	830	5:16, 140, 368, 600	830
1:4-5, 287	472, 594, 830	3:16, 61	5:17, 701, 824, 825,	7:54-60, 131, 691, 1002
1:4-11, 59	2:22-23, 21, 830	3:17, 405	838	7:55, 61
1:5, 67	2:22-36, 478	3:18, 123, 325, 829	5:17-21, 975	7:55-56, 61
1:6, 140	2:22-39, 786	3:18-19, 786	5:17-39, 39	7:56, 141, 370, 894
1:6-7, 55	2:23, 305, 324, 325,	3:18-21, 123	5:19, 61, 311	7:59-60, 533
1:6-8, 140, 237, 990	665	3:19, 771	5:20, 830	7:60, 599
1:7, 324	1:6-8, 140, 237, 990	3:19-21, 237	5:20-21, 952	8, 351, 477, 708
1:8, 37, 38, 39, 60,	2:25, 533	3:20-21, 60	5:21, 837	8:1-3, 41
257, 287, 305, 433,	2:25-36, 786	3:21, 324, 988	5:25, 44	8:2, 98
546, 606, 607, 608,	2:27, 785	3:22, 611, 639, 692,	5:27, 836	8:3, 138
690, 786, 1002	2:28, 830	706	5:29, 34, 39	8:4, 345
1:9, 60, 988	2:29, 982	3:22-23, 616, 786,	5:29-32, 39	8:4-24, 41
1:9-11, 30, 59, 370,	2:30, 629	830, 971, 987	5:30, 21	8:5, 115, 123
478, 543, 785	2:30-31, 60	3:23, 830	5:30-31, 60, 786, 829	8:6, 520
1:10, 785, 968	2:31, 123, 325, 785	3:24, 637	5:31, 132, 325, 520,	8:7, 600
1:10-11, 60, 61	2:32, 44, 345, 1002	3:26, 988	829	8:12, 123, 345, 520
1:11, 56, 60, 185, 534,	2:32-35, 60	4:1, 824, 838	5:32, 44	8:12-13, 140
617	2:32-36, 609	4:1-2, 776	5:33-34, 675	8:14, 39, 44
1:12, 56, 410, 820	2:33, 60, 61, 324	4:1-5, 975	5:34, 203, 678, 838,	8:14-17, 41
1:12-26, 43	2:33-34, 60	4:2, 44, 452, 824	842, 843	8:14-25, 36
1:13, 36, 41, 42, 54,	2:34, 316	4:4, 520	5:36, 706, 792	8:15-17, 44
410, 796	2:34-35, 345, 533	4:5, 842	5:36-37, 101, 594	8:17, 61
1:14, 690	2:34-36, 132	4:5-22, 44	5:37, 80, 706, 794	8:25, 39, 41, 345, 413
1:15-25, 39	2:36, 21, 60, 115, 123,	4:7, 41, 61	5:38-39, 305	8:26, 61, 311
1:15-26, 140, 990	327, 530, 533, 829	4:8, 61	5:42, 115, 123, 345,	8:26-40, 15
1:16, 324, 325	2:37, 34, 520	4:8-10, 21	952	8:32, 482
	2:37-39, 405	4:8-12, 39	6, 477	8:32-33, 186, 857, 988

8:38, 66	10:39, 21	13:16-41, 829	15:19, 771	18:12-17, 1002
9, 706	10:39-43, 786	13:22, 821	15:20, 215, 512	18:22, 413
9—28, 41	10:40, 136, 780	13:23, 132, 829	15:21, 647	18:24-28, 437
9:1-2, 839	10:41, 44, 785, 928	13:23-37, 829	15:22, 35, 44	18:25-26, 345
9:1-22, 91	10:42, 1002	13:24, 547	15:22-23, 44	18:28, 115, 123
9:2, 210, 562, 636	10:42-43, 829	13:27, 647	15:23, 44	19, 413
9:4-6, 140, 609	10:42-48, 829	13:27-28, 21	15:26, 123	19:1-5, 231
9:5, 61, 141	10:43, 210, 285, 325, 520	13:27-29, 663	15:27, 35	19:1-7, 437
9:8, 61	10:44, 61, 306	13:27-39, 786	15:28, 306	19:2-5, 67
9:9-24, 599	10:44-48, 67, 829	13:28, 137, 830	15:29, 512	19:4, 547
9:10, 209, 216	10:48, 123, 774	13:29, 99	15:30-31, 647	19:9, 210, 345, 562
9:10-16, 61	11:1, 44	13:30, 345	15:32, 706	19:11-20, 600
9:12, 1005	11:2-13, 39	13:30-31, 60	15:35, 534	19:13, 198, 595
9:13, 210	11:2-18, 513	13:32, 345	15:36, 771	19:13-17, 599
9:14, 61	11:3, 774	13:33, 59, 345, 888	15:40, 534	19:23, 210, 345
9:15-16, 140	11:14, 774	13:33-41, 786	16:1, 209	19:23-34, 1002
9:17, 61	11:15, 306	13:34, 785	16:4, 44	19:23-41, 983
9:21, 61	11:15-17, 67	13:35, 785	16:5, 140	19:26, 316
9:22, 115, 123	11:16, 786	13:36, 785	16:7, 432	19:32, 138
9:26, 205, 209, 413	11:17, 123, 829	13:37, 785	16:9, 216	19:35, 842
9:29, 487, 591, 936	11:18, 44	13:38, 325, 520	16:10, 345	19:38, 813
9:31, 298	11:21, 534, 771, 829	13:38-39, 210, 829	16:10-17, 541	19:39-40, 138
9:32, 39, 210	11:23, 534	13:38-48, 829	16:11-15, 774	20, 477
9:32-43, 39	11:24, 534	13:39, 829	16:12, 812	20:1, 927
9:34, 61, 123	11:26, 138, 205, 209, 210	13:46, 21, 305	16:14, 774	20:5—21:18, 541
9:35, 39, 771	11:27, 706	13:47, 786, 829, 858	16:14-15, 1005	20:7, 927
9:36, 205, 489	11:28, 61	13:48-49, 61	16:14-16, 1005	20:16, 273
9:39-41, 1010	11:30, 44	13:49-51, 1002	16:15, 774	20:17-38, 266
9:40, 771	12:1, 138	13:50, 1005	16:16-18, 600	20:21, 829, 830, 1002
9:41, 210	12:1-3, 1002	13:52, 61	16:17, 324	20:24, 1002
9:42, 520, 829	12:1-24, 191, 971	14:3, 61	16:18, 123, 595, 771	20:28, 186, 599, 857
10, 230, 302, 706	12:2, 40	14:3-4, 599	16:25-34, 774	20:32, 61
10—11, 230, 514	12:3, 39	14:4, 34, 141	16:30-31, 829	20:35, 114, 533
10:1-14, 513	12:7, 311	14:8-18, 333	16:31, 210	21:9-10, 706
10:1—11:18, 774	12:7-11, 61	14:11, 316	16:32, 774	21:11, 705
10:3, 61, 216, 311	12:12, 57	14:14, 34, 141	16:33, 774	21:14, 305
10:5-48, 39	12:17, 39, 350	14:15, 326, 771	16:34, 774	21:15-18, 58
10:9, 684	12:22, 302	14:19, 1002	17:3, 123	21:17, 413
10:10-16, 455	12:23, 61	14:21, 207	17:4, 1005	21:17-26, 350
10:14, 508, 509	12:24, 61, 140	14:21-22, 205, 209	17:6, 542	21:18, 44
10:19, 306	12:25, 558	14:23, 270	17:12, 1005	21:20-21, 264
10:22, 774	13:1, 706, 938	15, 302	17:18, 345	21:31-40, 408
10:24, 814	13:1-3, 576	15:1, 771	17:22-31, 301	21:37, 376
10:26, 518	13:2, 61	15:2, 44, 413	17:24, 534	21:38, 55, 706, 793, 795
10:28, 513	13:2-3, 34, 270	15:3, 771	17:25, 322	22, 305, 706
10:30, 684, 970	13:4-12, 746	15:4, 44	17:26, 302	22:1-22, 1002
10:33, 534	13:6, 706	15:5, 578, 675, 909	17:28, 686	22:2, 413
10:34-43, 60, 829	13:6-8, 975	15:5-6, 44	17:30, 547	22:3, 203, 675, 936
10:36, 123, 324, 327, 345, 534, 542, 599, 668	13:6-12, 595	15:6, 44	17:31, 60, 345, 542, 829	22:4, 41, 210, 636
10:36-38, 719	13:8, 489	15:7, 39, 591	18:1-3, 1005	22:5, 228, 837, 839
10:37, 608	13:8-10, 368	15:10, 209	18:1-11, 774	22:8, 624
10:37-39, 830	13:9, 61	15:11, 533	18:2, 416	22:14, 466, 830
10:37-43, 1002	13:13, 558	15:12, 61	18:5, 115, 123	22:15, 368, 1002
10:38, 17, 68, 222, 368, 477, 594, 708, 830	13:13-52, 932	15:13, 414	18:6, 21	22:22, 413
	13:15, 325, 685	15:14, 140	18:8, 774, 829	22:30, 413, 839, 975
	13:15-16, 909	15:14-17, 325	18:9, 216	23, 825
		15:16, 1011	18:10, 140	23:6, 452, 776, 838

23:6-7, 824, 825	1:14, 607	4:12, 512	15:3-7, 642	2:9, 41
23:6-9, 12, 675	1:16, 305	4:20, 596	15:3-8, 782	2:10, 800
23:6-10, 676	3:21-31, 107	5:1, 215	15:4, 98, 136, 695,	2:11-14, 39
23:7-8, 677	4:1-16, 431	5:7, 277, 483, 493	780, 989	2:11-16, 513
23:8, 373, 454, 776	5:12-21, 964, 989	6:9, 596	15:5, 36	2:15, 864
23:8-9, 16	5:12-6:11, 521	6:10, 596	15:5-8, 530	2:20, 735
23:9, 842	5:18, 964	6:13-15, 215	15:7, 350	3:6-18, 431
23:11, 1002	6:1-14, 249	6:18, 215	15:9, 34, 138	3:13, 277
23:15, 839	6:3-11, 146	6:19, 693	15:20, 778	3:26-29, 146
23:20, 839	6:4, 66, 98	7, 513	15:20-28, 245	4:6, 317, 489,
23:28, 839	8:9, 432	7:2, 215	15:23, 778, 980	888
23:29, 975	8:15, 317, 489, 888	7:10, 216	15:24, 596	4:6-7, 686
24, 561	8:16-17, 686	7:10-11, 216, 509, 513	15:25-26, 60	4:8, 316
24:1, 838	8:29, 206, 222	7:12-14, 216	15:27-28, 322	4:9, 627
24:2, 325	8:34, 59, 60, 691	7:15, 513	15:42-44, 777	4:10, 513
24:5, 210, 542, 624,	9:5, 115, 429	7:31, 628	15:50, 596	4:14, 15, 953
625	10:9, 327, 526	8:1, 513	15:50-53, 777	4:19, 206, 805
24:14, 210, 636	10:9-13, 429	8:5-6, 316, 429, 527	16:1-4, 576	4:29, 627
24:15, 776	11:3, 708	8:6, 132, 889	16:8, 273	5:14, 152, 245, 512
24:22, 210, 636	11:26, 258	9:1-2, 34	16:22, 489, 528	5:21, 596
24:24, 123, 829, 1005	11:36, 322	9:5, 39	16:22-23, 528	6:2, 512
25:1-7, 1002	12:2, 953	9:9, 590		6:15, 625
25:19, 785	12:9-10, 512	9:13, 590	2 Corinthians
25:25, 975	12:14, 512	10-11, 330	1:1, 138	Ephesians
25:26, 534	12:19, 245, 285, 668,	10:1-5, 616, 617	1:13, 647	1:10, 322
26, 706	798	10:1-13, 986	2:14-17, 980	1:20, 59
26:5, 627, 675	13:8-10, 152, 512	10:3-4, 925	3:3, 326	2:1-2, 958
26:6-7, 776	13:9, 151, 245	10:6, 986	3:14-15, 647	2:6, 15
26:16, 1002	14:2-3, 513	10:11, 705, 986	3:18, 206	2:11, 974
26:17-18, 786	14:5, 513	10:13, 689, 953, 958	4:4, 958	2:21, 693
26:18, 185, 187, 325,	14:6, 685	10:16-17, 927	4:5, 327	3:5, 34
368, 478, 520, 600,	14:11, 327	10:17, 493	4:7, 106	4:5, 66
829	14:14, 513	10:30, 685	5:1, 974	4:7-13, 59
26:20, 547, 771, 830	14:15, 513	10:32, 138	5:10, 429	4:11, 938
26:23, 123, 778, 786	14:17, 596	11:1, 341	5:17, 625	5:3, 215
26:27-28:30, 746	15:1-2, 512	11:16, 138	6:16, 326, 693	5:5, 596
26:28, 210	15:2, 512	11:17, 494	7:15, 783	5:18, 993
26:30-32, 975	15:12, 625	11:17-26, 492	8:23, 34	5:19, 901
27:1-28:16, 541	15:18-19, 596	11:17-33, 905	9:9, 801	6:5, 783
27:9, 269	15:26, 800	11:20, 927	11:2, 96
27:35, 927	16:1, 138	11:20-22, 271	12:2, 15	Philippians
28, 413	16:1-2, 576	11:23, 136	12:4, 371	2:1-5, 512
28:20, 776	16:5, 138	11:23-24, 29, 496	12:7-9, 196	2:1-11, 63
28:23, 1002	16:7, 34, 35	11:23-25, 1021	12:8, 429	2:5-11, 964
28:23-31, 1002	16:13, 805	11:23-26, 495, 498,		2:6, 429
28:25-27, 391		927, 938	Galatians	2:6-11, 245, 530, 721,
28:26-27, 636	1 Corinthians	11:24, 496, 497, 926	1:1, 34	889
28:28, 21, 405, 829	1:1, 34	11:25, 493, 496, 497,	1:2, 222	2:9, 59
28:31, 123, 325	1:2, 138	990	1:4, 277	2:10-11, 429
	1:10, 222	11:28, 953	1:12, 23	2:11, 327, 526
Romans	1:18-24, 431	12:3, 327, 526, 530	1:13, 41	2:12, 783
1:1, 527	1:20, 842	12:28-29, 938	1:13-14, 376	2:25, 34
1:2, 344	2:3, 783	13, 7	1:15-17, 34	3:5, 109, 909
1:3-4, 115, 119, 530,	2:9, 346	13:11, 111	1:17, 35	3:17, 341, 986
563, 888	3:1-2, 111	14:20, 111	1:18-2:10, 350	3:20, 15
1:4, 888	3:16-17, 693	14:26, 901	1:19, 34
1:7, 429	4:5, 837	15:1-8, 938	1:23, 41	Colossians
1:11, 34	4:9, 35	15:3-5, 663	2:7-9, 102	1:9-20, 933

1:13, 596	6:2, 222	13:2, 926	1:10, 526	1:9, 41
1:18, 138, 778	6:13, 137	13:12, 55	2:1, 691	1:11, 422
1:24, 138			2:14, 526	1:13, 894
2:9, 889	2 Timothy	James	2:15-17, 225, 434	2:1, 422
2:10-14, 146	1:13, 986	1:1, 43	2:17, 628	2:7, 371
2:11-12, 974	2:8, 115	1:2, 222, 689	2:19, 434	2:9, 424
2:12, 98	2:15, 953	1:12, 953	2:20, 433	2:10, 422
2:14, 665	4:1, 596	1:12-14, 689	2:27, 433	2:13, 422
2:16, 271, 275	4:11, 541, 558	1:12-15, 953	2:28, 980	2:14, 434, 513
3:1, 59	4:18, 596	1:14, 689	2:29, 627	2:17, 238
3:5, 215		1:17, 627	3:9, 627	2:20, 434
3:11, 607	Titus	1:22-25, 91	3:11, 512	2:20-21, 215
3:16, 901	2:7, 986	2:8, 152, 245, 512	3:13, 434	3:4, 968
4:10, 558	3:5, 627, 779	2:13, 320	3:14, 512	3:9, 424
4:11, 596	3:9, 299	3:1, 938	3:16, 434, 536	3:10, 689
4:14, 541	Philemon	3:15, 627	3:16-18, 808	3:14-22, 225
4:16, 647	24, 541	3:17, 627	3:23, 512	3:17, 422
		4:4, 538	3:24, 433	3:21, 59
1 Thessalonians	Hebrews	4:7, 957	4:4, 689	5:5, 625
1:1, 34	1:3, 59	5:7, 980	4:7, 627	5:6, 482
1:5, 596	2:4, 594	5:12, 513, 630	4:7-12, 512	5:6-14, 59
1:6, 341	2:6, 894	5:14, 537	4:7—5:4, 538	5:9, 482, 483
1:7, 986	2:14-15, 798		4:10, 832	5:10, 697
1:9, 326	2:17-18, 954	1 Peter	4:11, 536	5:12, 482
1:10, 59	2:18, 689	1:1, 39	4:11-12, 538	6:9-11, 668, 798
2:7, 34	3:1, 34	1:3, 627	4:13, 433	7:2, 326
2:12, 596	3:12, 326	1:7, 953	4:14, 428	7:4-8, 43
2:14, 138	4—7, 989	1:10-12, 705	4:20-21, 512	7:17, 59, 482
2:15, 708	4:14, 59	1:19, 482	5:1, 627	10:1, 967
2:19, 980	4:14-16, 61, 955	1:23, 627	5:4, 627	11, 708
3:13, 429, 980	4:15, 954	2:1, 394	5:4-9, 689	11:15, 115
4:14-17, 61	5, 309	2:4-8, 990	5:14, 691	12:6, 433, 617
4:15, 980	5:5-6, 172	2:5, 693, 697, 1020	5:16, 692	12:10, 115
4:16, 59	5:7, 312	2:9, 697	5:18, 627	12:11, 798
4:16-17, 30, 375	5:9-10, 61	2:22, 708		12:13-14, 617
4:17, 60	5:11-14, 111	3:9, 512	2 John	13:1-2, 958
5:27, 647	6:2, 66	3:21, 986	5, 434	13:8, 482
	6:13-18, 629	3:21-22, 59	9, 434	14:14, 894
2 Thessalonians	6:19-20, 61	4:6, 779		14:14-16, 60
1:4, 138	7—10, 989	4:13-16, 448	3 John	14:14-20, 993
1:5, 596	7:14, 697, 701	5:8-9, 957	7, 423	16:13-14, 595
1:6-10, 668	7:25, 61, 691	5:13, 558, 559	9—11, 434	17:2, 215
3:9, 986	7:26, 59		15, 516	17:4, 215
	8:4, 59	2 Peter		17:14, 482, 798
1 Timothy	9:10, 66	1, 966	Jude	18, 813
1:4, 299	9:11, 974	1:15, 970	6, 25, 600	18:3, 215
1:13, 41	9:14, 326	1:16, 971, 980	9, 24	18:20, 34
1:15, 41	9:24, 59, 974, 986	1:16-18, 971	15, 864	19:2, 215
1:16, 986	9:28, 60	1:17, 971		19:7, 482
2:6, 857	10:12-13, 60	1:18, 971	Revelation	19:9, 271, 482
3:16, 59, 185	10:22, 146, 873	2:4, 600	1, 422, 600, 668	19:10, 13
4:4, 685	10:31, 326	3:5-13, 30	1:1, 23, 41	19:11-13, 526
4:12, 986	11:17, 953	3:10-13, 628	1:3, 647	19:11-15, 993
4:13, 647	11:37, 439	3:12, 980	1:4, 41	19:13, 66
4:14, 837	12:22, 326		1:5, 482, 483	19:15, 798
5:2, 805	12:25-29, 30	1 John	1:6, 697	19:17, 271
5:18, 102, 590	12:26-27, 628	1:1, 526	1:7, 60, 933	19:19, 798
5:23, 995		1:7, 523, 832		19:20, 595

20:1-3, 600	21:1, 30, 628	21:22-23, 482	22:2, 43	22:16, 625
20:4, 798	21:3, 1	21:26, 1019	22:3, 482	22:20, 489, 528
20:7-10, 798	21:14, 34	22:1, 432, 482	22:8, 41
20:10, 186	21:22, 693	22:1-2, 238	22:8-9, 13

Subject Index

- Abba, 95, 310, 312, 323-24, 327, 734, 766-67, 854, 878, 888, 893
- abiding, 1-4, 241, 268, 287, 307, 366, 375, 378, 500, 508, 669, 778, 865, 921
- abomination of desolation, 25, 30, 411, 461, 942, 943
- Abraham, 2-6, 11, 20-21, 24, 26, 31, 75-76, 121-22, 129, 139, 147, 149, 188, 197-98, 241, 245, 259, 265, 274, 286, 299-302, 304, 309, 315-16, 321, 323, 325-26, 334, 339, 371-74, 385, 388, 398, 403, 405-6, 408-9, 423, 429-31, 439, 449, 457, 459, 472, 520, 543, 548-50, 578, 587, 590, 597, 608, 610, 614, 634, 638, 640, 686, 696, 700, 743, 769, 772, 779-81, 794, 830, 867, 901, 926, 953, 966, 990, 994
- abyss, 171, 371, 592, 600
- Adam, 2, 13, 15-16, 81, 162, 194, 245, 301, 339, 429, 628, 657, 699, 704, 718, 731, 775, 932, 955-58, 964, 989
- adultery, 81, 213-16, 247, 453, 510, 532, 614, 839, 936, 1006
- Aenon, 46-47, 67, 439, 443
- African-American
criticism, 6-10, 283, 358, 505, 683
- agony, 173, 281-82, 324, 689
- Alexander Jannaeus, 677
- Alexander the Great, 41, 173, 298, 376-78, 453, 486, 699, 704, 834, 837, 887, 980
- allegory, 336, 352, 355-57, 420, 522, 591, 602, 653, 657-61, 723, 875, 889, 987
- alms, 17, 147, 222, 227, 270, 395, 464, 491, 548, 674, 802-3, 806, 808-9, 849, 850, 906
- altar, 50, 53, 273-74, 285, 376, 494, 592, 630, 684, 698, 815, 835, 905, 939-40, 942, 943, 948, 978
- amen, 10-11, 937
- Amoraim, Amoraic
period, 590-91, 765
- ancestors, 2-5, 43, 77, 169, 183, 263, 266, 280, 299, 316, 459, 472, 484, 506, 509, 528, 548, 587, 639, 775, 801, 815, 817, 848, 877, 990, 1004, 1009
- Andrew, 33, 36-37, 39-41, 70-71, 123, 204, 298, 381, 808, 967
- angel of the Lord, 3, 14, 122, 193, 316, 349, 624, 783, 943
- angel of Yahweh, 14, 16
- angelophany, 14-15
- angels, 3-4, 11-16, 25-27, 32, 53, 61, 75, 77, 80-81, 122, 126-27, 130, 132, 167, 170-71, 193-95, 198, 200-201, 216, 237, 311, 313-14, 316, 321, 325, 344, 349, 370-71, 374, 389, 415, 449, 453-54, 477, 491, 528, 531, 534, 542, 546, 548, 556, 562, 567, 592, 613, 624, 628, 657, 668, 675, 697, 699, 702, 709, 720, 732, 780, 782-85, 787, 818, 825, 860, 899, 902, 926, 943, 956-58, 977, 994, 996, 1012-13, 1015, 1020
- anger, 111, 320, 349, 510, 585, 674, 680, 928, 941, 984, 1006
- Anna, 78, 84, 256-57, 279, 281, 283, 549, 705, 786, 818, 902, 940, 943, 1002, 1005, 1010
- annunciation, 48, 79, 82, 230, 438, 567, 806, 901
- anointing, 17-18, 68, 114-16, 118, 131, 226, 276, 344, 366, 391, 440, 537, 556, 564, 664, 697, 741, 783, 803, 808, 866, 873, 876, 882, 890, 922, 925, 933, 980, 985, 1006-8, 1012, 1016
- anthropology, 306, 354, 356, 358, 643-44, 776, 874-79
- Antigonus, 227, 241, 380
- Antiochus, 3, 173, 254, 332, 376, 379, 394, 791, 794-95, 834, 837
- anti-semitism, 19, 22, 279, 281, 849
- antitheses, 464, 510-11, 513-14, 822, 849
- Antonia, Fortress of, 54, 408-11, 679, 700, 741
- anxiety, 248, 360, 519, 795-96, 806, 851, 1011-12, 1015
- aphorisms, 29, 113-14, 156, 164, 465-66, 642, 651-52, 716, 739, 996, 1020
- apocalypse, 23-27, 29-30, 32, 107, 233, 425, 709, 793
- apocalyptic, apocalypticism, 12, 15, 23-32, 55, 60, 119, 140, 164, 181-82, 184, 190, 194, 200, 205, 233-37, 240, 267, 301, 319, 343-45, 353, 371, 411-12, 423, 438, 451, 469, 482-83, 522, 591, 610, 626, 653, 658, 688, 703, 706, 712, 715, 731, 735-36, 738-39, 742, 749-50, 774-75, 777-81, 783, 793-94, 798, 801, 803, 805, 818, 825, 841, 843-44, 896, 898-99, 917, 935, 950, 954, 967, 974, 993, 996, 1006, 1014-16
- apocrypha, 39-43, 53, 149, 156, 279, 281, 346-47, 349, 351, 422, 436, 610, 663-64, 709
- apophthegms, 113-14
- apostasy, 175, 390, 497, 561, 833
- apostles, 15, 22, 34-44, 60, 100-103, 106-8, 123, 140, 153, 204-5, 249, 276-77, 280, 325, 346, 348, 351, 353-54, 357, 365, 418, 421-22, 427-28, 475, 496, 529-30, 544, 556, 559, 574, 604, 607-9, 657, 769, 779, 784-86, 788, 798, 824, 843, 852, 913-16, 971, 990, 996-97, 1002-3, 1008, 1013, 1020
- Aramaic language, 11, 28, 34, 39, 41-42, 45, 47, 49, 54-55, 117, 123, 125, 153, 157, 160-62, 167-68, 170, 198, 200, 215, 239-40, 298, 309, 317, 324, 346, 350, 378, 445, 455, 480, 482, 484-93, 500, 525, 527-29, 535, 574, 605, 610, 634, 638, 658, 685-86, 688, 696-98, 700, 705, 713, 730, 734, 743-45, 757-58, 766, 778, 787, 840, 842, 869, 888-89, 894, 900-901, 913-14, 916-17, 931-32, 934-37, 961, 985
- archangels, 12-14, 76, 350
- Archelaus, 45, 79-80, 134, 224, 379, 381, 677, 700, 791, 847
- archeology, 45, 51, 53-55, 290, 298, 353, 444, 446, 457, 757, 800, 833, 909
- Aretas, 438
- Aristobulus, 297, 378, 453, 696, 699
- arrest of Jesus, 4, 17, 19, 22, 43, 118, 136, 175-81, 184-89, 195, 268, 309, 312, 323, 349, 382, 399, 405, 411, 413, 415, 440, 443, 458, 478-79, 497, 536, 543, 560, 572, 594, 661, 663-65, 670-72, 674-75, 741, 745, 818, 839, 860, 867, 920, 927, 951, 954, 956, 972, 988, 1021
- ascension, 2, 30, 46, 56, 59-61, 63, 185-86, 229, 231, 331, 343, 371-73, 410, 418, 478, 497, 530, 543,

- 546, 568, 592, 594, 602,
609, 613-14, 691, 769,
781-82, 785, 787-88, 878,
913, 944, 988
asceticism, 13, 42, 162, 164,
438-39, 442, 548, 673,
806, 866, 1005
atonement, 20, 119, 179,
287, 362, 451, 494, 696,
719, 722, 831, 856, 857,
942, 950-51, 955
Augustine, 106, 243,
352-57, 489, 553, 602, 657,
721, 787, 845, 965
authority, 1, 6, 9, 11, 14, 21, 37-39, 42-44, 62-65,
67-68, 78, 85-86, 92,
117-18, 120, 122, 127-31,
133, 140, 148, 166-70,
184-85, 188, 203, 208,
222, 224, 226-27, 235,
245, 247, 256, 259, 263,
280, 284, 287, 313, 316-17,
321-24, 326, 329, 334, 355,
365-66, 368-69, 388, 396,
422, 427, 429, 471-72,
476-79, 517-18, 521, 525,
528-31, 533, 536, 538,
545-46, 553, 557, 562, 570,
572-73, 575, 577, 579, 582,
583, 594, 597, 605, 607,
609-14, 617, 629-30, 632,
635, 638, 661, 673, 676,
683, 687, 700, 703, 705-9,
721, 728-29, 731, 738, 740,
746-47, 759, 765, 773, 781,
783-84, 788, 795, 797,
812-14, 816, 821-22,
824-25, 827, 837-39,
841-44, 846, 848, 871,
876, 882, 886, 891,
895-97, 898-900, 907,
921, 923, 934-35, 937,
942-44, 950, 952, 957-58,
972, 975-79, 983, 1005,
1011, 1015
banquets, 38, 94, 96, 172,
206, 271-72, 275-77, 279,
286, 371, 374, 441-42,
449, 459, 478, 495-96,
599, 605, 639, 675, 693,
779, 804, 807, 866-68,
925-30, 993-95, 999
baptism, 3, 25, 46-47, 53,
56, 63, 66-68, 120, 130,
135, 139, 146, 157, 182,
208, 217, 241, 251, 284,
287, 301, 303, 310, 317,
322, 327, 338, 340, 349,
350, 357, 368, 389,
390-93, 411, 432, 436-40,
442-43, 459, 464, 476,
518, 544, 546-47, 555-56,
572-73, 581, 616, 618, 627,
691, 693, 707-8, 716,
772-74, 816, 829, 845,
856-57, 865, 873-74,
877-78, 887, 892, 913,
922-23, 930, 954-55,
957-58, 967-69, 983,
991-92, 1022
Beatitudes, 69, 87, 90, 168,
353, 450, 452, 465, 467,
474, 715, 846, 854
belief, 5, 12-16, 25-27, 70,
82, 116-17, 119, 121, 124,
160-61, 206, 211, 217, 230,
232, 242-43, 245, 249,
259, 306, 328-29, 333, 355,
372-74, 397-98, 400, 402,
409, 453, 476, 500,
520-21, 523, 534, 567, 595,
602, 617-18, 627-28, 657,
675-76, 695, 698-99,
705-7, 719, 721-23,
725-26, 731, 737, 742-43,
748-51, 774-77, 781,
787-88, 793-94, 803-4,
808-9, 815, 824-25, 833,
835, 888, 910, 914, 945,
987, 1018
Beloved Disciple, 41, 44,
69, 70-72, 141, 212, 341,
358, 421, 425-27, 435, 516,
568, 787-88, 1003, 1012
Benedictus, 72, 75, 78, 82, 218, 286, 721, 901-2
benefactor, 222, 330, 380,
548, 813, 815, 845, 852,
867, 1008
Bethany Beyond the Jordan, 47, 439, 443
Bethany (near Jerusalem),
18, 52-53, 56, 58, 114, 136,
146, 281, 369, 410, 515,
518, 563-64, 664, 803,
873, 890, 928, 1006,
1008, 1012
Bethesda, 53, 58, 72, 362,
369, 410, 456, 489, 938,
992
Bethlehem, 34, 45-46, 56,
57, 72-73, 111, 124, 350,
380, 637, 731, 745, 790,
829-30, 847, 883, 885
Bethphage, 52-53, 72
Bethsaida, 39-41, 50-51, 56,
72, 89, 204, 260, 298,
304, 364, 381
biography, ancient, 24, 125,
134, 172, 231, 336-41, 378,
422, 425-28, 434, 474,
541, 554, 570, 574-76,
578, 724, 728, 733, 737,
744, 746, 752, 920, 928
birth of Jesus, 14-15, 20, 57,
77, 130, 247, 321, 331, 337,
344, 350, 418, 447, 449,
828, 860, 1015
blasphemy, 20-21, 84-86,
128, 132, 176, 183, 241,
284, 389-91, 393, 598,
629-30, 671, 702-3, 719,
724, 865, 972-74, 977-79,
1003 blessing, 78, 87-89, 93-94,
111-12, 114, 129, 142, 168,
221, 240, 257, 263,
267-68, 276, 300, 322,
339, 353, 365, 369, 371,
374, 448, 461, 465, 493,
495-96, 521, 533, 567,
568-69, 579, 582, 599,
667, 684-85, 687, 697,
703-4, 767, 781, 800-801,
807, 820-21, 853, 901-2,
944, 984, 993-95, 1018,
1021 blindness, 19, 22, 51-53, 61,
90-91, 117, 168, 172,
196-97, 200, 260, 277,
287, 361, 363-64, 366-69,
397, 410, 412, 421, 431,
441, 451, 474, 477-78,
518, 523, 526, 532, 545,
550, 556, 562-63, 586-87,
595-96, 603, 605, 609,
674-75, 703, 745, 776,
779, 781, 806, 823, 829,
860, 865, 867, 882-84,
891, 921, 929, 935, 940,
942, 951, 976, 982-84,
988, 993, 1008, 1021
born again/from above,
new birth, 287, 392, 401,
479, 625, 626, 627, 628,
876 bread, 21, 40, 91-94, 133,
137, 186, 195, 199, 238,
269, 273, 275-77, 307, 326,
329, 397, 421, 429, 483,
493-97, 499-500, 520-21,
537, 539, 564, 590, 599,
687-88, 700, 704, 745,
781, 788, 927-28, 955-56,
961, 965, 994-95, 1006-7, 1018, 1021-22
bride, 95-97, 357, 815 bridegroom, 95-97, 178,
182, 270, 440, 443, 449,
927, 994-95, 1009
burial, 46-47, 56, 99,
178-79, 186, 333, 348,
422, 613, 778, 787-88,
806 burial of Jesus, 17, 99, 723 burials, 98, 175
Caesarea Maritima, 50, 58,
221-22, 380-81, 679, 700
Caesarea Philippi, 52, 101,
118-19, 122, 303, 411, 556,
702, 817, 897
Cana, 48, 95-96, 101, 204,
264, 306, 335, 357, 401,
568-69, 877, 921, 994-95,
1011
canon, 9, 30, 40, 43, 72, 80,
99, 101-11, 114-15, 117, 225,
233, 238, 266, 279-81, 312,
331, 335, 340-41, 346-50,
351, 353, 356, 362, 366,
378, 396, 399, 419-20,
422, 427, 436, 461,
491-92, 532, 535, 542-43,
554, 566, 574, 576, 622,
631, 633, 639, 656, 658,
660, 665, 683, 685-86,
713, 719, 724, 731, 739,
745, 747-50, 752, 772, 813,
888-89, 913, 916-17, 935,
961, 963-65, 986
canonical criticism, 106
Capernaum, 39-40, 48, 50-
51, 56-57, 109, 204, 264,
298, 364, 371, 381, 477,
479, 566, 605-6, 708,
906-8, 910, 936, 1011,
1020 centurions, 4, 20, 51, 64,
99, 107, 128, 131, 175,
181-82, 184, 187, 196, 200,
228, 231, 303-6, 314, 339,
364, 366-67, 404, 459,
466, 476, 490, 544,
563-64, 573, 576, 596,
600, 774, 816, 871,
890-91, 964, 974-75
children, 3, 5, 7, 19-20, 37,
46, 63, 65, 72-74, 76-78,
80-81, 88, 92-93, 96-98,
109-12, 114, 130, 141, 167,
183, 185, 188, 190, 225,

- 237, 240-41, 247, 256,
 263-65, 272, 276, 285,
 295, 301, 306, 317-18,
 320-22, 326, 333, 339, 350,
 368, 371, 374, 380, 400,
 404, 412-13, 418, 431-32,
 439, 445, 452, 461, 475,
 478, 508, 524-25, 543,
 545, 547-49, 572, 577,
 581-82, 624, 626-27, 633,
 638, 661, 667, 670-71,
 685, 690, 706, 708, 723,
 766, 776, 778, 780, 789,
 796, 803, 814-15, 829-31,
 848-49, 850-51, 859,
 866-67, 869-70, 878, 884,
 889, 903-5, 920, 943, 951,
 973, 984, 996-97, 1006-7,
 1010
 Chorazin, 51, 56, 89, 113, 298 chreia, 113-15, 163-64, 716, 937
 Christ, 17-18, 115-24,
 125-33, 562-63, 578-80,
 881-85
 Christology, 3, 11, 14, 16-17,
 19, 59, 61, 64, 80-82, 87,
 122-34, 152, 161-62,
 190-93, 212, 229, 238-39,
 282-83, 306-8, 313-14,
 328, 334-35, 342, 354, 357,
 359, 393, 399-403, 419,
 425, 428-29, 434, 442,
 452, 461-62, 475, 480-81,
 483, 520, 524, 526, 530,
 533-35, 537-39, 550-51,
 562-66, 578-81, 583, 598,
 604, 613-15, 640-41,
 689-91, 695, 703-4, 709,
 717-20, 722, 732, 735, 737,
 742-43, 751-54, 771, 783,
 786, 809, 847-48, 853,
 856, 858, 876, 885-86,
 889, 891-94, 900, 903,
 910, 921, 923, 934-35,
 958, 962, 965, 966, 968,
 971-72, 979, 981, 985-86,
 990, 996, 1000, 1013,
 1016, 1022
 chronology, 5, 80, 106,
 134-37, 175, 177, 238, 417,
 447, 739, 749, 764, 921, 976, 978
 church, 138-41, 403-6, 470, 475, 582, 928-29
 circumcision, 3, 66, 109,
 143, 145, 270, 423, 438,
 454, 505, 509, 614, 740,
 797, 823
 clean, 20, 48, 57, 142-44,
 146-48, 150, 171, 206,
 285, 298, 392, 455-56,
 508-9, 513, 517, 585, 588,
 627, 873, 941
 cleansing of the temple,
 118, 556-57, 562, 803, 942,
 944, 949, 972, 976, 977
 Cleopas, 1002
 cloud, 60, 292, 314, 611,
 613, 616, 856, 966,
 968-71, 987, 1021
 coins, 77, 79, 224-25, 247,
 256, 274, 379, 381, 449,
 457, 486-88, 503, 520,
 545, 560, 595, 679, 744,
 797, 801, 812, 815, 817,
 845, 866, 948, 949, 973,
 980, 1006, 1008, 1010
 commandment, 1, 17, 77,
 149-51, 197, 214, 259, 295,
 318, 323, 401, 465, 508,
 510-12, 514, 536-39,
 589-90, 611, 629, 631,
 709, 729, 794, 820, 829,
 835, 841, 849, 864, 950,
 1001 commission, 14, 35, 37-38, 116, 120, 129, 208, 226,
 287, 322, 339, 344, 381,
 429, 433, 442-43, 445,
 475, 570, 602, 606-8,
 636, 691, 783-84, 788, 865, 1008
 compassion, 20, 146, 148,
 171, 206-7, 247, 276, 286,
 295, 306, 318, 320, 465,
 531, 537, 545, 548, 564,
 572-73, 584-88, 595, 598,
 601, 670-71, 859-60, 868,
 884, 984, 988
 confession at Caesarea
 Philippi, 366, 555, 714,
 770, 891
 cosmos, cosmology, 14,
 24, 27-30, 59, 63, 77, 128,
 130, 188, 190, 236, 385,
 471-72, 476, 538, 564,
 626, 696, 698-99, 818,
 878, 902, 1014
 covenant, 1-4, 29, 43, 73,
 75, 91, 116, 124, 145-46,
 168-69, 183, 186, 202,
 226, 232-33, 255, 257,
 263-64, 267-68, 274,
 285-86, 295, 301-2, 304,
 306, 318, 320, 360-61,
 373, 389, 403, 406, 423,
 430-31, 439-40, 462-66,
 470, 472, 475, 493-95,
 497, 500, 506-7, 509, 511,
 570, 572, 577, 582-85,
 587-88, 606, 626-27,
 629-30, 634, 657, 686-87,
 703, 743, 751, 774-76,
 780, 801, 820, 823, 856,
 863, 865-68, 881-82, 925,
 939, 990, 994,
 1000-1001, 1009,
 1020-22
 creator, 3, 43, 145, 319, 321,
 326, 470, 521, 586, 698,
 699 criteria of authenticity,
 153-62, 292, 386, 639
 criterion of coherence, 155, 158, 656
 criterion of dissimilarity, 153, 158, 292, 738, 749 criterion of double dissimilarity, 154, 158-60,
 290, 292, 732-34, 738,
 744 criterion of embarrassment, 36, 153,
 157, 308, 656, 749, 889, 983 criterion of multiple attestation, 36, 149,
 156-59, 386, 656, 711, 739,
 888, 896, 983
 criterion of similarity, 160
 cross, 6, 8-9, 23, 40, 42, 59,
 63, 70, 94, 119-21, 128,
 133, 144, 146, 156, 164,
 172-75, 177-78, 180-84,
 187-90, 195, 206, 209-10,
 238, 247-50, 260-61, 264,
 267, 279, 282, 287, 303,
 305, 310, 314-15, 323, 339,
 361, 366, 368-69, 392,
 400-402, 405, 411, 418,
 420, 421, 425, 427-28,
 431-32, 454, 462, 478,
 484, 489, 493-94, 502,
 512, 536, 540, 546, 549,
 557-58, 568-69, 598, 602,
 664-65, 680, 712, 715-16,
 720, 726, 732, 734, 736,
 739, 742, 745, 749, 769,
 781-82, 783, 831, 857, 860,
 873, 876-77, 885, 891-92,
 896, 903, 942-43, 954,
 974-75, 983-84, 999,
 1003, 1008-9, 1011-12,
 1019 crowds, 3-5, 9-10, 16, 50, 54, 63, 92, 94, 120, 124,
 138-39, 146-47, 178, 180,
 182, 184, 189, 204,
 206-10, 231, 245, 264,
 272-73, 275-77, 313, 339,
 349, 369, 394, 404-5,
 411-12, 437-39, 443, 449,
 466, 477, 516, 544,
 546-47, 556, 566, 568,
 572, 577, 580, 585-86,
 594, 596-600, 603, 617,
 669-72, 680, 742, 777,
 792, 809, 815, 818, 835,
 846, 849, 852, 859-60,
 867, 884-85, 890-91, 906,
 909, 922, 943, 970,
 973-74, 978-80, 982, 984,
 991, 1005, 1007-8, 1017, 1022 crucifixion, 2, 20-21, 28, 41, 55, 63, 75, 97, 99,
 118-20, 136-37, 171,
 173-78, 180-90, 205, 207,
 210, 238, 264, 268, 277,
 281, 323, 348, 375, 404-5,
 411-12, 415, 419, 479, 546,
 549, 555, 557, 568, 580-81,
 665, 672, 679, 693, 719,
 740, 742, 769, 778, 783,
 786, 788, 803, 815, 817,
 860-61, 878, 890-92,
 896, 901, 954, 956, 965,
 972-74, 978, 979, 995,
 1002, 1008-9, 1012
 cup, 4, 40, 68, 92, 120, 147,
 180, 183, 186, 276-77, 285,
 309-10, 312, 323-24,
 491-97, 499, 688, 693,
 828, 990-91, 1021
 curse, cursing, 77, 84, 86,
 136, 148, 167, 174, 240,
 301, 303, 351, 360-61, 371,
 374, 394, 424, 557, 562,
 695, 767, 776, 778, 937,
 943, 951, 982
 cursing the fig tree, 148,
 303, 557, 937, 951
 Cynics, Cynicism, 37,
 162-65, 205, 234, 490,
 739-40, 749, 802, 805, 809, 937
 darkness, 6, 20, 26, 30, 90, 119, 167, 181, 184-85,
 187-88, 195, 199, 240, 277,
 292, 295, 339, 361, 368,

- 371-72, 374, 397, 399, 416,
421, 423, 460, 478,
520-24, 546, 558, 563,
568, 587, 592, 668, 708,
729, 732, 774, 787, 793,
813, 830, 848, 851, 876,
903, 921, 954, 1014, 1017 daughter, 5, 40, 51, 92, 110, 111, 147, 198, 256, 262,
301, 303-4, 334, 364-66,
368, 381-82, 417, 438, 441,
459, 461, 485, 515, 573,
586, 626, 746, 772,
778-79, 783, 836, 839,
884, 908, 1005-8, 1011
daughter of Abraham, 5, 1011
Day of the Lord/Yahweh,
454, 626, 707
Dead Sea Scrolls, 11, 16-17,
66, 116, 124, 166-72,
193-94, 227-28, 233,
239-42, 258, 277, 328, 354,
358, 383, 414, 423-24,
430, 432, 438, 444, 454,
456, 458, 471, 485, 488,
491-92, 518, 522, 588-89,
617, 664, 677-79, 691,
696, 704, 706, 710, 718,
740, 742, 744, 745, 753,
756, 767, 776, 791, 799,
834, 841, 844, 855-56,
882, 886, 888, 890, 893,
895, 900, 910, 931-32,
934-35, 941
deafness, 90-91, 117, 168,
304, 441, 518, 602, 779,
806 death of Jesus, 19-23, 30, 32, 138, 158, 172-91,
199-200, 208, 236, 275,
277, 289, 304-5, 307, 321,
401, 413, 446, 540, 567,
602, 631-33, 635, 664,
693, 719, 730, 742, 747,
951 debt, debtors, 75, 221, 247,
285-86, 450-51, 687-88,
719-20, 740-41, 744, 801,
803-4, 814, 849-50,
853-54, 865-66, 870, 875
Decalog, Ten
Commandments, 245,
507, 635, 640, 820
Decapolis, 47, 50-51, 57, 93, 127, 193, 298, 381, 490
decrees, 79, 222, 254, 255, 451, 454, 540, 747, 1016
demoniac, demonized,
127, 197, 366, 477, 547,
563, 595, 600, 884, 991 demons, 19, 22, 25-27, 38, 40-41, 51, 63, 65, 86,
121-22, 126-28, 130, 140,
167, 171, 193-200, 209,
295, 303-4, 322, 331, 348,
363, 365-68, 371, 390-91,
417, 437, 452, 469, 472,
474, 476-77, 518, 553,
563-64, 579, 585-86,
595-600, 604-5, 607-8,
618, 671-72, 690, 703,
732, 745-46, 768, 777,
785, 817, 821, 857, 876,
878, 884, 890-91, 909,
923, 958, 994, 1007, 1011, 1017 demythologizing, 290, 727-28, 732-33
denarius, 224
desert, 46, 54, 166, 168-69,
197, 362, 391, 445, 562,
617-18, 689, 792, 802,
955-56, 972, 1008-9 destruction of Jerusalem/
temple, 29-31, 221, 225,
237, 254, 319, 411, 413,
417, 445-46, 460, 561,
576, 592, 684, 728, 737,
758, 790, 793-94, 818,
838, 850, 901, 939,
942-44, 946, 949, 973
devil, 15, 22, 26, 64, 129,
185, 187-88, 193-201, 211,
222, 267, 295-96, 301,
313, 368, 372, 390-91,
431, 468, 473, 477-78,
483, 544, 546, 595, 605,
617, 638, 657, 817, 845,
847, 923, 941, 943,
954-58, 967
Dialogues of the Risen
Jesus, 202, 346, 351
Diaspora, 35, 56, 144, 223,
225, 227, 252-53, 256, 258,
270, 272, 276, 320,
332-33, 377-80, 409,
423-25, 431, 452, 457, 458,
487-88, 492, 704, 730,
746, 797, 832-34, 836, 841,
904-5, 909-10, 948, 1018
Dionysus, 202, 329, 331-35, 602 disciples, 34-44, 69-71,
202-12, 243-50, 604-9,
934-38
discipleship, 2, 8, 17, 90,
109, 111-12, 121, 139, 150, 152, 178, 183, 202-12, 222,
225, 237, 249, 260-62,
265, 267, 282, 300, 304,
310, 313, 338, 354-55, 415,
427, 458, 512, 519, 539,
544, 548, 556, 563, 581-82,
597, 599, 602, 611-12, 671,
688-92, 748, 773, 782-84,
786, 806-8, 828, 830,
846-48, 853, 859-61, 868,
871, 882, 936, 968-71,
984, 988, 999, 1002-3, 1006, 1008, 1011, 1016 disease, 38, 64, 171, 193,
295, 362, 363, 365,
367-69, 453, 517, 577, 667,
746, 857, 877, 1011
divine man, 212, 596, 723, 726, 745, 782, 967
divine sonship, 81, 123,
184, 301, 404, 418, 612,
886, 887, 888, 889, 890,
891, 892, 893
divorce, 20, 80, 95, 149,
152, 169, 212-16, 247, 281,
318, 361, 381, 386, 465,
509-10, 513-14, 590, 612,
672, 674, 758, 767, 815,
849, 1006, 1012, 1016
double dissimilarity,
criterion of, 153-54, 156,
159, 160, 733, 736-38, 741 double similarity, criterion of, 159-60, 736-38, 741 double tradition, 711, 779, 781, 911-13, 916-17, 961,
996-98, 1000
dove, 38, 54, 68, 275, 391, 802, 816, 923, 948-50
drachma, 225
dreams, 5, 59, 170, 216-18,
241, 347, 385, 542, 592,
728, 793, 972-73, 1009
drunk, drunkenness, 271, 333, 360, 993-95
eagle, 338-39, 380, 677, 794, 815-16, 895, 949 earth, 1, 16, 27, 29-31, 38,
59-64, 68, 101, 108, 116,
122, 130, 133, 136, 170-71,
189, 200-201, 207, 225,
233-35, 237, 241, 243-44,
249, 252, 257, 262, 284,
287, 300, 303, 317, 319,
322, 324-25, 331, 333,
343-45, 371-73, 388, 400,
402, 412, 418, 432-33,
454-56, 472, 474-75, 513,
534, 546, 583, 592, 605-8,
611, 617, 628, 630,
687-88, 690, 693, 702,
724-29, 732, 738, 744,
750, 767, 775-76, 792,
794, 816-18, 847-48, 862,
886, 891-92, 897-98, 921,
927, 941, 956, 984-85,
989, 998, 1001, 1006,
1013-17
earthquake, 12, 32, 140, 184, 339, 617, 783
eating, 16, 50, 91-95, 114,
136-37, 144-47, 177, 186,
223, 230, 265, 273, 275,
277, 286, 330, 371-72,
394, 397, 418, 455, 465,
493-94, 496, 498, 500,
508, 513, 545, 577, 582,
585, 590, 618, 670, 674,
681, 743, 758-59, 762,
785, 821-22, 840, 860,
878, 925-27, 929-30, 957, 994, 1007
economics, 219, 225, 356,
439, 682
Eden, 171, 201, 371, 698,
986
Egypt, Egyptians, 6, 8, 48,
55, 57, 72-74, 92, 97, 102,
104, 129, 169, 171, 174,
197-98, 223, 241, 272-73,
294, 328, 330, 332, 346,
348-49, 360, 362, 377-80,
408, 416-17, 428, 446,
450, 456, 471, 484-86,
490, 493, 522, 527, 577,
581, 592, 610, 613, 626,
633-34, 638, 684, 701,
723, 731, 734, 745, 772,
792-93, 795, 797, 813, 820,
842, 870, 886, 959, 970,
982, 1005
elders, 20-22, 40, 44, 63,
111, 175, 181-82, 184,
226-28, 286, 303, 388,
427, 507-8, 545, 580, 671,
674, 678, 703, 707,
837-38, 842, 873, 905,
909, 925, 943, 972-74,
978 elect, election, 15, 26, 32,
120, 230, 303, 403, 405,
503, 539, 608, 721, 814,
827, 881, 944
Elijah, 5, 46, 47, 48, 49, 56,

- 59, 60, 131, 168, 172, 178,
181, 185, 200, 229, 230,
231, 232, 265, 276, 305,
367, 373, 437, 438, 439,
441, 442, 443, 444, 454,
477, 542, 563, 565, 591,
602, 603, 611, 612, 613,
614, 615, 616, 640, 705,
706, 707, 708, 709, 742,
775, 777, 778, 792, 843,
852, 933, 955, 966, 968,
969, 970, 971, 982, 983,
988, 1002, 1010, 1020
Elisha, 5, 47-48, 116, 131,
202, 229-32, 265, 305,
443, 477, 518, 602-3, 614,
640, 709, 742, 775, 778,
933, 971, 988, 1002
Elizabeth, 45, 72, 75, 77-79,
84, 88, 132, 197, 279-80,
339, 344, 401, 438, 449,
466, 531, 543, 567-68, 587,
636, 901-2, 1002, 1005,
1010
Emmaus, 16, 21, 55, 58-59,
94, 122, 131, 232, 496,
546, 785-86, 865, 928,
1002 emperor, 34, 39, 42, 53, 60, 120, 137, 176, 198, 224-25,
247, 329, 330, 333, 342,
344, 358, 372, 380-82,
409, 422, 438, 445, 456,
479, 527, 530-31, 534,
609, 668, 679-80, 699,
746, 792-93, 796, 810-11,
813, 815-18, 845, 848, 850,
852, 879, 887, 891
empire, 27, 30, 77, 102, 104,
116, 174, 247, 282, 319,
321, 342, 444-45, 471,
474, 476, 527, 682, 683,
700, 793, 798, 810-19,
852, 870
empty tomb, 41, 69, 99,
100, 205, 209, 217, 348,
384, 546, 558, 736, 778,
781-85, 787, 899, 1007-8, 1011 encomium, 446, 794
enemy, 12, 15, 60, 73-74,
89, 101, 116, 125-26, 137,
139, 167, 172, 174, 179,
187-88, 190, 194-95, 225,
240-41, 243, 245, 247,
252, 262, 285-86, 295,
318, 322, 324, 332, 374,
395, 412, 420, 422, 429,
431, 434, 469, 472, 488,
511-12, 532, 536-37, 558,
567, 578, 582, 586, 590,
635, 667-68, 672, 674,
690, 703, 740, 792,
794-95, 798, 818, 822,
827, 849, 851, 853, 877,
882, 902, 955, 957-58,
981, 989, 1020 eschatology, 23-32, 59-61,
232-38, 251-57, 370-75,
458-62, 468-80, 774-88,
894-900, 966-71
Essenes, 46-47, 53-54,
66-67, 98, 145-46, 166,
172, 205, 239-42, 250,
254, 272, 382, 403,
409-10, 414, 437-38,
443-44, 447, 456, 458,
507, 577, 629, 673, 676,
679, 696, 701, 704, 743,
747, 776, 794, 800, 804,
822, 824-25, 845, 904,
909, 935, 937
eternal life, 4, 31-32, 42, 94,
133, 150-51, 210-11, 238,
245-46, 257, 306-7,
371-72, 374-75, 397, 400,
430, 443, 479, 491, 507,
511, 518-21, 524, 536-37,
591, 614, 627, 639, 709,
731, 774, 776, 778-81,
803-6, 826-27, 830-31,
921, 992
ethics, 8, 62, 65, 143, 147,
151-52, 242, 243-46,
248-50, 282, 341, 357,
439, 474, 510, 512, 520,
536, 539-40, 562, 582,
604, 651, 690, 729, 741,
800, 806, 808-9, 845,
878
Eucharist, Lord's Supper,
138, 162, 191, 277-78,
347-57, 494, 498-501,
599, 695, 734, 744-45,
873, 931, 965, 1022
eunuchs, 878
evil, 22, 26, 31-32, 37-38,
61, 63, 89, 111, 128, 146,
147, 167-68, 171, 194-200,
232, 233-35, 237-38, 240,
246, 261, 281, 284-85,
295, 319, 323, 360-61, 368,
372, 374-75, 381, 406,
448, 453, 459, 474, 508,
522-23, 548, 580, 605,
618, 630, 661, 666-67,
672, 676, 687, 689, 719,
724, 793, 795, 800, 822,
824, 850-53, 861-62, 877,
953, 964, 1016
evil spirits, 26, 37-38, 171, 194-96, 284, 605, 618 exaltation, 2, 6, 16, 20, 25,
30, 32, 34, 59, 60-61,
77-78, 94, 115, 119, 121-28,
130, 132-33, 179, 181,
188-89, 233, 238, 287, 295,
312, 315, 325, 396, 420,
422, 428-29, 431, 451,
461-62, 478, 511, 528, 530,
533-34, 568, 578, 592,
607, 693, 698, 722, 733,
775-77, 781, 786-87, 806,
808, 818, 831, 858, 889,
896, 899-900, 928,
934-35, 970, 978, 984,
1015-16, 1021
exile, 7, 55, 62, 73, 88, 116, 121, 179, 184, 186, 227,
232-33, 235, 251-56,
273-74, 295, 322, 330, 345,
373, 389, 390-91, 406,
408-9, 439, 441, 450-51,
459, 471-72, 476-77, 485,
487, 494, 503, 562, 571,
573, 578, 616, 625-27, 634,
738, 741, 751, 775-76, 786,
838, 881, 884, 929, 932,
941, 946, 980-82
exodus, new exodus, 24,
37, 73-74, 92-94, 129,
179-80, 186-90, 230, 232,
273-74, 276-77, 294-95,
314, 390, 396, 409, 437,
439, 471-72, 476, 483,
493-94, 496-97, 544, 555,
562, 601, 613, 617-18, 626,
631-32, 634, 636-37, 639,
692, 723, 738, 792, 858,
882, 884, 925, 939, 957,
968-70, 981-84, 986-87,
1002, 1003
exorcism, 26, 28, 31-32,
61-62, 64, 120, 122, 127,
129, 146, 193-201, 235,
251, 303, 317, 323, 346,
363, 366, 368, 389,
390-91, 472, 477, 547,
556-57, 585, 588, 594-602,
667, 669-71, 689-90, 723,
745-46, 768, 817, 821, 826,
828, 830, 852, 875, 906-7,
921, 929, 953, 1007,
1016-17
eyewitness, 44, 57, 291, 312,
341, 363, 384, 386, 400,
425-27, 430, 524, 535, 574,
642, 645, 729, 750-51,
782, 785, 913, 915-16, 966,
976, 979, 1002-3
Farewell Discourse, 1-2,
10, 152, 188, 266-69, 284,
307, 392, 401, 496, 500,
516, 538-39, 669, 781, 787, 865, 1003
fasting, 12-13, 78, 93,
95-96, 114, 150, 155, 168,
171, 195, 198, 201, 223,
245, 256, 269-70, 325,
395-96, 437, 440, 456,
464, 549, 598, 674, 689,
743, 802, 849-50, 873,
927, 930, 943, 954-55,
957, 994
Fatherhood of God, 4, 39,
63, 127-28, 182, 262, 282,
284, 295, 313-14, 317,
326-27, 402, 603-5, 608,
635, 729, 830, 1013
fear, 3, 13-14, 22, 99,
148-49, 166, 177, 261, 286,
310, 314, 339, 360, 388,
396, 399, 415, 434, 439,
453, 472, 519, 556, 564,
587, 675, 703, 730, 767,
779, 782-84, 792, 795,
864, 940, 943, 945, 968,
973, 978, 987-88, 1007-8,
1016, 1018
Feast of Tabernacles, 53,
135, 137, 278, 410, 432,
555, 639, 766, 945, 982,
992
Feast of Unleavened
Bread, 92-93, 186, 273,
663
Feast of Weeks, 167, 273
feasts, feasting, 5, 21, 26,
92-93, 95-97, 135, 171, 175,
177, 180, 183, 189, 263, 269,
270-77, 313, 333, 372, 404,
411, 449, 478, 493-94,
506, 508, 548, 616, 639,
680, 868, 878, 920, 925,
960, 981, 993-95, 1018, 1020, 1022
feeding miracle, 40, 94,
493, 496, 671, 927-28,
930 feeding of the five thousand, 50, 92-94,
276, 397, 418, 421, 493,

- 496-97, 586, 599, 600,
602, 618, 670, 786, 788,
860, 927
- feeding of the four thousand, 50, 92-93, 305, 493, 586
- feminism, 278-82, 352-54,
356, 358, 502, 548, 553,
619, 623, 751, 1004
- festival, 3, 99, 171, 177,
222-23, 271-77, 320, 332,
408-9, 420, 429, 431-32,
447, 455, 457, 493, 543,
606, 639, 679, 700, 702,
757, 795, 809, 815, 820,
822, 840, 901, 925,
944-45, 948, 969, 979,
1018
- figs, fig tree, 29, 148, 200,
260, 339, 413, 557, 595,
690, 891, 911-16, 942,
943, 951, 993
- fire, 3, 12-13, 22, 26, 31, 40,
67, 118, 122, 170-71, 175,
195, 198, 211, 231, 237, 241,
332, 347, 371-72, 374, 389,
391-93, 410, 413, 437,
439-40, 443, 456, 460,
592, 605, 628, 664, 693,
706, 751, 770, 788, 800,
804, 813, 816, 820, 961,
976, 1015
- First Jewish Revolt, 445,
560, 673, 675, 677-78,
790-94, 796, 797-98
- fish, fishing, 16, 36-40,
49-51, 71, 94, 141, 143-44,
197, 204, 206, 225, 249,
297, 347-48, 365, 556, 595,
599, 602-3, 605-6, 608,
670, 788, 815-16, 860-62,
865, 928, 989, 1009, 1011
- flock, 135, 139, 140-41, 324,
397, 431-32, 556, 606,
609, 639, 859-60, 885
- food, 5, 12, 15-16, 20, 41,
50, 89, 91-94, 112, 142-44,
146-47, 150, 163, 213-14,
220-22, 241, 269-70, 275,
377, 390, 417-18, 455-56,
469, 494-95, 500, 508,
525, 585, 653, 673-74,
678-79, 697, 741, 758-96,
820-21, 850, 859-60, 870,
878, 925-26, 928, 956,
995, 1006, 1010
- food laws, 455, 673-74,
678-79
- footwashing, 434, 437, 497,
499, 537, 723, 872-73
- forgiveness, 18, 20, 23, 39,
63, 67-68, 85-87, 112,
122-23, 128, 131, 139-40,
148, 167-68, 176, 182-83,
187, 207, 243, 247, 259,
265, 276, 284-87, 303, 317,
320-23, 325, 339, 341, 360,
363, 365, 369, 390-91, 437,
439, 450-52, 474, 492,
495, 497, 518, 520, 540,
546, 557, 582, 585-88, 592,
596, 608, 627, 635, 671,
687-89, 702, 732, 734,
741, 744, 767, 771-73, 786,
788, 803, 827, 829, 843,
847, 849-52, 854, 856,
865-66, 868, 873, 890-92,
895, 897, 899, 900, 902,
928, 930, 946, 974, 982,
989, 991, 994, 1002, 1010,
1012, 1015, 1019
- form criticism, 29, 114,
153-56, 217, 288-93,
336-38, 341, 353, 383, 553,
555-56, 642, 644-46, 651,
663, 693, 715, 731-32,
735-37, 741, 768, 938
- fornication, 171, 241
- four-document hypothesis, 735
- fourfold Gospel, 103-8,
153, 340, 492, 809, 923
- fourth philosophy, 676-78,
794-95, 797-98
- fragmentary hypothesis,
913
- freedom, liberty, 20, 35,
64, 77, 163, 275, 278, 284,
286-87, 294-96, 320, 325,
425, 450-51, 470, 496,
502, 506, 510, 513, 609,
644, 677, 688, 720, 730,
732, 740, 770, 794, 812,
814, 821, 837, 839, 855,
870, 1005
- fruit, 1, 5, 140-41, 145-46,
148, 195, 210-11, 246, 261,
273-74, 344, 373, 397,
404, 408, 413, 431, 455,
459, 464, 466, 474, 494,
539, 547, 567, 582, 609,
620, 688, 772, 852, 942,
994, 1021
- funeral, 99, 267, 746, 777,
793, 866, 1010
- Gabbatha, 54, 411, 486, 489
- Gabriel, 12, 14-15, 76-77,
79, 81, 217, 230, 385, 438,
449, 477, 524, 543, 567,
636, 895, 901
- Gadara, 51, 57, 163, 838
- Gadara/Gerasa, 51, 303,
364, 366, 410
- Gadarene/Gerasene
demoniac, 146, 197, 199,
366, 600, 618, 817
- Galilee, 47-52, 297-98
- gehenna, 371
- gender, 9, 63-64, 109,
278-79, 281-82, 306, 353,
356, 369, 567, 682-83, 875,
877, 1004
- genealogy, 3-4, 80-81, 121,
129, 255, 299-302, 304,
338-39, 350, 416, 544,
566-67, 572-73, 578-79,
591, 634, 712, 812, 877,
883, 892, 958, 988-89,
1004
- genre, 23-25, 107, 125, 167,
266-68, 288-89, 292-93,
335-38, 340-41, 344, 347,
378-79, 399, 422, 424-25,
434, 541-42, 554, 559,
570, 575-76, 578, 591,
619, 643, 646, 651-53,
659, 661, 665-66, 713,
716-17, 732, 736, 749, 752,
922
- Gentiles, 142-45, 302-8,
376-79, 404-5, 604-9,
810-19, 864, 867-68, 929,
933, 940-44, 950-51
- geography, 45-58, 157, 339,
550, 555
- Gerizim, 52, 58, 148, 256,
433, 615, 680, 792, 832-36
- Gethsemane, 4, 11, 15, 40,
43, 54, 100, 190, 199, 210,
299, 309, 310, 312-13, 323,
384, 410, 421, 556, 628,
666, 671, 685, 688-90,
736, 753, 860, 867, 891,
954, 958, 967, 979
- glory, glorification, 4, 8,
13, 15-16, 26-27, 32, 59, 85,
123, 128, 133, 141, 179-80,
182, 187-90, 209, 211, 238,
248, 268, 275, 281, 306,
309, 312-15, 323, 325-26,
340, 343, 367, 369, 392,
400-401, 413, 428-32,
457, 462, 467, 478, 515-16,
525-26, 530, 538, 596,
- 598, 601-2, 609, 613, 626,
638-40, 671, 691, 693,
698, 702, 704, 720-21,
778, 781, 785-86, 788,
817-18, 831, 857, 860, 872,
899, 903, 932, 939, 941,
943, 949, 951, 958,
966-67, 968-71, 974, 981,
984-85, 992, 1016, 1018,
1021-22
- gnostics, gnosticism, 35,
43, 346-48, 351, 356-58,
397, 422-23, 427, 524, 716,
731-32, 798, 902
- God, 315-28, 399-402,
684-91, 886-93, 1018-23
- gods, 13-14, 72, 81, 86-87,
142, 193, 203, 263, 270,
316, 318-21, 327, 329-31,
333, 360, 369, 376, 418,
527, 626, 699, 721, 775-77,
811, 815, 817-18, 845, 887
- Golden Rule, 243-45, 250,
512, 729, 848, 851, 853,
855
- Golgotha, 55, 180, 190, 335,
411
- Gospel of Judas*, 43, 45, 103, 345-46, 347-48, 351-52
- Gospel of Peter*, 40, 102-5,
345-46, 348-49, 663-64
- Gospel of the Ebionites*,
103, 345, 350, 436
- Gospel of the Hebrews*,
345-46, 350
- Gospel of the Nazareans*,
345, 350, 436
- Gospel of Thomas*, 42,
103-4, 118, 156, 279, 341,
346-47, 350-51, 436,
656-57, 659, 711, 714, 716,
739, 749, 889, 959
- gospel, good news, 28,
31-35, 37-41, 57, 68, 75-76,
78, 88-91, 101, 106, 117,
119, 172, 207, 209, 217,
247, 251, 260, 264, 282,
286, 298, 303, 305-7, 323,
330, 341-45, 351, 361, 366,
368, 401, 413, 439-41,
449-52, 459, 466, 471-75,
477, 479, 504-6, 518, 520,
524, 543, 547-49, 562,
564, 568-69, 580, 596,
601, 603-9, 612, 614, 621,
623, 631, 634-38, 640,
667-68, 683, 687, 737,
743, 752, 769, 773-74,

- 776, 803, 807, 816, 818,
827, 829, 845-47, 852-53,
861, 866, 868, 873, 901,
913-14, 920, 944, 956,
963, 1001-2, 1007, 1010,
1016
- grace, 62, 64, 77, 89, 102,
243, 246, 249, 259, 282,
306, 356-57, 428, 430,
525, 545, 582, 584-85, 588,
601, 638, 688, 822, 845,
848, 868, 902-3, 930
- grapes, 221, 329, 993, 994
- Great Commission, 7, 68,
202, 281, 287, 304-5, 359,
405, 412, 682, 784, 859
- greatest commandment,
149, 306, 318, 341, 453,
590
- Greek language, 484-91
- Greeks, 40, 41, 58, 218, 227,
331, 334, 379, 409, 415,
423, 431, 521, 531, 607,
676, 699, 777, 810-12,
887, 893, 985, 1013-14,
1021
- Griesbach hypothesis, 915
- Hades, 5, 26, 31, 140,
370-75, 587, 775, 777, 781
- haggadah, 498, 590, 632,
757
- halakah, 95, 213, 227, 298,
365, 367, 426, 506-10,
590-91, 706, 757-60,
764-65, 834, 836, 867
- hardness of heart, 91, 209,
214, 361, 986
- healing, 362-69
- heart, 1, 18, 88, 91, 136,
144-45, 147, 150-51, 168,
188, 195, 197, 202, 210,
245, 247, 249, 267, 269,
303, 315, 318, 322, 341,
360-61, 392, 394, 396,
401, 409, 413, 432, 455,
457, 474, 508-9, 511-12,
534, 537, 563-64, 568, 585,
589-90, 612, 625, 627,
643, 662, 667, 687, 703,
707-8, 715, 733, 737, 740,
782, 786, 807, 821, 836,
847, 851, 862, 918, 929,
937-38, 945, 953-54, 989,
992, 1003, 1015, 1019-20
- Hebrew language, 484-91
- hell, 19, 25-26, 49, 298,
370-71, 373-75, 519, 732,
779, 849, 935
- Hellenism, Greek culture,
52, 145, 164, 173, 334, 359,
376-79, 382, 414, 423,
447, 453-54, 486, 491-92,
576, 593, 610, 659, 673,
730, 740, 789, 819, 823,
844, 864, 887
- Hellenistic Judaism, 200, 378, 731, 856
- hermeneutics, 7, 9, 107-8,
169, 245, 249, 279-81,
306-7, 338-39, 502-3, 505,
508, 536, 538, 557, 561,
589, 651, 657-60, 664,
750-52, 879, 881, 913,
960, 986
- Herod Antipas, 18, 47, 49,
51, 137-38, 178, 182, 224,
247, 263, 297-98, 379,
381-82, 437-38, 441-42,
444, 576, 673-74, 680,
815, 847, 974-76, 979,
1005-6
- Herod Antipater, 224, 379,
380, 812
- Herod the Great, 46, 51-52,
54, 79-80, 134, 138, 221,
223, 227, 271, 297, 408,
444, 446-47, 486, 576,
673, 674-75, 677, 700,
838-39, 948, 977
- Herodians, 19-20, 175, 178,
224, 247, 250, 379, 382,
459, 557, 674-75, 679,
907-8, 943
- Herodias, 7, 379, 381-82, 438,
441, 923, 1005-6, 1008
- Herods, 379-82
- high priest, 14, 20-22, 30,
34, 39, 41, 43, 61, 70, 117,
119-20, 122, 128, 137, 143,
145, 168, 171-72, 175-76,
178, 180, 183, 188, 227,
241, 252, 263, 312, 348,
368, 376, 379-81, 396,
409-10, 414, 447, 451,
457, 486, 601, 630,
675-76, 680, 697-704,
709, 743, 791, 795-96,
803, 824-25, 837-39, 842,
890, 898, 921, 941, 943,
945, 972-76, 978, 980,
989, 1019-20
- Hinnom Valley, 55, 371, 411
- historical criticism, 7, 153,
280, 383, 386, 446, 553,
619-20, 622-23, 647, 659,
722, 855
- historical Jesus, 23, 154,
159-60, 162, 166, 233, 252,
259-60, 281, 290, 292-93,
307-8, 329, 336, 345,
352-53, 355-56, 386, 416,
419, 425, 451, 469, 492,
494, 505, 509, 534-35,
553, 603, 639-40, 656-58,
660-62, 689, 694, 711-12,
715, 718-20, 724-34,
736-38, 740, 742, 744,
746-48, 750-52, 803, 806,
845, 854, 875, 878,
888-89, 904, 917, 920,
945-46, 949, 954, 996
- historicism, 289
- historicity, 36, 67, 81, 108,
159, 197-98, 233, 312, 354,
356, 382, 386, 515, 595,
605, 607, 725, 733, 779,
784, 809, 889, 966, 972,
978-80, 983, 986-87
- historiography, 80, 134,
153, 161, 280, 337, 377-79,
385, 425, 427, 542, 644,
664, 750, 1002
- history of interpretation,
74, 374, 540, 850, 967, 973
- history of religions/religionsgeschichtliche
Schule, 259, 329, 358,
328-29, 334, 603, 724,
728, 731-32
- Holy Spirit, 2-3, 34-35, 39,
41, 60-61, 64-65, 67-68,
74, 78-82, 86-87, 102, 122,
126, 130, 133, 148, 170,
201, 268, 284, 286-87,
300, 308, 315, 317, 322-23,
325-27, 368, 385, 387-88,
390-93, 413, 431, 435,
437-40, 443, 497, 522,
530, 542, 546-47, 550,
569, 579, 595-97, 603,
608, 663, 669, 688-90,
706-7, 721, 723, 746, 767,
788, 828, 865, 892, 903,
932, 958, 989, 991-92,
999-1003, 1010, 1017,
1021-22
- homosexuality, 145
- honor, 5, 21, 40, 87, 93-97,
109, 169, 222, 228, 263,
270, 274, 313-14, 318, 323,
327, 329, 332-33, 356, 371,
381, 432, 448, 464, 466,
476, 508, 566, 576-77,
609, 631, 667, 675, 680,
682, 708, 722, 732, 740,
776, 814-15, 820, 822,
850, 853, 856, 868-70,
872, 877, 897, 922, 926,
928-29, 949, 968-69,
1009
- hospitality, 17-18, 286, 374,
478, 544-45, 547, 607,
653, 802, 806, 872-73,
926, 969, 1010-11
- households, 67, 77, 109-11,
219, 222, 236, 262-65,
295, 362, 433, 441,
527-28, 567, 774, 815,
827-28, 871-72, 877, 976,
1005-7, 1009-11
- hymns, 72, 75, 77-78, 275,
288, 416, 420, 466, 526,
530, 664, 900-903, 999,
1019, 1021
- hypocrites, hypocrisy, 19, 20, 21, 93, 164, 247, 269,
270, 285, 394, 395, 455,
674, 824, 842, 843, 849,
850, 906, 957, 994, 1015,
1020
- idols, idolatry, 2, 13, 85, 91,
143-45, 253, 316, 319,
360-61, 417, 453, 456,
471-72, 513, 626-27,
698-700, 772, 775, 794,
806, 817, 820, 1001
- illness, sickness, 64, 167,
194-97, 199-200, 260,
368, 594, 600, 826, 877,
1011
- Immanuel, 243-44, 641, 921
- imminent eschatology,
234, 356, 769
- impurity, 142, 146, 148, 171,
197, 241, 272, 365-67, 437,
453, 455-56, 508, 513, 562,
577, 594, 596, 702, 731,
741, 743, 830, 863, 929,
941, 948, 1007
- inaugurated eschatology,
246, 469
- incarnation, 58, 63, 78, 132,
189, 244, 306, 314-15,
326, 399-402, 526, 657,
720-21, 726, 751, 872, 921,
998
- Infancy Gospel of Thomas*, 103, 350, 403
- infancy gospels, 72
- infancy stories/narratives,
15, 61, 129-31, 169, 216-17,

- 339, 389, 567, 569, 591-92,
705, 732, 802, 865, 901,
987, 988
insurrections, 707, 790, 792 ipsissima vox, 734 irony, 5, 18, 29, 88, 120, 123,
181-83, 185, 188-89, 257,
277, 336, 343, 358, 420,
424, 441, 443, 464,
475-76, 478-79, 531, 546,
554, 557, 564, 597, 619-20,
703, 783, 937, 967, 974,
976-78, 1020
Isaac, 2-6, 11, 15, 20, 26,
302, 309, 313, 315-16, 321,
323, 326, 374, 403, 406,
408, 457, 550, 614, 640,
722, 779-80, 925, 953,
990, 994
Israel, 403-6, 251-57
Jacob, 2, 4-6, 11, 16, 20, 26,
42, 52, 58, 70, 77, 80, 133,
169, 229, 299, 301-2,
315-16, 321, 323, 325-26,
374, 403, 406, 408, 418,
423, 429, 433, 457, 477,
506, 550, 578, 592, 614,
640, 752, 779-80, 856,
925, 932, 992, 994, 1012
Jairus, 40, 262, 364, 368,
515, 746, 778-79, 783,
907-8, 1005, 1007, 1011
James, 9, 22, 34, 36-37,
40-42, 44, 68, 70-71, 82,
100, 103, 114, 125, 180,
204, 231, 291, 314, 320,
350-52, 359, 414, 418,
446-47, 506, 513, 515, 566,
608, 611, 676, 689, 718,
724, 729, 733-35, 745, 750,
753, 756, 771, 809-10,
839, 844, 856, 911, 938,
946, 952, 954, 966-70,
1008-9, 1021
Jericho, 46, 49, 52-53, 98,
167, 286, 364, 408, 545,
586-87, 657, 692, 838, 867,
905, 955
Jerome, 46-47, 52, 297, 300,
350, 352-53, 355-56, 435,
490-91, 747
Jerusalem, 52-56, 408-14,
939-46, 980-85
Jewish revolt, 51, 408-9, 444
Joanna, 976, 1005, 1008,
1011
Johannine theology, 420,
515, 538-39, 808
John and Synoptics, 419,
498, 920-24
John the Baptist, 3, 5, 15,
31, 40, 45-47, 56, 66-69,
72, 76, 79, 82, 84, 95-98,
111, 117-18, 121-23, 126,
131, 135, 137-38, 166, 169,
178, 182, 196, 203-4,
229-32, 235-36, 239, 247,
270, 281, 284, 286-87,
338-39, 343-45, 350, 368,
382, 385, 389, 406, 415,
420, 433, 436-37, 442-44,
447, 449, 452, 454, 456,
458-59, 462, 464-66, 473,
482, 518, 523, 542, 544,
547, 549, 556, 578, 579,
581, 617-18, 630, 635, 638,
673-75, 686, 694, 705-7,
709, 726, 744, 747,
772-73, 780, 803, 818,
824, 831, 845, 847, 852,
858, 862, 902-3, 920,
922-23, 930, 936, 938,
943, 954-55, 958, 968,
970, 976, 984, 994-97,
1002-3, 1005-6, 1008,
1010, 1017
Jonah, 39, 56-57, 136, 139,
183, 444, 564, 598, 693,
770, 773, 779, 861-63,
989, 996
Jordan River, 25, 46-47,
51-52, 56-58, 67-69, 146,
251, 284, 297-98, 349,
437-39, 442-43, 708, 748,
753, 792, 923, 954, 955
Joseph of Arimathea, 86,
99, 100, 206, 476, 556,
567, 676, 804, 808, 1008
joy, 15, 73, 75, 77, 89, 108,
147, 268, 272, 274, 286,
325, 339, 448-49, 466,
539, 784, 787, 852, 866,
992, 995, 1008
jubilee, 3, 10, 35, 168, 283,
286, 345, 367, 450-52,
550, 609, 639-40, 740-41,
802-3, 823, 832, 1023
Judaism, 18-23, 270-77,
452-58, 505-14, 588-93,
757-67, 836-40, 903-10,
931-34, 939-52
Judas Iscariot, 36, 39,
43-44, 188, 193, 206, 310,
347, 532, 664, 954, 1012
judge, judging, 14, 32, 43,
86, 106, 121, 133, 183, 233,
237-38, 259, 314, 317-18,
351, 362, 417, 451, 453,
461-62, 466-67, 471, 579,
590, 614, 690, 697, 703,
746, 790, 823, 829, 830,
851-52, 895-96, 898-99,
906, 926, 975, 977, 1001, 1003, 1010
judgment, 23-32, 232-38,
251-57, 370-75, 458-62,
894-900
justice, righteousness, 62,
77-78, 88, 144, 146, 150,
201, 203, 223, 226, 243,
246-47, 249, 281-82, 305,
318-20, 322, 373, 388,
390-91, 438, 453, 458,
463-66, 472, 475, 502,
509-10, 519, 579-80, 582,
585-86, 612, 683, 741, 750,
774, 776, 790, 794, 803-4,
835, 838, 850, 853, 855,
857, 872, 978, 993, 1010
king of the Jews, 74, 121,
128-29, 175, 177, 180-81,
247, 304, 413, 791, 845,
973, 977, 988
kingdom of God/Heaven,
24-31, 34-35, 37-38, 43,
62-65, 68, 88-89, 94, 99,
101, 111, 117, 121, 126,
139-40, 156, 180, 194-95,
200, 204-5, 209, 225,
233-34, 236-37, 241-43,
245, 247-48, 251, 255,
259-60, 277, 301, 315, 317,
319, 321, 323-25, 330, 341,
343-45, 351, 361-62, 367,
390-91, 404, 406, 416,
439-41, 453, 458-59, 461,
464, 466, 468-70,
472-73, 475-76, 477-79,
494-97, 510, 518-20, 557,
570, 578-79, 583, 595-97,
600, 602, 604-7, 610,
621, 627-28, 642, 656,
658, 661, 687-88, 692-93,
707, 724-29, 736-37,
740-43, 745-47, 769,
771-73, 777-78, 780,
803-4, 806-8, 816, 821,
826-27, 830, 846-47,
850-53, 865, 868, 875,
898, 917, 928-30, 945,
950-56, 974, 979, 993-94,
1016, 1019
lamb, 5, 92, 136, 137, 180,
188, 275, 277, 349, 421,
423, 428-29, 431, 457,
482-83, 493, 498, 538,
639, 653, 831, 858, 861,
948, 950, 978, 990
Lamb of God, 5, 133,
188-89, 287, 434, 443,
482-83, 666, 831, 858,
861, 989-90, 1003 lament, 4, 178-79, 181, 184,
187, 310, 366, 461, 690,
703, 793, 843, 984, 988,
997-98, 1008, 1019
lamp, 90, 274, 417, 443, 616, 1009
land, 43, 45, 51, 57, 73, 77,
135, 142-43, 145, 170, 181,
187, 198, 199, 221, 224,
232, 241, 246, 247, 251-55,
257, 281, 284, 297-98, 379,
380, 382, 388, 396, 397,
403, 409, 411, 417, 445,
450, 453, 455, 517, 520,
581, 613, 617, 627, 682,
697-98, 701, 719, 740,
762, 775, 789-90, 792-93,
798, 801-2, 811-12, 815,
847, 852, 864, 875, 878,
887, 904-5, 907-9, 933,
982, 1008, 1014-15
language of Jesus, 153, 249,
312, 485, 489, 581, 858,
890, 932
Last Supper, 18, 26, 29,
41-42, 54, 89, 93-94,
136-38, 177, 180, 182-83,
186, 188, 190, 199, 266,
269, 271, 275-78, 285,
410, 421, 492-98, 501,
535, 537, 556, 598, 664,
666, 695, 723-24, 730,
734, 736, 769, 856, 865,
920, 927, 928, 930-31,
935, 946, 953, 965, 979,
994-95, 1021-22
Latin language, 13, 97, 103,
113, 166, 180, 224,
239-40, 253, 274, 302, 331,
355, 446, 484, 501-2, 504,
560, 719, 722-23, 727, 747,
811, 839, 846, 869, 901,
904, 926, 960
Latina/Latino criticism, 501-2
law, 142-52, 212-16, 242-50, 452-57, 505-14, 610-14,
757-67, 820-23, 840-44

- lawyer, 20, 21, 67, 151, 210,
257, 466, 549, 587, 843,
908
- Lazarus, 5, 18, 26, 31, 52,
69, 71, 314, 364, 368-69,
374, 397, 410, 413, 420,
427, 429, 434, 461, 515-17,
520-21, 540, 548, 587,
601, 613, 655, 691,
777-78, 781, 787-88,
807-8, 873, 876, 880, 921,
928, 965-66, 984-85, 1012
- leaven, 21, 28, 92-93, 656, 674
- lectionaries, 555, 593, 960,
1018, 1022
- legend, 53, 288-89, 492, 645, 742, 983
- legion, 814, 817, 875, 1018
- leper, leprosy, 17-18, 38, 52,
117, 142, 144, 145-46, 176,
196-97, 257, 260, 349,
364, 366-67, 452, 474,
477, 507, 517-18, 545, 547,
562, 585, 588, 595,
597-98, 600, 602, 611-13,
697, 702, 763, 783, 806,
835, 873, 943, 1001, 1006
- Levi, 12, 14, 29, 36-37,
42-44, 51-52, 170, 186,
223-25, 276, 284, 286,
349, 351, 371, 389, 465,
485, 599, 696-701, 704-5,
776, 808, 814, 840-41,
868, 926, 930, 936,
941-42
- Levites, 20-21, 43, 143, 223,
257, 442, 657, 696, 697,
701-2, 801, 838, 841, 842,
901
- liberation, 7-8, 116, 122,
252, 279, 281-82, 284,
286, 295-96, 372, 385,
389, 391, 437, 451-52, 471,
502, 504, 562, 682,
739-40, 751, 786, 792,
803, 819, 853
- liberation theology, 502,
682
- light of the world, 187, 397,
406, 421, 521, 523, 606,
609, 704, 903, 1016-17
- literary criticism, 279, 291,
293, 354-56, 502, 619-20,
647-48, 659, 693, 737, 739
- liturgy, 10-11, 108, 118, 167,
272, 424, 457, 469, 470,
489, 493, 495, 498, 500,
554-55, 662, 686, 696-99,
701, 780, 832, 901, 904,
1018, 1021
- living water, 171, 238, 277,
287, 307, 392, 432, 521,
945, 992, 1012
- logia, 42, 56, 114, 153, 298,
304, 346, 568, 574, 703,
713, 779, 918, 935
- Logos. See Word, Logos
- Lord, 125-33, 316-27,
526-35, 542, 547, 581-82
- love, 1-2, 7-9, 18, 21, 28, 64,
69, 112, 128, 133, 141, 146,
149-52, 169, 187, 190, 210-
11, 213, 223, 225, 240,
244-47, 249, 250, 257,
261, 265, 267-68, 284-86,
295-96, 318-20, 322-23,
325-26, 332-33, 341,
360-61, 375, 415, 430,
434, 466, 476, 503,
511-14, 516, 520, 535-40,
562, 582, 585-88, 590,
657, 668, 729, 777, 784,
788, 808, 822, 831,
847-50, 853, 861, 866,
872-73, 875, 886, 893,
902, 920-21, 936, 1006,
1012, 1016-17, 1020
- love command, 149-52, 244,
511-12, 514, 535-39, 657
- Luke-Acts, 5, 16, 18, 23, 34,
36, 61, 64, 76-77, 82-84,
91, 122, 124-25, 131, 134,
186-87, 191, 201, 205, 218,
222, 231-32, 239, 252, 257,
283, 288, 301, 305, 308-9,
324-25, 328, 342, 345, 356,
358-59, 368-69, 375, 387,
389, 393-94, 405-6, 432,
434, 450, 452, 478,
480-81, 489, 496, 520,
530, 535, 540-42, 550-52,
561, 567, 569, 614, 620,
624, 641, 673, 691, 746,
774, 785, 789, 817-19,
829, 857-58, 880, 885-86,
901, 947, 970-72, 1000
- Maccabees, Maccabean revolt, 266, 274, 297, 332,
373, 376-78, 454, 486-87,
673, 679, 701, 706, 740,
775-76, 780, 794-95, 799,
817, 836, 841, 843-44,
940, 1014
- Magdala, 48-49, 297, 553, 905, 1011
- Magdalene, 49, 69-70, 99,
281-83, 340, 351, 364, 416,
529-30, 533, 783, 787-88,
977, 1005, 1008, 1011-12,
1022
- magi, 4, 15, 72, 74-75, 108,
121, 217, 304, 339, 448,
579, 581, 703, 708, 792,
843, 892, 988, 1018-19
- magic, magician, 416-18,
595, 599, 602-3, 708, 739,
745-46, 749, 752, 792, 929
- Magnificat*, 72, 75, 77-79,
82-84, 218, 247, 325, 467,
503, 540, 553, 592, 636,
807, 901-2, 1019
- mammon, 744, 803, 850-51
- manger, 46, 567, 721
- manna, 57, 94, 269, 277,
423, 500, 618, 820, 925,
927, 953, 956-57, 987
- marriage, 78, 93, 110-11,
213-16, 241, 263-64, 301,
313, 350, 361, 374, 381-82,
438, 441, 474, 485, 509,
513-14, 590, 613, 762,
780, 812, 815, 941,
1006-7, 1012, 1016
- Mary, mother of Jesus,
72-82, 302, 615, 877, 990,
1011, 1013
- meals, 17, 41, 54-55, 70,
88-89, 91-94, 118, 136-37,
139, 147, 171, 177, 180, 186,
206, 223, 241, 262, 266,
271-72, 275-77, 394, 416,
456, 478, 492-500, 508,
516, 542, 545, 556, 603,
673-75, 685, 695, 723,
734, 743-45, 749, 786,
802, 814, 823, 860, 866,
873, 878, 900, 920,
925-30, 946, 978, 994,
1021
- mercy, 62, 78, 88, 146-48,
150, 175, 180, 223, 235,
269, 284, 286, 306,
317-18, 320-22, 324-25,
366-67, 388, 464-66,
471-72, 509, 514, 580,
582, 584-88, 599, 612,
635, 661, 689, 741, 771-72,
803, 807, 822, 847-48,
850, 852-53, 866-68, 902,
929-30, 937, 941, 951,
982-84, 993
- messiah, messianic
expectation. See Christ
- messianic age, 43, 96, 233,
361, 454, 617, 987
- messianic secret, 120-21,
127-28, 199, 260, 355,
425, 557, 724, 731, 778,
973
- midrash, 119, 416, 491,
588-93, 664, 729, 757,
760, 765, 833, 921-22,
932, 987
- military, 12, 73, 116, 126,
173-74, 220-23, 226, 271,
355, 377, 379-80, 394,
409, 414, 437, 445, 576,
610, 679, 700, 739, 789,
790-92, 797-98, 810-13,
815, 838, 870, 879, 887,
956, 958, 980, 982, 984
- miracles, miracle stories,
36, 38, 48-49, 51, 64, 72,
86, 91, 94, 121, 127, 131,
141, 154, 156, 177, 198-99,
204, 207, 211, 230,
259-60, 262, 277, 287,
289, 303, 327, 346-47,
349, 351, 354, 363,
366-69, 382, 384, 406,
416-18, 494, 496, 515-16,
521, 547, 553, 556, 562,
568, 572-73, 585,
594-603, 632, 647,
670-72, 721-23, 726,
730-31, 738, 742, 745, 768,
774-75, 777-79, 827-29,
860, 887, 889, 921,
927-29, 937, 955, 988,
995, 1007
- mishnah, 759-60
- mission, 302-8, 604-9
- mission of Jesus, 35, 39,
102, 132, 307, 317, 344,
474, 537-38, 546, 582,
604, 607, 609, 1002, 1017
- missionaries, 34-35, 38-40,
42, 235, 248, 256-57, 281,
306-7, 367, 473, 513, 541,
544, 558, 604, 606-9,
682, 806, 859, 921
- mocking, 120, 130, 174,
180-84, 189, 411, 476,
478, 665, 672, 680, 876,
942, 974-76, 978, 1012
- money, 17, 20, 43, 148, 183,
205, 219, 225, 240, 248,
267, 275, 277, 348, 586,
606, 675, 680, 688, 759,
800, 802-4, 806, 808-9,
813-14, 940, 948-49

- money changers, 148, 275, 277
- morals, morality, 62, 67, 90, 113, 144, 150-52, 171, 233, 241-43, 245, 247-49, 319, 336, 341, 355, 357, 372, 374, 393, 423, 428, 438, 453, 455-56, 469, 496, 563, 577, 585, 657, 699, 701, 715, 723-24, 727, 729, 732, 737, 802-3, 807, 812-13, 863-64, 867, 930, 932, 987, 1012
- Moses, 3-5, 8, 20, 24, 43, 57, 73-74, 82, 94, 117, 122-23, 129-31, 143, 151, 168-71, 203, 205, 214-15, 226, 242-43, 245, 266-70, 274, 276-77, 295, 314-15, 320, 325, 331, 334, 339, 361, 374, 381, 385, 397-98, 417, 420, 423, 428-30, 443, 446, 458, 471, 478, 494-95, 506, 509-10, 514-15, 524-26, 528, 545-46, 549, 562, 590-91, 597, 601-2, 610-18, 630-32, 634-35, 637-40, 674, 678, 680, 684, 690, 692, 696-97, 700, 703-4, 706-9, 726, 737, 743, 759, 768-69, 771, 781, 786, 792, 794, 808, 824-25, 830, 832-33, 835-37, 841, 843, 845-46, 863-64, 876, 883, 889, 941, 943, 945, 955-58, 966-71, 977, 987, 990, 1003, 1006, 1020
- Mount of Olives, 28, 53-57, 260, 309-310, 312-13, 408, 410, 518, 615-17, 632, 690, 793, 900, 942-44, 967, 972, 981-82
- mountains, 46, 51-52, 57, 130, 201, 229, 314, 339, 343, 371, 412, 433, 476, 478, 572, 578, 598, 611, 615-18, 680, 690, 784, 846, 852, 940, 944, 954-56, 966-68, 970-71, 987, 1012
- murder, 120, 145, 188, 195, 247, 331, 360, 453, 510, 790, 812, 942
- myth, 35, 81, 194, 199, 200, 254, 288, 290, 298, 321, 329, 330-31, 334, 358, 385, 423, 524, 554, 603, 645, 726, 731-32, 777, 810, 837, 876, 887, 892, 971
- Nag Hammadi, 346, 352, 383, 397, 656, 734, 745
- Nain, 48, 58, 197, 262, 314, 364, 368, 515, 587, 619, 746, 777, 779, 1005, 1010
- narrative criticism/ exegesis, 279, 354, 553, 575, 619-23, 660
- narrative theology, 1008
- narrow door, 5, 545
- nature miracles, 127, 199, 595, 603, 747
- Nazarene, 48, 74, 416-17, 592, 624-25, 633, 784
- Nazareth, 20, 23, 32, 45, 47-48, 56-58, 68, 73-74, 87, 98, 101, 124-25, 133, 190, 230, 238, 245, 247, 257, 264, 286, 298, 307-8, 315, 321, 326, 329, 334-38, 340, 342, 345, 367, 381, 386, 396, 398-99, 417, 419, 443, 451, 456-57, 486, 507, 534, 542, 551, 592, 603-5, 611, 615, 624-25, 635, 719, 723, 726, 729, 731, 733, 742, 744, 748, 750, 752-55, 777, 782, 789, 807, 809, 853, 857, 906-7, 923, 933, 936, 950, 958, 979, 1002, 1010, 1020
- neighbor, 8, 9, 28, 75, 77-79, 151-52, 204, 210, 245-57, 261, 270, 374, 434, 454, 476, 511-12, 520, 536-37, 539, 575, 582, 587, 590, 635, 657, 771-72, 804, 811, 822, 833, 835, 853, 926, 953, 1012
- new commandment, 152, 269, 511-12, 536, 539
- new covenant, 73, 166, 168, 185-86, 267-68, 494-97, 562, 626-27, 632, 672, 927, 990, 994-95, 1021
- new form criticism, 288, 292-93
- New Quest, 628, 718, 731, 733-34, 736, 753, 755
- new wine/wineskins, 554, 884, 993
- Nicodemus, 5, 10, 22, 25, 68, 100, 170, 206, 287, 392, 432, 479, 521, 523, 538, 627, 676, 808, 876, 880, 921
- Noah, 2, 29, 68, 170-72, 274, 898, 1004
- noncanonical gospels, 346, 749
- nonviolence, 668
- novel, 104, 340, 377, 404, 422, 425, 428, 554, 725, 740, 742-43, 745, 777
- Nunc Dimittis*, 72, 75, 78, 628, 901-2
- oaths, swearing, 203, 241, 247, 472, 508, 510, 629-30, 674, 747
- obedience, 1, 3-4, 6-7, 37, 62, 68, 81, 88, 91, 109, 112, 128-29, 133, 139, 146, 150-52, 193, 195, 206-8, 216, 218, 247, 249, 261, 264-65, 267-68, 295, 301, 310-12, 315, 318, 322, 369, 388, 453, 460, 463-66, 474, 506, 509, 510-11, 530, 537, 546-47, 571-72, 577, 580, 582, 602, 608-9, 611, 627, 673, 687-91, 719, 771, 782-84, 795, 817, 830-31, 838, 847, 850, 867, 872, 888, 891-93, 895, 953-55, 957, 964, 1019
- oil, 18, 54, 115-16, 219, 221, 309, 362, 365-66, 408, 410, 537, 657, 697, 866, 925, 949, 980, 995, 1009
- Old Testament in the Gospels, 5, 24, 68, 72-73, 75-76, 102, 126, 168, 180, 296, 298, 316, 327, 338, 345, 353-54, 357, 367, 378, 390, 411, 452, 485, 491, 514, 543, 550, 573, 575-76, 578, 583, 591, 593, 611, 614, 628, 631-39, 663, 666, 708, 709, 723, 756, 768, 849, 856-58, 884-85, 915-16, 933-34, 937, 956-57, 964, 973, 985, 990, 1000, 1020
- Olivet discourse, 24-25, 27-32, 120, 136, 238, 266, 519, 641
- oral tradition/ transmission, 106, 289-93, 336, 340, 346, 358, 492, 555, 622, 642-48, 711-13, 727, 732, 749-50, 825, 849, 914-18
- orality, 289, 623, 641, 643-48, 662, 770, 914
- ossuaries, 98-99, 484-87, 489
- Palestine, 41, 45, 58, 80, 97, 110, 116-17, 137, 157, 160, 177, 205, 212, 221-27, 239, 262-63, 271-72, 298, 334, 359, 376-78, 399, 415, 423-24, 455, 457, 483-89, 490-92, 529-30, 560, 593-94, 624, 630, 639, 644, 649, 669, 688, 694, 713, 720, 730, 741, 746, 755, 760, 765, 777, 789, 790-92, 797, 809, 836, 839, 840, 844, 846, 849, 852, 869, 875, 879, 901, 913, 917-18, 930, 935-36, 938-39, 990, 993, 1013
- Palestinian Judaism, 378, 423, 444, 659, 679, 685, 733, 743, 756, 856, 863, 890
- Papias, 71, 102, 153, 353, 355, 427, 491, 553, 558-60, 574, 642, 713, 913, 915-17
- parable of the friend at midnight, 93
- parable of the good Samaritan, 245, 257, 511-12, 520, 537-38, 540, 587, 876
- parable of the great banquet, 605
- parable of the lost sheep, 859-60
- parable of the mustard seed, 1015
- parable of the Pharisee and tax collector, 466
- parable of the prodigal son, 263, 540, 781
- parable of the rich fool, 520
- parable of the rich man and Lazarus, 515, 520, 807-8
- parable of the sheep and the goats, 582
- parable of the sower, 91, 195, 261, 361, 524, 563, 568, 652, 656-57
- parable of the talents, 803, 806
- parable of the unmerciful servant, 586
- parable of the wheat and the tares, 237, 871
- parable of the wicked

- tenants, 4, 20, 140, 693, 889, 946, 989, 1021
- parables, 4-5, 8, 10, 18, 20-21, 28-29, 31, 38, 91, 93, 95, 96, 140-41, 152, 154, 156, 160, 194-95, 223-24, 236-37, 243, 245, 248-49, 257, 261, 263, 270, 280, 285-86, 290, 298, 303, 308, 313, 320, 338, 347, 361, 404, 412, 441-42, 448-49, 459-61, 466, 469, 474, 503, 509, 511-12, 515, 520, 524, 537-38, 540, 545, 556-57, 563-64, 568, 573, 579, 582, 586-87, 592, 595, 597, 601, 605, 628, 631, 633, 642, 647, 651-53, 656-62, 671, 674-75, 693, 707, 712, 723, 728, 730, 734, 736, 738-39, 744, 768, 773, 781, 803, 806, 807-8, 816, 835, 851-52, 854, 859-60, 865, 866-67, 870-72, 875-76, 878, 883, 889, 921, 925, 928-30, 933, 937, 943, 945-46, 974, 983, 989, 994, 1005-6, 1009-10, 1015-16, 1021
- Paraclete, 195, 268, 357, 387, 392-93, 432-33, 467, 570, 663, 787-88, 921, 1017
- paradise, 26-27, 105, 116, 198, 370-71, 375, 957, 986
- paralytic, 20, 131, 176, 196, 287, 367, 474, 532, 557, 562, 596, 598-99, 865, 897
- parousia, 33, 281, 407, 694, 753
- passion narrative, 4, 17, 19, 114, 120, 126, 128-29, 131, 136, 174, 178-80, 182, 186-89, 199, 228, 236, 275, 303, 310, 314, 338-39, 346, 420-21, 431, 459, 461, 476, 482, 538, 546, 550, 579, 581, 601, 628, 632-33, 635-36, 638-39, 663-66, 674, 692, 694, 702, 779, 782, 790, 878, 883, 885, 989
- passion of Christ, 4, 17, 19, 21, 26, 32, 47, 52, 114, 119-23, 126, 128-29, 131, 136, 174, 178-80, 182-83, 185-90, 199, 218, 228, 236, 266-68, 275-76, 303, 309-11, 314, 332, 338-40, 346, 356, 366, 400-401, 420-21, 431, 459, 461, 475-76, 482, 502, 515, 538, 546, 550, 555-58, 571, 573, 578-79, 581, 596-97, 601-2, 609, 611-12, 614, 617, 628, 632-33, 635-36, 638-39, 664-66, 674-75, 685, 692-94, 702, 712, 715-16, 736, 769, 779, 782-83, 785-86, 790, 826, 856-57, 862, 878, 883, 885, 891, 897, 899, 921, 968, 989, 1008, 1021
- Passover, 3, 5, 25, 41, 49, 54, 92-94, 98-99, 134-37, 143, 171, 175, 177, 180, 183, 186, 188-90, 267, 271-73, 275-78, 287, 295-96, 344, 347, 381-82, 409-10, 412-13, 417, 421, 423, 431, 457, 482-83, 486, 489, 493-94, 496-98, 501, 555-56, 565, 590, 639-40, 664, 666, 680, 695, 734, 742, 745, 762, 791, 835, 858, 861, 872, 900-901, 920-21, 925-26, 943-44, 948, 957, 977-79, 981-82, 985, 990, 994-95, 1021-22
- Passover lamb, 5, 92, 137, 177, 180, 186, 189, 287, 295, 431, 482-83, 493, 497-98, 858
- patristic interpretation, 68, 350, 352-53, 355, 357, 495, 559-61, 660, 719, 722, 960
- patrons, patronage, 49, 356, 380, 393, 414, 445, 543, 549, 813-15, 841, 847, 853, 866, 875, 877-78, 929, 976-77, 1009, 1011
- peace, 15, 26, 31, 64, 77, 128, 233, 240, 243, 246-47, 268, 287, 318, 324-25, 342-43, 365, 371, 380-81, 388, 394, 408, 418, 453, 465-66, 471-72, 475, 482, 567, 657, 666-69, 680, 683, 774, 792-93, 796, 816, 818, 851-52, 867, 882, 902, 930, 980-81, 984, 1007, 1015
- people of the land, 670, 678, 790, 864
- persecution, 21, 27-28, 31, 40-41, 47, 56, 141, 168, 171, 265, 268, 284, 324, 332, 334, 361, 374, 391, 422, 448, 465, 511, 559-61, 564, 575-76, 607, 637, 666-68, 725, 769-70, 779, 791, 793-94, 813, 817, 827, 842, 848, 885, 972, 997-98, 1001-2
- pesher, 168, 987
- Peter, 4, 10, 26, 36-37, 39-45, 50, 52, 54, 56, 59, 69, 70-71, 88, 102-4, 118-19, 122-23, 127, 139-41, 182, 185, 196, 199, 200, 204, 207-10, 212, 225, 230-31, 261-62, 266, 276, 285, 315, 323-24, 328, 334, 340, 348-49, 353, 355, 366, 381, 394, 410-11, 420, 427, 429, 441, 455, 475, 479-80, 499, 508, 512, 532-34, 537, 539, 544, 547, 553, 555-61, 563-64, 568, 572-74, 579, 584, 598, 604, 610-11, 627, 630, 649, 662, 664, 668-69, 691-92, 705-6, 714, 720, 724, 727, 734-36, 745, 768, 770-71, 780, 782, 784-85, 787-88, 810, 816, 821, 858, 860-61, 865, 870, 873, 891, 897, 898, 915, 918, 936, 952, 954, 966-77, 982-83, 989-90, 992, 1002, 1007-8, 1015, 1021
- Pharisees, 142-49, 455-56, 673-79, 758-59, 794, 796, 817-18, 821-25, 841-444
- Philip, 36, 40-41, 47, 51-52, 71, 123, 204, 298, 327, 379, 381-82, 434, 486, 531, 679-80, 811-12, 880, 923, 1006
- Philip the Tetrarch, 379, 381, 679
- piety, 15, 48-49, 55, 67, 88, 95, 149-51, 197, 215, 223-24, 228, 230, 233, 269-70, 298, 306, 350, 395, 438, 440, 454-55, 465-66, 506-7, 510, 543, 548-49, 561, 577, 585, 606, 613, 629, 635, 673, 678-79, 685, 701, 703, 718, 725, 729, 732, 794, 800-801, 805-7, 810, 815, 849, 864, 867, 881, 906, 932, 936, 938, 1019
- pollution, defilement, 142, 144-50, 366, 437, 508, 517, 577, 763, 873, 942
- Pontius Pilate, 21-23, 27, 40, 54, 65, 86, 99, 122, 136-138, 172, 175-78, 180, 186, 189, 190, 217, 310, 382, 411, 414-17, 425, 434, 444, 447, 461, 465, 479, 484, 490, 531, 546, 556, 572, 576, 580, 622-23, 628, 663, 672-73, 679-80, 719, 741-45, 792, 813, 819, 866, 965, 972-79, 985, 989, 991, 1004-5, 1009
- poor, poverty, 17-18, 28, 35, 64, 77-78, 88, 91, 109-10, 112, 117, 151, 167-68, 170, 172, 220-21, 223, 241-42, 245, 247, 261, 263, 275, 278-79, 286, 306, 339, 343-45, 353, 374, 394, 441, 449-53, 457, 461, 475, 477-79, 502, 518, 547-48, 560, 567, 579, 599, 605, 609, 653, 668, 670, 674, 677, 757, 762, 771-73, 776, 779, 781, 789-90, 800-809, 811-12, 818, 821, 847-48, 853, 863-64, 866-68, 870, 878, 901-2, 929, 941, 944, 948-49, 960, 993, 995, 1005-6, 1008-10
- possessions, 210, 222, 225, 261, 285-86, 313, 374, 439, 452, 469, 474, 520, 547-48, 772-73, 804-6, 808, 868, 872, 878, 920, 1006, 1015-16
- postcolonial criticism, 502, 623, 681-82
- praetorium, 54, 136, 183, 411, 560, 680, 684
- praise, 14-15, 78-79, 87, 111, 167, 276, 313-14, 325, 388, 395, 404, 487, 543, 587, 599, 672, 684-85, 699, 738, 800, 805, 853, 860, 901-2, 943, 951, 984, 1010-11, 1020-21
- prayer, 6, 21, 53, 78, 93, 141, 167, 171, 187, 197-98, 210,

- 223, 241, 247, 260,
266-68, 270, 284-85, 287,
295, 303-04, 309-12, 315,
317, 320, 322, 324, 339,
363-65, 369, 384, 390,
393, 395, 421, 424, 429,
437, 455, 457, 464, 466-67,
487, 510, 527-28, 533, 538,
545, 547, 549, 564, 568,
582, 597, 609, 617, 682,
684-91, 697, 704, 734,
742, 744, 748, 767, 793,
821, 826, 848-51, 890,
892, 901-2, 904-6, 921,
928, 933, 936, 942-44,
949, 951, 955, 967, 970,
974, 982, 989, 1010,
1018-21
preexistence, 118, 399, 401,
429, 529, 722, 892-93,
896, 921
priests, priesthood, 13, 15,
17, 20-22, 43, 47-48, 63,
70, 74-75, 85, 88, 92, 99,
109, 111, 115-16, 120-22,
135, 142-45, 147-48,
167-68, 170-71, 175-76,
180-82, 184-86, 188-89,
221, 223, 227-28, 241-42,
245, 257, 273, 303,
349-50, 360, 362, 366,
376, 404-5, 410, 413, 429,
432, 437-39, 442, 447,
449, 452-53, 456-57, 479,
486, 494, 501-2, 506,
517-18, 545-46, 549, 562,
567, 577, 580, 590, 610,
657, 671-75, 677, 680-81,
694, 696-704, 709, 724,
740, 742, 744, 747-48,
762, 766, 772, 783, 791,
795-96, 803, 812, 816,
822, 824-25, 833-34,
837-45, 871, 873, 901,
905, 907, 909, 933,
940-43, 945-46, 951,
972-76, 978, 989-90, 995,
1001, 1005-6, 1019-20
pronouncement stories,
114, 154, 164, 967
prophecy, 10, 29-31, 45, 53,
56, 79, 101, 107, 121, 126,
128-29, 133, 141, 176, 184,
202, 230, 237, 251, 254,
266-67, 275, 298, 331, 357,
361, 368, 388-89, 398,
432, 438-39, 459, 516, 561,
567-68, 599, 605, 615-17,
624-25, 638, 664-65, 668,
697, 705-7, 709, 721, 723,
733, 775, 778, 786, 788,
791-92, 818, 828-29, 852,
881, 902, 932-33, 942,
950-51, 975, 981, 983, 987, 1003, 1020 prophets, 633-40, 705-9, 791-94
proselytes, 3, 66-67, 265,
432, 437, 505, 627, 772, 791 prostitutes, 110-11, 215,
224, 866, 868, 926-27,
930, 1009, 1012
Protevangelium of James,
72, 80, 103, 279, 350, 436,
710 purity, 54, 67, 142-50, 171,
176, 197, 240, 349-50,
360, 362, 365-66, 376,
409, 437, 453, 455-57,
470, 488, 491, 506,
508-9, 513-14, 517, 545,
577-78, 673-74, 678-79,
697, 699, 701, 703, 719,
731, 741, 757, 759, 774,
792, 807, 825, 842-43,
877-78, 929, 941, 946,
948-49, 953, 985, 1007
Q, 90, 149, 156, 164-65,
216, 235-37, 239, 255, 271,
279, 294, 347, 351, 353-54,
356, 361, 395, 422, 429,
462, 491, 505, 509, 515,
531, 536, 594-95, 604,
607, 615, 617, 640,
642-43, 646-49, 654, 656,
666-67, 689-90, 710-18,
727, 729, 734-35, 744-46,
752, 769-70, 779, 798,
800, 805-6, 810, 854,
862-63, 888, 892, 896,
898-99, 912-19, 928, 954,
959, 990, 996, 1000,
1014-16
qorban, 591
quest of the historical
Jesus, 506, 540, 718-56
Qumran, 12-13, 43, 46, 52,
66, 85, 90, 98, 116-17, 120,
137-40, 145, 149, 166-68,
172, 174, 205, 212, 227,
239-40, 242, 258, 272,
274, 354, 362, 368, 383,
389, 393, 403, 409,
423-24, 437-38, 444,
451-52, 456, 463, 467,
485-86, 488, 491-92, 507,
511, 518, 522-23, 528, 536,
560, 565, 578, 589, 591,
603, 610, 617-18, 645,
664, 678, 684, 686, 696,
701, 706, 710, 756, 791,
793, 800, 809, 820, 834,
841, 844, 847, 855-56,
864, 882, 895, 904-5,
909-11, 925, 934-35,
937-38, 941, 947, 993,
996, 999, 1018
rabbinic biography, 341
rabbinic parables, 653, 662
rabbinic traditions, 203,
213, 320, 341, 418, 587,
588, 759, 766
rabbis, 1, 37, 49, 53, 85, 123,
139, 203, 205-6, 213-14,
249, 298, 341, 410,
416-18, 423, 455-56,
488-90, 509, 514, 532,
587, 589, 590-91, 630,
639, 678, 728, 757-60,
764, 765-67, 778, 787, 837,
866, 887, 918, 934-37, 953, 1019 ransom saying, 856-58
reader-response criticism, 280, 353-54, 502, 623
realized eschatology, 28,
234, 238, 433, 461, 519, 658, 736, 781, 826
redaction criticism, 156,
235, 291, 336, 338-39,
353-56, 383, 404, 421,
540, 553, 560, 576, 619,
648, 660, 767-70, 862,
967 redeemer, redemption, 15,
76, 78-79, 172, 178,
186-87, 190, 193, 199, 235,
238, 249, 256, 273, 308,
323, 336, 352, 358, 365,
402, 412, 423, 439-40,
493, 504, 524, 577-78,
616, 665, 686-87, 719,
744, 786, 792, 803, 816,
818, 823, 876, 943, 955,
957, 965, 984, 1010
remarriage, 215-16, 509, 849, 1006
remnant, 119, 139, 170, 175,
241, 246, 252, 403, 405-6,
424, 450, 475, 626, 672,
736, 833, 855-56, 907, 981
repentance, 3, 5, 18, 43, 46,
67, 123, 145-46, 170-71,
200, 230, 234, 241, 246,
251-52, 261, 269, 284,
286-87, 325, 343, 345,
360, 369, 394, 405-6,
436-37, 439-40, 455,
458-60, 462, 466, 473,
475-76, 518, 520, 544,
546-47, 592, 594, 597,
604, 606-7, 610, 635-36,
638, 689, 693, 725, 744,
771-74, 776, 779, 781,
786, 862-68, 917, 927,
929-30, 936, 946, 950,
989, 991, 1001-2
restoration of Israel, 28,
32, 43-44, 60, 64-65, 73,
94, 116, 118-19, 123, 140,
168, 176, 179, 182, 184,
186, 197, 206, 229-30,
233-34, 251-57, 260, 284,
286-87, 295, 307-8, 313,
330, 336, 340-41, 343-44,
345, 363, 365-66, 368-69,
371, 381, 388-91, 393, 403,
406, 415, 437, 439,
440-42, 449-53, 458,
462-64, 471-72, 474-77,
483, 486, 488, 494, 499,
502, 516, 542, 544, 546,
549, 562, 571, 573, 578,
583, 609, 626-27, 634,
636, 661, 667-68, 671,
698, 719, 738, 743, 746,
775-76, 779, 782, 786,
788, 792, 824, 838, 858,
861, 863, 865-68, 881,
884, 928, 933, 939,
940-41, 943-45, 957,
968-70, 981-82, 985,
1007-8, 1011
resurrection, 3-5, 11-12,
14-16, 27-28, 32, 34-35,
37-38, 42-44, 48, 50-51,
55-57, 59-61, 63, 88, 94,
97-100, 114-15, 117, 119,
121-22, 126, 133, 136, 138,
140, 146, 161, 178-79,
182-86, 193-95, 200-201,
208-9, 211, 217-18,
229-30, 233, 237-38, 242,
249, 252, 254, 257, 260,
261, 268, 276, 277, 298,
305, 307, 314-15, 318-19,
324-25, 331, 338-41,
345-46, 348-52, 361,
366-68, 370-71, 373-75,
384, 393, 397, 400, 408,
411-13, 420, 429, 430-31,

- 433, 448-49, 452-54, 461, 475, 478, 494, 496-97, 500, 516, 520-21, 529-31, 533-34, 542-43, 545-46, 550, 558, 561, 564, 567, 570-71, 573, 579, 581, 583, 590, 593-94, 601-4, 606-9, 611-14, 617, 628, 633, 635, 638, 657, 663, 669, 672, 675-77, 691-95, 706, 708, 712, 715-16, 723, 725-26, 732, 734-36, 738, 742, 744, 768, 774-88, 824-27, 829-31, 862, 865, 876, 878, 888-89, 891, 898-99, 917, 920, 922, 928, 944, 952, 965-67, 969-71, 977, 984, 989, 1002-3, 1008, 1012, 1014
- resurrection appearances, 59, 211, 413, 420, 546, 550, 830, 928
- revolutionary movements, 12, 297, 789-99
- rewards, 73, 92, 120, 237-38, 247-48, 367, 369, 370-73, 395, 448, 461, 519, 676, 720, 776, 801, 806-8, 824, 848-50, 853-54, 872, 1020
- rhetoric, 8, 110, 113-15, 120, 124, 132, 215, 243, 247-48, 257, 263, 280-81, 292-93, 295, 337, 352-53, 356, 376, 385, 420, 427, 447, 453, 541, 550, 572-74, 578, 589, 620, 622, 647, 652, 657, 674-75, 680-81, 683, 808, 823-24, 876, 906, 909, 937
- rhetorical criticism, 280, 353, 647
- riches, wealth, 5, 14, 31, 52, 53, 57, 62, 65, 75, 87-89, 99, 109, 111, 114, 116, 125, 130, 145, 149-51, 163-64, 167, 170-72, 206, 219-22, 224-25, 233, 241-42, 261, 263, 286, 297, 313, 324, 361, 374, 400-401, 428, 449, 453, 461, 466, 477-78, 494, 507, 519, 520, 540, 545, 548, 579, 587, 591, 613, 639, 646, 653, 675, 677, 692-93, 696, 773, 780-81, 789-90, 796, 797, 800-809, 811-813, 824-25, 850-51, 853, 866, 868, 877-78, 894, 901-2, 922, 925, 929, 934, 941, 965, 979, 988, 1004, 1006, 1011, 1019
- righteous sufferer, 178, 495, 612, 632, 636-37, 639, 883, 988-89
- righteousness. See justice, righteousness
- ritual, 48, 52-54, 66, 142, 144, 149-51, 171, 197, 241, 269-70, 284, 298, 329-30, 361, 367, 379, 432, 437, 453, 455-56, 459, 488, 493, 498, 508-9, 513, 517, 577, 697, 699, 701-2, 706, 728, 811, 814, 872-73, 877-78, 926-27, 941, 980, 991-92
- Roman Empire, 27, 48, 65, 77, 110, 113, 116, 219, 220, 225-26, 237, 247, 250, 255, 320-21, 362, 439, 446, 474, 535, 538, 546, 550, 682, 719, 739, 789, 794, 796, 798-99, 810, 813-14, 816-19, 845, 847, 850-53, 870, 879, 926, 930, 1014, 1016, 1018
- ruler of the synagogue, 20, 905
- Sabbath, 5, 12, 13, 20-21, 23, 85, 89, 92-93, 98-99, 114, 117, 133, 136, 143, 145-49, 167, 171, 177-78, 183, 185, 205, 241, 245, 263, 270-71, 273, 277, 287, 305, 318, 361, 364-65, 367-70, 394, 423, 450, 452-58, 469, 486, 489-90, 506-7, 511, 513-14, 531, 580, 586, 588, 590-91, 596, 614, 627, 639-40, 674-75, 678, 685, 691, 702, 704, 719, 743-44, 752, 758-59, 762, 801, 803-4, 820-23, 840, 843, 867, 872, 883, 895, 897, 899-900, 904-5, 908-10, 929, 936-37, 939, 941, 951, 974-75, 982, 988, 992, 1003, 1008, 1011
- Sadducees, 3-5, 12, 15-16, 19-20, 23, 53, 92-93, 98, 166, 172, 175, 177, 200, 226, 228, 240, 242, 250, 373-74, 382, 414, 439, 447, 454, 458, 506, 536, 545, 611-13, 673-79, 696, 701, 704, 743, 747, 759, 776, 780, 794, 823-25, 838, 840, 844-45, 910, 953
- Salome, 40, 379, 381-82, 825, 1008
- salt, 606, 848, 1015-16
- salvation, 5, 18, 22, 24, 30, 38-39, 44, 56, 58, 61, 63-65, 76-78, 91-92, 108, 116, 121, 123, 126, 133, 140, 182, 204, 210, 231-33, 237, 243, 249, 251, 254, 259-62, 269, 271, 275-76, 281, 284-86, 300, 305-7, 315, 317, 321-22, 324-25, 331, 347, 356, 367-68, 375, 391, 397-98, 404-5, 429-30, 448-49, 463-64, 471, 479, 520-21, 534, 542-44, 546-47, 549, 567, 577, 596-99, 601-2, 605-6, 608-09, 612-15, 626, 631, 634-38, 657, 668, 706, 719-22, 732-35, 747, 768-69, 771, 773, 775-76, 778, 781, 786, 818, 826-32, 847, 858, 864-65, 867-68, 896, 902, 907, 921, 950, 954, 956, 965, 984, 986-87, 995, 1002-3, 1010, 1015, 1017
- salvation history, 56, 63, 76, 232, 237, 269, 300, 305, 356, 404-5, 464, 615, 638, 734-35, 986-87
- Samaria, 38-39, 41, 47, 52, 58, 135, 207, 231, 254, 256-57, 380-81, 485, 545, 604, 606, 608, 797, 832, 834, 836, 904, 906-7, 920, 1018
- Samaritans, 5, 20, 22, 39-41, 52, 58, 63, 77, 84, 97, 123-27, 152, 231, 245, 256-57, 260, 262, 287, 306-8, 339, 367, 381, 398, 416, 423, 429, 431-34, 511, 518, 521, 526, 537-38, 540, 545, 587, 607, 655, 657, 661, 680, 764, 789, 792, 799, 830, 832-36, 876, 880, 904, 907-8, 910, 921, 931, 936, 944, 950, 992, 995, 1004-5, 1012, 1017-18
- Sanhedrin, 20, 22-24, 39, 41, 44, 54, 85, 87, 99, 136, 175, 177, 190, 224, 226-28, 410, 414, 417, 456-58, 580, 589, 675, 697, 700, 703-4, 708, 724, 744, 763, 794, 824-25, 836-40, 842, 975, 977-78, 979, 990
- Satan, 15-16, 25-27, 31-32, 43, 63, 65, 93, 126, 149, 171, 182, 184-88, 190, 193, 195-96, 198-202, 234, 237, 258, 267, 284, 296, 311, 361, 366, 368-69, 390, 417-18, 424, 474, 476-78, 480, 483, 489, 546-47, 563, 585, 594-600, 602-3, 617-18, 671, 689, 719, 721, 746, 769-70, 795, 798, 817, 840, 882, 891, 953-58, 975, 982, 989, 991, 1017
- savior, 60, 73-74, 77, 108, 122, 124, 247, 300, 314, 330, 342, 428-29, 432, 439, 449, 472, 538, 547, 609, 614, 616, 668, 720, 816, 818, 828-30, 845, 852, 899, 1017
- Scandinavian School, 642-43, 840
- scourging, 180, 197
- scribes, 17, 20-21, 44, 49, 55, 57, 63, 74-75, 89, 104, 111, 118, 121, 128, 147, 150, 166-67, 169-70, 175-76, 181-86, 198, 202-3, 205, 223, 227-28, 284, 303, 322, 348, 382, 395, 426, 455-56, 464-66, 473, 503, 529, 537, 545, 549, 566, 577, 589, 598, 606, 612, 630, 646, 648-49, 661, 671, 673-75, 696-97, 707, 719, 793, 805, 816, 823, 825, 837-44, 848, 850-51, 860, 865-66, 905-9, 928, 934-36, 942-43, 951, 954, 959-61, 973, 975, 997-98, 1020
- Sea of Galilee/Gennesaret, 36-40, 47-51, 56, 71, 297-98, 381, 563, 936, 976, 991, 1011
- Secret Gospel of Mark*, 346, 351-52, 745, 749, 845
- sects, sectarianism, 19, 54, 98, 117, 145, 167, 169, 170, 203, 240-41, 250, 347-50,

- 358, 403, 405-6, 409, 438, 442, 465, 488, 522, 537, 539, 577, 624, 626, 675-77, 730, 776, 794, 797, 800, 820, 824, 834-35, 841, 855, 863-65, 867, 875-76, 902, 936, 941, 1005
- Semiticisms, 490, 492, 845
- Septuagint, 3, 4, 10-11, 14-15, 17-18, 35, 47, 51, 73, 75, 81, 85, 87, 89, 92, 96, 107, 111, 115-16, 130, 133, 138, 149, 151, 172, 178-81, 184-86, 188, 193-94, 197, 202, 212, 214, 228, 231, 258, 269, 271, 273-74, 299, 313, 315-16, 327, 343, 353, 361, 378, 392, 394, 398, 402, 431, 446, 450, 455, 458-59, 463, 466-67, 482, 491, 495, 508, 517, 525, 527-28, 576, 591-93, 599, 601, 610, 615-17, 624, 630, 631, 634-36, 638, 651, 665, 667-68, 671-72, 674, 689, 698-99, 702, 705, 772, 775, 777-78, 801, 809, 828, 836, 840, 842, 856, 857-58, 862-63, 872, 901-2, 951, 953, 961, 976, 980-81, 984-95, 1014
- Sermon on the Mount/
Plain, 50, 63, 69, 90-91, 130, 149, 242-43, 245-46, 248-51, 270, 285, 313, 354, 366-67, 395, 449, 460, 464, 467, 474, 480, 511, 514-15, 519-20, 544, 550, 570-73, 579, 582-83, 597, 600, 616, 618, 630, 667, 669, 708, 714, 717, 723, 800, 806-8, 845, 852, 854-55, 866, 988, 1015
- servants, 4, 29, 31, 35, 75, 107, 111, 130, 196, 202, 209, 222, 231, 240, 254, 265, 268, 285-86, 309, 367-68, 382, 391, 397, 417, 431-32, 434, 448, 450, 459, 466, 472, 482, 503, 526, 528, 531, 562, 573, 578, 580-81, 586, 596, 600-601, 605-6, 608, 633-34, 637, 639, 640, 661, 689, 709, 779, 785, 791, 855-58, 869, 871-73, 881-82, 890, 902, 937, 973-74, 988, 994, 1001, 1005, 1009-11
- seventy, the, 26, 34-35, 42, 210, 226-27, 267, 269, 285, 301, 339, 380, 388, 451, 455, 485, 531, 544, 607, 774, 792, 837, 1014
- sex, sexuality, 12, 15, 80-82, 110, 144-45, 163, 168, 213, 215, 300, 517, 820, 849, 877, 1006, 1009
- shalom, 249, 466
- sheep, 31, 38, 92, 102, 118-19, 129, 140-41, 188, 257, 271, 273, 304, 339, 345, 397, 404, 410, 429, 431, 448-49, 503, 507, 516, 545, 585-86, 605-6, 609, 632-33, 667, 670-71, 781, 787-88, 802, 806, 822-23, 831, 835, 851, 859-61, 866, 884-85, 948, 1001
- shepherds, 15, 39, 46, 72-74, 77, 92, 116, 119, 121-22, 135, 140-41, 167, 217, 273, 314, 339, 397, 401, 429, 431, 448-49, 494-95, 531, 564, 567, 585-86, 606, 609, 631-32, 635, 639-40, 668, 670-71, 781, 787-88, 818, 831, 859-61, 881, 883-85, 902, 973, 1013
- sicarii, 273, 794-96
- sickness, 18, 37-38, 109, 121, 140, 170, 196-97, 235, 242, 247, 362-63, 365-67, 465, 516, 518, 537, 586, 597, 600, 604, 606-7, 633, 689, 742, 744, 746, 806, 821, 845, 857, 866, 872, 890-91, 927, 929, 951, 982, 1007
- Sidon, 51, 57, 304-5, 1010
- Sign of Jonah, 56, 183, 444, 640, 693, 779, 788, 861-63, 989-90, 996
- Siloam, 53, 58, 274, 410, 432, 456, 487, 489, 863, 921
- Simeon, 76-78, 83, 89, 122, 198, 305, 325, 416, 466, 485, 506, 523, 543, 547, 549, 568, 678, 705, 766, 786, 871, 902, 943, 1002, 1010
- similitudes, 154, 270, 652, 732, 734
- Simon Peter, 36-37, 39-41, 69-71, 204, 208, 211, 787, 873, 1007, 1012
- Simon the Zealot/
Cananean, 36, 42, 798
- Sinai, 41, 57, 93, 130, 170, 201, 226, 270, 506, 524, 591, 611-12, 614-18, 632, 698-99, 707, 759, 835, 869, 941, 957, 982, 987, 990, 1001
- sinners, 5, 18, 20, 26, 42, 114, 116, 118, 146-47, 171, 176, 206, 224-25, 245, 275-76, 284, 286-87, 300, 306-7, 310, 325, 341, 349, 360, 365, 367, 373, 406, 449, 465, 466, 472, 474, 478, 496, 507, 513-14, 521, 547, 577, 581-82, 586, 605-6, 614, 661, 694, 736, 772-73, 843, 854, 860, 863-68, 878, 925-30, 988, 1004, 1007, 1010, 1012
- Sitz im Leben*, 288-91, 293-94, 336, 565, 642, 672, 732, 736
- slaves, slavery, 6-9, 38-39, 109-11, 147, 173-74, 263, 278-80, 285, 287, 294-95, 332, 364, 367, 416, 442, 445, 450, 474, 527, 529, 530-32, 553, 567, 577, 586, 600, 778, 786, 794, 802-3, 812, 814, 820, 865, 869-73, 887, 902, 904, 929-30, 1010
- social sciences, 62, 219, 250, 290, 337, 356, 358, 362, 470, 503, 716, 737, 740-41, 804, 841, 874-76, 879
- Solomon, 53, 116, 118, 122, 129, 167, 193, 274, 301, 313, 373, 378, 452, 454, 471-72, 525-26, 528, 578, 674, 759, 769, 776, 791-92, 862, 882, 884-86, 902, 932, 939-41, 980, 988, 996, 998, 1010, 1014-15
- son of Abraham, 5, 122, 129, 299, 300, 322, 580, 608, 845, 883
- Son of David, 3, 56, 74, 81-82, 111, 120-22, 124, 126, 128-29, 131, 133, 166, 172, 246, 259, 302, 366-67, 411, 437, 454, 476, 535, 563, 578, 583, 598, 625, 639-40, 671, 726, 790, 859, 861, 881-87, 892-93, 900, 943, 951, 981-82, 984-85, 987-88, 1008
- Son of God, 22, 33, 61, 67, 74, 79, 112, 116, 120-28, 131, 133, 164, 178, 182-84, 189, 193, 195, 199-200, 203, 209, 212, 259, 264, 301-3, 305, 310, 314, 317, 322-23, 327, 331-32, 334, 338-39, 344, 347, 349, 361, 366, 369, 376, 392, 396-97, 400, 403, 411, 429, 438-39, 442-43, 458, 475, 483, 516, 530, 532, 535, 538-39, 547, 555-57, 564, 572, 598, 599, 602, 605, 608-9, 628, 640, 686, 689, 719, 723, 726, 728, 731, 737-38, 782, 789, 829, 847-48, 852, 885-86, 888-93, 899-900, 922, 954-58, 973-75, 977, 989, 997, 1012
- Son of Man, 14-16, 21-22, 24-25, 27-28, 30-33, 59-61, 86, 116-21, 124, 126-27, 133, 136, 157, 176, 178-79, 183, 187-88, 190-91, 230, 233, 235-38, 259, 284, 287, 303, 310, 313-15, 324, 326, 339, 375, 396, 411, 417, 437, 440-42, 455, 461, 468, 471, 473, 480, 531-32, 545, 557, 562-63, 578-79, 581, 590, 592, 605, 607-9, 613, 628, 632, 640, 665, 688, 691-95, 701-4, 708-9, 716-18, 724, 728, 730-31, 736-37, 750, 753, 780, 785, 787, 803, 807, 822, 826-27, 856-58, 862-63, 865, 867, 883, 885, 893-900, 922, 967, 969, 975, 977, 982, 988-89, 994, 996, 1001-3, 1006, 1009-10, 1015, 1021
- songs, 6, 8, 14, 16, 79, 167, 279, 325, 449, 466, 472, 592, 636, 643, 668, 748, 853, 856, 881-82, 900-902, 975, 982, 1010
- sons of thunder, 40, 559

- sonship, 68, 121, 128-31,
133, 182, 194, 300-301,
317, 326, 440, 442, 557,
572, 637, 719-20, 845, 867,
885-93
- Sophia, 526, 716, 996-97, 1000, 1013
- sorrow, 519, 546, 672
- source criticism, 353, 355,
383, 648, 739, 770, 928
- spirits, 11, 14, 31, 168, 171,
196-97, 323-25, 363,
366-68, 373, 393, 592,
600, 720, 728, 775, 780,
825, 847-78
- structuralism, 353-54, 619,
623, 659
- Suffering Servant/Servant of Yahweh, 61, 131, 133,
171, 178, 188, 190, 209,
397, 431, 466, 482-83,
494, 546, 580, 640,
665-66, 695, 736, 767,
827, 855, 872, 874, 898,
900, 903, 971, 974, 988
- Susanna, 279, 1011
- swearing, 513, 629-30, 942, 1015
- sword, 4, 31, 118, 240, 267,
568, 664, 667, 798
- Sychar, 52, 97, 836, 903, 1012
- symposia, 266, 275, 333,
496, 926-27, 928
- synagogues, 19, 21-22,
48-51, 54, 73, 110, 123,
147, 185, 205, 227-28, 230,
247, 272-73, 286-87, 298,
345, 358, 363-64, 366,
369, 394, 405, 422-24,
428, 431, 442, 451, 453,
456-57, 477, 486, 490,
506, 549-50, 575, 592,
600, 607, 612, 635, 637,
643, 672, 674-75, 685,
707-8, 741, 743, 774, 807,
817, 821, 823, 835, 857,
860, 876, 900-901,
903-10, 932-33, 936-37,
1002, 1005, 1007, 1011-22
- Synoptic problem, 156, 714
- Synoptic tradition, 4,
15-16, 155, 195, 292, 298,
310, 350, 422, 451, 461,
497-98, 515, 536-37, 539,
637, 656, 726-27, 733, 736,
741, 918, 922, 938, 996,
998
- Synoptics and John,
136-37, 357, 383, 387, 413,
419, 422, 426, 434, 498,
501, 602, 727, 919, 1017
- Syrophoenician woman,
92, 281, 305, 364, 366,
490, 524, 563, 1004-5,
1007-8
- table fellowship, 57, 147,
171, 176, 240-41, 245,
276, 284, 286, 455-56,
478, 495, 507-8, 545, 547,
606, 678, 759, 774, 827,
866-67, 876, 925-30, 1010
- Talmud, 46, 49, 149, 175,
212, 416, 419, 435, 485,
501, 591, 658, 691, 720,
730, 752, 757, 759-61,
764-67, 833, 838, 863,
918, 931
- targums, 47, 592-93, 931,
934-35
- tax collectors, 20, 42, 52,
67, 111-12, 114, 147, 171,
176, 205-6, 223, 225,
275-76, 284, 286, 304,
306, 320, 341, 365, 367,
439, 449, 465-66, 474,
477-78, 509, 545, 548,
577, 586, 606, 661, 798,
815-16, 860, 864-68, 921,
925-27, 929-30, 1004
- taxes, 20, 37, 42, 45, 51-52,
67, 111-12, 114, 147, 171,
176, 186, 205-6, 219,
221-25, 247, 275-76, 284,
286, 304, 306, 320, 341,
349, 365, 367, 380, 409,
439, 449, 453, 457,
465-66, 474, 477-78, 509,
545, 548, 577, 586, 606,
661, 674, 762, 794, 798,
813-18, 837, 839, 860,
864-68, 921, 925-27,
929-30, 944, 948, 950,
975, 1004, 1016
- teacher of righteousness,
610
- teachers, 1, 22, 36-38, 86,
109-10, 113-14, 120-22,
126, 129, 139, 150-51, 154,
202-8, 211, 233, 245, 268,
280, 284, 341, 351-52, 354,
415, 454, 456, 506-7,
509-12, 529, 532-33,
536-37, 549, 577, 583,
596-97, 602, 610, 613,
639, 642, 658, 672, 675,
697, 703, 706, 725, 729,
768-69, 787, 794, 840-44,
918, 934-36, 938, 943,
971, 996, 1000
- temple, 53, 86, 408-14, 457,
696-704, 905, 907-10,
939-46, 947-52
- temple act/cleansing, 176,
451, 494, 557, 577, 685,
920, 937, 945-52, 978-79,
985
- temple cult, 30, 176, 181,
437-38, 447, 452, 825,
828, 905, 941-42, 945,
950-51
- temple tax, 223, 225, 247,
272, 408-9, 457, 762, 948,
950
- temptation, 12, 16, 56, 63,
93, 182, 194-95, 197, 201,
261, 301, 311, 325, 389-91,
454, 520, 548, 558, 573,
581, 616-18, 687, 689-90,
716, 769, 850-51, 872,
877, 891, 917, 921, 941,
943, 952-58, 964-65, 989,
1016, 1019
- testimony, witness, 645,
1000-1003
- textual criticism, 55, 160,
558, 648, 747, 934, 959-62
- Thaddeus, 36, 42, 417
- thanksgiving, 79, 118, 167,
493, 495, 518, 527, 592,
599, 684, 690, 696, 950,
1021
- theological interpretation,
107, 312, 719, 963-65
- theophany, 13, 181, 313-15,
430, 612, 615-16, 698,
970-71, 987
- Theophilus, 103, 105,
549-50, 817, 1002
- Theudas, 792-94
- Third Quest, 506, 718, 738-39, 741, 945
- three-source hypothesis,
917
- Tiberias, 49, 297, 381,
445-46, 487, 765, 788,
966
- tithes, 142, 144, 222-24,
272, 455, 506, 509-10,
586, 673-74, 678-79, 697,
762, 801, 993
- titulus, 119-20, 174
- tombs, 15, 32, 46, 48, 52,
54-57, 70, 97-100, 136,
146, 149, 175, 324, 348,
350, 418, 455, 486, 546,
556, 564, 567, 581, 613,
673, 774-75, 777-79,
782-85, 787-88, 821, 862,
977, 988, 1008, 1012
- Torah, 12, 13, 15, 37, 85, 94,
110, 143-45, 152, 164, 168,
171, 175-76, 203, 205,
241-43, 245-49, 272, 275,
281, 298, 341, 373, 388,
394, 406, 428, 430,
452-54, 457, 464-65,
484-85, 487-90, 505-11,
514, 536-37, 549, 575,
577-80, 582, 584, 589-91,
612, 615-16, 629, 631,
634-35, 668, 679, 685,
696-99, 706-8, 719, 741,
752, 764, 793-94, 802-3,
829, 840-43, 846, 849,
851, 863-64, 866, 882,
891, 902, 904-5, 909-10,
918, 925, 927, 929-30,
932, 938, 966, 987, 991,
998-1000, 1018, 1020
- tradition history, 290, 310,
508, 574, 660, 800, 845,
964
- transfiguration, 3, 4, 16, 25,
40, 120, 131, 217, 229, 231,
236, 276, 309-10, 313-14,
317, 418, 430, 442, 476,
478, 523, 555-56, 572, 594,
611-16, 691-92, 702,
780-81, 785-86, 846,
856-57, 878, 890, 921,
966-71, 982-83, 987, 1015,
1020-21
- travel narrative, 542, 656
- trial of Jesus, 119, 137,
461-62, 973, 976, 978-79,
1001
- tribulation, 25, 27-30, 32,
119, 233, 236, 564, 669,
689, 724, 827, 850
- triple tradition, 31, 496-97,
656, 778, 780, 911-13, 917
- triumphal entry, 15-16, 55,
89, 118, 494, 533, 580,
599, 766, 818, 890, 933,
978-79
- truth, 5, 39, 42, 58, 60, 70,
94, 103, 107, 148, 161, 163,
168, 183, 211, 221, 246,
259, 280, 295, 307, 326,
363, 386, 388, 393, 397,
415, 418, 428, 430,

- 433-34, 467, 470, 476,
520, 523-26, 588, 590,
601-2, 604, 622-23, 630,
638, 657, 659, 681, 684,
691, 719, 721, 725-26, 728,
732, 746-47, 775, 779, 781,
830, 921, 944, 953,
956-57, 977-78, 987, 999,
1000-1001, 1003, 1017,
1019
Twelve, the, 4, 19, 34-45,
69, 71, 125, 139, 141,
204-7, 210-12, 249, 251,
255-56, 258, 266, 305,
366, 427, 496, 530, 537,
556, 564, 566, 572, 573,
600, 604-8, 632, 671,
691, 724, 745, 773, 776,
809, 859, 883, 923, 937,
941, 958, 985-86, 990,
1020 two-source hypothesis,
353, 355, 561, 712-15, 911, 915-17
two ways, 60, 80, 815
typology, 2-5, 74-75, 107,
116, 155, 160, 173, 185,
196, 203, 216, 227, 241,
253, 266-67, 292, 295,
309-10, 347, 383, 437, 457,
474, 495, 588-89, 594,
611, 615-16, 624, 634,
640, 645, 656, 665, 676,
682, 691, 707, 731, 779,
795, 814, 835, 862, 866,
874, 879, 881-83, 885,
894-97, 901-2, 904, 908,
932, 956, 964, 967-68,
980, 986-90
Tyre, 48, 51, 57, 92, 173,
298, 304-5, 586, 939, 948 unclean spirits, 31, 38, 64,
86, 194, 196, 198, 323,
366, 585, 600, 605, 618
uncleanness, 31, 38, 49, 57,
64, 86, 98, 142-48, 171,
194, 196, 198, 206, 221,
273, 323, 362, 366, 368,
437, 455-56, 507-9, 513,
517, 577, 585, 600, 605,
618, 803, 836, 866, 878,
980, 1007 unforgivable/unpardonable sin, 767
universalism, 378, 575
unleavened bread, 92-93, 137, 177, 186
upper room, 41, 54, 410 veil, 32, 181, 184, 187, 303,
418, 562, 664, 783, 879, 940 vengeance, 88, 169, 240, 285, 412, 668, 817, 1006
vine, true vine, 2, 141, 268,
326, 331, 344, 396, 397,
429, 431, 494, 496, 499,
539, 639, 994, 1021
vineyards, 20, 248, 320,
404, 412, 431, 442, 531,
605, 652, 674, 693, 801,
870-71, 933, 943, 974 violence, 27-28, 49, 54, 59, 74-75, 110, 168, 170, 173,
187, 265, 267, 281, 402,
434, 453, 666-68, 677,
680, 683, 703, 740, 789,
794-96, 798, 815, 817,
849, 853, 857, 863, 867,
870-71, 876-77, 933, 945, 951-52, 975, 983, 993
virgin birth/conception, 3, 79-82, 131, 327, 331, 401,
416, 418, 540, 569, 891-92
Virgin Mary, 82, 566-69, 990 visions, 5, 24, 26, 59, 90, 116, 141, 163-64, 170,
216-18, 222, 243, 245-50,
270, 286, 293, 295, 305,
320, 327, 332, 351, 372,
388, 403, 430, 434, 438,
449, 450-52, 455, 457-58,
466, 469, 470, 472, 542,
547, 550, 561, 564, 572,
575, 578-79, 581-82, 635,
661, 684, 686-87, 699,
701, 706-7, 709, 731, 735,
775, 784, 794, 816, 819,
855, 875, 878, 904, 910,
929, 940-41, 943, 946,
967-68, 970-71, 981-82
vows, 80, 150, 508, 629,
673, 696, 762-63, 994
washing, 18, 53, 150, 176, 223, 343, 410, 431-32, 434,
453, 455-56, 499, 508,
533, 537, 539, 673-74, 678,
866, 872-73, 921, 927,
972, 995, 1009
water, 27, 46, 49-51, 66-68,
70, 105, 120, 145-46, 188,
241, 264, 274, 277, 323,
357, 364, 372, 375, 392,
400-401, 410, 420, 429,
432, 436, 439, 440, 442,
455, 464, 479, 507, 517,
521, 562, 568, 587, 592,
594-96, 598-99, 603,
608, 627, 634, 723, 735,
820, 822, 859, 873,
921-23, 925, 945, 955,
991-95, 1011
way of the cross, 323, 1016
Way, the, 23, 210, 345, 544, 938, 947
wedding, 38, 95-96, 204,
270-71, 277, 357, 404, 412,
495, 499, 622, 746, 808,
866, 877, 928, 994-95,
1009, 1011
wedding at Cana, 499 widows, 21, 197, 214, 220,
223, 230, 242, 247, 256,
262-63, 314, 368, 452,
465-66, 477, 503, 515, 545,
547, 560, 587, 661-62,
746, 777-79, 801, 805,
815, 940, 944, 998, 1002,
1005-6, 1008-10
wilderness, 15, 43, 52, 57,
92-93, 129, 169-70, 195,
231, 236, 239, 251, 270,
277, 322, 384, 389,
437-39, 441-42, 471,
487-88, 495, 524-25, 544,
572, 581, 614-18, 632, 634,
638-39, 676, 689, 792-93,
795, 872, 878, 891, 925,
927, 945, 954-58, 964,
970, 986-87, 1003
will of God, 222, 264-65,
316, 321, 325, 365-66, 388,
510-11, 514, 536, 566,
581-82, 612, 632, 847,
850-51, 891, 953, 958, 981, 987, 1009
wine, wineskins, 92, 97,
180-81, 184, 186, 219, 221,
264, 270, 272, 274-75,
277, 285, 297, 329, 331,
420, 429, 432, 440, 455,
537, 554, 568, 595, 657,
700, 704, 723, 745, 840,
884, 921, 925, 927, 949,
991, 993-95, 1011
wisdom, 75, 87, 101, 168,
202, 234, 236, 241, 243,
248-49, 268-69, 279, 288,
347, 378, 388-89, 431,
448, 453, 463, 472, 500,
524-26, 573, 577, 580,
590, 592, 610, 706, 708,
716-17, 738, 746, 769,
779, 801, 816, 837, 841,
844, 862, 864, 866, 879,
895-96, 902, 928, 933,
935, 991-92, 995-1000,
1009-10, 1015
wisdom Christology, 573, 996, 998-1000
woes, 20-21, 32, 51, 87-89,
91, 119, 167, 223, 310, 339,
449, 460, 466, 586, 630,
724, 730, 750, 808, 843,
852-53, 942, 997, 998
women, 5-9, 15, 17-18, 22,
32, 40, 42, 47, 52, 57,
62-64, 73, 77-78, 80-82,
85, 92, 97, 99-100, 110,
118, 123, 129, 131, 142-43,
145-46, 168, 171, 176,
196-97, 203, 205-6,
208-10, 213-14, 217, 220,
240-41, 245, 260, 262-63,
272, 274, 276, 278-82,
286-87, 300, 304, 306,
333, 339, 344, 348, 355-57,
365-67, 398, 402, 416-17,
434, 448, 452, 474, 477,
484, 503, 509, 521, 526,
530, 532, 544, 546, 548,
556, 558, 563-64, 566-68,
573, 577, 579, 581, 586-87,
592, 597, 600, 605, 626,
636, 667, 670, 702, 706-7,
745, 778, 782-86, 789,
796, 802, 804, 814-15,
821, 836, 847, 849,
865-67, 872-73, 877-78,
884, 904, 921, 936, 940,
944, 960, 962, 992, 1002,
1004-12, 1018-19
Word, Logos, 14, 94-95,
124-25, 132, 152, 191, 201,
212, 238, 262, 269, 278,
283, 302, 316, 326-27, 345,
393, 398-401, 428, 430,
434-36, 442, 500-501, 515,
521, 523-26, 544, 551, 565,
571, 583, 588, 590, 592,
597, 602, 628, 691, 720-21,
732, 734, 753, 819, 876,
903, 933, 971, 998, 1000, 1003, 1012-13, 1018, 1020
world, 1013-17
worship, 4, 12-15, 22, 32,
41, 48, 54-55, 58, 75, 85,
106, 108, 127, 130, 145,
148, 166, 171, 200, 203,
227, 232, 246-47, 252, 263,
269, 272, 274, 303, 316,
318, 320, 322-23, 325, 328,

332, 351, 360, 363, 365, 367, 409, 411, 422, 433, 453, 456-57, 471-72, 477, 508, 518, 528, 549, 581-82, 597, 599, 631-32, 635, 639, 664, 699, 703, 721, 728, 733, 743, 748, 760, 772,	784, 786, 796, 816, 836, 850, 864, 872, 895, 900-901, 928, 936, 941, 944-45, 949, 951, 956-57, 972, 978, 989, 1012, 1018-22 Zacchaeus, 5, 52, 224, 276,	286, 351, 540, 548-49, 670, 773, 804, 814, 867-68, 928, 930, 984 zealots, 42, 229, 740, 817 Zebedee, 36, 40-42, 44-45, 71, 118, 427, 559, 1003, 1008-9	Zion, 44, 54, 118, 201, 233, 235, 251-52, 408, 410-11, 414, 471, 572, 615-16, 690, 703, 744, 828, 925, 939, 940-41, 949-51, 981-85, 1023
---	---	--	---

Article Index

- Abiding, 1
 Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, 2
 African American
 Criticism, 6
 Amen, 10
 Angels, 11
 Anointing, 17
 Anti-Semitism, 18
 Apocalypticism and Apocalyptic Teaching, 23
 Apostle, 34
 Archeology and
 Geography, 45
 Ascension of Jesus, 59
 Authority and Power, 62
 Baptism, 66
 Beloved Disciple, 69
 Birth of Jesus, 72
 Blasphemy, 84
 Blessing and Woe, 87
 Blindness and Deafness, 90
 Bread, 91
 Bride, Bridegroom, 95
 Burial of Jesus, 97
 Canon, 101
 Canonical Criticism, 106
 Child, Children, 109
 Chreia/Aphorism, 113
 Christ, 115
 Christology, 125
 Chronology, 134
 Church, 138
 Clean and Unclean, 142
 Commandment, 149
 Criteria of Authenticity, 153
 Cynics and Cynicism, 162
 Dead Sea Scrolls, 166
 Death of Jesus, 172
 Demon, Devil, Satan, 193
 Disciples and Discipleship, 202
 Divorce, 212
 Dreams and Visions, 216
 Economics, 219
 Elders, 226
 Elijah and Elisha, 229
 Eschatology, 232
 Essenes, 239
 Ethics of Jesus, 242
 Exile and Restoration, 251
 Faith, 259
 Family, 262
 Farewell Discourse, 266
 Fasting, 269
 Feasts, 270
 Feminist and Womanist
 Criticisms, 278
 Forgiveness of Sins, 284
 Form Criticism, 288
 Freedom, 294
 Galilee, 297
 Genealogy, 299
 Gentiles, 302
 Gethsemane, 309
 Glory, 313
 God, 315
 Gods, Greek and Roman,
 328
 Gospel: Genre, 335
 Gospel: Good News, 342
 Gospels: Apocryphal, 346
 Gospels, History of Interpretation, 352
 Hardness of Heart, 360
 Healing, 362
 Heaven and Hell, 370
 Hellenism, 376
 Herodian Dynasty, 379
 Historicisms and Historiography, 383
 Holy Spirit, 387
 Hypocrite, 394
 "I Am" Sayings, 396
 Incarnation, 399
 Israel, 403
 Jerusalem, 408
 Jesus in Non-Christian
 Sources, 414
 John, Gospel of, 419
 John the Baptist, 436
 Josephus, 444
 Joy, 448
 Jubilee, 450
 Judaism, Common, 452
 Judgment, 458
 Justice, Righteousness, 463
 Kingdom of God/Heaven,
 468
 Lamb of God, 482
 Languages of Palestine,
 484
 Last Supper, 492
 Latino/Latina Criticism,
 501
 Law, 505
 Lazarus, 515
 Leprosy, 517
 Life, Eternal Life, 518
 Light and Darkness, 522
 Logos, 523
 Lord, 526
 Love, Love Command, 535
 Luke, Gospel of, 540
 Mark, Gospel of, 553
 Mary, Mother of Jesus,
 566
 Matthew, Gospel of, 570
 Mercy, 584
 Midrash, 588
 Miracles and Miracle
 Stories, 594
 Mission, 604
 Moses, 610
 Mountain and Wilderness, 615
 Narrative Criticism, 619
 Nazarene, 624
 New Birth, 625
 Oaths and Swearing, 629
 Old Testament in the Gospels, 631
 Orality and Oral
 Transmission, 641
 Parables, 651
 Passion Narrative, 663
 Peace, 666
 People, Crowd, 669
 Pharisees, 673
 Pontius Pilate, 679
 Postcolonial Criticism,
 680
 Prayer, 684
 Predictions of Jesus'
 Passion and
 Resurrection, 692
 Priests and Priesthood, 696
 Prophets, Prophecy, 705
 Q, 711
 Quest of the Historical
 Jesus, 718
 Rabbinic Traditions and Writings, 757
 Redaction Criticism, 767
 Repentance, 771
 Resurrection, 774
 Revolutionary Movements, 789
 Rich and Poor, 800
 Rome, 810
 Sabbath, 820
 Sadducees, 823
 Salvation, 826
 Samaritans, 832
 Sanhedrin, 836
 Scribes, 840
 Sermon on the Mount/
 Plain, 845
 Servant of Yahweh, 855
 Shepherd, Sheep, 859
 Sign of Jonah, 861
 Sin, Sinner, 863
 Slave, Servant, 869
 Social-Scientific
 Criticisms, 874
 Son of David, 881
 Son of God, 886
 Son of Man, 894
 Songs and Hymns, 900
 Synagogue, 903
 Synoptic Problem, 911
 Synoptics and John, 920
 Table Fellowship, 925
 Targums, 931
 Teacher, 934
 Temple, 939
 Temple Act, 947
 Temptation of Jesus, 952
 Textual Criticism, 959
 Theological Interpretation of the Gospels, 963
 Transfiguration, 966
 Trial of Jesus, 972
 Triumphal Entry, 980
 Typology, 986
 Water, 991
 Wine, 993
 Wisdom, 995
 Witness, 1,000
 Women, 1,004
 World, 1,013
 Worship, 1,018

MORE TITLES FROM INTERVARSITY PRESS

For a list of IVP email newsletters, including information about our latest ebook releases, please visit www.ivpress.com/eu1

FINDING THE TEXTBOOK YOU NEED

The IVP Academic Textbook Selector is an outline tool for instantly finding the IVP books suitable for over 250 courses across 24 disciplines.

www.ivpress.com/academic/